Signor Mierzwinsky's method of singing is more peculiar than pleasant. He exaggerates expression, uses his head voice unskilfully, and indeed often unnecessarily, and his tone frequently degenerates into coarse shouting.

Berlioz's forcible Hungarian march from the "Faust" music came from tired players upon a tired audience, and wanted verve.

The concert of May 30th, at which Madame Menter and Signorina Tua are again to play, will be the last of the season.

T. L. SOUTHGATE.

CONCERT AT DUDLEY HOUSE.

On Saturday afternoon, May 5th, a concert was given in aid of the General Lying-in Hospital, York Road, Lambeth. This ancient Hospital, established in 1765, is fortunate in having upon its staff Dr. F. H. Champneys, who is not only Doctor of Medicine, but also learned in music, and has under his command an excellent amateur choir of ladies and gentlemen. The concert opened well with a psalm (127th), for quartet and chorus, "Nisi dominus ædificaverit domum." It was sustained by Miss Hardy, Miss Annie Williams, Mr. H. E. Wooldridge and the Hon. Spencer G. Littleton. The performance was at times somewhat unsteady, but the choir soon settled down to their work, and entirely redeemed their character in the next item, an unpublished motet, "Tu es Petrus," composed by Leonardo Leo, which was sung in a manner which reflected great credit upon them and their able conductor, Dr. Champneys. Astorga's "Stabat Mater" followed; this was composed for chorus, solo-voices, and orchestra, but accompanied on this occasion by the pianoforte. The solo music in this work was sung by Miss Robertson, Miss A. Williams, Mr. H. E. Wooldridge and the Hon. Spencer G. Lyttleton. The tenor music had been allotted to Mr. Lionel Benson, but he was disabled by a severe cold, and his part was kindly taken by Mr. Wooldridge, although it was evident that the inclement weather had been only too successful in its attacks upon his voice also. Miss Robertson's voice was in excellent condition, and was heard to great advantage in the soprano solo, "Saneta Mater."

The second part of the programme consisted of an interesting collection of secular music, commencing with the well-known, but ever fresh madrigal by John Wilbye, "Flora gave me fairest flowers," with which was coupled an excellent choral composition from the pen of Dr. Champneys, called "Lalage," which may be most aptly described as a madrigalian part-song; the words are the well-known lines by S. T. Coleridge: "I asked my fair, one happy day, what I should call her in my lay," &c., and have been very happily treated throughout. Besides the above, Wilbye's madrigal "Sweet Honey-sucking Bees," and Benet's "Thyrsis, sleepest thou," as also Danby's glee "Awake, Æolian lyre," interspersed with various solos rendered by Mrs. Lynedoch Moncrieff (who contributed a composition of her own); Miss Robertson, Miss Colthurst, Miss Annie Williams, Mr. Wilfred Ward, Mr. Walter Marnock, and Signor Parisotti; while Handel's Violin Sonata in A was played by Herr Röver. The pianoforte accompaniments were played by Signor Romili.

The attendance was so numerous as to warrant the hope that the funds of the hospital have materially benefited by the concert.

MISS ZIMMERMANN'S CHAMBER CONCERTS.

At Miss Agnes Zimmerman's second concert, on the very wet evening of May 8th, she played, with Miss E. Skinner, Mozart's Sonata in E flat, Op. 2, No. 6, for pianoforte and violin; Schubert's Fantaisie in C, Op. 159, for the same instruments (with Herr Straus); and Dr. Joachim's "Theme and variations" in E, Op. 10, for pianoforte and viola (Herr Straus). The "recalls" need not be counted. Miss Zimmerman's solos were Brahms's Rhapsodie in G minor, Op. 79, No. 2; his Intermezzo in A flat, Op. 76, No. 3; and the Hungarian Dance in D flat, No. 6. On a rapturous encore, Miss Zimmermann played another "dance" from the same set. The soirée was altogether a delightful one.

Digitized by Google

RICHTER CONCERTS.

The second of these concerts, which took place on Thursday in last week, introduced nothing absolutely new, but much that was interesting. The programme was as follows:—

Overture, "Coriolan"	Beethoven.
Concerto, for Violin and Orchestra	Brahms.
Gospodin Adolph Brodsky.
Overture and "Venusberg" (Bacchanale) Music ("Tannhäuser")	Wagner.
Recit. and Air, "Che faro senza Euridice" ("Orfeo")	Gluck.
Miss Orridge.
Symphony, "Im Walde" (In the Forest)	Raff.

The two first numbers formed a striking contrast in every way, but the whole may be summed up in this:—Beethoven has said much in few words in his overture; Brahms has said little in many words in his concerto. Altogether this concerto is a painful subject, because there are passages in the first movement that make the hearer wish it were possible to care for the work as a whole; but they are only the faintest gleams of sunshine through a murky sky; and the general impression is of a wearying, depressing monotony, to which even a sharp pain would be preferable. The days for writing purely bravura passages, no matter how clever, how difficult, or how novel they may be, have passed away; but in this, if in nothing else, Brahms is sadly behind the age. The slow movement is even more heavy and uninteresting than the first, the subjects being of the mildest kind. The finale opens promisingly, for there is a Hungarian boldness in the leading melody; and in his imitations of national airs Brahms is always bearable. But before long he again becomes entangled in passages which have literally no vitality and no beauty: merely scales and exercises that should have no place outside an instruction book; for we do not conjugate our verbs and repeat declensions when we are conversing with our friends in any language — still less when we are attempting to instruct and elevate mankind. Herr Joachim introduced this concerto at a Crystal Palace concert when it was in MS., and unfortunately it does not improve on further acquaintance. M. Brodsky is so thorough, and so manly a performer, so entirely free from trickery, that his selection is the more to be regretted.

The new "Venusberg" music reveals to those who are thoroughly acquainted with the scene as it was first written Wagner's wonderful advance in those sixteen years of his life after its completion and before its revision; it is thus full of instruction to the student. The new themes introduced are of the breadth and fervency of the "Nibelungenring" and "Meistersinger" music, to which an occasional resemblance may be traced; the orchestration is almost fearful in its power of depicting licentiousness, for it is Wagner's great mission to show us the horrors of vice as clearly as the beauties of virtue, in which particular he stands almost alone among our great teachers.

Raff's "Im Walde" Symphony was splendidly rendered; and how glorious an inspiration it is from beginning to end! The orchestration alone is a study and a poem. Surely none but Schubert can be compared to Raff for apparently instinctive and spontaneous orchestral effects! and even in Schubert there is not always the same unity of design (if the expression will be understood) that we meet with in Raff. But the orchestration is not Raff's only beauty. Transcribed for the piano, this symphony would be of exceptional interest: the melodies are so broad, so earnest, and so striking, that in no form could it be robbed of all its beauty. The slow movement bears the stamp of Raff's peculiar genius in a remarkable degree: it is one of his many subjects that cannot be compared to the melodies of any other musician, and that would make the loss of Raff's name among the list of tone-poets a wholly irreparable one.

Miss Orridge was artistic, if somewhat cold and formal, in her rendering of Gluck's touching song. The splendid band was most strikingly successful in the "Tannhäuser" music, the Pilgrims' Hymn being entirely free from that dragging effect that often makes the intelligent listener question what the highly original violin accompaniment can mean. It is certainly calculated to puzzle the hearer when it is made too prominent; but many things that are bad as masters are useful as servants; and the effect produced on this occasion was undoubtedly just what the author conceived when he gave his broad grand chant to the brass, never intending it to struggle against, but to reign over, the counterpoint that he entrusted to the violins.

B. F. WYATT-SMITH.

SIGNOR TITO MATTEI'S CONCERT.

Signor Tito Mattei, a general favourite in the musical world, held a grand soirée at St. James's Hall last Saturday evening. He played his own pieces, all very pretty and effective, to wit: "L'Elégante," a saltarello, a valse-galop, and his grand fantasia on a subject hardly worthy of the composer's notice, namely, the hackneyed and now colourless opera of Bellini, "I Puritani." A song of Signor Mattei, "Death or glory," written expressly for M. Foli, was sung by that basso profondo and encored. A capital septet, "I am shocked," from a MSS. opera comique, written by Messrs. Farnie and Murray, and composed by the Signor, was sung by Mdlle. Marimon, Miss Santley, Mdlle. Trebelli, Mr. Lloyd, Mr. Santley, Signor Zoboli, and Signor Foli. The success was signal. Madame Tito Mattei was recalled for a fine version of Rossini's Romance in A flat, "Selva opaca." Mdlle. Marimon, in excellent voice, was encored in Mozart's florid air, "Non paventar," and sang a valse instead. Mdme. Trebelli won a bis for Rossini's "Pensa alla patria," and substituted the Habañera from "Carmen." Mr. E. Lloyd had two "calls" in favour of Signor Mattei's new song (for him composed), "Whither, who can tell?" Mr. Santley sang "The devout lover"; and Signor Guido Papini, the eminent violinist, played his own "Pensée Fugitive" and "Garry Owen." Signors Li Calsi and Tito Mattei wound up a splendid concert with the March from "Marie di Gand," arranged for two pianofortes.

THE ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

"L'Etoile du Nord" was unavoidably postponed on Saturday, by reason of Signor Frapelli's indisposition, and in place of Meyerbeer's opera the directors mounted "Lucia di Lammermoor," with Mdme. Sembrich in the title-part. The music of this part, as in the case of "Il Puritani," is admirably adapted to Mdme. Sembrich's peculiar, light and brilliant soprano voice, and her appearance in "L'Etoile du Nord" is anxiously expected. The part of Edgardo, on Saturday, was well sustained by a tenor whom Mr. Mapleson first introduced to the public at the theatre in the Haymarket, Signor Rovelli; and Signor Cotagni was the Enrico.

On Thursday, May 10th, Mdme. Pauline Lucca appeared in Gounod's "Faust," to realize Goethe's interesting "creation" of feminine gentleness and frailty with the consummate skill and intuitive discernment of a genuine histrionic artist. The passionate outbursts in the cathedral-scene stood in bold relief against the tenderness of love passages in the garden-scene, the coquettish by-play on the first encounter with Dr. Faustus, and the unaffected gush of girlish joy when the jewels are discovered. The "Jewel Song" and the "King of Thule" ballad (which Gounod writes in A minor, and Berlioz in F major), were salient points of a capital "all round" performance. The new tenor, Signor Marconi, sang "Salve dimora" with taste. M. Gailhard made an excellent Mephistopheles, and M. Devoyod, the French baritone, resumed what it is the fashion to term his "original" part of Valentine, Marguerite's brother.

"Il Trovatore" was down for Tuesday, with Mdme. Lucca as Leonora, and Mdme. Albani will make her first appearance to-night (Saturday), in Verdi's "Rigoletto."

ST. AUGUSTINE AND ST. FAITH, WATLING STREET.—On Friday next, May 25th, being the eve of St. Augustine, there will be a special full choral service in the above church, at 7.30 p.m. The Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis will be Stainer in B flat, and the anthem "How lovely are the messengers" from Mendelssohn's oratorio "St. Paul." At the conclusion of the service Hiller's sacred cantata "A song of victory" will be sung, and the ordinary choir will be augmented by several members of that of St. Paul's Cathedral.

WIMBLEDON MUSICAL SOCIETY.—On Wednesday, 9th inst., this society completed its third season by a good performance of "Elijah." Miss Alice Parry, Miss Emily Dones, Mr. Harper Kearton, and Mr. Frederic King, being the principals, it is needless to say that the solos were all well rendered, especially so, "Woe unto them," and "O rest in the Lord" by Miss Emily Dones; "Is not His word like a fire" and "It is enough," by Mr. King; and "Then shall the righteous," by Mr. Kearton. The double quartet, "For He shall give His angels," was sung by members of the choir, and was one of the gems of the performance. Miss Whitehead sang the part of the "youth" correctly and well. One of the special features of the society's performances is the excellence of its chorus-singing; on this occasion it was even better than usual; he choruses "Baal, we cry to thee," "Blessed are the men," "Thanks be to God," "He, watching over Israel," "Behold, God the Lord passed by," and "Then did Elijah the Prophet break forth like a fire," showing to perfection the versatile powers of this well-drilled choir. The orchestra played exceedingly well, rendering the accompaniments to the solos with much care and attention to expressional effects, the brass being most judicious in this respect, never overpowering the solo voices, but never lacking power when volume was required. Mr. Sumner conducted. The hall was full. At the last rehearsal on the Saturday preceeding the performance, an interesting presentation, at the hands of James Ranken, Esq., took place, of an ivory silver mounted bâton and a gold keyless watch by Benson, bearing the following inscription:—"Presented by the members of the Wimbledon Musical Society to their conductor, William Sumner, Esq., May 5th, 1883." Next season the society proposes giving "Jephthah," "Messiah," and "St. Paul," in addition to one or two orchestral works.

Digitized by Google

Reviews.

History of the Boehm Flute; with illustrations exemplifying its origin by progressive stages, and an appendix containing the attack originally made on Boehm, and other papers relating to the Boehm-Gordon controversy. By CHRISTOPHER WELCH, M.A. (Rudall Carte, and Co.—1883).

This title sufficiently indicates the object and scope of the treatise. The writer is a distinguished amateur performer on the flute. His views and opinions may therefore be fairly accepted as being free from professional bias, or influenced by the pecuniary interests of a manufacturer in conducting his examination of the documents relating to the Boehm-Gordon controversy. Opinions are, even at the present time, divided as to whom is to be awarded the merit of the production of the comparatively perfect instrument which we now possess.

No musical instrument has undergone so many progressive changes as the flute, embracing, as they do, the material, the tube and bore, the position of the holes, and the mechanism of the keys. For material we have now metal and india-rubber (vulcanite) as well as wood. Tubes are now made cylindrical, as well as conical, with the head-joint of a parabolic form. The holes are now pierced as nearly as possible in their true nodular position, corresponding to successive organ pipes, irrespective of the natural capabilities of the fingers of the performer; while the keys are suited, by ingenious mechanism, to the fingers. Unlike the old eight-keyed flute, all the notes are open, which, it is asserted, imparts a freer tone. With these advantages, we have now an almost perfect instrument.

The merit of the first suggestion of these improvements lies between Captain Gordon and Mr. Boehm. Since their first production various additions have been suggested, more or less successful, such as by Card, Siccama, Clinton, Carte, Radcliff, and lately by Collard, who has adopted the Carte 1867 pattern and added duplicate holes to the lower C, D, and E. Again, professors, and amateurs, have devised additional keys to carry out some real or imaginary improvements of their own. Mr. Welch informs us that he has himself devised various additional keys which gave additional facilities. The result is that every flute-player must now take about with him his own instrument, since he never can be certain of meeting with one suited to his previous practice.

All these innovations are based on Boehm's fundamental principles, hence the great controversy to whom the credit is due for the original suggestions on which all our present flutes are based—to Gordon or to Boehm? With strict impartiality Mr. Welch lays before his readers all the evidence he has been enabled to collect on the subject. The weight of evidence seems to be in favour of Boehm. Be this as it may, few persons now living have probably seen a Gordon flute, while the Boehm flute is in extensive use, more particularly on the continent. Not only flute players, but every lover of music, will derive pleasure and instruction in the perusal of Mr. Welch's book.

Beyond the immediate examination of the question of the merit of the invention generally, the relative merits of the cylindrical and conical bore are considered. But perhaps Mr. Welch has gone a little too far in stating that our great artist Mr. Radcliff gave a decided preference to the cylinder. For a long time he adopted the conical bore; but if I mistake not Mr. Radcliff now more frequently performs in public on the cylinder flute. All our old masters played with surprising effect on the cone flute. In the hands of a professor in constant practice, though it may require more management, I think a decided preference is to be given to the cone. Boehm introduced the open G sharp key. Mr. Radcliff has gone back to the shut G sharp key. Here, again, a controversy might arise as to the relative merits of the two systems. Mr. Welch considers the "return to the closed G sharp key" to be "a great relief to the little finger"; that may be true with respect to the pure Boehm in the flat keys, but great facilities are imparted in the sharp keys, and the inconvenience suggested has been fully superseded by Carte in his 1867 pattern, and with this improvement on the Boehm flute we have a decided advantage in retaining the open G sharp key.

One other subject I must note, referred to by Mr. Welch, and which naturally suggests itself to every flute player, namely, to account for the fact that the Boehm principles of improvements are not generally adopted by players on the clarionet, oboe, and bassoon. Mr. Welch informs us that Messrs. Rudall, Carte and Co. have made a clarionet successfully on the Boehm principle, and that he has seen a bassoon on the same principle, and that the great performer on the oboe, Lavigne, had adopted it on his instrument with marked success. Clarionets on the Boehm system, modified by Klosé, are used in military bands in France; and I believe Mr. Clinton now plays on such an instrument.

The refusal generally to adopt these improvements is thus accounted for by Mr. Welch:—"The explanation usually given is, that it is impossible to improve these instruments; that with them improvement would be destruction, as their essential character lies in their imperfections. Perhaps, however, the cause of this absence of reform may rather be traced to the want of a sufficiently large number of amateurs to break down, by their influence, the conservatism of professional players, and to overcome their disinclination to change. A musician who has spent his youth in learning to conceal the defects of an instrument, has but little inclination to give up the vantage he has gained, nor has he time, amidst the engagements of his professional career, to learn a new system of fingering. Still less can he be expected to place in the hands of a young player (soon perhaps to become a rival) an instrument which may be the means of enabling him to come to the front in the race for artistic distinction."

Not only is this work tastefully got up, but the portraits and diagrams give it an additional value and interest.

The Communion Service (Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei, and Gloria), set to music in the key of D. By Frank L. Moir. (Novello, Ewer & Co. 1883).—The successful production of this Service (or Mass) at St. Matthias' Church, South Kensington, was noticed last week. The work is characterized by an unaffected simplicity of style, without the slightest descent from the dignity of the great "argument." The subdued passages of the Service are smooth, melodious, and vocal; the climaxes bold, yet never extravagant; the modulations effective; and withal, pace modern composers of the feverish or restless school, the tonality homogeneous. The key of D, with one exception, is consistently maintained, so that the signature really denotes a definite tonality, without being contradicted, as by Wagner, Liszt, and others, in the very first bar. It must be remembered, on the other hand, that old friend Beethoven, choosing the "natural" key of C for his overture to "Prometheus," begins with a hanging chord of the 6-4-2 on B flat, and is fond, in his concertos, of enharmonic changes. The "Kyrie eleison," of necessity, is here used for the responses after the Ten Commandments. It is melodious, but not striking. The "Credo" opens with "full" choir in 3-4 time; at the phrase "God of God" (the "of" here is emphatic and equivalent to the Latin de), the four voices sing A (the dominant) in unison, and interrupt it on a (minim) B flat, whilst the organ plays (after A in unison) the full chord of G minor, followed, in contrary motion, by the harmony of D minor. At the passage, "Very God," &c., the D minor chord is succeeded by the 6-4 on E, with a view to a change to the dominant key. A tenor and bass solo intervene, and at the resumption of the "full," an effective pause (with swell reeds and pedal) is made on Mr. Moir's evidently favourite harmony of F sharp major. This naturally introduces the "Crucifixion" episode in the relative (B) minor, and at the words "was buried," the four voices drop simultaneously from F sharp to low B. The key of D major recurs at the "Resurrection," with a modulation to the subdominant (G). A fine burst of full harmony at the end of the "Credo" forms a grand climax. On a pedal E are here piled the chord of E minor, and the same harmony with the superadded discords of D natural and B flat; the voices taking B flat in unison and revolving on A, the cadence is plagal.

Digitized by Google

The "Sanctus," in D, 6-4 time, a movement of breadth and solemnity, is remarkable for its "Amen," first harmonized with the chords of G minor and D major, and lastly on a tonic pedal, with flowing inner parts. The "Benedictus" is varied with short solos. The "Hosanna" will be thought remarkably fine. Towards the close the organ, with "swell to great full" and pedal, gives out high A on a chord of the 6-4-2 with C natural as bass; and the C is revolved on two other inversions of diminished and dominant sevenths, whereof the basses, B natural and B flat, at last find a pied à terre on A, with the 6-4 harmony of the cadence in D, again interrupted by G minor.

The "Agnus Dei" (which follows the Collect, "We do not presume," &c.), is a dulcet strain in D minor allotted to the tenor and bass solo in succession. This adagio is followed by an andante tranquillo for soprano solo in the tonic major; the chorus come in at the end with long holding notes, on dominant and tonic pedals; the cadence is here "authentic"; but the final clause, "dona nobis pacem," is repeated on a tonic pedal of six bars, the sopranos ending on the mediant note (low F sharp).

The (according to the English Service) final "Gloria in Excelsis," begins with arpeggios on the organ (soft swell), which cannot but suggest the opening of Handel's anthem, "Zadok the Priest." The voices enter with long holding notes, and a pause occurs at "on earth, peace," with the chord of F sharp major. The time-mode then changes from triple to common, and some effective tonal changes startle the ear. Thus, B major is followed by the second inversion of E flat, in which key a cadence is made at the passage, "For Thy great glory, O God," &c. The bass now sings a short solo as an episode, mezzo forte, in B flat minor, and the full choir modulate into F. The flat keys are persisted in, with an excursion so far as G flat, of which, at a point, the organ "augments" the fifth (from D flat to D natural). The key of D major is not resumed until the final clause, after a pause (of the organ) on a diminished seventh (G sharp in the bass, with F natural above). The cadence is again plagal, the sopranos ascending from B to D, and the basses falling from G to D.

That Professor Macfarren should have lived to his present age untitled even by the modest prefix which is given on the slightest provocation to successful tradesmen in the metropolis and the suburbs, while foreign professors have been freely dubbed knight, has excited considerable surprise, and it is only an act of grace that he should be included in the new trio. Sir Arthur Sullivan has so long been connected with princely music-making, that the title will well harmonise with his character as a court musician, although his best friends will still regret that the commercial success of his comic operas, and the attractive pursuit of writing royalty-ballads for the music shops, should have led him away from the higher paths of the art on which in earlier days he seemed to have set out. To Mr. George Grove the honour comes at a suitable moment, on his assumption of the duties of Director of the Royal College, while, as a reward for much earnest devotion to music, everyone will admit that he has earned all he receives. On general grounds it is satisfactory to see that music is being gradually raised to her rightful place by the side of the sister arts of painting and sculpture; and although the Royal College has yet to make good its claim to confidence by real work, and by sending forth not merely a few brilliant executants, but a body of well-trained musicians, the prestige of royal favour will give it a welcome stimulus. That such encouragement has practically been withheld from the Royal Academy of Music cannot unfortunately be forgotten, nor are the professors or students of the old school likely to look at first with any great favour upon the new institution.—Church Bells.

ASMODEUS IN THE MUSICAL WORLD.

CHAP. III.

"Nay, Don Cleofas," said Asmodeus, "the fable thou hast so pleasantly narrated is inapplicable, for these foreign gentry often add ingratitude to assumption. The sturdy and truly gifted man, now comfortably dining with the quiet fellow of perfectly good breeding in the corner of the most imposing room in this well-known hostelry, which is one of the chief places of entertainment in Madrid, is roundly abusing the whole body of your native musicians. At this same time he is anxiously grasping the leadership of every Spanish musical institution he can put his hands on. And he would have the public believe he had forsooth cordially accepted the nationality even of the country he is so much indebted to, but which he affects artistically to despise." "From whence, friendly demon," cried Don Zambullo, "are we to expect gratitude, if it may not be found in the breast of the alien, who has received from the land of his adoption a cordial and generous support?" Asmodeus smiled quietly as the young student grew more vehement in his denunciation of one of the most common sins, ingratitude. "Truly," said that wily personage, "no class suffers so much from foreign invasion as do the musicians. The priest, the doctor, and the notary practise in such well-guarded preserves as offer an almost inviolable security from foreign domination. Even the poet and the painter are for the most part free from the foreign competitor, be he Jew or Gentile. But the musician, following a profession easily entered and generally overcrowded, must, forsooth, have to endure the competition of a never-ending influx of alien composers, singers, and players, who are, to aggravate the sharpness of the struggle for success, much patronised, to the detriment of native talent, by a court with not unnatural foreign sympathies, and by an aristocracy deeply smitten with a fondness for the alien professor. One of the strangest features of foreign musical dictation in this happy city of Madrid," continued Asmodeus, "is the fact that the leading journal employs a foreigner to administer its musical opinions, who, though doing his best with a considerable mastery over a strange language, cannot be said either to understand or to sympathise very earnestly with Spanish art." [The intelligent reader, including, of course, all who take the trouble to read, will either be surprised at the opinions just enunciated, or be led to suspect that this narrative is the work of a satirist, who, as is often the case with such writers, has in pursuit of his object overstrained the boundary line of the probable. It is well known that the Spanish people are not, and never were, anxious to encourage in their midst the presence of foreigners. The Spanish aristocracy, with much pride and exclusiveness, have been less inclined to form alien connections and to encourage the influx of strangers, than have the society leaders of other lands. So the disclosures of the M.S. are remarkable, and the commentator takes this opportunity of assuring the reader that the printers have played no tricks with the statements of the author, and that the original is here given in all its integrity. The mention of a "leading journal" seems also to call for some comment. Everybody knows the date of Le Sage's famous book, and no one will be misled into the notion that so obvious an imitation of that remarkable work, as the present narrative undoubtedly is, could have been written prior to the production of that meritorious romance. Without following these speculations further, for the reader must be naturally impatient at what he may be pleased to consider the impertinent interpolations of a wordy commentator only too anxious to air his own opinions, it may be remarked that it would be strange indeed if, generations back, Madrid actually possessed a "leading journal" (an expression now common enough in London), with sufficient enterprise to search the world through for a truly universal genius to write its musical criticisms, and a journal far-sighted enough to secure a writer for this purpose with such marvellous powers of comprehension as would enable him to fully appreciate his own merits and partially to understand the misty merits of the advanced musical thinkers of his own native land. The sneering tone of Asmodeus will not affect the English reader, for here we are sufficiently enlightened at any rate to know that, in art matters, we ought to despise everything produced by our own countrymen, and to welcome with open arms everything and everybody coming from abroad; and we know, further, that we should accept in all humility the performances of foreign artists, who graciously offer their sublime efforts to us for such paltry returns as fame, fortune, and a never-changing, blindly generous reception]. "So it comes to pass," said Asmodeus, "that, under such influence, the good people of Madrid not only accept with the utmost cordiality the performances of all the artistic locusts from abroad [this expression seems needlessly harsh, but it is certainly in the original MS.], but, as has been before noticed, they eagerly place their sons and daughters under the tuition and guidance of these foreign professors, without waiting to ask whether their antecedents and characters are good, bad, or indifferent, or whether they be Jews or Gentiles; taking care, however, in the most inconsistent manner conceivable, to employ their native musicians reluctantly, and after careful enquiries into their private characters and artistic qualifications." [The narrow-minded doctrine that a nation ought to employ and duly encourage its native artists with at least as much consideration as would be shown to invading adventurers and settlers with or without merit, is too obviously implied in the foregoing words of Asmodeus to require comment.] "Here," said Asmodeus, "lives a foreign artist of high distinction, of Jewish extraction, and gifted with a sharp eye for business, and who has practised in Madrid for a long space of time. This gentleman teaches the favourite domestic instrument, the guitar, upon the principles and according to the mannerisms employed a generation ago in the manipulation of this enchanting musical medium. This ancient artist is hard at work teaching a good many hours daily for the not incontemptible sum of 100 reals per lesson." [If the author does not here purposely conceal the period of his production, the comfortable sum named as the reward for the skilled guidance and patient listening of an artist for the space of an hour, as being expressed in Spanish money not in use, would denote the date of the work now being printed as of a period dating from before our own times. The reader will not fail to form his own conclusions upon this and other statements made in the course of this delectable narrative.] "This distinguished professor, a type of a class of successful artists and teachers, is naturally solicitous of being identified with every prominent scheme of the artistic republic, and rightly judges that men do well to keep their names perpetually before the eyes of the world." "Who is that elderly man to whom so many musical people are now offering a double tribute of appreciative applause, and a substantial testimonial in gold?" "Ah, truly!" rejoined Asmodeus; "he is a noteworthy man and an artist of undoubtedly high distinction. You are witnessing, in a well-known musical academy, the acknowledgment by an assembly consisting of most of the eminent musicians of the day, of the unselfish, earnest, unflagging labours of a truly great artist and learned man. He has been surprised, in the midst of his faithful work, by this admiring, loving crowd of artistic disciples and fellow musicians, who desire to testify to him their appreciation of a really noble life. This great artist is a native of Madrid, who, in spite of every prejudice and difficulty, and without one motive false to the art he serves so well, has not only largely contributed in every way to the advancement of national art at home, but has done much to make that art respected all over the world." "This, indeed," cried Don Zambullo, "is a spectacle to reconcile one to many apparent inconsistencies to be seen in the midst of much noble suffering and manly strife in a pure and good cause." "Say, Asmodeus," presently said the young student, "who is that distinguished looking man now crossing the street? Is he not the famous singer Senor Xacarero?" "Thou hast guessed aright, Don Cleofas," returned Asmodeus; "it is that popular songster, whose career forms a notable illustration of the fact that much may be made out of little, seeing that the gentleman in question has made a handsome fortune, for the most part by the constant repetition of some half-dozen songs, which not only he but his imitators have been performing ad nauseam for the last fifteen or twenty years."

Digitized by Google

It is satisfactory to learn that Mr. Goring Thomas's opera "Esmeralda," produced by Mr. Carl Rosa at Drury Lane last month, has been accepted by Herr Julius Hofmann for the Stadt-Theater, Cologne, where it will be given some time next autumn.

FOR SALE.—Organ Music, Violin, and other String Music, Operas, Oratorios, Full Scores, Treatises, Histories, Biographies, and English and Foreign Works in various Branches of Literature.—On Sale by W. REEVES, 185, Fleet-street, London.

JUST PUBLISHED.—Full Anthem, "BE NOT DRUNK WITH WINE, WHEREIN IS EXCESS." For Temperance Services, etc., by E. H. TURPIN. Price 4d. net.—Messrs. WEEKES & CO., 14, Hanover-street W

Just Published
PART-SONG, "GENTLE SPRING" for FOUR VOICES, by E. Bennett, Mus.D. Price 3d.—London, Novello, Ewer, & Co.

Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged, cloth, 3s. 6d.
BEETHOVEN'S PIANOFORTE SONATAS, explained by ERNST von ELTERLEIN, translated by E. Hill. Preface by E. Paner.
W. REEVES, 185, FLEET STREET, LONDON.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

CHOPIN IN SOCIETY.
MUSICAL INTELLIGENCE:—Crystal Palace Concerts—The Philharmonic Society—Concert at Dudley House—Miss Zimmermann's Chamber Concerts—Richter Concerts—Signor Tito Mattei's Concert—The Royal Italian Opera.
REVIEWS OF BOOKS AND MUSIC.
ASMODEUS IN THE MUSICAL WORLD. III.
EDITORIAL:—Mozart's Organ Works—"Palmam Qui Meruit Ferat."—The Logic of Counterpoint. VIII.
ORGAN NEWS:—Bradford—Wrexham—Norwich—Haverstock Hill—Preston—Alford—Maxwell—New York.
EXPERIENCES OF AN ORGANIST. VI.
A HOME FOR ENGLISH OPERA.
CORRESPONDENCE:—Intoning.
PASSING EVENTS. Service Lists, &c.

LONDON: SATURDAY, MAY 19, 1883.

MOZART'S ORGAN WORKS.

NOT inaptly one might term the present a period of "musical resurrection." During the last few years the creative activity which spread abroad such a lustre on the art-life of the early part of this century seems to have lulled for a time, and thus the musical gaze from an ever-intent prospect of the future, or even of the present, has become reflective, and returns to take a more thorough inspection of its already created treasures. This it is, doubtless, that accounts for the resuscitation of works and facts which forms one of the most promising features of the musical life of the last two decades. From Carissimi's "Jonah," and Bach's Mass in B Minor to Berlioz's "Faust," a long chronological list might be made of the many great and good works which, thanks to this retrospective tendency, have once more obtained a hearing. Yet, perhaps, while this "resurrection," if I may be allowed the term, has taken place in the other branches of music, organ writings have been, unfortunately, sadly neglected. Except the works of Bach and those of Mendelssohn—a pair whom we may rightly call the Elijah and Elisha of the organ art,—no pains seem to have been taken to obtain for the present generation of organists anything like a correct or even moderately full edition of the writings for the "king of instruments" of our great classic writers. Even our boasted love of Handel has not saved for us his collection of twelve original voluntaries. Of Mozart

Digitized by Google

the organ world knows less, imagining that he wrote nothing for the instrument. With what surprise therefore will the announcement be greeted that Mozart wrote seventeen sonatas for the organ, or, as their nature will explain, perhaps more correctly termed short concertos for organ and orchestra? Yet the industry of Herr Köchel in the compilation of his thematic catalogue of Mozart's works brings this before us. While awaiting their publication by Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel (for they are all still in manuscript), we have much interesting information respecting them. They were written to fill up the gap at high mass between the Gloria and Credo, and were thus intended to form part of the Church Service. They consist of one movement only, the form being that of the ordinary sonata. The first three of these seem to have been written in the year 1769, when Mozart, aged thirteen, returning from Vienna, received from the Archbishop of Salzburg the post of concertmeister. The first of these is in E flat (andante), the second in B flat (allegro), and the third in D (allegro), all being for organ, two violins, and bass. We then find nothing composed for the organ until, in 1775, four more appear to have been written in that period of great activity, which lasted till 1777, and which during two and a half years saw the production in all of no less than ten sonatas. No. 4 (allegro, D major) and No. 5 (allegro, F major) open with genuine Mozart unison phrases. No 6, composed in July, 1775, at Salzburg, is in B flat major. Nos. 7 and 8 are respectively in F and A, the opening of the latter being particularly bold. The following year, 1776, produced No. 9 in G major, No. 10 in F, No. 11 in D, and No. 12 in C major. The last of these proves the most interesting, since the accompaniment is increased by the addition of two trumpets. During the first nine months of 1777, until he started on his travels with his mother in September, two more appear to have been written, the first in G major, the second in C, while the accompaniment of the latter is still farther increased to two violins, 'cello, bass, two oboes, two trumpets, and drums. Then followed the journey of Mozart to Munich, Mannheim, and finally Paris, where his mother died. June, 1779, saw him once more in Salzburg, and appointed successor to Adlgasser, organist at the court and cathedral, with a salary of £40. Then were written the last three organ sonatas, the first being in C major, opening with a piano staccato passage for the strings. The second, also in C major, has accompaniment of two violins, bass, two oboes, two horns, violoncello, trumpets, and drums. To this Köchel appends a note: "The longest and most developed"; while to the last and seventeenth sonata (C major), composed in March, 1780, at Salzburg, the note is made: "In this the organ is treated as chief instrument and obbligato throughout." With Mozart's final departure from Salzburg his organ compositions come to an end. It is difficult at first to see how they have all remained so long in manuscript. It is not improbable that the displeasure of Archbishop Colloredo, who objected to all instrumental music in the Church, and commanded the disuse of these sonatas, may have had something to do with this. It was the same prelate who ordered Michael Haydn to compose choral pieces to Church text in place of them. Of the sonatas, Otto Jahn "finds in them nothing that reminds him of the church," while the instrument is "never treated with virtuosity." Yet, notwithstanding this, the publication of Mozart's seventeen organ sonatas will be awaited by the host of organists with more than usual curiosity and interest.

FRANK J. SAWYER.

"PALMAM QUI MERUIT FERAT."

ALTHOUGH everyone would respect the exercise of Professor G. A. MACFARREN's private judgment in not at first wishing to accept the honour of knighthood, there is a general feeling of satisfaction in the fact that he has given up his original personal reluctance to accept a new dignity, and has, in what may be fairly termed the general interest of the art and to the gain perhaps of the institutions he is intimately connected with, decided to accept a graciously thought of and well meant honour. The world has long since decided very properly upon placing such a high value upon the noble artistic labours of the great English composer, theorist, writer, musical chief, and large-minded teacher, that no external honours or title could add force to the esteem in which Sir GEORGE MACFARREN is held. But it is a good thing for the art and for artists, that so true and good a man should be thus honoured, and by his good name lending honour to honour itself. Not only is the example of such a well-bestowed title an encouragement and new strength to the brother artists of the previously highly distinguished musician, but the judicious bestowal of the title exercises real power in the social uplifting of the followers of the art. Sir ARTHUR SULLIVAN and Sir GEORGE GROVE are to be congratulated upon similar grounds, and as bearing company with the great English artist, whose name calls up thoughts of an earnest, laborious, patient life, adorned by high gifts and great virtues, a life which every lover of English music must contemplate with national pride and affectionate admiration.

That Sir GEORGE ALEXANDER MACFARREN may live long to benefit English art by his earnest and distinguished labours, will be the earnest hope of all who love the art and can appreciate the good done by gifted, earnest, noble-hearted, and self-sacrificing artists.

E. H. TURPIN.

THE LOGIC OF COUNTERPOINT.

THIRD SERIES.

VIII.

WITH regard to the intermingling of the first three different species of counterpoint in four parts, a matter Cherubini deems it unnecessary to discuss, it is well to remind the student that the interminxture should be practised with every possible interchange of position in the score. The following table, in which the canto fermo is expressed by the line, will suggest a fairly complete and sufficiently exhaustive interchange of species (1st, 2nd and 3rd) between the various voices of a four part score:—

1 2 3 3 1 2 1 1 3 3 3 1 3
2 1 2 1 3 1 3 2 1 2 1 — —
3 3 1 2 2 — — — — — —, 2 2
—, —, —, —, —, 3, 2, 3, 2, 1, 2 3, 1,

Digitized by Google

2	3	—	—	—	—	—	—
—	—	1	2	3	3	1	2
3	1	2	3	2	1	3	1
1,	2,	3,	1,	1,	2,	2,	3

Although these and other scoring plans may be adopted for practice, it should be remarked that the least effective intermixtures and, perhaps, the most difficult combinations to manipulate, are those in which the canto fermo and first species counterpoint occupy the next nearest parts, whether in the upper or lower portions of the score. There is the least objection to such proximity between the two middle parts. It will, of course, be apparent that the best arrangements will be those in which the contrapuntal layers are relieved and contrasted by placing alternately active and inactive parts, thus—

2
1
3

I would venture to suggest that the student will gain some useful practice, by writing examples in which two of the parts move at the same time with the same degree of activity, in contrast with two conjointly moving parts in long notes, thus—

—	1	2	3	2	3
1	—	2	3	1	—
2	3	1	—	—	1
2,	3,	—,	1,	2,	3.

The student will also gain by working these different combinations in triple measure, and so increasing the number of notes of the second and third species by one-half. As the power of moving with grace and ease in the time quantities of threes and sixes is nearly or quite as essential to the composer as is the faculty of proceeding in twos and fours, contrapuntal practice in triple time should be regarded as being nearly, if not quite, as necessary as is the practice of moving with the different types of active counterpoints in duple measures. E. H. Turpin.

Organ News.

BRADFORD.

The opening of the new organ in St. Andrew's Church, Lister Hills, by Mr. A. Marchbank (organist and choirmaster of the above church), took place on Sunday, May 6th. Organ recitals were given on May 8th by Mr. W. T. Best (organist of St. George's Hall, Liverpool); on May 9th the organist was Mr. A. Marchbank; on May 10th the organist was Mr. Jeremiah Rhodes, Bradford. Mr. Best played the following programme:—

Afternoon Recital.

Overture, "Die Letzten Dinge"	Spohr.
Andante in B flat major	Widor.
Toccata and Fugue in C major	Bach.
Andante Cantabile in G major	Wesley.
Scherzo for the Organ in A minor	Best.
Siciliana, and Tema con Variazioni	Weber.
Festive March	Smart.

Evening Recital.

Fantasia in F minor	Mozart.
Adagio in E major	Merkel.
Chorale with Variations, and Fugue in C minor	Bach.
Andante in A major	Smart.
Toccata in A flat major	Hesse.
Andante in D flat major	Chauvet.
Introduction and Fugue on a Trumpet Fanfare	Best.
Fantaisie in E flat major	Saint-Saëns.

WREXHAM.

An organ recital was given in St. Mary's Church, Bersham, by Mr. Edwin Harriss, on Thursday last, the following being the programme:—

Occasional Overture	Handel.
Marche Funèbre de Chant Seraphique	Guilmant.
Organ Sonata, in B flat	Mendelssohn.
Sicilians	Hopkins.
Marche for Eastertide	Merkel.
Cujus Animam	Rossini.
"O rest in the Lord"	Mendelssohn.
Fanfare	Lemmens.
Fugue in G minor	Bach.

NORWICH.

Dr. Bunnett gave an organ recital at the St. Andrew Hall, on May 12th, the following was the programme:—

Overture, "Poet and Peasant"	Suppe.
Canzone	Guilmant.
Prelude and Fugue	Bach.
Romanza in F	Beethoven.
"Cuckoo and Nightingale" Concerto	Handel.
"The Lost Chord"	Sullivan.
Lieder, "The Duetto"	Mendelssohn.
"The Chapel by the Sea"	Barnett.
Andante con Moto	Smart.
Allegro Marziale	Deane.

HAVERSTOCK HILL.

An organ recital was given by Dr. A. L. Peace, in the Priory Church, Haverstock Hill, on Tuesday, May 8th. The vocalists were Master Hannagan, Mr. Charles Lyall, and Mr. De Vere. The programme included:—

Organ Concerto, F major	Handel
Organ Solo (a) Pastoral in G, Op. 103 (b) March for Easter-tide	Merkel.
Organ Solo, "Prelude and Fugue" ("St. Ann's")	Bach.
Organ Solo, "Berceuse"	Guilmant.
Organ Solo, "Offertorio," E flat major	Morandi.
"Jubilee Overture," E major	Haslinger.

PRESTON.

On Thursday evening, May 10th, an organ recital was given by Mr. James Tomlinson, in the new Public Hall. The following is the programme:—

Concertante	Handel.
Allegro—Largo—Allegretto—Fugue.
Adagio, "Fourth Symphony"	Haydn.
Grand Chœur et Cantilene	Salomé.
Airs from "Ballo in Maschero"	Verdi.
Marche Cortege from "Irene"	Gounod.

And on May 12th the programme included:—

Overture to the Oratorio, "The Fall of Babylon"	Spohr.
Andante con variazioni	Beethoven.
Marche Religieuse	Adam.
Fantasia Pastorale	Wely.
Musette from the Sixth Concerto for Strings	Handel.
Overture to "Nachtlager in Granada"	Kreutzer.

ALFORD.

The third and last of the series of musical services and organ recitals took place in the Parish Church, on May 10th. A selection from the "Messiah" was sung. The organist was Mr. G. H. Gregory, Mus. Bac., Oxon., of Boston Parish Church. The organ solos were:—

Sonata (No. 1) in F minor	Mendelssohn.
Emperor's Hymn (varied from a quartet)	Haydn.
Prelude and Fugue in D	Bach.
Allegro Moderato in B flat	Chauvet.
"Pastorale," from a sonata	Guilmant.
Andante in F	Smart.
Concerto in A	Handel.

MAXWELL.

An organ recital of sacred music was given in the Parish Church on Friday evening, May 4th, by Mr. Jas. Pattinson, Mus. Bac., Cantab. (organist of the church), assisted by the augmented choir. The following was the programme:—

Organ Solo, Sonata No. 1 in F	Mendelssohn.
Allegro Moderato—Adagio—Andante—Allegro.
Anthem, "Blessed be the God and Father"	Wesley.
Organ Solos—
Prayer in E flat	Pattinson.
Marche Funèbre et Chant Séraphique	Guilmant.
Recit. and Air, "I feel the Deity within," and "Arm, arm, ye brave" ("Judas Maccabæus")	Handel.
Anthem, "As pants the hart"	Spohr.
Organ Solos—
Gavotte de "Mignon"	Thomas.
Allegretto Villereccio	Fumagalli.
Song, "The Golden Ladder"	Cowen.
Chorus, "Judge me, O God"	Mendelssohn.
Organ Solos—
Cantabile (Sonata "O Filii")	Lemmens.
March	Smart.

Digitized by Google

NEW YORK.

Messrs. Hook and Hastings' fine new organ for St. Francis Xavier's Church (R.C.), was opened on Jan. 23rd by admirable performances by Messrs. John White and E. E. Whiting. The generally excellent specification is somewhat wanting in 32ft. pedal power. Now the manuals are provided with 16ft. tone, the presence on the Pedal organ of sufficiently counterbalancing 32ft. tops has become a necessary feature of a completely built up harmonic system. In a few years time all large organs must indeed have such harmonic provision.

GREAT ORGAN.

1. Open Diapason	16 ft.	11. Gambette	4 ft.
2. Quintation	16 „	12. Octave	4 „
3. Open Diapason	8 „	13. Twelve	2⅔ „
4. Viola da Gamba	8 „	14. Fifteenth	2 „
5. Doppel Flote	8 „	15. Mixture (5 ranks)
6. Gemshorn	8 „	16. Acuta (5 ranks)
7. Claribella	8 „	17. Bombard	16 „
8. Viol d'Amour	8 „	18. Trumpet	8 „
9. Quint	5⅓ „	19. Clarion	8 „
10. Flute Harmonique	4 „

SWELL ORGAN.

20. Bourdon	16 ft.	30. Nazard	2⅔ ft.
21. Open Diapason	8 „	31. Flautina	2 „
22. Violoncello	8 „	32. Mixture (4 ranks)
23. Salicional	8 „	33. Dolce Cornet (5 ranks)
24. Aoline	8 „	34. Contra Fagotto	16 „
25. Stopped Diapason	8 „	35. Cornopean	8 „
26. Quintadena	8 „	36. Oboe (with Bassoon)	8 „
27. Flauto Traverso	4 „	37. Vox Humana	8 „
28. Violina	4 „	38. Clarion	4 „
29. Octave	4 „

CHOIR ORGAN.

39. Lieblich Gedacht	16 ft.	45. Fugara	4 ft.
40. Geigen Principal	8 „	46. Flute d'Amour	4 „
41. Open Diapason	8 „	47. Hohlpfeiffe	4 „
42. Melodia	8 „	48. Piccolo	2 „
43. Rohr Flute	8 „	49. Clarinet	8 „
44. Dulciana	8 „

SOLO ORGAN.

50. Stentorphon	8 ft.	53. Flauto Traverso	8 ft.
51. Viola	8 „	54. Octave Viola	4 „
52. Philomela	8 „	55. Tuba Mirabilis	8 „

PEDALE.

56. Bourdon	32 ft.	62. Violoncello	8 ft.
57. Open Diapason	16 „	63. Super Octave	4 „
58. Violone	16 „	64. Trombone	16 „
59. Bourdon	16 „	65. Posaune	8 „
60. Quint	10⅔ „	66. Fagotto	8 „
61. Octave	8 „

MECHANICAL REGISTERS.

67. Gt. Organ Separation.	73. Swell to Choir Coupler.
68. Swell to Grt. Coupler.	74. Great to Solo Coupler.
69. Choir to Grt. Coupler.	75. Great to Pedale Coupler.
70. Solo to Great Coupler.	76. Swell to Pedale Coupler.
71. Chr. to Gt. Sub-Octve.	77. Choir to Pedale Coupler.
72. Octave Coupler Great on itself.	78. Solo to Pedale Coupler.

(These Couplers are operated by pneumatic power and controlled by thumb-knobs, placed over the Great Organ keyboard).

79. Tremolo.	81. Pedal Combination Separation.
80. Bellows Signal.

(Detaching the Pedale registers from the Pedal movement at will, controlled by a thumb knob over the Swell Manual).

PEDAL MOVEMENTS.

1. Fortissimo Pedal, drawing all registers and couplers at once.
2. Crescendo Pedal, drawing all registers from softest to loudest at will.
3. De Crescendo Pedal, reverse of No. 2,
4. *Forte Great, giving full Great organ.
5. *Mezzo Great, giving all 8 and 4 foot registers.
6. *Piano Great, giving a soft combination.
7. *Forte Swell, giving all swell registers.
8. *Mezzo swell, giving all 8 and 4 foot registers.
9. *Piano swell giving a soft combination.
10. *Forte Choir, giving all choir registers.
11. *Piano Choir, giving a soft combination.
12. Reversible Pedale to operate No. 75.
13. Adjustable Swell Pedal.

* Nos. 4 to 11 also give an appropriate pedale.

Pneumatic motors are applied to the Great organ and all its couplings, the Pedale organ, the Swell, and to the register action. The action is extended and reversed. The motive power for blowing the organ is the Boston Hydraulic Motor, which is supplied with water from a tank placed in the attic above the organ.

RECAPITULATION.

Great Organ	19 stops	1,566	pipes.
Swell „	19 „	1,508	„
Choir „	11 „	638	„
Solo „	6 „	348	„
Pedale	11 „	330	„
Mechanicals	14 „
Totals	80 stops	4,390	pipes.

13 pedal movements.

EXPERIENCES OF AN ORGANIST.

VI.

Having now plenty of available material, and being assisted by the prejudices before alluded to in favour of new brooms, I got together a large choral class, or rather psalmody class (some of our Presbyterian friends had conscientious objections to our calling it by any other name), and we practised with assiduity and enthusiasm, devoting part of our time to works of the great masters, and part to the music which was used at the Sunday services. This latter, when I first came to the church, was of the old-fashioned kind. Tunes now, almost, if not quite, obsolete, such as Cranbrook, and Devizes, and Cambridge New, were in use. But the congregation had evidently begun to grow sick of this vulgar stuff, and soon after my arrival, to my great relief, a new tune-book was introduced. Even this improvement was not made without some opposition on the part of one or two conservative members, who objected to all improvements on principle; and there was one obstinate old gentleman who, for many weeks after the change was made, refused to stand during the singing, but stuck rigidly to his seat as a mark of his disapproval. After this everything went on smoothly for a considerable period. There was a critical lady in one of the side pews who occasionally complained that I played too slowly, but as she was counterbalanced by another critical lady sitting exactly opposite to her, who complained that I played too fast, I concluded that I was giving satisfaction, and congratulated myself accordingly. My position was, indeed, a very comfortable one. Not only did the congregation generally seem satisfied, but, by using the organ cautiously, selecting my voluntaries carefully, and not playing too loudly, I even succeeded in winning the approbation of those who had at first been most strongly opposed to the introduction of the instrument. They began to modify their views, and I was told by one of them that I played very judiciously, and that he found the organ much less objectionable than he had anticipated.

Two years passed away, and there was no quarrelling or bickering among my Presbyterian brethren. All was calm and peaceful, and I began to think it must be true, as I had been informed, that in Presbyterian churches the form of church government was so superior to that of Congregational chapels that the dissensions which were liable to arise in the latter were entirely unknown in the former. But I was mistaken. Presbyterianism is not without its imperfections, which, when a favourable opportunity presents itself, can sometimes be seen easily with the naked eye. In our church the opportunity would appear to have been lacking for some time, but it came at last. Among the various religious societies which flourished in our midst was one calling itself the Christian Young Men's Early-rising Presbyterian Sabbath Morning Fellowship Association. I am not quite sure that I have accurately recollected the title. I fancy I am wrong about the words "Early-rising," but in other respects I believe I have put it down correctly. This body had got it into its head that our parson was growing too old for his work, and that he needed a coadjutor. Most persons, it may be supposed, would feel a delicacy in telling any one for whom they professed to have any regard that he was growing old, and would hesitate a long while before doing it. Not so the young men of the Sabbath Morning Fellowship Association. They loved their pastor dearly. Nobody could be more devoted to him than they were. But they had weighed him in the balances, like Belshazzar, and had found him wanting. His health and strength, they were sure, were failing, and his spiritual power was almost gone. He was over sixty years of age, and it was evident to them that he was rapidly "breaking up," and for the sake of the church, whose interests they had so much at heart, they thought they had better tell him so without delay. So they called together the elders of the church and laid the matter before them for their prayerful consideration. Perhaps it may be as well to explain, for the benefit of the unenlightened, that in Presbyterian churches the office of elder is equivalent to that of deacon. Our Scotch friends seem to think that deacons are unscriptural, and no doubt they very often are. I am afraid, however, that elders too are sometimes open to the same charge. Our elders were particularly favourable specimens of their kind, and yet I think that even they were not always either quite as wise as serpents or quite as harmless as doves. But be that as it may, having heard all that their young friends had to tell them, and the conclusions to which they had come, and being themselves of the same mind, they decided that a depotation, consisting partly of elders and partly of members of the Sabbath Morning Fellowship Association, should wait upon their dear minister, gently remind him of his advancing years and decreasing strength, and propose that he should be assisted in his ministerial work (and relieved of a portion of his salary) by a co-pastor. Accordingly they repaired at once to the house of the reverend gentleman, and proceeded to make known the purpose of their visit. Their beloved pastor being a strong and active old gentleman, was, as may be supposed, greatly surprised and not a little mortified on being told that his health was failing and his powers declining. At first he stoutly denied the impeachment, and declared that he was fully capable of continuing his work without assistance. Ultimately, however, he was induced to consent, though with great reluctance, that the matter should be referred to the congregation, and that a meeting for this purpose should be convened at an early date.

Digitized by Google

It is not necessary that I should give an account of this meeting, or endeavour to picture the scenes to which it gave rise, especially as I have already portrayed similar scenes in a former chapter. Suffice it to say that there was much disputation and not a little recrimination, for Presbyterians when once they let their angry passions rise, are little or no better than other and more benighted communities. The elders made long speeches, in which they proved very clearly that their much esteemed minister was too old for his work, and their much esteemed minister made a long speech in which he proved with equal clearness that he was not. Then the congregation took sides, one part supporting the minister and the other part supporting the elders. The result of the fight was that the elders, although their party was in the majority, failed to carry their point. Some of the discontented ones, however, including an elder or two and a goodly portion of the Christian Young Men's Sabbath Morning Fellowship Association, severed their connection with the church, and be took themselves to a hall in the neighbourhood, where they preached to one another, and had "a little heaven below" all to themselves.

The church, which up to this period, was in a flourishing condition, was much weakened by this rupture. The congregation grew thinner, and many empty pews were to be seen. Now congregations are necessarily very much like the individuals of which they are composed, and when they begin to fall into bad health, they are apt to become querulous and captious. It was so with us. Everybody began to find fault with everybody else, and as a matter of course, the organist did not altogether escape censure. For instance, he was told that he was not sufficiently circumspect in the selection of his voluntaries, some of which, it was asserted, were of a light and frivolous character and only fit for dancing purposes. Haydn's air "In native worth" was put down as one of this class. He was also accused of introducing ritualistic practices into the church because, on one special occasion, the choir sang an anthem at the conclusion of the service. Such a thing had never been heard of before in a Presbyterian sanctuary. True, it was admitted in palliation of the offence, that the performance had taken place after and not during divine service, but nevertheless as was sharply remarked by a sour little Scotchwoman with a narrow mind and a broad accent, it was "bordering on ritualism" and "wouldna do." Other equally serious accusations were brought against him. Still it must be acknowledged that the complaints in this direction were never either very loud or very frequent. Whether they would have become more so after a while I cannot say, for about this time I received the offer of an appointment as professor of harmony at a school of music in Ireland together with that of organist and choir-master of a church in the same region, and fearing that in consequence of the unsatisfactory condition into which our church had fallen, my position there was not quite as stable as it had formerly appeared to be, I resolved, after much consideration, to leave it and to try my fortune in the amiable sister isle.

A HOME FOR ENGLISH OPERA.

Are we never to have a theatre especially devoted to English opera? Is it possible to collect money for every other description of entertainment, and to find men willing to contribute large sums in support of schools of instruction, and yet refuse their sympathy to that which alone can afford opportunities for young aspirants to exhibit their abilities? Until we have a home especially devoted to musical works in our own language we cannot expect to have either singers or composers devoting their lives to an art which has been, and continues to be, barously neglected in this country. Instrumental music receives its fair share of patronage, and we have had during the past ten years, a remarkable exhibition of progress in English instrumental writers and players, and can also say they have received a satisfactory amount of patronage; but the poor vocalist has had to devote himself for the most part to singing concert-ballads or occasionally taking part in a cantata, or to be content with foreign music wedded to foreign words. At one time the cry was—You have no English composers; but this was never true, for, as early as the 17th century a school of English music existed, and we can point to particular forms of composition that healthfully supported the art as early as the year 1600. It is folly to talk of compositions or composers when you are without an audience to listen to them. As readily might you expect the flower to grow, or the tree to thrive, when planted in an uncongenial soil. We have had plenty of good trees, but we have been without sunshine; and even when the plant has been watered, this has only been done by fits and starts, and the flowers that were forced into bloom have died as soon as created for want of sympathetic culture and care. The 19th century has given us plenty of opera writers: Bishop, with his wealth of melody; Rooke, with his charms of construction; Balfe, with his light but ever tuneful phrases. The names crowd upon us, and we have the music of Wallace, Loder, Macfarren, Barnett, and many others vibrating still in our ears at the present moment. To say nothing of the well known works of Balfe and Wallace, can we forget "The Mountain Sylph"? are we never again to hear the "Charles the Second," "Robin Hood," and, above all, the "Don Quixote" of George Macfarren? I cannot trust myself to talk of these works; but England would be much richer and a much happier nation if we heard them at the present day. I am not forgetting Arthur Sullivan, for he has made comic operetta respected in this country. He has written music that is refined, although it makes us laugh, and he has written carefully, taking the greatest pains with his score. And now we have Mr. Villiers Stanford, and Mr. F. H. Cowen ready to show us that the lyric drama is not dead in England, if it only had a theatre suitable for its performance. We look to Mr. Carl Rosa, whose short season at Drury Lane is sure to interest us, and we ask ourselves again and again, Are operas in English never to have a permanent home amongst us?

The second cry that has been raised is, that we are without dramatic vocalists. I think that any reasonable musician, who watches the horizon and knows anything about the human voice, can prove to the world that we have plenty of vocal ability; the astonishment is that we possess so many singers, when we consider the small encouragenent given to them. Only let the want be exhibited, and I guarantee we shall find the supply. We may not have very many large voices at present occupying themselves with public singing, but if you hear as much as I do of the amateur, you will acknowledge that we are not without them in private.

Another remark we hear made on every possible occasion is, that English operas have never been made to pay in this country. In a former communication I have tried o disprove this assertion, and I think that I am prepared o demonstrate to any reasonable enquirer that, when worthy of patronage, operas in English do not spell "loss." Mr. Bunn was not a perfect manager, and yet a great deal of money was taken at Drury Lane when he was there. Mr. Bunn was too egotistical to be a liberal manager, and unless his own words were included in the libretto he took out little interest in the production. The history of Macfarren's "Don Quixote" has yet to be written to clearly prove how good English works are sometimes treated by the management. Mr. Maddox, the first lessee of the Princess's Theatre, told me himself that, after paying all expenses and painting new scenery, he cleared £5,000 in his first season. Jullien's tenure of Drury Lane was cut short by his extravagance and the losses resulting from other speculations. Every one connected with music knows that Mr. Harrison was ruined at Covent Garden, but the fact is hardly so well understood that Mr. Harrison tolerated in himself what he never would have allowed in any one else. Had he been manager only and not a singer, we have every reason to believe that his efforts to revive English opera would have been successful. As to the Opera Company, Limited, although they are to be thanked for the manner in which Macfarren's "Helvellyn" was produced, their expenses in salaries alone swallowed up all the receipts. If Mr. Carl Rosa can be successful in the provinces, he should be successful in London. It must all depend on good management. We have plenty of theatres of moderate size where music could be better enjoyed, better heard, and better put on the stage than in opera houses like Covent Garden, with its gigantic stage, its numerous band, chorus, and ballet. It has been over and over again demonstrated that small houses can be made to pay where large ones perish. A good orchestra is needed, it is true, but can't it be constructed on a less extensive scale? A moderate chorus frequently gives more satisfaction than a large one, while the principal singers that can work in the provinces, with all the worry of change of place and extra rehearsal, should be sufficient for London. Better that we should commence on a more moderate scale and continue all the season, than open in a larger house with extra singers that in salaries alone drain the treasury, however liberally the public may support the undertaking. With all the experience of past years, and with the appreciation of music at the present day,—with the number of patrons that surround us and profess to be animated by an ardent desire to advance the arts that civilize,—with institutions springing up to teach the higher forms of poetic expression,—are we never to have a home where the works of our own land can be cherished and matured? or are we ever to be saying, "A prophet is not without honour, save in his own country and in his own house"? I am thoroughly convinced that the day will come when we shall regard with astonishment our own paucity, and when our encouragement of everything that is foreign will no longer be the fashion or the profitable weakness that it now appears to be regarded by most of our countrymen.—"PHOSPHOR," Brighton Guardian.

Digitized by Google

It is stated that H.R.H. the Prince of Wales has joined the committee of the Park Band Society, and has sent a contribution to its funds. The band of the Middlesex Yeomanry Cavalry (bandmaster, Mr. W. T. Graves, late 1st Life Guards) has been engaged by the society to play in Victoria Park, E., from 4 p.m. to 7 p.m. every Sunday, commencing on the 13th instant, until Sunday, September 9th. Arrangements have also been made with the 1st Essex Volunteer Artillery for the band of this corps to play in West Ham Park every Thursday from 6.45 till dusk, commencing on the 17th instant, and finishing in September. In Regent's Park the society's own band will play (under the conductorship of Mr. Hiram Henton, the bandmaster of the London Rifle Brigade), after the 13th instant, as last year, on Tuesday and Thursday afternoons, between 4 p.m. and 7 p.m., till further notice. In Hyde Park, where the society's band has already been playing every Sunday since April 1st with marked financial success, the band will begin on next Saturday its daily performances, and will play, as last year, on Sundays, Mondays, Wednesdays, Fridays, and Saturdays, between 3 p.m. and 7 p.m. till further notice. All communications, subscriptions, and donations should be forwarded to the secretary, Park Band Society, 51, Strand, W.C. The Sunday Band question is a delicate one to discuss. However, it is time that our military bands were employed in the performance of week-day concerts.

Correspondence.

INTONING.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "MUSICAL STANDARD."

SIR,—You will doubtless be interested in hearing that your well-deserved castigation of an ill-advised rector in "one of the leading sea-ports in the south of England" got copied into at least one of the local papers, which identified the performance with a church not a hundred miles from the heart of the aforesaid ancient town. The meeting of the choir of that church following the exposure was, a little bird informs me, anything but harmonious—the grievance apparently being that these gross offenders against common sense had been "found out" and exposed to the contempt of the educated. Oddly enough, the said rector, attending his first meeting of the kind—I should say in my five-and-twenty years' experience here—at a neighbouring church, where an effort was made to clear off the debt on a new organ, seemed to take it as a virtue that he was as fond of good organs as anyone, and he believed he was the first to bring a real (sic) good one to our town. I don't read in the report of the meeting that the rev. gentleman went on to say how he used the "real good one." Possibly his modesty restrained him; but if I may testify from personal experience, I should say a barrel pricked with half-a-dozen tunes and chants would abundantly suit all the demands made for years past upon the "real good" instrument by the alleged introducer of it into the town. So much for self-glorification from a place where awkward questions cannot be asked. If the "unmusical" method of following the prayers was not a thing to be ashamed of, where was the need of making any mistake about it? OBSERVER.

Passing Events.

Mr. F. H. Pocock gives an organ recital on the 21st., at the Lancaster Hall, Notting Hill.

The Rev. Sir F. A. Gore Ouseley has recently delivered an interesting lecture on motets at Oxford.

Mr. F. Clay is announced as musical director of the Alhambra Theatre, now in course of re-erection.

At Paris, on the 5th inst., died in his 83rd year, Monsieur Louis Viardot, husband of Mdme. Viardot Garcia.

A good concert was given on May 16th at the Birkbeck Institution under the direction of Mr. J. Stedman.

The degree of LL.D. has been conferred upon the Rev. Sir F. A. Gore Ouseley, Bart., by the Cambridge University.

A tolerably complete series of performances of Wagner's operas will be given during the next few weeks in Hamburg.

An opera, "Fenice," by the late gifted English composer, Henry Hugh Pierson, has been produced at Dessau, it is reported, successfully.

Signor Spinelli's comic opera, "Il Carnavale di Piripicchio," has been heard with approval in Rome. The composer has only just attained the age of 18.

Ponchielli's "Gioconda" is in active preparation at Covent Garden, and will, it is expected, be produced on the 24th or 26th of this month.

An eminent living composer was much amused the other day by hearing a request in a well-known music shop in Regent Street for Wagner's "Nibelungen Ring" arranged for two flutes!

The prize for the best ballet offered by the Monnia, Brussels, has been awarded to M. Paul Bertier for his "Bulbul, ou le Poeté et l'Etoile." The number of competitors was eleven.

The aggregate receipts of the three concerts given by Sarasate amounted to little short of £1,000. Since the visit of Paganini to this country, no violinist has ever attracted such remunerative audiences as Sarasate.

It is stated that, owing to a variety of untoward circumstances, not the least being the illness of Mr. G. Wills the librettist, Mr. Frederick Clay has felt himself obliged to abandon his new secular cantata, "Sardanapalus," which he was writing for the Leeds Musical Festival. Mr. Clay has offered to take a subject and begin another cantata de novo, but the Festival Committee do not feel justified in running the risk which this would involve.

Digitized by Google

Mr. J. L. Hughes, a well-known Liverpool tenor, and highly successful choir-trainer, has just been appointed choirmaster of the principal Episcopal church in Chicago (U. S.), at a salary of 1,000 dollars (£200) per annum.

Mortier de Fontaine, whose death in London was announced last week at the age of 71, was a pianist of some renown in Vienna some forty years ago, and made his début at the Musical Union in 1849, and afterwards visited America.

The Taunton Philharmonic Society gave Haydn's "Creation" on May 10th, under the able conductorship of Mr. T. J. Dudeney. The orchestra was complete and well balanced, and the chorus singing is reported as being most excellent. The society is doing really good work in the cause of art.

At St. Stephen's Church, South Kensington, on Whit-Sunday afternoon, the second part of Gounod's "Redemption" was rendered with orchestral accompaniment under the direction of Mr. Stedman, to a large congregation. This service will be repeated on Sunday next, with the addition of the third part of the oratorio.

Although the organ is daily gaining friends in the north, it appears that the names of 50,000 members and adherents of the Free Church of Scotland have been placed upon a petition asking the General Assembly of that Church to withhold all sanction to the introduction of instrumental music into the services. However, this does not mean much; every question is a battle-field in these days.

The closing concert of the season of the Borough of Hackney Choral Association, on May 7th, under the thoughtful and excellent direction of Mr. R. Prout, was a representation of modern English music, including works by Sir A. Sullivan, Mr. A. C. Mackenzie, Mr. Prout, Mr. C. V. Stanford, Mr. Goring Thomas, Mr. Cowen, and Dr. C. Swinnerton Heap.

Dr. Arnold's choir gave a concert at the Guildhall, Winchester, on May 10th. The admirable finish, refinement, light and shade of the choir singing abundantly testified to the thoughtful and valuable training of the conductor, Dr. Arnold. The programme included several fine old madrigals, and was made up of an excellent selection of sacred and secular works. The choir forms, indeed, a noteworthy and very useful musical institution in Winchester.

The Wolverhampton Triennial Musical Festival will be held on the 13th and 14th September, and the works to be performed are: Mendelssohn's "Elijah," Beethoven's "Mount of Olives," Gounod's "Messe solennelle," Hummel's "Alma Virgo," Macfarren's "Lady of the lake," and Mackenzie's "Jason." Soloists: Mesdames Anna Williams, Mary Davies, Patey; Messrs. Lloyd, Maas, King, and Foli. Leader, Mr. Carrodus. Conductor, Dr. Swinnerton Heap.

Mr. George Gear, whose pianoforte works and execution thereof, at his own concert, were recently noticed in eulogistic terms, came out as a vocalist at the Vestry Hall, Turnham Green, on May 10th. He sang "Les Rameaux," of Faure, and Hatton's "Simon the Cellarer," with great success, and was re-called. Mr. G. Gear also played, with éclat, his fantasia on "Faust"; and his song, "The rose is dead," well rendered by Miss Edith Ruthven, was honoured with a bis.

Mdme. Florence Winn held her annual evening concert at the Athenæum, Camden Road, on the 5th inst. The hall was crowded with a most appreciative audience, which is scarcely to be wondered at when her list of artists included the names of Miss Mary Davies, Miss Damian, Mr. Alfred Kenningham, Mr. Sidney Tower, and Signor Foli. The concert throughout was such a complete success that it is almost impossible to particularise. Mdme. Winn delighted her audience with her artistic rendering of "The Storm" (Hullah), which she gave with true dramatic fervour. Miss Mary Davies and Signor Foli were never heard to greater advantage. Particular mention should be made of Miss Ethel Headley, a young artist of great promise, whose rendering of Bishop's "Tell me, my heart" could hardly be surpassed. Mr. Turle Lee and Mr. Bending conducted with their accustomed ability. We are pleased to think that this concert—one of the best ever given in the North of London—has been as satisfactory to Mdme. Florence Winn as it was gratifying to her numerous audience.

At the Richter Concerts now in course, will shortly heard a new pianist of great pretension, Mdme. Vare Stepanoff, a young Bessarabian lady, and pupil of P fessor Dachs at Vienna. Mdme. Stepanoff enjoys highest reputation on the continent, and has played brilliant success in all the large cities and musical cent such as Vienna, Berlin, Leipsic, Dresden, Salzburg Austria), Bremen, and Cassel. The Signale (musi journal), of Vienna, praises Mdme. Stepanoff's perfo ances in glowing terms.

At the matinée of Mdlle. and M. Brousil, held James's Hall on May 10th, a quartet for violin, v violoncello, and contra-basso, by J. I. F. Dotzauer, produced, Mdlle. Bertha Brousil leading the strings. is a work of sterling material, and stands steadily "ancient ways." Miss Maria Wurm, who held not a bouquet, but a regular flower-basket, played her mazurka, a nocturne of Chopin in D flat, and (with J. Adolphe Brousil) her duet sonata in G, already spo of as admirable music. The sonata was heartily planded by veteran connoisseurs. A string quartet o Julius Benedict, Op. 87, concluded the seance.

Mdme. Jenny Viard-Louis held her (public) concer May 10th, at St. James's Hall. She gave her well-kn grand reading of Beethoven's Sonata in D minor, O and afterwards played fugitive pieces by E. Grieg Liszt. Mdme. Viard-Louis introduced and conduc peculiar but very interesting work, by Niels W. G (another Scandinavian composer), called "Novelle a sort of "suite" in several movements, running one the other, and very well worked out. Mdlle. Isa Levallois was recalled for a capital execution of H. Wi awski's Polonaise for the violin, and Miss Victoria Hunsen won rapturous applause for the favourite comi song from "Dinorah," and some of her charming Swed songs. Mr. Wm. Carter conducted the concert.

Mr. J. B. Bonawitz held his final concert on the ev ing of May 9th, at the Blüthner Rooms, Kensington G dens Square. The scheme comprised his own Pianof Quintet in G minor, already noticed as a splendid com sition, three pieces of Chopin, the "Festspiel" a "Brantlied," from "Lohingren," as arranged by Li and Mr. Bonawitz's Duet for the Pianoforte, Op. 19, play by him and Mdlle. Cecilia Brousil. Mdlle. C. Brousil the strings in the quintet, and played, as a solo, Mr Bonawitz's clever "Concert Dramatique." The re "strings" were, Messrs. D'Egville, Alois Brousil, a Mr. J. F. Rudersdorff. Miss E. Selim, a fine contra sang with taste and feeling Mr. Bonawitz's song "T Orphan," and two other pieces by A. E. Tozer and Gregh. The concert unfortunately fell on a "Philha monic" night.

The Queriat.

QUERY.

THE RESONATOR.—Can anyone give me any information co cerning an instrument invented by Signor Albert Bach, call the Resonator, for magnifying the sound of the voice? If there is such an instrument, I should like to know where to obta one, and what is about the cost.—A. P.

Service Lists.

TRINITY SUNDAY.

MAY 20th.

London.

WESTMINSTER ABBEY.—Morn.: Service, Calkin in B flat; Continuation, Garrett in E flat; Aft.: Service, Walmisley in Anthem, "The Lord is very great" (Beckwith).

LINCOLN'S INN CHAPEL.—Morn.: Service, Gibbons in F; Kyrie, Gibbons; Anthem, Blessed be the God and Father (Wesley). Even: Service, Gibbons in F; Anthem, Praise the Lord, O my soul (Croft).

TEMPLE CHURCH.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum Laudamus, Hopkins in C; Athanasian Creed, Harmonised Monotone; Anthem, Behold the Lamb that was slain (Spohr). Even.: Service, Cantate Domino, and Deus Misereatur, Keat in C; Apostles' Creed, Harmonized Monotone; Anthem, I have surely built Thee an house (Boyce).

Digitized by Google

CHRIST CHURCH, CLAPHAM.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Plain-song; Kyrie and Credo, (Gounod) Messe Solennelle; Offertory Anthem, Sing to the Lord with joy and gladness, (Haydn); Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei, and Gloria in excelsis (Gounod). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Smart in B flat; Anthem, The heavens are telling (Haydn).

FOUNDLING CHAPEL.—Morn.: Service, Garrett in D; Anthem, God is our hope and strength (Greene). Aft.: Service, Garrett in D; Anthem, Let all men praise the Lord Mendelssohn).

ST. GEORGE THE MARTYR, QUEEN SQUARE.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Tours in F; Kyrie, Tours. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Foster in A.

ST. JAMES'S PRIVATE EPISCOPAL CHAPEL, SOUTHWARK.—Morn.: Service, Introit, Athanasian Creed (Tallis); Communion Service, Hummel in E flat. Even.: Service, Barnby in E flat; Anthem, Holy, holy, and Hallelujah (Handel).

ST. MAGNUS, LONDON BRIDGE.—Morn.: Service, Opening Anthem, To the Lord our God (Ouseley); Te Deum and Jubilate, King in F; Kyrie, Ebdon. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, King in F; Anthem, I was in the Spirit (Blow).

ST. MICHAEL'S, CORNHILL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Smart in F; Anthem, Whatsoever is born of God (Oakeley); Kyrie and Creed, Wesley in E. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Naylor in C; Anthem, I saw the Lord (Stainer).

ST. MARY BOLTONS, WEST BROMPTON, S.W.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Smart in F; Benedictus, Chant; Holy Communion, Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei, and Gloria in excelsis, Eyre in E flat; Offertory, Stainer; Paternoster, Stainer. Even.: Service, in B flat; Anthem, To Thee Cherubin and Seraphin (Handel).

ST. PAUL'S, BOW COMMON, E.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Benedictus, Chants; Holy Communion, Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei, and Gloria in excelsis, Mozart in B flat; Offertory, Garrett; Paternoster, Stainer. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Hopkins in F; Anthem, I saw the Lord (Stainer).

ST. MARGARET PATTENS, ROOD LANE, FENCHURCH STREET.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Sullivan in D; Benedictus, Dykes in F; Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Agnus Dei, Benedictus, and Gloria in excelsis, Mozart; Offertory Anthem, God is a Spirit (Bennett). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Garrett in F; Anthem, The word is flesh become Redemption" (Gounod).

ST. PETER'S, VERE STREET, W.—Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Wood in G; Anthem, Come, up hither "Last Judgment" (Spohr).

ST. PAUL'S, AVENUE ROAD, SOUTH HAMPSTEAD.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, and Benedictus, Calkin in B flat; Kyrie, Tours in F; Offertory, Barnby; Credo, Sanctus, and Gloria in excelsis, Tours in F. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Bridge in C; I am Alpha and Omega (Stainer).

ST. BARNABAS, MARYLEBONE.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, King in F; Anthem, From all that dwell Walmisley); Kyrie and Nicene Creed, Merbecke. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, King in F; Anthem, Awake, awake! (Stainer).

ST. PETER'S, LEIGHAM COURT ROAD, STREATHAM, S.W.—Morn.: Holy Eucharist, Purge me with hyssop (Novello); Introit, Blessed be the Holy Trinity (Agutter); Mass, Tours in F, gradual; Blessed art thou, O Lord (Sutton). Even.: Magnificat, Smart in F; Anthem, in humble faith (Garrett).

ST. AUGUSTINE AND ST. FAITH, WATLING STREET.—Morn.: Service, Smart in F (throughout); Offertory, Blessing and glory (Boyce). Even.: Service, Smart in F; Anthem, Praise his awful name (Spohr).

ST. SAVIOUR'S HOXTON.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Smart in F; Athanasian Creed, Best; Holy Communion; Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Gloria in excelsis, Smart in F. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Dykes in F; Anthem, With Angels and Archangels (Hopkins).

Country.

ARDINGLY COLLEGE, SUSSEX.—Morn.: Communion Service, Tours in F. Even.: Service, Tours in F; Anthem, I saw the Lord (Stainer).

ST. ASAPH CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Nares in D; Anthem, I am Alpha and Omega (Stainer). Even.: Service, The Litany; Anthem, I beheld, and lo! (Blow.)

ASHBURNE CHURCH, DERBYSHIRE.—Morn.: Service, Dykes in F; Kyrie, Credo, and Gloria, Woodward in E flat. Even.: Service, Lloyd in E flat; Anthem, selections from Last Judgment (Spohr).

BEDDINGTON CHURCH, SURREY.—Morn.: Service, Smart in F; Introit, Holy, holy, and blessing and glory (Spohr); Communion Service, Smart in F. Even.: Service, Stainer in B flat; Anthems, Let the bright Seraphim, and Let their celestial concerts (Handel).

BIRMINGHAM (ST. CYPRIAN'S, HAY MILLS).—Morn.: Service, Field in D; Anthem, I saw the Lord (Stainer). Even.: Service, Clarke-Whitfeld in E. Anthem, I beheld, and lo, a great multitude (Blow).

BRISTOL CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Walmisley in B flat. Even.: Service, Walmisley in D minor; Anthem, I saw the Lord (Stainer).

CANTERBURY CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Goss in F; Te Deum, Oakeley in F; Jubilate; Anthem, Whatsoever is born of God (Oakeley); Communion Service, Elvey in E flat. Even.: Service, Elvey in F. Anthem, I saw the Lord (Stainer).

CARLISLE CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Hopkins in C; Kyrie and Nicene Creed, Best in G. Even.: Service, Attwood in C. Anthem, Come, said a voice, and Behold the Lamb that was sacrificed (Spohr).

DUBLIN, ST. PATRICK'S (NATIONAL) CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Smart in F; Holy Communion, Kyrie, Creed, and Sanctus, Smart in F; Anthem, and God saw everything (Haydn). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Ebdon in C. Anthems, Above Him stood the Seraphim (Mendlessohn); and In the beginning (Haydn and Stevenson).

EXETER CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Roberts in D; Communion, Rogers in D; Introit, Ward; Anthem, If ye love me. Even.: Service, Walmisley in D minor; Anthem, The Lord gave the word (Handel).

ELY CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Plain Song; Kyrie and Credo, Stainer in B flat; Anthem, Holy, Holy, Holy (Stainer in B flat). Even.: Service, Stainer in E flat; V. Cres. and Gloria, Jackman in D; Anthem, To Thee all Angels, To Thee Cherubim (Handel).

LLANDAFF CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Stewart in G; Introit, Hymn 161; Communion Service, Parry in D. Even.: Service, the Litany (Tallis); Anthem, In humble Faith (Garrett).

LICHFIELD CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Communion Service, Barnby in E; Veni Creator, Palestrina; Anthem, Let all men Praise the Lord (Mendelssohn). Aft.: Service, Stainer in A; Anthem, Hallelujah to the Father (Beethoven).

LIVERPOOL CATHEDRAL.—Aft.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Collingwood Banks in E flat; Anthem, I am Alpha and Omega (Stainer).

MANCHESTER CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Barnby in E; Holy Communion, Pyne in A flat; Anthem, Come, Holy Ghost (Attwood). Even.: Service, Barnby in E; Anthem, How lovely are the Messengers (Mendelssohn).

MANCHESTER (ST. BENEDICT'S).—Morn.: Service, Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei, and Gloria in excelsis, Monk in C. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Bunnett in F.

MANCHESTER (ST. JOHN BAPTIST, HULME).—Morn.: Service, Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, and Gloria in excelsis, Williams in D; Benedictus, and Agnus Dei, Eyre in E flat; Offertory, Holy, Holy, (Handel). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Stainer; Anthem, In Jewry is God known (Clarke-Whitfield).

MUSSELBURGH (LORETTO SCHOOL).—Morn.: Introit, God is a Spirit, Woman of Samaria (Bennett); Service, Stainer in E flat; Anthems, Holy, holy, holy (Handel), and Hallelujah ("Mount of Olives," Beethoven). Even.: Service, Anthem, There is none like unto the God of Jeshurun (Goss and Sullivan).

ROCHESTER CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Barnby in D; Anthem, Above Him stood (Mendelssohn). Even.: Service, Hatton in E; Anthem, To Thee all Angels, and To Thee Cherubin (Handel).

SHEFFIELD PARISH CHURCH.—Morn.: Service, Kyrie, Elvey in A. Even.: Service, Cantate Domine and Deus Miseratur Chants; Anthem, I am Alpha and Omega (Stainer).

SHERBORNE ABBEY.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Lyle in E flat; Athanasian Creed, Lyle in G; Anthem, Holy, Holy (Spohr); Kyrie, Mendelssohn in E flat; Offertories, Barnby. Even.: Service, Anthem, Holy, Holy (Mozart).

WELLS CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Boyce and Arnold in A; Anthem, O, how amiable (Richardson); Veni Creator Spiritus (Attwood). Even.: Service, Cooke in G; Anthem, I saw the Lord (Stainer).

WORCESTER CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Skelton in D; Anthem, And lo! a throne (Spohr). Even.: Service, The Litany (Tallis); Anthem, I saw the Lord (Stainer).

APPOINTMENT.

Mr. G. COOPER has been appointed Organist and Choirmaster of St. Anne and St. Agnes, Gresham Street, E.C.

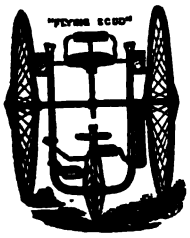
NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ORGANO's request has been attended to.

A CORRESPONDENT desires to know where, and at what cost, Handel's "Water Music" can be obtained?

Digitized by Google

BICYCLES AND TRICYCLES.
NEW AND SECOND-HAND.



"FLYING SCUD" and "ECLECTIC" TRICYCLES, are the Machines for 1883. Spoken of by the Daily News of January 30th as "Splendid machines." "NANCY LEE," Weldless Steel," and "NONSUCH" Steel Bicycles, from £5 5s. Any machine at maker's price for twelve or less equal monthly payments, or for £5 down and 20s. per month, or large discount and carriage paid for cash. Can be seen and tried before purchasing in our school (60 by 40, concrete floor, tuition free), adjoining Show-rooms, the largest in London, with over 400 new and second-hand on View. Machines bought, sold, cleaned, repaired (estimates given), warehoused, advanced upon and exchanged.

Illustrated Lists post free. Hours 9 till 7; Saturdays till 4.

Repairs of all kinds neatly, cheaply, and promptly executed. Cheapest house in the trade for fittings. Parts and sundries of all descriptions kept in stock.

Machines Let on Hire with Option of Purchase.

SOUTH LONDON MACHINISTS' COMPANY.

STEAM WORKS: Suffolk Works, Suffolk Grove, Great Suffolk Street, S.E. Show Rooms and Offices: 28 and 29, Suffolk Grove. Bicycle and Tricycle School: 18, Suffolk Grove. City Depot, Show Rooms, and School: Tower Chambers, Moorgate Street, E.C. (Nearly opposite Moorgate Street Station.) PERAMBULATORS and all Domestic Machines at lowest prices for cash, or on easy terms without extra charge. Lists free. State kind required.

ESTABLISHED 1872.

When writing please say where you saw this advertisement.

T. R. WILLIS,

Organ Builder, Metal & Wood Pipe Maker and Voicer,

TOWER ORGAN WORKS, 29, MINORIES, LONDON.

AN ORGAN KEPT FOR PRACTICE.

REBUILDING, TUNING, AND REPAIRING.

E & W. SNELL,

Manufacturers of Harmoniums, and Reed Pedal Organs,

KING STREET NORTH, CAMDEN TOWN, LONDON, N.W.

NOTE.—These are the only Instruments at which an Organist can really find himself "at home," as all Scales, Positions, and Measurements are adopted strictly in accordance with the Resolutions of the Council of the College of Organists. Estimates free.

MALEY, YOUNG & OLDKNOW,
ORGAN BUILDERS,
KING'S ROAD, ST. PANCRAS, LONDON, N.W.

Specifications, Estimates, and Designs for Church, Chamber, Concert, and all Descriptions of Organs.
Materials, Workmanship, and Tone guaranteed to be First Class.
Organs rebuilt to suit any position, enlarged, and Revoiced at very moderate charges.
Tunings in all parts of the Kingdom.

PROSPECTUS FREE ON APPLICATION.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts, excepting under exceptional circumstances.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit, at Three per cent. interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables, the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons, and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares, and Annuities.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

The Birkbeck Building Society's Annual Receipts exceed Five Millions.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with immediate Possession, and no Rent to Pay.—Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate Possession, either for Building or Gardening purposes.—Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

WITH 25 PER CENT DISCOUNT FOR CASH
OR 15/- PER MONTH,
SECOND HAND 10% Per Month
ON THE 3 YEARS' SYSTEM.
BORD'S PIANOS
PIANOS EXCHANGED
LISTS FREE OF
C. STILES & Co. 42 SOUTHAMPTON ROW, W.C.

CONSTANT LAURENT, HARMONIUM &c.
ANGLO-ORGAN MANUFACTURER, Established in 185
85, HIGH STREET, MARYLEBONE, LONDON, W.—Repairing a
Tuning Executed Promptly. Price List on Application.—Intending P chasers are respectfully solicited to inspect my Instruments and Factory

EUSTACE INGRAM, Organ Builder.
Combines excellence of Tone and Workmanship with Economy.
INSPECTION INVITED.
WORKS:—Burnard Place, Eden Grove, Holloway, London, N

PASTORALE from Corelli's CHRISTMAS CONCERTO. Arranged for Organ by E. H. TURPIN.—Price 4s.
WEEKES & CO., 14, Hanover-street, W.

"HARMONY SIMPLIFIED."
A Concise Treatise on Harmony, Thorough Bass, and Modulation, for the Use of Students. By FARLEY NEWMAN. In paper cover, 1s. 6d. net; bound in cloth, 2s. 6d. net.

"THE ORGAN OLIO."
Edited by ARTHUR HENRY BROWN. A Collection of Short Pieces for the Organ or Harmonium, by various Composers. 2s. net.

London: B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster-row, E.C.

MUSIC SENT ON SALE OR RETURN on highly advantageous terms by
B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster-row, London.

MUSIC of EVERY PUBLISHER supplied to Dealers, Teachers, and Schools. Having the largest varied Stock in Europe. The terms, which are highly advantageous, sent on application.
London: B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster-row.

ORGANS.—FACTS about ORGANS. Guide to the Purchase of an Organ; How to Order or Select one; What will it cost? By Dr. HINTON. Price 1s.—W. REEVES, 185, Fleet-street, London.

ASHDOWN EDITION
OF
STANDARD MUSICAL WORKS.
QUARTO SIZE.

PIANOFORTE.

		NET. s. d.
1.	Chopin's Twenty-Seven Studies	2 6
2.	Stephen Heller's Album. Op. 138	1 6
3.	Henri Roubier's Twenty Melodies of Franz Schubert	2 0
4.	Stephen Heller's Twenty-Four Preludes. Op. 81	1 6
5.	Chopin's Eighteen Nocturnes	2 0
6.	Czerny's One Hundred and One Exercises	1 6
7.	Czerny's Etude de la Velocite	2 0
8.	Schumann's Phantasiestucke. Op. 12	1 6
9.	Schubert's Eight Impromptus	1 0
10.	Liszt's Soirees de Vienne	2 6
11.	Clementi's Six Sonatinas. Op. 36	1 0
12.	Stephen Heller's Thirty-Two Preludes. Op. 119 (a Mademoiselle Lilli)	1 6
13.	Rubinstein's Soirees a St. Petersburg. 6 Morceaux. Op. 44	1 0
14.	Chopin's Forty-Three Mazurkas	3 0

TO BE CONTINUED.

LONDON:

EDWIN ASHDOWN, Hanover-square.

Printed for the Proprietor by BOWDEN, HUDSON & Co., at 23, Red Lion Street, Holborn, London, W.C.; and Published by WILLIAM REEVES, at the Office, 185, Fleet Street, E.C. West End Agents:—WEEKES & CO., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W. Subscriptions and Advertisements are received either by the Publisher or West End Agents.—Communications for the EDITOR are to be forwarded to his private address, 6, Argyle Square, W.C.

SATURDAY, MAY 19, 1883.—Entered at the General Post Office as a Newspaper.

Digitized by Google

The Musical Standard

A NEWSPAPER FOR MUSICIANS PROFESSIONAL AND AMATEUR

No. 982. Vol. XXIV. FOURTH SERIES. SATURDAY, MAY 26, 1883. WEEKLY: PRICE 3D.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—SATURDAY CONCERT, May 26th, at 3.10. First Performance in England of Hector Berlioz's GRANDE MESSE DES MORTS. Tenor Solo, Mr. Harper Kearton. Crystal Palace Choir. Saturday Orchestra, increased by Thirty Extra Instruments. Four Small Brass Bands. Conductor, Mr. AUGUST MANNS.

N.B.—The Directors beg to draw special attention to the first performance of Berlioz's remarkable work, which, owing to its extraordinary demands on the executive resources of musical art, cannot often be performed; as an instance of which, it may be mentioned that the sixteen kettledrums (requiring ten efficient performers), which are used in the "Tuba Mirum" and two other choruses, can probably not be supplied by half-a-dozen towns in Europe. As announced at the commencement of the series, in consequence of the expense of producing the "Messe des Morts," the price of some of the Numbered Seats for this Concert will be 3s. 6d. each, and Admission to the Room will be 1s., instead of 6d.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—GRAND CONCERT, WEDNESDAY, May 30th, at 3 p.m. Mr. W. Carter's Sacred Cantata, "Placida," and Rossini's "Stabat Mater." Solo vocalists: Madam Christine Nilsson, Madame Trebelli, Miss Patti Winter, Mr. Vernon Rigby, Mr. Dallery, Mr. S. King, and Signor Foli. Chorus of One Thousand Voices. Crystal Palace Saturday Orchestra largely increased. Conductor, Mr. W. CARTER. Numbered seats. 7s. 6d. and 5s., may now be secured.

MR. W. H. BRERETON'S MORNING CONCERT (by kind permission of Messrs. Collard & Collard) at 16, Grosvenor Street, on Tuesday, May 29th, at 3 o'clock. Miss Carlotta Elliot, Miss Ambler, Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. J. Robertson, and Mr. W. H. Brereton. Harp, Mr. John Thomas. Sir Julius Benedict, and Mr. W. G. Wood. Tickets 10s. 6d. each. Three for £1 1s.—STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER & CO., 84, New Bond Street; and of Mr. W. H. BRERETON, 82, Gower Street.

In the High Court of Justice, Chancery Division: Blockley v. Blockley.—Stock of Copyright and non-Copyright Music Plates, Lease, Goodwill, &c.

MR. WILLIAM SIMPSON (of the firm of Puttick and Simpson), the person appointed by the Judge in the above action, will SELL by AUCTION, at the Gallery, 47, Leicester Square, London, W.C., on Monday, June 11th, 1883, and following days, at 10 minutes past 1 o'clock precisely each day, the LEASE of the PREMISES situate and being No. 3, Argyll Street, Regent Street, W., together with the trade furniture and fittings, goodwill, and book debts of the music publishing business, so successfully carried on by the late Mr. John Blockley. Also (in lots) the important stock of copyright and non-copyright music plates, and the printed stock attaching thereto.—Catalogues will shortly be ready, and may be had on receipt of six stamps, of Messrs. Pritchard, Englefield, & Co., Solicitors, Painter's Hall, Little Trinity Lane, E.C.; or of the Auctioneer as above.

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

TUESDAY, June 5th, at 8, "Some Musical Ethics and Analogies." H. C. BANISTER, Esq.—TUESDAY, July 3rd, at 8, "Organ Writers of the Nineteenth Century." F. J. SAWYER, Mus.Bac., F.C.O.—TUESDAY and WEDNESDAY, July 10th and 11th, Examination for Associateship.—THURSDAY, July 12th, Examination for Fellowship.—TUESDAY, July 17th, at 8, Annual General Meeting.

The above Meeting will be held at the NEUMEYER HALL, Hart Street, Bloomsbury.

E. H. TURPIN,
Hon. Secretary.

95, Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury, W.C.

Dedicated by permission to W. T. Best, Esq., Organist of St. George's Hall, Liverpool.

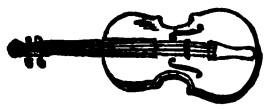
THE MODERN ORGAN, a consideration of the prevalent theoretical and practical defects in its construction, with Plans and Suggestions for their removal, by THOMAS CASSON, Denbigh. 34 pages, with 19 lithographic illustrations; paper covers, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s. AUTHOR, Cae Derw, Denbigh, & W. REEVES, 185, Fleet St., London.

MR. E. DAVIDSON PALMER, Mus.Bac., Oxon., author of "What is Falsetto?" "Pronunciation in Singing," etc., gives LESSONS in VOICE TRAINING and SOLO SINGING, at his residence, 19, Gladesmore-road, Stamford Hill, N.

MUSICAL COMPETITION MONTHLY.—Prizes of £2 2s. and under given monthly, for Hymn Tunes, Chants, Part Songs, and other Compositions.—See Musical Education for April 3rd, from the Office, 185, Fleet Street, London.

INTERNATIONAL FISHERIES EXHIBITION.—ORGAN RECITALS daily, upon the fine-toned Organ, in West Gallery. Supplied to the Executive Committee by HENRY JONES & SONS, 136, Fulham Road, South Kensington.

MISS NORAH HAYES, CONTRALTO VOCALIST of the Albert Hall and St. James's Hall Concerts, is open to engagements for Concerts, Soirées, and at Homes.—Address, 95, Edgware Road.



MAKERS AND REPAIRERS.

GEORGE WITHERS & CO.

(Late of Coventry Street),

WHOLESALE IMPORTERS OF

MUSICAL STRINGS,

From Rome, Padua, and Naples.

A FINE COLLECTION OF ITALIAN INSTRUMENTS.

Bows, Cases, Music Stands, &c. See Price Lists.

51, ST. MARTIN'S LANE, LONDON.

SOCIETY OF ARTS' PRACTICAL EXAMINATIONS in VOCAL and INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC.—The Examination for the London Centre will this year commence on Monday the 11th June. Full particulars on application to the Secretary.

H. TRUEMAN WOOD,
Secretary.

Society's House, Adelphi, London, W.C.

VIOLIN.—HERR POLONASKI (Violinist), open to ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts, Musical At Homes, and Violin or Accompaniment Lessons.—For Terms, please Address, HERR POLONASKI, 16, Wharfdale-street, South Kensington, S.W.

"THE FLOWER OF THE VALE," Song. Words by Thomas Cox; Music by MARY CARMICHAEL; Sung by Miss Carlotta Elliott. — Published by STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER & CO., New Bond-street.

B. WILLIAMS, PATERNOSTER ROW.—Having purchased the lease and goodwill of the above old-established business, together with the very extensive trade stock, I beg to announce that, with the old staff of assistants which I have specially retained, I shall endeavour to carry on the concern with as much satisfaction as heretofore. The publishing department (of which I have had the sole management since the death of Mr. B. Williams) will receive every attention.

LUCY J. MULLEN.
(Daughter of the late Mr. B. Williams).

MDLLE. CLOTILDE KLEEBERG'S (the celebrated young Parisian Artist) PIANOFORTE RECITAL, Marlborough Rooms, Regent Street, MONDAY AFTERNOON, June 4th, at 3 o'clock. Stalls, half-a-guinea.—STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER, & CO., 84, New Bond Street.

TO ORGAN BUILDERS.—WANTED to HIRE, with the option of PURCHASE, an ORGAN suitable for Music Room, to the value of about £450.—Send Terms and Conditions to HERBERT GREEN, "Sterndale" School of Music, Wallington, Surrey.

SOLO and LEADING TREBLES WANTED for S. Mark's, Lewisham. Salaries, £12 to £20, according to ability.—Apply, R. E. MILES, 30, Rokeby Road, Brockley, S.E.

ORGAN BUSINESS.—FOR SALE, a Going Concern, capable of making large profits by a practical man; or a partner admitted with moderate capital.—Letters to Mr. NEALE, 5, Edgware Road.

FOR SALE.—AN UPRIGHT, OVERSTRUNG, GRAND PIANOFORTE, by Fischer, of New York. Has been very little used. Cost, when new, £85.—Apply to B. LUARD SELBY, The Close, Salisbury.

ALL WHO POSSESS A PIANOFORTE and canot play it, may now play at once, without any previous knowledge of Music, by ROYLANCE'S NUMERICAL SYSTEM, which contains a FIGURED DIAGRAM to fit on the Keyboard of any Pianoforte (or Harmonium, and a choice selection of forty SACRED and SECULAR MELODIES, composed for the use of those who have no time to study Music. Thousands are now able to play who did not believe such a thing possible. The diagram alone will be found most useful to Professors for teaching purposes. 6d. nett.—Price 2s. 6d. nett; post free 33 stamps.—C. ROYLANCE, 184, Tottenham Court-road; and all Music Sellers.

Digitized by Google

ULRICH'S "FLORA MACDONALD."

Just now when the setting of one of the most glorious of earth's musical stars has cast over the world a pall of gloom and sadness, it may not be inopportune to turn our glance from the desolation wrought by death's cruel grip to the hope that lives in the future of the rising generation of composers who have already begun to make their mark in the musical centres of Germany and Italy. Amongst these I would single out a young composer of the German school whose name is not quite unknown to the English public, some of his earlier compositions having been already performed in London.

John Ulrich, born in 1850, of German parents in an English island of the West Indies, who studied music first at the Stuttgardt Conservatorium, and later in Paris under Damcke, Rubinstein's professor, has this last winter achieved a brilliant success in Bologna in the production of his first grand opera which had to undergo the trying ordeal of being played after two masterpieces, Gounod's "Faust" and Wagner's "Tannhäuser," and yet came off with flying colours.

Some details of this new musical production which has for its subject a page of English history, and bears the title of "Flora Macdonald," can hardly fail to interest the readers of our English musical papers.

I quote from the Arpa "Giornale litterario, artistico, teatrale uffiziale, per la publicazione degli atti della Reale Academia filarmonico di Bologna."

The public settled down with the gravest attention to listen to the short overture, which met with general appreciation; then an attentive silence was maintained until the love duet between Signorina Bulichioff and the tenor Novelli, which was applauded at several parts, the union of the two voices occasioning the most vociferous applause, and calling the composer to the Proscenium. Previous to that duet however the intelligent public had greatly admired several very fine choruses, also a Scotch song, sung by the tenor Novelli, which has all the character, all the special melancholy type, of the music of those Northern regions.

The martial air which Novelli sings as he grasps the national standard is remarkably fine, and a word of praise is also due to Macdonald's Grandiose Hymn. At the end of the first act the applause was renewed, and the young author was again obliged to present himself to the public.

The 2nd act contains a beautiful patrol, played first behind the scenes, and a terzetto between Signora Leavington, Novelli, and Wilmant, a delicious melody which is entrusted to the violins. The Reveillé, which is sung first by the baritone, and repeated in an harmonious theme by the trombones with harp accompaniment, is most striking, fresh, and pleasing. The enthusiastic reception that it met with left no doubt of the opinion of the audience, forced at last to throw away its last vestige of coldness and reserve, and call again vociferously for the Maestro.

Wilmant was encored, the trombones also, then followed a crescendo ensemble of the whole orchestra, with an elaborated instrumentation of marvellous sonorous effect.

This Reveillé is original in its conception, original in its form, and is really what may be called a musical gem. After its encore the young composer was again obliged to appear.

The rest of the act passed in silence, till towards the end, but the grandiose finale was well received, and the curtain fell in the midst of universal applause, the composer being again called for. I noticed besides this a fine march, but was specially struck with the masterful style of the finale.

Almost all the 3rd act was listened to in silence, but the various dance intermezzi are delicate, elegant, and original. There are some, specially the 3rd, which somewhat recalls the style of Mozart. These beautiful pages of dance music will certainly live in the future.

The 4th act proceeds in silence until the prayer of Novelli, which again arouses the audience by the beauty of the music, and its exquisitely artistic execution. The celebrated tenor is immensely applauded—the composer is again enthusiastically called for.

This act finishes with a symphony descriptive of a battle, the chief part of which is executed with the curtain down; when it is raised the battle-field covered with the dead and wounded carries the spectator far on in the story of the piece.

This symphonic work is one of the most happily elaborated passages of the whole opera, and is a creation that would do honour to the most distinguished composer. The descriptive character is a complete success. The cry of the Macdonald rushing to the rescue of the King breaking in upon the confused noise of battle, and the groaning of the dying, carries its passionate thrilling effect through the house, so that the act closes in the midst of tumultuous rapture, the young Maestro being again recalled vigorously.

The 5th act, with Flora's exquisitely harmonised air, the effective terzetto which the soprano, tenor, and bass gave with wonderful power, and the finale, which they also sang together, and which was grand and imposing, brought the opera to a close, which was the signal for continued and rapturous applause.

This real success was a triumph (wrested not from the indulgence of the audience, which at Bologna always shows itself very difficult to be pleased, but due entirely to the real merit of the work), to the masterly power possessed by Herr Ulrich to produce grand musical harmonies. When Gounod, truly one of the most competent judges we have, asserted that Herr Ulrich was destined to a great future, I think he was certainly not mistaken, for the opera of "Flora Macdonald" shows the making of a real artist—of a composer that is on right road to fame.

The opera has too many prayers in it—though these possess a special local character— a young composer's first grand work is generally an assemblage of different disconnected passages, but "Flora Macdonald" is quite of another build: it is a complete work, through which a dominant idea is running, developing itself gradually to the end. The instrumentation is worked out with infinite skill and great effect; one sees that Herr Ulrich has studied his classic authors well, and follows carefully the rules of modern melodramatic composition. In the whole opera there is nothing common-place—all is delicate, refined, fresh, and further performances will undoubtedly bring into relief many beauties which necessarily escape the audience at a first performance.

The critic must be allowed however to remark upon the lengthiness of the recitatives; the march in the 2nd act is also too spun out, creating some sense of weariness; also I consider that in some parts a more synthetic system of composition would better bring together in one frame the beauties of the music. But this is Herr Ulrich's first grand opera—and if as in all things perfection is the result of experience, in art above all things experience is the most certain and effectual master.

The Arpa continues to describe the artists and their specialties, but I have quoted enough to prove that a serious work of real merit has seen the light at Bologna, and has been accorded a most appreciative reception, and if the verdict of the music-loving Bolognese may be accepted, I hope that the music of the future may yet find many gifted exponents though the Mausoleum at Bayreuth has closed over the mortal remains of Germany's favourite composer.

The programme of the Gloucester Festival, fixed for September 4th, 5th, 6th, and 7th, has now been definitely settled, and will include the Mass in C (Beethoven), "The Redemption" (Gounod), "Sennacherib" (Arnold), "Elijah," "Messiah," "St. Mary Magdalen" (Stainer), "Lobgesang" (Mendelssohn), "Psyche" (Gade), and "Acis and Galatea." The principal singers will be Miss Anna Williams, Miss Mary Davies, Madame Patey, Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. Lloyd, Mr. King, Mr. Brereton, and Mr. Santley. Mr. Carrodus will be the leader of the orchestra, and Mr. C. L. Williams, the organist of the cathedral, will conduct the Festival for the first time. Mr. Williams has already displayed his abilities as a conductor to advantage.

Digitized by Google

Musical Intelligence.

MR. CHARLES HALLE'S CHAMBER MUSIC CONCERTS.

As last year, Mr. Charles Hallé holds his chamber concerts on the evenings of Friday, at the Grosvenor Gallery in New Bond Street. Eight concerts are announced, and the first, on May 18th, was honoured by the Princess of Wales. Mr. Hallé's "good work" ought by this time to be as well known as "Oliver Blake's," recorded by Mr. J. Cordy Jeaffreson. The scheme included Schubert's String Quintet in C, Op. 163; Schumann's "Three Fantaisie Stücke," Op. 73, in A minor and major, for pianoforte and violin; and Gade's Pianoforte Trio in F, Op. 42. Mr. Hallé, as before, was assisted by Mdme. Norman-Néruda and Herr F. Néruda. MM. Ries, Straus, and Robert Mendelssohn played the inner parts of the quintet. It will be noticed that Mr. Hallé has here made an exception from his rigid rule that all the concerted works at his chamber concerts shall include the keyed instrument (a grand iron concert Broadwood). Vocal pieces are still very properly banned. Mr. Hallé chose for his solo the charming "Sonata Caracteristique" of Beethoven in E flat, and could hardly have done better. The concerts will be continued every successive Friday until July 6 (inclusive).

THE ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

Mdme. Albani had her rentrée, after a successful campaign in America, last Saturday evening, in "Rigoletto," of course in the part of Gilda, the jester's daughter. In excellent voice, and a most interesting impersonator of the poor betrayed damsel, Mdme. Albani's reception, in the second scene, was so cordial, that the business of the stage had to be suspended for a short interval. The air in E, "Caro nome," evoked loudest applause, and, in short, the evening, was a series of triumphs for the fair Canadian. A good "all-round" performance of the opera may be recorded. The title-part found a good, if not a perfect, representative in the French baritone, M. Devoyod, and Signor Ravelli was the libertine Duke, an Italian Don Giovanni of the vilest type. His "original," Francis I. of France, has been grossly libelled in this respect by Victor Hugo, for according to all accounts Francis, if a gay man, fond of nocturnal adventures like the Caliph Haroun Alraschid, was not a deliberate and systematic seducer of innocence or a thorough scoundrel, like the utterer of the monstrous sentiments in "Quest, o quella," and "La donna è mobile"! Mdlle. Tremelli made a smart Maddalena.

"La Favorita," Donizetti's heaviest opera, was performed on Monday with Mdlle. Tremelli as Leonora, Signor Marconi as Fernando, and Signor Battistini as the King of Spain.

On Whit-Monday, "La Favorita" was suspended (for reasons), and "Marta" substituted, with Mdme. Stahl, née Mdlle. Tremelli, as Nancy.

Mdme. Pauline Lucca, on Tuesday, repeated her peculiarly analytical representation of "Carmen," and scored several "honours," especially in the coquettish scene with that silly soldier, Don José, at once a sentimentalist and a suicide, in that he ruins himself, soul and body, for a "gipsy's lust," to quote the memorable phrase of Shakespeare from "Antony and Cleopatra." The climax of the evening, perhaps, was attained by Mdme. Lucca in the card-playing scene, where Carmen, in spite of her assumed nonchalance and insouciant "don't care for anything," evidently foresees the scissors of Atropos, and probably (a little beyond that) the terrible scourge of the Eumenides, goddesses only to be propiated, even when Orestes committed his justifiable matricide, by the intervention and coaxing of Pallas Athene. Signor Del Puerte, the only "Toréador," appeared at the Royal Italian Opera for the first time, and his famous song (with chorus) the poorest, because so sensational a number of the opera, secured the usual encore.

Boïto's "Mefistofele" was down for Thursday night, with Mdme. Albani, Mdlle. Tremelli, Signor Marconi, and M. Gailhard as "principals in front." Mdme. Semprich is announced to appear on Monday in "L'Etoile du Nord."

RICHTER CONCERTS.

There was a very decided weakness about the first part of last Monday's programme, which caused the noblest of Beethoven's purely instrument symphonies to stand out more prominently than ever in its unapproachable grandeur.

PART I.
Overture, "Anacreon"	Cherubini.
Scotch Rhapsody, "Burns," No. 2, in B flat, Op. 24	A. C. Mackenzie.
"Schicksalslied" ("Song of fate"), Op. 54, for Orchestra and Chorus	Brahms.
PART II.
Symphony, No. 7, in A	Beethoven.

Beethoven entertained the highest admiration for Cherubini, and, as is well known, wrote in a letter to him, "You are, among all my contemporaries, the man that I most esteem." But it must have been the very opposite character of his talent which created that esteem; for there is none of the romanticism and freedom from conventionality to be found in Cherubini which alone could have won the heart of Beethoven, as distinct from his admiration. No better criticism of the "Anacreon" Overture could be given, than that provided in the programme:—"The excitement throughout is due to the masterly contrapuntal and polyphonic treatment of the themes, rather than to the themes themselves, which, it must be confessed, are somewhat trite in character."

I regret to say that Mr. Mackenzie's second Scotch Rhapsody does not impress me favourably. The materials are not crushed into atoms and then reforged into something absolutely new, as is the case with Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsodies; but three Scotch tunes are treated in turn ("Scots! wha hae wi' Wallace bled," "She's fair and fause that causes my smart," and "I coft a stane o' haslock woo'") in three distinct movements, which follow each other without pause. The programme says: "Mr. Mackenzie seems to have aimed at furnishing a musical portrayal of three leading phases of Scottish national character, viz., the martial, the pathetic, and the jovial. This he has effected by successively bringing before us a war-song, a love-song, and a humorous song"; but, beyond the tunes themselves, I fail to find anything national, or in any way characteristic about this Rhapsody; moreover, it is not rhapsodical enough to deserve its name, nor, perhaps, formal enough to claim any other. And having said that it has no local habitation, though it is called "Scotch," and no name, though it is called a "Rhapsody," I have said all. Mr. Mackenzie, who was complimented after the performance, bowed from below the conductor's desk.

How few there are who can succeed in being calm without being insipid! The dreariness of the first part of Brahms's "Schicksalslied," which represents "the blissful repose of the Olympian deities," causes one to welcome with something like a sigh of relief the turmoil, the uncertainty, the passion, and the poetry of human life which follows; thus the effect produced is in exact opposition to what the composer intended. But it is rare indeed to find rest effectively conveyed in any art! We know so little of the feeling; for, in our present state of being, our ideas of repose and ease are too closely associated with indolence and selfish apathy; and as our own art, more than any other, has a tendency to reflect the unpleasing phase of ease, it requires a stronger man than Brahms to give us a notion of the ethereal peace of another state of existence. This composition served to bring the Richter Choir to the front for the first time this season. Unfortunately, they cannot be complimented on their performance. The parts are not well balanced; there is no light and shade; the words are most indistinctly pronounced, and the rendering generally was unfinished. Alas! for the promised 9th Symphony, if rapid progress is not made!

I have listened to a finer performance under Herr Richter of the A major Symphony than that of this week. The strings were not particularly steady in their semiquaver figure in the introduction, and again in the working out of the first movement a slight unsteadiness was apparent. On the other hand, a magnificent pianissimo was obtained in the slow movement—one of those distinct whispers that we rarely hear from a soloist, still less from an orchestra. The scherzo left nothing to be desired, and the impassioned delivery of the finale made one gladly forget the undeniable flatness that had hung over the first part of the concert, and that seemed to cling even to the first movement of the Symphony.

B. F. WYATT-SMITH.

Digitized by Google

MADAME MENTER'S RECITALS.

Mdme. Sophie Menter held a first recital last Saturday afternoon. Her wonderful powers of executancy excited the admiration, even the marvel, of connoisseurs last season, and the sensation was renewed on May 19th. Dr. Johnson, on hearing a "fire-eating" pianist of the period play a tremedously difficult piece, uttered a wish that it were impossible! A veteran critic, last Saturday, lifted up his eyes, at a certain crisis, with the ejaculation, "How can it be done?" Sundry detractors who have libellously insinuated that Mdme. Menter, although possessed of immense force, lacks feeling and sensibility, would do well, in future, to be reticent, for they have "all England" and half the continent of Europe against them. A respected weekly contemporary noticing this recital, remarks that Mdme. Menter is not so fine an artist as Herr De Pachmann; but that she is equal to Rubinstein as an executant, and superior to him in respect of exactness and aplomb, never alighting on wrong notes, by "mistake," in the excitement of the minute. The beautiful and expressive emphasis of Mdme. Menter's cantabile, the tender deliverance of the softer subjects, and the versatility of treatment, sufficiently show that her forte is not exclusively the energetic style. Mdme. Menter might adopt the two Latin mottoes of Virgil and Ovid: Vires acquirit eundo, and Gutta cavat lapidem, non vi, sed sèpe cadendo.

The scheme of Saturday may be printed seriatim for the information of absentees. It was as follows: Sonata Quasi una Fantasia, Op. 27, No. 2 (Beethoven); Gavotte in D minor (Bach); Variations in E (Handel); Sonata in C, Allegro Vivacissimo (Scarlatti); Moment Musical, Op. 94, No. 6; Impromptu, Op. 90, No. 4 (Schubert); "Ave Maria," "Ich Hörte ein Bächlein Rauschen" (Schubert-Liszt); Military March (Schubert-Tausig); "Lied ohne Worte" in A, No. 30, Op. 62; "Lied ohne Worte" in E, No. 36, Op. 67 (Mendelssohn); Novelette in E, Schumann; Etude in C, Op. 10, No. 7; Etude in C minor, Op. 25, No. 12; Etude in F, Op. 10, No. 8; Mazurka in C sharp minor, Op. 41, No. 1, Mazurka in B minor, Op. 33, No. 4, Scherzo in C sharp minor, Op. 39 (Chopin); Etude in D flat, Rhapsodies (Liszt); and lastly, Wedding March ("Midsummer Night's Dream") (Mendelssohn-Liszt).

The sonata of Beethoven probably gave less satisfaction than the other pieces, except in the second (scherzo) movement, which was played with exquisite gracefulness. The "attack" of the two crashing dominant chords which occur in the finale, at the end of the opening bars, sounded rather as if the first quaver were a dotted one; and the effect, therefore, lacked crispness. The "Blacksmith" piece of Handel was quite a treat, notwithstanding painful recollections of the impostor Powell at mendacious Edgware. The left-hand work in Liszt's two transcriptions of Schubert had absolute organ power, whilst the cantabile of Mendelssohn's "Spring" Lied in A major so moved the audience that a recall (one of many) ensued. Chopin's Scherzo in C sharp minor was a climax of very fine interpretations. Liszt's Study would have been preferred to his Rhapsodies; the transcription of the "Wedding March," as at the Philharmonic concert, not only "made the judicious grieve," but has again provoked severe comments from strictly classical contemporaries. The Abbé, indeed, has here made quite a travesty of Mendelssohn's beautiful subject, but the executancy of any pianist who is able to surmount the difficulties, does not the less call for acknowledgment. Mdme. Menter literally astonished the public. At her second recital, on June 2nd, Mdme. Menter will play a far better arrangement of Liszt, to wit, the marvellous Transcription, with all its unutterable effects, of the overture to "Tannhäuser."

A. M.

LEEDS.

The Headingley Choral Society lately gave a concert in the Leeds Church Institute. The programme included Mendelssohn's "Athalie," and a miscellaneous selection. It is a pity that such a splendid work as "Athalie" should have been put down as the last item of a rather long programme; the performance, however, was, on the whole, a creditable one, the solos being taken by Miss G. Dixon, Miss Gisburne, Mrs. T. Appleyard, and Miss Cheveley. In the miscellaneous part the principal vocalists were Miss G. Dixon, Miss Gisburne, Mr. Holmes, and Mr. Fred. Walker, all of whom acquitted themselves to the satisfaction of the audience. Miss G. Dixon sang with great taste Cowen's song, "It was a dream," and Miss Gisburne was loudly applauded for her excellent rendering of Weber's charming song "Softly sighs," from "Der Freischütz." Messrs. Holmes and Fred. Walker were successful in the music allotted to them, the latter especially distinguishing himself in the song "The Desert," by Louis Emanuel. These two gentlemen also sang the duet "Love and War" (Cooke) in a highly creditable manner. Special mention must be made of the trio "The Three Dreams," by G. A. Macfarren, sung with excellent effect by Miss Gisburne, Mr. Dixon, and Mr. Wood Higgins. The members of the chorus, numbering upwards of fifty, did their share of the work in a manner that reflects the highest credit upon their conductor, Mr. James Broughton. Their rendering of the part-songs, "Lovely night" (Chawtal) and "Parting" (F. Otto), left nothing to be desired, while in Schumann's "Gipsy Life" they were heard to great advantage. The instrumental music included a pianoforte duo (Schubert) played by Messrs. J. and A. Broughton, and two pieces for piano and violin, played by Messrs. Sutcliff and Gaitcliff; Schubert's Sonata, No. 3, Op. 137, and Raff's "Marcia," all given with great taste and skill. I must not omit to mention the duet, "Maying" (Alice Mary Smith), sung by the Misses Dixon in charming style. Mr. James Broughton conducted in a thoroughly efficient manner, and the concert was a decided success.

ALEXANDER KUMMER.

This excellent violinist gave his annual concert, at the Rooms of the Royal Academy, on Tuesday evening last. The performance began with Beethoven's Sonata in G for piano and violin, which certainly might be mistaken for one of Gyrowet or Pleyel. Neither in invention nor logical development does it contain a tithe of the great Beethoven. The solo pieces for Herr Kummer were arrangements of the Prize Song from "Die Meistersiger," and the Spinning Song from the "Flying Dutchman," which were given with that breadth of expression and refinement of bowing and intonation which we are accustomed to look for from this artist. His playing, too, of that very difficult new set of Hungarian Dances by Brahms and Joachim was perfect. One would certainly think it would have been advisable if Messrs. Brahms and Joachim had stopped after their first successful collaboration of Hungarian dance forms instead of giving us diluted imitations. Another of the solo violin pieces was a Romance by E. Shute, which deserves the fullest praise. It is full of pure feeling, musicianly work, and altogether a gem of its kind.

The pianist was Mdme. Haas, who, determined not to be behind others of her sex, did her utmost to rival the stronger sex by an extreme effort of physical power. What they gain in this direction they lose in expression, certainly the all-important consideration. The vocalist, Miss Mackenzie, has a splendid contralto voice, but she must endeavour to overcome the conventional coldness from which she seems to suffer. M. Albert's two solos deserve special mention.

FERDINAND PRAEGER.

THE PACHMANN PIANOFORTE RECITAL

A most varied programme, which was performed at St. James's Hall last Tuesday, afforded the pianist an opportunity of advantageously displaying his high artistic gifts and executive skill. Of the pianist's interpretation of the "Fantaisie Chromatique," as edited by Bülow, I have to accord the satisfaction of the entire audience. The performance was a strikingly grand one, and well deserved the applause it elicited. The same serious earnestness which characterised the interpretation of this monumental work of the old Protestant master was evident in the performer's reading of the whole of the pieces set down, but I must take exception to the prestissimo tempo in which the Chopin Impromptu and Valse were taken. The Valse was encored, and again it was played with the same excessive speed. The performance of the Sonata brought out the weak side of its creator. It is beyond question that in the severer forms of art, e.g., the concerto and sonata, Chopin was not so great as in works of smaller dimension of the impromptu and valse kinds. There was developed in the master a sensitiveness akin to the emotional in woman, which was not counterbalanced by the powerful logic of man. Of this onesidedness, perfect as it is, we have several examples in the sister art. Alfred de Musset, with all his genius in light pieces, could never have written a Hugo drama; nor Meissonnier delineate with any power a stirring historical scene; nor Heinrich Heine, the most perfect master of lyrics, indite an epic. And yet how truly great are all these masters in their sphere; and thus it was with Chopin.

Digitized by Google

Nothing could more fully illustrate the powerful individuality of the pianist than his characteristic rendering of Mendelssohn's Rondo, which, worn threadbare by the everyday performance of myriads of schoolgirls, was galvanised into new life. Mons. Pachmann, is, indeed, a great artist. FERDINAND PRAEGER.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

It is most encouraging to notice the success which has attended the St. Patrick's Oratorio Society in their efforts to attain for classical music that recognition and popularity which has so long been denied it. Not that I would wish to convey from this observation that the taste of the people was unfavourable to its production, but rather that sufficient opportunity had not been afforded them in the past of familiarising themselves with the works of the master hands. True, the Dublin Musical Society have been working faithfully in this direction for some years, but it must be borne in mind that the subscription to their concerts is such as to preclude a very large section of the community from enjoying the performances. I am sure it would have delighted the heart of Mendelssohn himself to witness the vast and eager crowd assembled in St. Patrick's Cathedral on the 11th inst. to listen to the production of "St. Paul," and methinks he would have been equally pleased at the very creditable rendering of his work by a society of such infant growth as St. Patrick's. Started but three years ago, it has achieved a measure of success quite beyond my most sanguine expectation, and here I would accord a word of praise, nay, more, if space permitted, to its talented conductor, Mr. C. Marchant, for the energy, zeal, and musician-like qualities he has displayed in his guidance of the society. The performance of "St. Paul" was, with scarce an exception, an unqualified success. The soloists were Miss Russell, soprano; Mr. Bapty, tenor; and Mr. T. Marchant, basso. Miss Russell rendered her music in a most finished and artistic manner, and Mr. Bapty, whose voice is admirably adapted to sacred music, was heard to beautiful effect. Mr. Marchant, who is coming well to the front as a basso, gave his music with a precision and faithfulness highly commendable. The choruses were admirably rendered, tunefully, in good time, and, what is most essential, the voices were fairly balanced. Especially fine was the singing of the chorus, "Stone him to death," and "Oh, great is the depth." The conductor presided at the organ with marked ability.

I have also to chronicle the performance of another youthful society, this being but its fourth season. I allude to the Dublin Amateur Orchestral Union, whose concert took place on the 15th inst., at the Antient Concert Rooms. The formation of this society has supplied a want long felt in Dublin, and I sincerely hope now that it is in good working order it will not be allowed to lapse into obscurity for want of permanent support. The programme was as follows:—

Overture, "Mireille"	Gounod.
Song, "Golden Love"	Wellings.
Minuet (for strings)	Boccherini.
Song, "My heart is like a singing bird"	Mrs. Moncrieff.
Entr'acte, "Don Cæsar"	Massenet.
Song, "Never again"	F. Cowen.
Concerto, D minor	Mendelssohn.
Pianoforte and orchestra.
Symphony, No. 6	Mozart.
Song, "Forget, forgive"	Wellings.
Suite de Ballet, "Language of flowers"	F. Cowen.
Solo Piano, "Rhapsodie Hongroise"	Liszt.

The execution of the above by the Amateur Orchestral Union was in every way a highly successful performance, and would have done credit to a society of far more mature years. It was not, as could hardly be expected, entirely faultless, but the defects noticeable were slight, and remediable, and have not, I am sure, escaped the quick ear of the respected conductor. I could not if I would be captious with this society. It has fought its way through great difficulties and discouragements, the principal one, alas, being want of support, and on this score I have to own to a sense of tenderness for it. For their latest performance I have to heartily congratulate them; items 7, 8, and 10 were delightful pieces of orchestration, nor should I omit to mention the valuable assistance rendered by Miss Ella Rosenthal at the piano. To the conductor, Mr. Telford, the lovers of orchestral music must ever feel grateful for his untiring exertions in promoting the success of the society. F. J. B.

EAST DULWICH.—The St. John's Choral Society gave the final concert of their sixth season, at the Parochial Schools, East Dulwich, on Thursday the 17th inst., the works performed being Rossini's "Stabat Mater" and Sterndale Bennett's "May Queen." The rendering of the first work was particularly good throughout, and the choruses of the "May Queen" were sung with great precision. Miss Emily Gillock presided at the piano, and Mr. Charles Hancock, Mus.Bac., Oxon, of Leicester, at the harmonium, while Mr. Charles Lawrence, Mus.Bac., Oxon, conducted. At the conclusion of the concert Mr. Lawrence, who has been organist and choirmaster at St. John's Church for upwards of nine years, was, on his retirement, presented by the vicar, the Rev. Dr. Warburton, on behalf of the congregation, with a valuable gold watch and chain and an illuminated address on vellum, in token of their esteem.

CHRIST CHURCH, FOLKESTONE.—An organ recital was given at this church on Tuesday evening, 22nd inst., by Miss Theresa Beney, A.C.O., lately appointed organist. There was a large and appreciative audience. The programme was a well selected and varied one, and in the execution of the several items Miss Beney showed a thorough command of the instrument in all its parts. The manipulation of the more delicate portions of the selection was especially noticeable, at the same time that there was no lack of ability to bring out the larger and grander features of the various works. Connoisseurs would have noticed especially the power Miss Beney displayed in the pedalling of the Toccata in F by Bach, while an andante by Batiste, and a minuet and trio by Sterndale Bennet, made perhaps the most impression on the general audience. The recital was relieved by the introduction of one or two anthems, which were satisfactorily rendered by the choir of Christ Church, the solo in Spohr's "As pants the hart" being expressively and well sustained.

HOLBORN TOWN HALL.—On Tuesday evening, May 22nd, the annual concert in aid of the funds for the Butcher's Charitable Institution was given to a crowded, though not an enthusiastic audience. Mr. R. J. Pitt, under whom was the direction of the concert, managed to gather a large body of well trained vocalists and instrumentalists for the carrying out of his programme. Among the instrumental music we must mention the admirable violin playing of Mr. Arthur Payne in Mendelssohn's well-known Andante and allegro (violin concerto), Glinka's "Pas de Patineurs," a Russian dance for orchestra with piccolo obbligato, carefully played by Mr. H. W. Hollis; and it is with pleasure we have to notice the playing of Mr. John Jeffreys in Mendelssohn's Capriccio in B minor for piano and orchestra; this gentleman is well known as a careful accompanist, but his talents for this particular kind of performance, are as yet not quite so universal, though he has a very large field to work, yet the workmen are numerous, and indeed many proficient; knowing this, Mr. Jeffreys will doubtless take it as an incentive—his technical power was complete but yet there was somewhat a lack of finality and rest, which only experience in this style will produce. Among the most successful vocalists were Mrs. Merton Clark, Miss Thelenberg, and Mr. A. Reynolds. The concert concluded with a splendid rendering of Maclarren's "May Day," Miss R. Kinel sustaining the part of the queen with great force. The accompanist was Mr. Geo. F. Grover.

ST LEONARD'S-ON-SEA.—The third of the special services held from time to time in St. Mary Magdalen's Church, took place on Thursday evening last, the 17th inst. Evensong was sung at 8 o'clock, and the Service included a setting of the Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in D, by G. C. Martin. The anthem was the greater part of Gaul's "Holy City," and the numbers selected were those comprised in Part 1, and the bass solo with choral sanctus and the chorus "Great and marvellous are Thy works," from Part II. The tenor solo, "My soul is athirst for God," was sung with much expression by Mr. Alfred Kenningham, of St. Paul's Cathedral, who also sang (by kind permission of the composer), "Eye hath not seen," transposed into the key of C major. The long and important bass solo was well rendered by Mr. Geo. Hawkins, a member of the choir, and the unaccompanied trio "At Eventide" was sung by some of the boys with much taste and feeling. The choruses were all rendered with the requisite light and shade, a special feature being a most artistic interpretation of the unaccompanied "For God so loved the world." The introductions to the first and second parts were played by Mr. A. E. Tozer, who accompanied the whole service as well. The S. Mary Magdalene choir have, during the last eighteen months, sung on various occasions the greater part of Mendelssohn's "St. Paul," the whole of the "Lauda Sion," Stainer's "Daughter of Jairus," and Spohr's "God, Thou art great"; and with the exception of Mr. Kenningham, who at three of these special services has taken the tenor solos, the different numbers have been sung entirely without extraneous help.

Digitized by Google

Organ News.

NOTTING HILL.

The programme of the organ recital at the Lancaster Hall, given on Monday, May 21st, by Mr. Francis H. Pocock, who is a promising pupil of Mr. Russell Lochner, was also adorned by the artistic efforts of Herr Wiener, Miss Frances Hipwell, and Mr. Russell Lochner. The organ solos were :—

Toccata in F	Bach.
Trio	Smart.
Sonata, No. 3	Mendelssohn.
Minuet in C	Guilmant.
Andante in E minor	Batiste.
Fugue in G minor	Bach.
Andante Cantabile	Rea.
Jubilant March	Stainer

BRISTOL.

The following is the programme of the organ recital, given on Saturday, May 19th, by Mr. George Riseley, at the Colston Hall.

Organ Concerto in B flat	Handel
Allegro—Larghetto—Allegro.
Adagio, Third Symphony	Mendelssohn.
Prelude and Fugue in A minor	Bach.
Largo and Chorus, "Wretched lovers"	Handel.
Entr'acte and Ballet music "Rosamunde"	Schubert.
Air, with variations	Haydn.
Overture, "Masaniello"	Auber.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

Mr. Eyre's programme, on Saturday last, included the following :—

Procession March	Sullivan.
Cantabile	Haydn.
Concerto Fugue in G	Krebs.
Intermezzo	Macbeth.
Andante Cantabile	Smart.
Air, "Sound an alarm"	Handel.
Chorus, "See the conquering hero"
Selection, "Faust" (Judas)	Gounod.
Gavotte, "Heimliche Liebe"	Resch.
Song, "The Lost Chord"	Sullivan.

WATERLOO ROAD.

An organ recital was given on Thursday, May 17th, at the Church of S. John the Evangelist, by Mr. A. A. Yeatman. The following was the programme :—

Organ Concerto, No. 4	Handel.
Allegro—Andante—Adagio—Allegro.
Adagio (from a quartet)	Spuhr.
Song, "Fac peccatis"	Rossini.
Prelude and Fugue in C major	Krebs.
Sonata in G minor	Fink.
Song, "Nazareth"	Gounod.
Larghetto (from a quintet)	Mozart.
Fantasia, with Chorale	Smart.

LLANELLY.

An organ recital was given in the Hall Street Wesleyan Chapel, by Mr. J. Matthews, on Friday, May 18th. The following was the programme :—

Toccata and Fugue in D minor	Bach.
Song, "O rest in the Lord"	Mendelssohn.
Pastorale	Guilmant.
Song, "O thou that tellest"	Handel.
Song, "Angels ever bright and fair"	Handel.
Festive March	Smart.
Song, "The Lost Chord"	Sullivan.
Romance	Henselt.
Duet, "O lovely peace"	Handel.
Miss Williams, and Miss Davies.
Song, "Let the bright Seraphim"	Handel.
Allegro, "Cuckoo and Nightingale Concerto"	Handel.

NORWICH.

An organ recital was given by Dr. Bunnett, F.C.O., at St. Andrew's Hall, on Saturday, May 19th. The following was the programme :—

Offertoire in F	Wely.
Pastorale Prelude	Gordigiani.
Allegretto in G	Frost.
Pastorale in F	Wely.
Organ Concerto in C	Bach.
Adagio, "Moonlight Sonata"	Beethoven.
Canzonetta del Salvator Rosa	Liszt.
Sylvana, "Menuet d'exaudet"	Lee.
Andantino	Chauvet.
Fanfare	Lemmens.
Overture, "Guglielmo Tell"	Rossini.

WESTMINSTER ABBEY ORGAN.

Messrs. W. Hill & Son are now engaged upon the reconstruction of the above instrument, in order to render it thoroughly suited to modern requirements, and to the demands made by a cathedral service. For some years the necessary rebuilding has been contemplated, and the work is now being finally carried out. Originally built by Schreider about the year 1730, it remained unaltered till 1790, when Avery added a set of pedal pipes to C. In about 1828 Elliott added new bellows and a trumpet stop. In 1830, Elliott and Hill built a new Swell with an octave of large Pedal pipes to GGG, 20 feet. In 1848 the organ was moved from the centre of the screen and placed at the two extremities, N. and S.; the compass of the Great organ extended to CCC, that of the Swell from tenor C to CC, and that of the Pedal double diapason to CCCC, 32 feet. With the exception of the subsequent addition by Hill of a Solo manual, the organ remained until now as it was after the alterations in 1848. The inconvenience of the CCC manuals, and the want of a separate pedal organ, together with the natural decay through age of various portions of the action, have necessitated a thorough rebuilding of the instrument, such as is now being carried out. The organ will be re-erected in its old position at the N. and S. extremities of the screen, but will be very considerably increased in height, though not in depth, the narrowness of the church forbidding any extra projection, for appearance sake, though the great height will be a vast architectural improvement, more particularly because Mr. J. L. Pearson, R.A., the architect, has designed two fine cases to enclose the two divisions of the organ. These are somewhat after the model of the old Gothic buffet in the Cathedral of Chartres. Almost entirely new action of all kinds is being provided, of the most approved modern description, pneumatic apparatus being largely used. It is proposed to supply blowing power by means of a gas-engine. Those pipes that are in good condition will be used again, while other new ones will be supplied, both as additions and as substitutions for damaged ones. Many of the new reed stops will be on a heavy pressure of wind. The organ, as rebuilt, will, it is hoped, be a representative cathedral instrument of the best type.

The following is the new scheme of stops :—

Great Organ, CC to A.

1.	Double Open Diap.	16 ft.	8.	Twelfth	5⅓
2.	Open Diap., No. 1	8 „	9.	Fifteenth	4 „
3.	Open Diap., No. 2	8 „	10.	Mixture (4 ranks)
4.	Open Diap., No. 3	8 „	11.	Double Trumpet	16 „
5.	Stopped Diapason	8 „	12.	Posaune	8 „
6.	Principal	4 „	13.	Clarion	4 „
7.	Harmonic Flute	4 „

Choir Organ, CC to A.

14.	Gedact	16 ft.	20.	Nason Flute	4 „
15.	Open Diapason	8 „	21.	Flautina	2 „
16.	Dulciana	8 „	22.	Dolcan	4 „
17.	Keraulophon	8 „	23.	Bassoon	16 „
18.	Stopped Diapason	8 „	24.	Cor Anglais	8 „
19.	Principal	4 „

Swell Organ. CC to A.

25.	Double Diapason	16 ft.	32.	Principal	4 „
26.	Open Diapason	8 „	33.	Fifteenth	2 „
27.	Dulciana	8 „	34.	Mixture (3 ranks)
28.	Salicional	8 „	35.	Double Trumpet	16 „
29.	Vox Angelica	8 „	36.	Cornopean	8 „
30.	Höhl Flute	8 „	37.	Oboe	8 „
31.	Dulcet	4 „	38.	Clarion	4 „

Solo Organ. CC to A.

39.	Gamba	8 ft.	42.	Clarionet	8 „
40.	Harmonic Flute	4 „	43.	Vox Humana	8 „
41.	Orchestral Oboe	8 „	44.	Tuba Mirabilis	8 „

Pedal Organ. CCCC to F.

45.	Double Open Diap.	32 ft.	50.	Violoncello	8 „
46.	Open Diapason	16 „	51.	Viola	4 „
47.	Open Diapason	16 „	52.	Ophicleide	16 „
48.	Bourdon	16 „	53.	Clarion	8 „
49.	Principal	8 „

Wind of various pressures.

Couplers.

54. Great to Pedals.	59. Swell to Great.
55. Swell to Pedals.	60. Swell to Choir.
56. Choir to Great.	61. Solo to Great.
57. Solo to Pedals.	62. Swell Octave.
58. Solo to Pedals, 8ve.

Various combination arrangements.

It is hoped the work will be completed during the autumn.

Digitized by Google

FRODSHAM, CHESHIRE.

The new organ, built by Mr. J. J. Binns, of Bramley, near Leeds, was formally opened on the 18th inst. by F. W. Hird, Esq., of Leeds. The Rev. Canon Gore, Vicar of Bowdon, preached in the afternoon, and the Rev. H. B. Blogg, Vicar of Frodsham, in the evening. An organ recital was given at the close of each service by Mr. Hird. The organ has been erected at a cost of about £800, the front being in plain oak, slightly carved, with plain spotted metal pipes; altogether the whole forms a marked feature in the church. The tone of the organ was greatly admired by a large congregation, among whom were several organ builders. A striking characteristic of the organ is the full and ringing tone of the diapasons, resembling in this particular (as well as in the clearly defined individuality of the flue work generally), the tone produced by the late eminent organ builder, Edmund Schulze. The reeds also are excellent, the oboe being specially charming, and the pedal stops are quite on a par with the rest of the work. The preacher in the evening paid a high tribute to the untiring energy and ability of Mr. Binns. The organ is placed in the Helsly Chapel of the recently restored edifice, which is now one of the finest churches in the county. The following is a specification of the organ:—

Compass of each Manual, CC to G in alt., 56 Notes.

GREAT ORGAN.

1. Bourdon	16 ft.	6. Octave	4 ft.
2. Large Open Diapn.	8 „	7. Twelfth	2⅔ „
3. Small Open Diapn.	8 „	8. Fifteenth	2 „
4. Stop Diapason	8 „	9. Mixture, 3 ranks
5. Harmonic Flute	4 „	10. Trumpet	8 „

SWELL ORGAN.

11. Bourdon	16 ft.	16. Octave	4 ft.
12. Open	8 „	17. Harmonic Piccolo	2 „
13. Dulciana	8 „	18. Mixture, 3 ranks
14. Voix Celestes	8 „	19. Horn	8 „
15. Hohl Flöte	8 „	20. Oboe	8 „

CHOIR ORGAN.

21. Lieblich Bourdon	16 ft.	25. Lieblich Flöte	4 ft.
22. Violin Diapason	8 „	26. Flautino Dolce	2 „
23. Dolce	8 „	27. Clarionette	8 „
24. Lieblich Gedact	8 „

PEDAL ORGAN.

28. Open Diapason	16 ft.	30. Flute Bass	8 ft.
29. Bourdon	16 „

COUPLERS.

31. Swell to Great.	34. Great to Pedals.
32. Swell to Choir.	35. Swell to Pedals.
33. Choir to Great.	36. Choir to Pedals.

4 Composition Pedals to Great Organ.
3 Composition Pedals to Swell Organ.

SUMMARY.

Great Organ	10 Stops	672 Pipes
Swell Organ	10 „	662 „
Choir Organ	7 „	382 „
Pedal Organ	3 „	90 „
Couplers	6 „	... „
Total	36 Stops	1806 Pipes.

FISHERIES EXHIBITION.

Mr. Frank Bradley gave the following organ recitals, on Monday and Wednesday, at the above Exhibition, on Messrs. Lewis's and Henry Jones's organs.

MONDAY.

Gigue in D major	Bach.
Fugue in D major	Archer.
Gavotte	Thomas.
Air and variations	Chipp.
Gavotte and Musette	Raff.
Fugue	Bach.
Extempore	Bradley.
Gavotte and Musette	Bradley.
Fanfare	Lemmens.

WEDNESDAY.

Concerto	Handel.
Dances	Dvorak.
Gavottes in D and A	Bach. Gluck.
Polish Dances	Scharwenka.
Air and Variations	Lux.
Fugue in G minor	Bach.
Overture, "Merry Wives"	Nicolai.
Pastorale and Canon	Salomé
Chorus, in D major	Guilmant.

Academical Intelligence.

SOCIETY OF ARTS.

The next Practical Examination in Vocal or Instrumental Music in London will be held at the House of the Society of Arts, 18, John-street, Adelphi, W.C., during the week commencing on the 11th June, 1883.

HONOURS.

The Examination in Honours will consist of three sections, viz., a paper to be worked, an examination similar in form to the practical examination for a First and Second Class, and a viva-voce examination.

FIRST AND SECOND-CLASS.

Vocal.

Candidates for a First or Second Class Certificate in Vocal Music will be required—

1. To sing a solo, or to take part with another candidate in a duet, already studied.
2. A key-note being sounded and named by the Examiner, the candidate to name sounds or intervals, or successions of sounds or intervals, played or sung by the Examiner.
3. To sing or sol-fa at sight passages selected generally from classical music.

Instrumental.

Candidates for a First or Second Class Certificate in Instrumental Music will be required—

1. To play a short piece, or a portion of a larger work, already studied.
2. A key-note being sounded and named by the Examiner, the candidate to name sounds or intervals, played by the Examiner.
3. To play a piece or portion of a piece at sight.

Full particulars can be obtained on application to the Secretary.

THE TONIC SOL-FA COLLEGE.

The annual meeting was held at Exeter Hall on Tuesday evening, May 22nd, the chair being taken by Mr. Henry Leslie. A very enthusiastic, crowded audience testified to the hearty character of the meeting. Mr. R. Griffiths read the highly satisfactory report of the year. Addresses were delivered by the chairman, Mr. J. Spencer Curwen, the Rev. Professor Davis, and the Rev. R. C. Billing. The sight-singing test was an anthem, "Arise, shine," by W. Meston. This was cleverly gone through. Proceedings were opened by an organ recital, Miss Mary Harris and Mr. W. C. Harris: "Cornelius" March (Mendelssohn); Andante in G, Batiste; Allegro and Fuga from No. 2 of Organ Sonatas (Mendelssohn); Gavotte Moderne in Ut (Berthold Tours). The United choirs (conductor, Mr. J. Proudman; organ, Mr. J. Thomson) sang chorus, "The many rend the skies" (Handel). Mr. McNaught's choir (conductor, Mr. W. G. NcNaught) gave part-song, "A rose of the garden" (Henry Leslie). The South London Choral Association (conductor, Mr. L. C. Venables) sang part-song, "Zephyr, taking thy repose" (G. A. Macfarren). The Tonic Sol-fa Choral Association (conductor, Mr. J. Proudman) gave part-song, "The lullaby of life (Henry Leslie). Mr. McNaught's choir sang part-song, "The silent Land" (Alfred R. Gaul). The Tonic Sol-fa Choral Association, part-song, "In vain you tell" (J. L. Hatton). The South London Choral Association sang the clever humorous part-song, "Kate Dalrymple" (Frederick Archer).—The Sight Test. The United Choirs (conductor, Mr. W. G. McNaught) performed part-song, "The Pilgrims" (Henry Leslie). The Tonic Sol-fa Choral Association, part-song, "Take thy banner" (James Coward). Mr. McNaught's choir, Madrigal (8 parts), "Lay a garland" (R. L. de Pearsall). The South London Choral Association, chorus, "The halt of the caravan" (Sir H. R. Bishop). The United Choirs (conductor, Mr. L. C. Venables), chorus, "We never will bow down" (Handel).

It would be impossible to do justice to the united, earnest enthusiasm of the audience. Clearly tonic sol-fa interests are in good hands, and the future of the cause as a powerful educational influence is fully assured.

Digitized by Google

Reviews.

The Eleventh Annual Festival Service Book of the London Gregorian Choir Association for the current year, is perhaps musically the most satisfactory issue of the kind yet offered to the members. The book has designedly an Eucharistic character. The preface gives brief and sensible directions anent the performance of plain-song, which display real knowledge and sound judgment, as do the rules to sing ascending passages with increased force to climax points, and descending sentences towards repose points with decreased intensity, and to sing to closing Pneumas with lightness and delicacy. The Eucharistic tone of the contents of this Service Book tends to show that the Gregorian movement in the Anglican Church is too much in the hands of one section of the Church; or perhaps High Churchmen join and influence the movement largely as one of mediæval picturesqueness, and so impart to what should be a broadly Catholic movement the elements and tendencies of a religious faction. It would be difficult otherwise to account for the presence of the prose for Corpus Christi Day "Laudi Sion salvatorem," and the side-notes: "The words in italics are sung only on the festival of Corpus Christi." Now is that great Roman festival of the earlier part of Trinitytide ever celebrated in the Anglican Church? Or is the doctrine of transubstantiation, which it practically celebrates, accepted fully in the English Protestant section of the one body, which, as regards its broader principles, exists "throughout all the world?" Surely there can but be a negative reply to both these questions, and such a negation with equal certainty shows a want of judgment, or the presence of a prejudicial leaning in a given direction on the part of the Committee of the L.G.C.A. The music of the Church, the common heritage of all, should be nurtured upon broader principles than these, and the sooner the Committee of the L.G.C.A. change their tactics, the better for the cause they so earnestly advocate; unless, indeed, they are determined to promulgate given doctrines as part and parcel of the mediæval arts of the Church, in which case the public will doubtless decide how to view the claims of those who thus ostensibly seek to forward a revival of the Church's musical heritage—plain-song. Another complaint may here be registered against the stiff and often inelegant translations of some of the finest of the ancient metrical hymns; some of them are unhappy enough to have been the work of the author of the libretto of a recently produced English opera. One innovation of ritual is the introduction of antiphons before the psalms and canticles after the manner of the Roman Church, a matter involving no doctrinal consideration, but showing an anxious desire to revive or transplant ancient formularies. As regards the music, there is little but praise. The plain-song (which is, however, not very pure) of the responses has been judiciously placed in the upper part, where it is much more available for congregational purposes than when sung in the tenor part. The harmonies, although they might have been still more set upon the old modes than they are with advantage, are laudably diatonic in character, and show a desire to permit the grand old and never-fading melodic idioms to find their way to the human heart as they should, as unadorned and as naturally as possible. The book contains such gems as the hymn, "Pange lingua," the old notes to the "Preface" and "Lord's Prayer," destined to last as long as the Church remains on this earth, the tune of "Laus devote mente," and other priceless treasures of ancient song. The modern anthem given was Dr. Gauntlett's dignified setting of the words, "I will go unto the altar of God." It may be added that the L.G.C.A. have issued adaptations to the Communion office of two plain-chant "Masses," Nos. 1 and 2 of "Series of Plain-Song Masses." The first is a beautiful specimen of French ornate plain-song, the second is the well-known "Missa de Angelis," which furnishes in the initial themes of its "Gloria and Credo" the priest's intonations so universally used in the Roman Church. The accompanying harmonies are good.

Mendelssohn's "Elijah" was well given by the Kyrle Society at St. Barnabas, King's Square, on May 26th, under the direction of Mr. M. L. Lawson. Mr. E. H. Turpin was the organist.

MUSIC STRINGS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF ALL KINDS OF STRINGS FOR VIOLIN, VIOLA, VIOLONCELLO, DOUBLE BASS, HARP, ZITHER, GUITAR, BANJO, &c., &c.,

Have always in Stock the Largest Assortment of Music Strings of any House in the World.

39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

All Kinds of Strings covered in a superior manner by powerful machines made on the best principle with all modern improvements.

Just Published

PART-SONG, "GENTLE SPRING" for FOUR VOICES, by E. Bunnett, Mus.D. Price 3d.—London, Novello, Ewer, & Co.

NEW ORGAN PIECE, by M. GUILMANT.—SPOHR'S 24th PSALM (English words), 9d. and 1s. Duet arranged for Organ Solo by M. GUILMANT, 1s. 6d. London: NOVELLO, EWER & CO.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

ULRICH'S "FLORA MACDONALD."
MUSICAL INTELLIGENCE:—Mr. Charles Halle's Chamber Music Concerts—The Royal Italian Opera—Richter Concerts—Madame Mery's Recitals—Leeds—Alexander Kummer—The Pachmann Pianoforte Recital—Music in Dublin.
ORGAN NEWS:—Notting Hill—Bristol—Crystal Palace—Waterloo Road—Llanelly—Norwich—Westminster Abbey Organ—Frodsham, Chester—Fisheries Exhibition.
ACADEMICAL INTELLIGENCE:—Society of Arts—The Tonic Sol-fa College.
REVIEWS OF BOOKS AND MUSIC.
EDITORIAL:—Berlioz.
BERLIOZ'S "REQUIEM" MASS.
THE LATE M. MORTIER DE FONTAINE.
CERTAIN OBSERVATIONS CONCERNING HYMN-TUNES. By "Old School."
ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.
PASSING EVENTS. Service Lists, &c.

LONDON: SATURDAY, MAY 26, 1883.

BERLIOZ.

A DISTINGUISHED writer holds that "without BERLIOZ there would have been "no Wagner." This observation, when limited to the matter of orchestration, is not without force. Undoubtedly the great French composer contributed enormously to the modern supremacy of instrumentation as an essential art in the history of the music of the present era. So the performance of his "Requiem" Mass at the Crystal Palace to-day is a matter of special interest. It may be that the effect of the work will not altogether answer the expectations of the many enthusiastic and expectant listeners. In two directions such a disappointment is possible. In the first place, the human mind is apt through the deceptive powers of the imagination to overleap its own faculties of comprehension. A man might propose to himself to see such a vast area of landscape as would necessitate his being carried up a great height in order that his sight may compass so large an expanse. As his power of vision will not permit the definite inspection of a too extended area, he would inevitably lose much of many beauties spread before him. So it is in art, and a too extensive and overloaded score is often a practical failure. The conception of the mind surpasses its own power for the receptivity of details; and it is the artist's real business to attain to great thoughts through limited means, rather than to hope to secure commensurate results through means too extensive for the grip of the but limited powers of hearing and seeing. Again, BERLIOZ was the exponent of a department of the art rather than a complete master of the entire art; and notwithstanding his undoubted genius, he was afflicted with that Vaulting ambition which overleaps itself.

Digitized by Google

In his impetuous tone-colour power he often sought to over-dress ideas which only could be properly attained with the simplest tone-colour raiments; he would gild the very nails and screws of his musical structure. This tendency to overdress his ideas did indeed lead to the larger development of orchestral power; but it is a question whether music has gained as much from his labours as would have been secured by a more complete all-round attention to the duties of the composer's workmanship. By the splendour of his overdrawn pictures he certainly showed to the world the possible importance of a department of the art. Perhaps he also furnished the musical student with a warning not to bestow too much power in any one given direction, or to rely too much upon effects which may not always have beneath their glittering surface real, solid, and shapely thoughts.

Critically it must be allowed that some of BERLIOZ's effects display a want of acoustical knowledge; as his employment of drums in chords, for the indefinite nature of the sounds produced by those instruments and their harmonic peculiarities somewhat unfit them for such use. Again, some of his effects are extensions of other men's ideas rather than inventions of his own; as the use of the trombone foundation tones (which he calls pedal notes) with high chords for flutes to prompt the formation of harmonic suggestions, a device not very modern and beautifully illustrated in Mendelssohn's "Andante" of the "Italian" Symphony.

Fair justice demands, indeed, that BERLIOZ should be acknowledged as a man of real power and inventive strength in his way. His orchestral combinations and inventions have indeed uplifted instrumentation to a science in itself almost. The graphic and interesting account of the great artist's composition and preparation of the "Requiem"—the score of which, like the score of some other works of his, will continue to be regarded by musicians as affording valuable examples for thought and study—as expressly translated for this paper by Mr. SOUTHGATE, will be found to reveal much, both of the artist and of the man.

E. H. TURPIN.

BERLIOZ'S "REQUIEM" MASS.

(Translated from "Mémoires de Hector Berlioz," cap. 46.)

By T. L. SOUTHGATE.

In 1836 M. de Gasparin was Minister of the Interior. He belonged not only to the small number of our statesmen who felt interest in music, but also to the number still smaller who had a real love for the art. Religious music had for a long time past ceased to occupy an honourable position in France. M. de Gasparin, being desirous of reinstating it, determined that from the funds at the disposal of the Department of the Fine Arts, a sum of 3,000 francs should be allocated every year to a French composer, designated by the minister, to write either a mass or a grand oratorio. According to the scheme of M. de Gasparin, the department was, moreover, to be answerable for the performance of the new work, which was to be given at the cost of the government. "I am going to commence with Berlioz," said he; "he must write a requiem mass, I am sure that he will succeed." These particulars were given me by a friend of M. de Gasparin that I knew. My surprise was as great as my joy. In order to be quite certain as to the truth, I solicited an audience of the minister. On seeing him, he confirmed the correctness of the details I have given above. "I am about to quit the ministry," he added, "this will be my musical testament. You have received the formal order concerning the Requiem?" "No, monsieur! and it is only chance that has permitted me to know your kind intentions towards me. Indeed! How can this be? a week ago I gave directions that you should be sent for. The delay must have been caused by the carelessness of my officials. I will see to this."

Nevertheless, several days passed, and no order arrived. Full of uneasiness, I addressed myself to M. de Gasparin's son, who informed me of an intrigue of which I had not the slightest suspicion. M. XX. . .,* the Director of the Fine Arts, did not approve of the minister's project relative to religious music; still less the choice he had made that I should lead the way among our composers, and inaugurate the scheme. He knew, besides, that in a few days M. de Gasparin would be no longer in office. Now in delaying until after the minister's departure the issuing of the decree which founded the project and invited me to compose the music, it was easy to secure the failure of the scheme, and dissuade the new minister from attempting to realize it. This is what monsieur the director had in his head. But M. de Gasparin would not permit anyone to play with him. On learning from his son that no steps had as yet been taken, the day before he left the ministry he sent at the last moment to M. XX. . . a command very severely expressed, to issue the decree instantly, and to send it to me; so this was done.

This first check to M. XX . . . could not but increase his bad feelings towards me; indeed, it eventually had such a result.

This arbiter of art and the fate of artists vouchsafed to recognise true value in music in Rossini alone. One day after having expressed before me in a lengthy disdainful way an appraisement of all the ancient and modern masters of Europe, with the exception of Beethoven, whom he had forgotten, he suddenly changed his tone, saying:—"However, it appears to me there is still another one . . . it is . . . . there . . . ., what is he called? A German whose symphonies are played at the Conservatoire, . . . You ought to know that M. Berlioz . . . Beethoven? Yes, Beethoven. Ah, well! that person is not without some talent."—I actually myself heard a Director of the Fine Arts thus express himself. He graciously admitted that Beethoven was not without talent!

And in this, M. XX . . . was only the representative of the musical opinions of all the French bureaucracy of the period. Hundreds of amateurs of this type occupied all the avenues through which artists had to pass, and set in motion the wheels of the government machine by which proper support ought to be accorded to our national institutions.—To-day . . . .

As soon as I was furnished with the decree, I commenced to work. I regarded the text of the "Requiem" as a prey long coveted, which was delivered to me at last, and on which I threw myself with a sort of fury. My head seemed ready to burst through the effects of seething over thoughts. The plan of one piece was no sooner sketched, than that of another presented itself. Owing to the impossibility of writing quickly enough, I adopted short-hand signs, which (especially for the "Lacrymosa") proved to be of great assistance. Composers know the torment and despair caused at the remembrance of the loss of certain ideas, which one has not had time to write down, and which escape you for ever. I have consequently written this work with great rapidity; I may add, that I made but few modifications afterwards. These are to be found in the second edition of the score published by Messrs. Ricordi of Milan.

[NOTE.—Is it not strange that at that period, when I was writing this grand work and was married to Miss Smithson, twice I had the same dream? I was in the little garden of Madame Gautier at Meylan, sitting beneath a charming drooping acacia alone, Mdlle. Estelle not being there, and I said, "Where is she? Where is she?" Who can explain that? Sailors perhaps,

* There seems to have been no reason why Berlioz should have affected any mystery over the name of the Director of the Department of the Fine Arts. He had been dead a dozen years when the "Memoires" were written, and the date given, 1836, is sufficient to indicate to the curious the dentity of the bête noir.—T. L. S.

Digitized by Google

or scientific men, who have studied the movements of the magnetic needle, and who know that the heart of certain men resemble it. . . .]

The ministerial order directed that my "Requiem" should be performed at the cost of the Government on the day of the funeral service celebrated every year for the victims of the revolution of 1830.

When the month of July, the period of that ceremony, approached, I had copies of the chorus and orchestral parts of my work made, and by the advice of the director of the Fine Arts, commenced the rehearsals. But almost immediately came a letter from the office of the minister, informing me that the funeral ceremony for the July victims would be held without music, and ordering me to suspend all my preparations. The new minister of the interior was, however, by that time responsible for a considerable sum due to the copyists, and to the two hundred choristers who, on the faith of the decree, had given up their time to my rehearsals. For five months I begged without effect for the payment of these expenses incurred. As to that which was owing to me, I did not venture to mention it; they seemed not even to dream of it. I was beginning to lose patience, when one day, as I was going out of the cabinet of M. XX . . . , after a lively discussion I had had with him on the subject, the canon of the Invalides announced the capture of Constantine. Two hours after, I was asked in great haste to return to the minister. M. XX . . . had found the means to get rid of me. General Damrémont having fallen under the walls of Constantine, a solemn service for him and the French soldiers who had died during the siege was to be held in the Church of the Invalides. This ceremony concerned the Minister of War, and Gen. Bernard, who then occupied that post, consented to have my "Requiem" performed. This was the unhoped for news which I learnt on arriving at M. XX . . .'s.

But here the drama became complicated, and incidents of the most serious kind succeeded one another. I recommended the poor artists who worked with me to profit a little by my experience, and to meditate upon that which had already happened. I advise those who read this to acquire the sad advantage of mistrusting all and everything, when they find themselves in an analogous position; to regard written orders with no more faith than mere words, and to entertain as much caution against heaven as against hell.

Hardly had the news of the approaching performance of my "Requiem" as a part of the grand and official ceremony which was to take place, been told to Cherubini,* than it threw him into a perfect fever. It had already long been the custom that in like cases one of his two funeral masses should be executed. Such a decision irritated him profoundly. He considered it as a blow struck at that which he regarded as his rights, his dignity, his just celebrity, his incontestable value, in favour of a young man hardly yet at the beginning of his career, and one, moreover, who was credited with having introduced heresy into the school. All his friends and pupils, Halévy at the head, partook of his vexation; they endeavoured to raise a storm and direct it on me, seeking everywhere for aid to depose the young man for the old one's profit. One evening I was at the office of the Journal des Débats, to the staff of which I was already attached (M. Bertin, the director, regarding me with the most active benevolence), when Halévy presented himself. I divined at a glance the object of his visit. He came to have recourse to the powerful influence of M. Bertin to aid in the realization of Cherubini's projects. A little disconcerted, however, to find me there, and still more at the air of coldness with which M. Bertin and his son Armand received him, he instantly changed the direction of his batteries.

Halévy having followed M. Bertin, senior, into the next room, the door of which was open, I heard him say, "that Cherubini was so extraordinarily affected over the matter, that it was feared he would be confined to bed through illness. He (Halévy) had consequently come to beg M. Bertin to use his influence and endeavour to obtain, as a consolation, the commander's cross of the Legion of Honour for the illustrious master." The stern voice of M. Bertin then broke in with these words:—"Yes, my dear Halévy, we will do what you wish in order to obtain a distinction that Cherubini well merits. But if there is any question about the 'Requiem,' and propositions are to be made to Berlioz respecting his work, and he had the weakness to yield a hair, I would never speak to him again in my life."—Halévy retired a little more than confused at this response.

So the good Cherubini, who had already wished to make me swallow, as it were, ever so many little adders, was himself compelled to receive from my hand a huge boa constrictor, which he never digested.

Now for another intrigue, more cleverly plotted, the deep wickedness of which I hardly dare to fathom. I incriminate nobody, merely recounting roughly the facts, but with the most scrupulous exactitude, without making the least commentary.

General Bernard having announced personally to me that my "Requiem" would be executed on the conditions already related, I was about to commence the rehearsals when M. XX . . . sent for me.—"You know," said he, "that Habeneck* has been charged to direct the music of the grand official fêtes?" (Good gracious, I thought, another blow has fallen on my head!) "Certainly, you are at present in the habit of conducting the performance of your own works, but Habeneck is an old gentleman" (another stroke), "and I know that he will experience considerable pain if he does not preside at the conductor's desk for your 'Requiem.' On what terms are you with him?" On what terms? We had quarrelled, I don't know why; during the last three years he had ceased to speak to me; I altogether ignore his motives, and, to tell the truth, have not deigned to inform myself of them. He commenced by brusquely refusing to direct one of my concerts. His conduct towards me is as inexplicable as uncivil. However, as I plainly see that on this occasion he desires to figure at the ceremony connected with Maréchal Damrémont, and that this appears to be equally agreeable to you, I consent to yield the bâton to him, reserving to myself at all times the direction of the rehearsals. "That, of course, belongs to you," answered M. XX . . ., "I will give him notice."—The divisional and general rehearsals were held with much care. Habeneck spoke to me, as if our relations had never been interrupted, and it appeared that the work ought to go well.

On the day of the performance, in the Church of the Invalides, before the princes, ministers, peers, deputies, all the French press, the correspondents of foreign journals, and an immense crowd, it was imperative that I should have a great success; a mediocre effect would be fatal, and for a still stronger reason, a bad effect would be annihilation to me.

But now listen to this:—

My performers were divided into several groups, placed at a distance from one another; and it was necessary also that the four orchestras of brass instruments, which I had employed in the Tuba mirum, should each occupy corners at the angles of the grand mass of vocal and instrumental performers. At the point of their entry, the commencement of the Tuba mirum, which is connected with the Dies iræ without break, the movement becomes enlarged; all the brass instruments first bursting forth at the same time. Afterwards they challenge and answer one another in the distance, their successive entries on the major third, thus gradually building up the scaffold of vivid tone, and so intensifying the effect.† It is, therefore, of the highest importance clearly to indicate the four beats of the new movement, and give the cue to the respective orchestras at the moment when they should come in. Were this neglected, this terrible musical cataclysm, where means quite exceptionable and formidable in their proportions, and combinations that have never before been tried, would produce only an immense and frightful cacophony. I trust that this musical picture of the last judgment will always remain as an example of the greatness of our art.

* The published "Memorials of Cherubini," who at that period was head of the Paris Conservatoire, show that the relations between the two composers were very strained.—T. L. S.

* Haberneck, though of German parentage, was born in France. He was a fair musician, and enjoyed the reputation of being an unprejudiced man. It was through him that Beethoven's symphonies were introduced to the Parisians.—T. L. S.

† It may be mentioned that the "Tuba Mirum," the most extraordinary number of this original work, is an Andante Maestoso in E flat, led up to by a sudden chromatic rush up of the strings. The score directs that one bar of the new movement shall be regarded as equivalent to two of the preceding one. The introduction is entirely allotted to the four separate orchestras of brass. The eight sets of kettledrums, from which velvety chords are rolled pianissimo by drumsticks with sponge ends, enter later on with the chorus, wood-wind, strings, and other instruments of percussion. The whole conception requires great care and skill to direct successfully; one can quite appreciate the agony Berlioz experienced when he saw Habeneck's nonchalance at the critical moment.—T. L. S.

Digitized by Google

On account of my habitual mistrust, I was standing behind Habeneck, turning my back on him. I surveyed the group of kettle-drummers, which he could not see, the time approaching when they have to take part in the general conflict.

There are perhaps a thousand bars in my "Requiem." Precisely on that of which I have above spoken, where the time becomes doubled, and where the brass instruments launch out with their thrilling tones, on that special bar, where the action of the conductor is absolutely necessary, Habeneck dropped his bâton, calmly drew out his snuff-box, and took a pinch of snuff. I had kept an eye on him; instantly I turned rapidly on my heel, and dashed in front; I stretched out my arms and marked the four leading beats of the new movement. The orchestra followed me, each part entering in order; I conducted the piece until the end, and the effect that I had long dreamt of was produced. When Habeneck saw that the Tuba mirum was saved, he said to me,—"What a cold perspiration I had, without you, we should have been lost!" "Yes, I understand that well," replied I, fixing my eyes steadily on him." I did not add a word.—Could he have really done it? Was it possible that this man, in accord with M. XX..., who detested me, together with the other friends of Cherubini, had dared to plan, and attempted to carry out this base wickedness? I do not wish to think it, but I have little doubt. May God pardon me if I do him any injury!

The success of the "Requiem" was complete, in spite of all the conspiracies, cowardly or atrocious, officious and official, which had opposed the production of the work.

I will now speak as to the terms the minister of war had agreed to respecting the performance. Here they are:—"I will give," said the honourable General Bernard to me, "10,000 francs for the execution of your work; but this sum will only be delivered to you on the presentation of a letter from my colleague the minister of the interior, by which he will engage to pay you, first that which is due for the composition of the "Requiem," according to the decree of M. de Gasparin, and afterwards that which is due to the choristers for the rehearsals they attended in July last, and likewise to the copyists."

The minister of the interior had verbally engaged to General Bernard to discharge this triple debt. His letter was already issued, it only wanted his signature. To obtain it, I waited in his antechamber with one of his secretaries armed with the letter and furnished with a pen, from ten o'clock in the morning until four in the afternoon. At that time the minister came out, and the secretary, detaining him, got him to attach to the letter his very precious signature. Without losing a minute, I ran to General Bernard, who, after having read with attention the order of his colleague, delivered to me 10,000 francs.

I expended this sum entirely in paying my executants; I gave 300 francs to Duprey, who had sung the solo of the "Sanctus," and 300 francs to Habeneck, the incomparable snuff-taker, who had used so appropriately his box. There remained for me absolutely nothing. I supposed that I should eventually be paid by the minister of the interior, who was doubly obliged to take to this debt, first by the decree of his predecessor, and secondly by the engagement that he had personally contracted with the minister of war. "Holy simplicity!" as says Mephistopheles. One month, two, three, four, eight months passed, without me being able to obtain a sou. Through supplications, recommendations of various friends of the minister, and a course of complaints written and verbal, at last the rehearsals of the choristers, and the costs of the copies, were paid. I was thus freed from the intolerable persecution which I had already so long been compelled to undergo, from many people wearied of waiting for their due, and perhaps prejudiced against me by suspicions, the very idea of which still brings up the blush of indignation.

I, the author of the "Requiem," to suppose that I attached any value to vile gold! For shame! This was indeed a calumny. Consequently, people were very careful as to paying me. I now, however, take the opportunity of recounting at full length as to the accomplishment of the ministerial promises. I had an imperial want of gold. So again I was compelled to resign myself to laying siege to the cabinet of the director of the Fine Arts. Many weeks passed in fruitless solicitations. My anger grew, I became thin, I was unable to sleep. At last, I arrived one day at the ministry, blue, pale with fury, resolved to make a disturbance, determined for anything. On entering, to M. XX. . . . I said,—"Ah, now it decidedly appears that they will not pay me!"—"My dear Berlioz," replied the director, "you know it is not my fault. I have taken much trouble, I have made the most searching investigation. The funds which were destined for you have vanished, they have had another destination. I do not know in what office this has been done. Oh! if such things were to happen in mine!..."—"Indeed, how is this! Funds destined for the Fine Arts can then be employed outside your department without you knowing it?... Your budget is then at the disposition of the first comer?... But that is of little importance to me! I never intend to trouble myself over such questions. A 'Requiem' has been commissioned of me by the minister of the interior at an agreed price of 3,000 francs; I want my 3,000 francs."—"Good heavens, have a little more patience! One must consider. It is already a question elsewhere as to you receiving the Cross.... To the d—— with the cross."... "Give me my money."—"But..."—"There is no but," cried I, in knocking over a chair, "I will give you till midday to-morrow, and if at midday precisely I have not received the sum, I will create for you and the ministry such a scandal as has never yet been seen! And you know well that I possess the means to carry this out."

M. XX... agitated, forgetting his hat, rushed to the staircase which led to the minister, and I pursued him, crying,—"Tell him plainly that I should be ashamed to treat my bootmaker as he treats me, and that his conduct will soon acquire wide notoriety."

[NOTE.—And yet he was an excellent man, full of good intentions.]

This time I had discovered the weakness in the armour of the minister M. XX.... Ten minutes afterwards he returned with a bill for 3,000 francs on the treasury of the Fine Arts. Some one had found the gold.... See what artists sometimes have to do to get justice rendered to them in Paris! There are yet other means more violent which I can, if necessary, show them not to neglect.

Later on, when the excellent M. de Gasparin had resumed the portfolio of the interior, he appeared desirous of making amends to me for the abominable denial of justice which I had suffered over the "Requiem," by causing the famous cross of the Legion of Honour to be given to me. At one time this would have represented a value of 3,000 francs to me, and when it was thus offered I would not have given 30 sous for it. This vulgar distinction was accorded to me at the same time as to Dupouchel, then director of the opera, and to Bordogni, the best singing-master of all the teachers of the period.

As soon as the "Requiem" was engraved I naturally dedicated it to M. de Gasparin, though he was no longer in power.

That which renders piquant in a high degree the conduct of the minister of the interior towards me in this affair, was, that after the execution of the "Requiem," when the musicians, the choristers, the carpenters who had constructed the temporary orchestra, Habeneck, Duprey, and all the rest were paid, I had still to try and and obtain for myself the 3,000 francs. Certain spiteful opposition journals took advantage of this to stigmatize me as one of the favourites of the authorities, comparing me to a silkworm living on the leaves of the budget, and it was seriously stated that I had received for the "Requiem" 30,000 francs.

They had only added a nought to the sum that I had not received! It is in this way that history is written.

THE LATE M. MORTIER DE FONTAINE.

M. Mortier de Fontaine died at the age of 67. He was a native of Warsaw, and so highly esteemed by Fétis as to be classed superior to Liszt and Thalberg. A fine and conscientious interpreter of Beethoven's music, M. de Fontaine was the first to play (in Germany) the tremendous Sonata in B flat, Op. 106. He also proved himself a capital "reader" of Bach and Chopin. Some one, possibly Fétis, has styled him "the best pupil of the great Sebastian." Renowned as a pianist, M. Mortier de Fontaine also excelled as a composer; a grand orchestral work, called "The Arab Ride," may be cited as a specimen of his genius.

Digitized by Google

CERTAIN OBSERVATIONS CONCERNING HYMN-TUNES.

BY "OLD SCHOOL."

A rumour, not contradicted, was current a short time ago, to the effect that the collection of sacred music and words, known as "Hymns Ancient and Modern," will be followed at no distant date by another work of a similar kind. Such an announcement may be of little interest to those whose longings for a perfect Hymnal are already satisfied; and it is almost certain that attempts on the part of an individual to depopularise such an established favourite would occupy a foremost place among futile undertakings.

It will be conceded, however, by many, that the Hymnal under consideration is scarcely perfect; that, while there is very much good matter in it, there is also a considerable quantity of "padding," and not a little poor music. Such faults as these in a work whose meridian of popularity has been reached, would naturally incite novelty-mongers, or revivalists, or improvers, to publish a rival collection of Hymns with music destined possibly to supplant the cherished favourite.

Pending the result of any such contemplated scheme, and doubting, as we may, whether it is not too soon to start it, I propose to consider briefly whether our Hymnal, of which the scope is sufficently comprehensive to please differing tastes, is put to such varied use as might help to prolong its popularity (assuming that to be threatened); whether certain tunes in the book have not been too much favoured, to the exclusion of others equally valuable, and in many cases more so; whether, in short, the good resources of the work are fairly and fully developed?

It can scarcely be doubted that, as regards its use in a great many churches, the very title of the book is a misnomer: "Hymns Modern (and Ancient)" would be a far more appropriate name to give it. For, how seldom it is that such excellent tunes as Tallis' Ordinal, Crasselius, London New, Vienna, and Tallis' Canon are permitted to enhance the beauty of a Church service! Further, why should we be compelled to go through the six weeks of Lent, year after year, without the companionship of St. Mary's or Windsor? and where shall we go for better Lenten music—where indeed? There is also in "Hymns Ancient and Modern," a remarkably fine tune called Breslau, and another called Lubeck: in how many churches in England are we ever allowed to sing either? This last complaint might be answered by the assertion that such tunes, belonging, as they do, to the bone-and-muscle genus in church music, are not in accordance with modern thought. Indeed, most churchmen are too prone now-a-days to think of the Saviour as he was in His humiliation—as agonized in the garden, as hanging on the Cross. But what if one prefers to think sometimes of the Saviour as "Great David's Greater Son"—as the Lion of the Tribe of Judah—as greater than the Samson of the Tribe of Judges, who slew more at His death than He did during His life? What then? To worship and extol Him as such, one must needs have recourse to music of something like appropriate grandeur. Nor can it be said with any truth that admiration for grand hymn-tunes is at all inconsistent with decency, or even with reverence, in praise.

Again, the variety of opinion as to the beauty and value of the several tunes in a collection is remarkable, and illustrations of it are seldom wanting. For instance, I know a clergyman whose beau-ideal of a good hymn-tune would seem to be the music to "O happy band of pilgrims" (No. 224): he will put it into the programme two or three days in succession—and what he sees to admire in it, I, for one, cannot: the ugly little sequence in the third clause, and the impertinent note (in the treble) at the end of it, are quite enough to condemn the whole thing, not to mention the naughtiness of the second clause. And yet, good taste the rev. gentleman must have, for one of his favourites is Narenza—right good music, quite the St. Ann's of the short metres. But, as with individuals, so with congregations. To go back a few years: most of us can remember the time when people affected to love the music to "Sun of my soul," and no organist or choirmaster was supposed to have done his duty unless he had imported it into the service-list at least once a fortnight. Congregations were charmed with it, or fancied they were, which was much the same thing. At length, fashion chose to relinquish the wretched drawl: it then got from bad to worse, and now few people, if any, care to resuscitate it. Later, popular fancy was exercised with the music to "Hark, hark my soul" (No. 223)—surely one of the weakest things the great Henry Smart ever did in his life: the setting of the words "Angels of Jesus, Angels of Light" is good, but for the rest, which is the greater twaddle—the words or the music? It is what I call school-girl music—the kind of music that a fashionable young lady of 16 or 17, just about to leave school at St. Leonards or Richmond, would pretend to admire immensely, knowing perfectly well, if her musical education has been worth a sixpence, that Ely, St. James's, or Vienna is each worth a dozen of it.

Quite recently, however, popular taste would appear to have undergone improvement. It has made a friend of Dr. Irons' taking music to Hymn No. 20, "At Even"—which is now frequently to be heard in provincial churches on Sunday evenings. More than once have I found it very soothing to the patience after too long a sermon. The music is devotional and pleasing, and, though not a model tune, it is one of considerable value:—but is it not rather too soon to change the key (even if the change be only to the dominant) before the composer has reached the end of the 1st clause? Some favour continues to be shown to Mr. H. Lahee's music to "Come, let us join"; this again is not a model tune, but there is a good deal of music in it. Improvement in the popular taste should go on, and then, one result, among others, would be the more frequent hearing of such music as Dundee, Crüger, St. Magnus, Bedford, Hanover, York, St. Hulbert, and Westminster (by Turle). For until more favour is shown to such tunes as these, it cannot be said that "Hymns Ancient and Modern" is made a proper use of, or a fair use of.

With regard to the time in which hymn-tunes should be sung, I would refer to certain letters of Mr. R. J. Hopper, who was, I believe, sometime organist of St. Matthias', Richmond. This gentleman, writing to the Musical Standard some months ago, advocated earnestly the cause of slower time. To his opinion I give my support, such as it is—with the reservation that due respect must be paid to the intentions of composers, and to the spirit of the words. Not all hymn-tunes can be taken slow. But Mr. Hopper has doubtless done good work in pointing out the mischievous tendency to hurry, which is still unchecked in many churches.

Before the singing has time to begin, however, I would say a word concerning the organist's duty in giving out the hymn-tune. What is this unamiable custom which is so prevalent—the custom of previously playing over the tune too hurriedly on the soft stops of the swell closed? True, it may suffice to remind the choir, sitting near the organ, what they have been practising during the week—but there are some of the congregation at the far end of the church, and they must be told what they have to sing. Let the tune then be given out deliberately on a solo stop, if the melody is of the right character, which need not be too loud, with a subdued accompaniment and 16-ft. bass, or else play it over on the diapasons of the great organ alone in four part harmony: this done, the remote congregation, instead of having to catch up the choir as best they can, will be prepared to join in immediately. I protest altogether against hymn-tunes being given out in a confidential whisper between the organist and the blower. The allegro and piano enunciation of chant and hymn-tune is one of those amenities of new school lore which is supposed to command unqualified respect and approval. Art may have a "commercial basis," but it has also a common-sense one: and singers among the congregation must know what the tune is to be before they can sing it.

Concerning variedness of accompaniment, this may safely be left to the accomplished organist, who, untrammelled by fashion, can treat the words, interpret the music, and apply the resources of the organ with proper discernment and skill. The recommendation of some authorities that one or more verses be sung in unison, with varied harmonies, is entitled to respect: but certainly a more decided relief from monotonousness can be secured by the choir alone taking some one verse (say the last but one) in harmony, without accompaniment.

Keep the congregation quiet, if you can: and then let the four principals of the choir sing alone. Some tunes are shown off to the greatest advantage by such means—Ely, for example. The time being very moderato, and the voices good, a beautiful effect is gained by slightly dwelling on the harmony of the 3rd clause. Or let the whole choir sing together the unaccompanied verse, due regard being had to balance, as well as to light and shade. In a large church or cathedral this would be the better plan in any case.

Digitized by Google

As against unison singing, I would recommend all the verses to be sung in harmony, such gradations and varieties of organ-tone being added as may be most agreeable to the subject. For, of unison or octave singing there is more than enough among the congregation, without the choir leading in octaves. At Christ Church, Reading, we have an organ wretchedly placed, but it is presided at with much taste and ability by Mr. F. T. Reade, Mus. Bac. Oxon., a young man who is certainly an admirable church-musician, while his choir is second to none in the town. Entering this church, as it were accidentally, about a year ago, just in time for St. Magnus, I found that Mr. Reade was not too fashionable to choose such good old music, nor too conceited to take pains with it when chosen;—I have, therefore, attended his church ever since.

But, to resume very briefly: Can we sufficiently deplore the inconsistency and, I may say, the stupidity, of an English congregation in the matter of singing? They will take great interest in the church choir, and will in some cases contribute handsomely towards their services: what next? the male parishioners then go regularly to church and do all they can to neutralize every effect of harmony by 300 men out of 400 all singing the soprano: and they would do just the same, if every member of the choir were a professional singer in the first rank: as if a church, nearly half full of women, whose treble voices are led by the 20 trained sopranos of the choir, were not of themselves more than enough to destroy all balance! Such is the hopelessness of getting people to understand that if they wish to join in the music of the sanctuary there is such a thing as singing in the heart, until such time as they have sufficiently cultivated their knowledge of music and their voices, wherewith they may supplement, not overwhelm, the harmonies of the choir.

In conclusion, I return for a moment to the principal topic of this paper, and once again plead earnestly for the more frequent use of "ancient" tunes.

With those who, like myself, prefer St. James's at Westminster Abbey, to Sullivan's "Onward, Christian Soldiers" at St. Paul's—who, with me lament that the modern composer could not do in 1880 as well as Raphael Courtvilledid in 1680—the foregoing observations may have some little weight. They are mainly intended to show how much the service of the Church suffers by neglect of music which, having stood the test of time, is still as fresh and as appropriate as when it was first made known one, two, and even three hundred years ago.

If any readers of my little essay should be disposed to lay aside "Hymns Ancient and Modern," I would advise them to re-open the excellent book of hymn-tunes compiled some 25 years ago by Mr. T. L. Forbes. This publication, which is one of sterling merit, and got up in a very attractive form, was, I believe, frowned upon by that thing you call fashion, an influence which to this day is the author of more mischief than enough in the Church musical world. How else could Mr. Forbes's work have fallen into disuse?

But what more can I say against that baneful influence! I desire to hear much oftener than I do such music as Narenza, London New, The Old Hundredth, St. James's, and Windsor—and I am told that I cannot see that the world of music is "progressing." Is not this enough to make one wish that the world of music was in some respects "progressing" backwards?

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The following is the report of the Committee of Management to the Directors of the Royal Academy of Music, for the year, 1883.

Your committee are happy to report the continued fiscal and technical prosperity of the Royal and National Institution you commit to their management.

The financial welfare of the Academy is evinced in the fact that there is a surplus over the expenses of the year 1882, which is recorded in the balance sheet. This is largely consequent on the increased number of students, which at the close of July last was greater than at any other period. Some of the then pupils have since left the Academy, but have been to a great extent replaced by the entrance of seventy-three strangers in the Michaelmas Term, besides the new comers of the present term, who are not yet counted. Some profits accrued from the local examinations of musical students, throughout the country, in the spring of 1882, which was entered by 1,245 candidates, of whom 143 obtained honours, and 698 passed in various branches of music. The Metropolitan Examination of Artists and Teachers, held in January, 1882, yielded also a small amount to the Academy funds. Of the sixty-eight candidates who submitted to this ordeal, fourteen were approved by the examiners, and were consequently created licenciates of the Royal Academy of Music.

The tokens of the musical success of the institution are:—

The public reception of young artists who have recently completed their training here; the welcome to several singers, instrumentalists, and even composers, at important performances, who are still pursuing their studies; more than one application from establishments in good esteem for the services of the Operatic Class; the warm encouragement experienced by the solo performers, the band and the chorus, at the Academy concerts, in St. James's Hall, and in the Academy room; and the conscientious opinion of the professors and friends of music, who witnessed the talent displayed at the fortnightly meetings which are held throughout the year.

Your committee are happy to record the munificence of Lady Goldsmid, who has again presented a Free Scholarship, to be competed for in April, by female pianists who have been studying for two years in the Academy, this being designed to facilitate to the most deserving the continued pursuit of excellence.

Prizes of ten guineas each were given last year, and are promised for this, by Dr. Lewellyn Thomas to a female student for declamatory English singing; by Mr. Henry Evill to a male student for the same; by Mr. Heathcote Long, to a male student for pianoforte playing; by Mr. Chas. Santley, to students of either sex for accompaniment; and by Mr. Bonamy Dobree, to a student for violoncello playing. There are several individuals who pay the entire fees of one or more students, but withhold their names from public announcement. The Potter Exhibition, which is the oldest endowment at present on the books, the Westmorland, the Sterndale Bennett, the Parepa-Rosa, the Sir John Goss, the Balfe, and the Thalberg Scholarships, are permanently secured. It is to be regretted that no additions have been made to the reserve fund for reducing the fees of deserving and necessitous students, and the amount as yet collected is insufficient for investment.

It has been found desirable to appoint a finance committee, to have special charge of the monetary arrangements, and Messrs. J. Lamborn Cock, J. F. H. Read, and Chas. E. Sparrow have been kind enough to accept the onerous and troublesome duties of this office. The examinations for the Memorial Prizes have been conducted by musicians not teaching in the Academy, and those gentlemen have always given their gratuitous services.

It will be necessary, during the summer vacation, to enter upon heavy expenditure for the re-decoration of the concert-room, which will seriously intrench on the funds at the disposal of your committee.

An application was made, in the autumn, to Sir Henry Ponsonby, asking whether her Majesty might probably accept a a request, were it preferred by the body of directors, to allow a concert to be performed by Academy pupils in the presence of the Queen. Such a boon was granted by George IV., who received the pupils in Carlton Palace; such, again, was granted by William IV., and Queen Adelaide, who visited the King's Theatre, to witness the pupils' performance; it was therefore supposed a hope might not be groundless that a like grace might be accorded by the present Sovereign. The reply of Sir Henry was however to the effect that her Majesty was too much engaged to entertain the proposal, were it to be officially made.

Your committee regret the letter, which will be read to you, from Mr. George Wood, resigning his two-fold office of director, and member of the committee, and which will, according to the charter, necessitate his ceasing to act as auditor. This resignation, on your acceptance, will cause a vacancy in each of the positions held by Mr. Wood, and the committee beg to nominate the present director, Mr. J. F. H. Read, for the places in the committee and the auditorship, and Mr. P. Stainton, for the place on the direction—who have both stated their willingness to serve if you appoint them.

Your committee have to state that the communication to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, embodying the resolution passed at your adjourned meeting on March 25th, 1882, has been acknowledged by the secretary of his Royal Highness, without comment. This communication included a transcript of your reply to the invitation of the Lords of the Privy Council, your remarks on the petition of his Royal Highness for a charter for a Royal College of Music, in June, 1880, stating the elasticity of the charter of this institution, and offering to modify the working of the Academy in any way, according to this charter, that might meet the views of the Prince of Wales.

In conclusion, your committee wish openly and strenuously to declare that this Academy, honoured as it is by the patronage of the entire Royal Family, and strengthened by the confidence of the musical profession and the British public, is capable of everything that is desirable for the furtherance of its grand National and educational object so far as its pecuniary means extend.

Digitized by Google

Passing Events.

"Zenobia," the American opera by a native composer, Mr. Pratt, has suffered reverses from various causes, but its author announces that he intends to continue the presentation of the work.

The Court News, of May 22nd, reports that Mr. G. A. Macfarren, Mus.Doc., Mr. G. Grove, D.C.L., and Mr. Arthur Sullivan, Mus.Doc., received from Her Majesty the Queen the honour of knighthood.

In consequence of the recent successful performances of "Ajax" at Cambridge, the "Birds of Aristophanes" will be produced next October term. The music to the play will be written by Dr. Hubert Parry.

On Trinity Sunday, Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," including the whole of the symphony, was given after the evening service at St. Luke's, Chelsea. The band, numbering about forty performers, was complete, both in wind and strings.

The sale at Messrs. Puttick and Simpson's, on Tuesday next, of the library of the late Mr. John Brockley, is one of special interest. The effects include several series of MS. lectures by Dr. Crotch, Sir H. Bishop, and Henry Phillips.

The attention of those interested in music may be directed to the Pitt-Rivers ethnological collection now being exhibited at the South Kensington Museum. There will be found here some cases of musical instruments from various parts of the world, showing the gradual development of instruments of various types from the rudest beginnings up to the period of comparative civilization.

Lady Goldsmid has made another generous contribution to the Royal Academy of Music, a gift to be applied to scholarships for female pianists to be contended for in 1884 and 1885. The last-named is the tenth year of bounty from the same source, besides the scholarship of the late Sir Francis Goldsmid and certain generous assistance given by Lady Goldsmid to meritorious students, not publicly announced.

Among deaths recently chronicled is that of Signor G. Marras, at Nice, aged 73; his "Apresmidis" obtained much favour in London a few years ago; and that of Sir Thomas Barnard, who passed away at a very advanced age. The deceased gentleman was for many years a director of the Royal Academy of Music, and gave hearty support to the art; he represented Aylesbury in Parliament for a considerable period.

Under the title of "The Tale of Troy," an attractive dramatic entertainment will be given on May 29th and 30th, at Cromwell House, South Kensington, by the kind permission of Sir Charles Freake, Bart., for the benefit of the Building Fund now being raised for "The Ladies' Department of King's College." The performances will be organised under the superintendence of Prof. C. T. Newton, C.B., and Prof. George C. Warr, M.A., of King's College. The representation will consist of tableaux and scenes from the "Iliad" and "Odyssey" of Homer, to be acted by ladies and gentlemen. The first performance will be given in English, the second in Greek. The English performance will take place on the afternoon of Tuesday, May 29th, at three o'clock. The Greek performance will take place on the evening of Wednesday, May 30th, at half-past eight. The scenic effects and tableaux will be designed with the assistance of Sir Frederick Leighton, P.R.A., Prof. E. J. Poynter, R.A., Messrs. Edwin Long, R.A., G. F. Watts, R.A., George Simonds, and Prof. P. H. Delamotte, F.S.A., of King's College. The scenery will be painted by Mr. J. O'Connor. The descriptive and vocal music will be specially composed by Messrs. Otto Goldschmidt, Malcolm Lawson, Theo. Marzials, Walter Parratt, and Prof. W. H. Monk, Mus.D., of King's College. The dramatic arrangements will be superintended by Mr. Hermann Vezin, and by Messrs. C. P. Colnaghi and J. M. Thomson (stage managers). The music of the first part "The Iliad" has been written by Herr Otto Goldschmidt and Mr. W. Parratt, Dr. W. H. Monk has composed the "Spinning" Song for "Penelope's Maidens," and Mr. M. L. Lawson (who is acting as general musical director) is responsible for the music of the second part, "The Odyssey."

The Querist.

QUERY.

AMERICAN ORGAN.—Would some fellow-reader kindly tell me a little about the history of the American Organ. Who was the first maker, etc. ?—ORGANO.

REPLY.

HANDEL'S "WATER MUSIC."—In answer to a correspondent, seeking information on the subject of Handel's "Water Music," I beg to state that a very capital little selection therefrom appeared in the Musical Library, published in 1845, and consisted of the following movements:—Maestos, Andante Quasi Allegretto, Aria, and Vivace. All of these are as Handelian as they possibly can be. The Musical Library is still in print, and can be had of Messrs. Augener, of Newgate Street, in two vols., price 7s. 6d. each. They comprise selections from the works of the great composers, arranged for piano, &c. I am not aware, at the present moment of writing, of the existence of a complete modern edition of the "Water Music." In addition to the movements mentioned in the Musical Library, I have also, in an old M.S. music book, a Largo, and a March.—J. S. BUMPUS.

Service Lists.

FIRST SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

MAY 27th.

London.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Calkin in B flat: Introit, Blessed is he who cometh (Gounod); Holy Communion, Schubert in C. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Foster in A; Anthem, Sing to the Lord a new made song (Mendelssohn).

WESTMINSTER ABBEY. — Morn.: Service, Turle in D, (throughout). Even.: Service, Walmisley in D minor; Anthem, O God, when Thou appearest (Mozart).

FOUNDLING CHAPEL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Sullivan in D, and Jubilate, Smith in B flat; Anthem, As pants the hart (Spohr). Aft.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Smith in B flat; Anthem, I will exalt Thee (Hummel).

TEMPLE CHURCH.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum Laudamus, Goss in D; Apostles' Creed, Harmonised Monotone; Anthem, I was in the Spirit (Blow). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Cooke in C; Apostles' Creed, Harmonized Monotone; Anthem, Heaven and earth display (Mendelssohn).

LINCOLN'S INN CHAPEL.—Morn.: Service, Boyce in A; Kyrie, Steggall; Anthem, In that day (Elvey). Even: Service, Boyce in A; Anthem, Wherewithal shall a young man (Boyce).

ALL SAINTS, MARGARET STREET. — Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Smart in F, Benedictus, Simcox; Holy Communion, Hoyte in D; Offertory Anthem, As the hart pants (Mendelssohn). Even.: Service, Hoyte in B flat; Anthem, Rejoice in the Lord (Martin).

CHRIST CHURCH, CLAPHAM.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Plain-song; Kyrie and Credo, Mozart in B flat; Offertory Anthem, Blest are the departed (Spohr); Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei, and Gloria in excelsis (Mozart). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Tuckerman in F; Anthem, As pants the hart (Spohr).

ST AUGUSTINE AND ST. FAITH, WATLING STREET.—Morn.: Service, Calkin in B flat; Offertory, O taste and see (Goss). Even.: Service, Calkin in B flat; Anthem, Now we are ambassadors (Mendelssohn).

ST. BARNABAS, MARYLEBONE.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Rogers in D; Anthem, Incline thine ear (Himmel); Kyrie and Nicene Creed, Rogers in D. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Rogers in D; Anthem, from the rising of the sun (Ouseley).

ST. GEORGE THE MARTYR, QUEEN SQUARE.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Smart in F; Kyrie, Gounod. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis.

ST. JAMES'S PRIVATE EPISCOPAL CHAPEL, SOUTHWARK.—Morn.: Service, Introit, Hymn; Communion Service, Marbecke. Even.: Service, Porter in D; Anthem, If thou shalt confess (Palestrina).

ST. PETER'S, VERE STREET, W.—Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Garrett in D; Anthem, Rejoice in the Lord alway (Purcell).

ST. MICHAEL'S, CORNHILL. — Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Dykes in F; Anthem, The heavens declare (Boyce); Kyrie, Creed, Stainer in E flat. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Ouseley in B flat; Anthem, I was in the Spirit (Blow).

Digitized by Google

ST. MARGARET PATTENS, ROOD LANE, FENCHURCH STREET.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Sullivan in D; Benedictus, Dykes in F; Offertory Anthem, Lord at all times (Mendelssohn); Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei and Gloria, Schubert in B flat. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Tuckerman in F; Anthem, I will mention (Sullivan).

ST. MARY ABCHURCH, E.C.—Morn.: Service, Garrett in D; Communion Service, Armes in A. Even.: Service, Chants.

ST. MARY BOLTONS, WEST BROMPTON, S.W.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Goss in C; Holy Communion, Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus, Angus Dei, and and Gloria in excelsis, Eyre in E flat; Offertory, Barnby; Evensong, Mag., and Nunc Dimittis, Parisian Tones, Stainer; Anthem, O clasp your hands (Stainer).

ST. MAGNUS, LONDON BRIDGE.—Morn.: Service, Opening Anthem, To the Lord our God (Ouseley); Te Deum and Jubilate, King in F; Kyrie, Ebdon. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, King in F; Anthem, I waited for the Lord (Mendelssohn).

ST. PAUL'S, AVENUE ROAD, SOUTH HAMPSTEAD.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Dykes in F, Benedictus, Barnby; Kyrie, Nares in F. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Stainer in A; Anthem, The wilderness (Goss).

ST. PAUL'S, BOW COMMON, E.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, and Benedictus, Smart in F. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Tours in F; Anthem, the Lord is a man of war, and Thy right hand O Lord "Israel in Egypt" (Handel).

ST. PETER'S, LEIGHAM COURT ROAD, STREATHAM, S.W.—Morn.: Holy Eucharist, Purge me with hyssop (Novello): Introit, O Lord my trust (Chantwise); Mass, Osborne in E flat; Gradual, I said, Lord (Chantwise); Communion, Ave Verum Corpus (Fagan). Even.: Magnificat, Stainer in A; Anthem, Praise the Lord, O my soul (Stark).

ST. SAVIOUR'S, HOXTON.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Smart in F; Holy Communion; Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Gloria in excelsis, Smart in F. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Dykes in F; Anthem, Thine O Lord (Kent).

Country.

ST. ASAPH CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Calkin in B flat; Anthem, Blessed is the people (Claxton). Even.: Service, Calkin in B flat; Anthem, Send out Thy light (Gounod).

ARDINGLY COLLEGE, SUSSEX.—Morn.: Communion Service, Calkin in G. Even.: Service, Wood in F; Anthem, Bring unto the Lord (Gladstone).

ASHBURNE CHURCH, DERBYSHIRE. — Morn.: Service, Garrett in D (throughout). Even.: Service, Turle in D; Anthem, Whatsoever is born of God (Oakeley).

BEDDINGTON CHURCH, SURREY.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Garret in D, Benedictus, Barry in F; Introit, Sing praise to God; Communion Service, Calkin in D. Even.: Service, Calkin in D; Anthems, God is a Spirit, and Who is the image (Bennett).

BIRMINGHAM (ST. CYPRIAN'S, HAY MILLS).—Morn.: Service, Field in D; Anthem, O praise God in His holiness (Clarke-Whitfeld). Even.: Service, Clarke-Whitfeld in E; Anthem, Praise the Lord (Garrett).

BIRMINGHAM (S. PHILIP'S CHURCH). — Morn.: Service, Best, Chant Service; Anthem, Come up hither; Holy, Holy, Holy (Spohr). Even. Service, Barnby in E; Anthem, O Lord, Thou hast searched me out, God is a Spirit (Bennett).

BRISTOL CATHEDRAL—Morn.: Service, Croft in A; Even.: Service, Elvey in A; Anthem, Blessing and glory (Bach).

CANTERBURY CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Smart in F; Anthem, in my Father's home (Calcott); Communion Service Smart in F. Even.: Service, Smart in F; Anthem, Holy, Holy, Holy, and Lord our Creator, "Elijah" (Mendelssohn).

CARLISLE CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Dykes in F; Introit, God is my helper (Stainer); Kyrie and Nicene Creed, Dykes in F. Even.: Service, Gadsby in C; Anthem, Glory to God (Haydn).

DUBLIN, ST. PATRICK'S (NATIONAL) CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Stainer in E flat; Holy Communion, Kyrie, Creed, and Sanctus, Stainer in E flat; Anthems, O Lord, Thou hast overthrown, and thanks be to God (Mendelssohn). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Smart in G; Anthems, Not unto us O Lord (Robinson), and The Wilderness (Wesley).

DONCASTER (PARISH CHURCH).—Morn.: Service, Tours in F; Anthem, O Lord, Thou hast searched (Bennett). Even.: Service, Tours in F; Anthem, God is a Spirit (Bennett).

DURHAM CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Wesley in F; Anthem, He watching over Israel (Mendelssohn); Introit, Blessed is the man (Wesley); Communion Service, Nares in F. Even.: Service, Wesley in F; Anthem, In humble faith (Garrett).

EXETER CATHEDRAL. — Morn.: Service, Boyce in A; Communion, Wesley and Travers in F. Even.: Service, Elvey in A; Anthem, O Lord Thou hast searched (Croft).

ELY CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Garrett in E; Anthem, In humble faith (Garrett). Even.: Service, Garrett in D; Kyrie and Credo, Garrett in D; Gloria, Richardson; Anthem, I will give thanks (Barnby).

GLOUCESTER CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Selby in A; Communion service, Wesley in E; Anthem, Turn Thee again (Attwood). Aft.: Service, Selby in A; Anthem, The Wilderness (Wesley).

LLANDAFF CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Garrett in D. Even.: Service, Garrett in D; Anthem, Blessed be the God and Father (Wesley).

LIVERPOOL CATHEDRAL.—Aft.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Hatton in E flat; Anthem, God is our hope and strength (Greene).

LEEDS PARISH CHURCH.—Morn.: Service, Boyce in A; Anthem, The Souls of Righteous (Nares); Kyrie and Creed, Dykes in F. Even.: Service, Calkin in B flat; Anthem, Wherewithal.

MANCHESTER CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Gounod in C; Holy Communion, Masse Solonnelle (Gounod); Anthem, Praise His awful name (Spohr). Aft.: Service, Gounod in C; Anthem, In the beginning (Haydn).

MANCHESTER (ST. BENEDICT'S). — Morn.: Service, Credo, and Gloria in excelsis, Williams in D; Kyrie, Sanctus, Benedictus, and Agnus Dei, Mozart in B flat. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis (Willing).

MANCHESTER (ST. JOHN BAPTIST, HULME).—Morn.: Service, Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, and Gloria in excelsis, Steggall in G; Benedictus, Thorne; Angus Dei, Miné. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis (Jordan).

ROCHESTER CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Barnby in E; Anthem, He watching over Israel (Mendelssohn). Even.: Service, Barnby in E; Anthem, I was in the Spirit (Blow).

SHEFFIELD PARISH CHURCH. — Morn.: Service, Kyrie Trimmell in F. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis; Anthem, I have surely built Thee an house (Trimmell).

SOUTHAMPTON (ST. MARY'S CHURCH).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Woodward in D; Introit, They that put their trust (Macfarren); Communion Service, Woodward in A; Offertory, Not every one (Barnby); Paternoster, Field. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Smith in B flat; Apostles' Creed, Harmonized Monotone.

SHERBORNE ABBEY.—Morn.: Service, Tozer in F. Even.: Service, Anthem, If ye love me (Monk).

WELLS CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Arnold in D; Introit, Drop down, ye heavens (Macfarren); Kyrie, Mendelssohn in G. Even.: Service, Arnold in D; Anthem, Thy word is a lantern (Purcell).

WORCESTER CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Stainer in E flat; Anthem, The Lord is in His holy temple (Thorne). Even.: Service, Stainer in E flat; Anthem, Blessed be the God and Father (Wesley).

APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. ALEX. G. HAYS (pupil of James Stimpson, Esq.), has been appointed Organist and Choirmaster of the Parish Church, Hay.

Mr. FREDERICK A. JEWSON has been elected by the Trustees Organist and Director of the Music to the Wesleyan Chapel, Great Queen Street.

Mr. JOHN DENHAM has been appointed Organist and Choirdirector of St. Osburg's Church, Coventry.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"Form in Vocal Music" and other articles are this week crowded out.

HENRY SPEECHLY,

CAMDEN ORGAN STEAM FACTORY,

KING'S ROAD, ST. PANCRAS, LONDON, N.W.

ESTABLISHED 1860.

Specifications and Estimates for Organs of any Magnitude, also for Reconstructions, Repairs, and Re-voicing.

Tunings contracted for, and Tuners sent to all parts of the Country at regular intervals or when required.

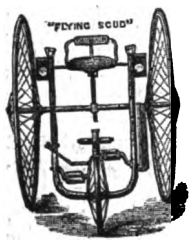
ORGANS ON HIRE WITH OPTION OF PURCHASE.

 Church, Chamber, and Chancel Organs for Sale or Hire; One or Two Manuals. Ready for immediate use. Easy Terms if required.

All Pipes and other Parts manufactured on the Premises.

Digitized by Google

BICYCLES AND TRICYCLES.
NEW AND SECOND-HAND.



"FLYING SCUD" and "ECLECTIC" TRICYCLES, are the Machines for 1883. Spoken of by the Daily News of January 30th as "Splendid machines." "NANCY LEE," Weldless Steel," and "NONSUCH" Steel Bicycles, from £5 5s. Any machine at maker's price for twelve or less equal monthly payments, or for £5 down and 20s. per month, or large discount and carriage paid for cash. Can be seen and tried before purchasing in our school (60 by 40, concrete floor, tuition free), adjoining Show-rooms, the largest in London, with over 400 new and second-hand on View. Machines bought, sold, cleaned, repaired (estimates given), warehoused, advanced upon and exchanged.

Illustrated Lists post free. Hours 9 till 7; Saturdays till 4.

Repairs of all kinds neatly, cheaply, and promptly executed. Cheapest house in the trade for fittings. Parts and sundries of all descriptions kept in stock.

Machines Let on Hire with Option of Purchase.

SOUTH LONDON MACHINISTS' COMPANY.

STEAM WORKS: Suffolk Works, Suffolk Grove, Great Suffolk Street, S.E. Show Rooms and Offices: 28 and 29, Suffolk Grove. Bicycle and Tricycle School: 18, Suffolk Grove. City Depot, Show Rooms, and School: Tower Chambers, Moorgate Street, E.C. (Nearly opposite Moorgate Street Station.) PERAMBULATORS and all Domestic Machines at lowest prices for cash, or on easy terms without extra charge. Lists free. State kind required.

ESTABLISHED 1872.

When writing please say where you saw this advertisement.

T. R. WILLIS,

Organ Builder, Metal & Wood Pipe Maker and Voicer,

TOWER ORGAN WORKS, 29, MINORIES, LONDON.

AN ORGAN KEPT FOR PRACTICE.

REBUILDING, TUNING, AND REPAIRING.

E & W. SNELL,

Manufacturers of Harmoniums, and Reed Pedal Organs,

KING STREET NORTH, CAMDEN TOWN, LONDON, N.W.

NOTE.—These are the only Instruments at which an Organist can really find himself "at home," as all Scales, Positions, and Measurements are adopted strictly in accordance with the Resolutions of the Council of the College of Organists. Estimates free.

MALEY, YOUNG & OLDKNOW,
ORGAN BUILDERS,

KING'S ROAD, ST. PANCRAS, LONDON, N.W.

Specifications, Estimates, and Designs for Church, Chamber, Concert, and all Descriptions of Organs.
Materials, Workmanship, and Tone guaranteed to be First Class.
Organs rebuilt to suit any position, enlarged, and Revoiced at very moderate charges.
Tunings in all parts of the Kingdom.

PROSPECTUS FREE ON APPLICATION.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts, excepting under exceptional circumstances.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit, at Three per cent. interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables, the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons, and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares, and Annuities.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

The Birkbeck Building Society's Annual Receipts exceed Five Millions.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with immediate Possession, and no Rent to Pay.—Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate Possession, either for Building or Gardening purposes.—Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

WITH 25 PER CENT DISCOUNT FOR CASH
OR 15/- PER MONTH.
SECOND HAND 10/0 Per Month
ON THE 3 YEARS' SYSTEM.
BORD'S PIANOS
PIANOS EXCHANGED.
LISTS FREE OF
C. STILES & Co. 42 SOUTHAMPTON ROW W.C.

CONSTANT LAURENT, HARMONIUM and ANGLO-ORGAN MANUFACTURER, Established in 1859 at 85, HIGH STREET, MARYLEBONE, LONDON, W.—Repairing and Tuning Executed Promptly. Price List on Application.—Intending Purchasers are respectfully solicited to inspect my Instruments and Factory.

EUSTACE INGRAM, Organ Builder,

Combines excellence of Tone and Workmanship with Economy.

INSPECTION INVITED.

WORKS:—Burnard Place, Eden Grove, Holloway, London, N.

PASTORALE from Corelli's CHRISTMAS CONCERTO. Arranged for Organ by E. H. TURPIN.—Price 4s. WEEKES & CO., 14, Hanover-street, W.

"HARMONY SIMPLIFIED."

A Concise Treatise on Harmony, Thorough Bass, and Modulation, for the Use of Students. By FARLEY NEWMAN. In paper cover, 1s. 6d. net; bound in cloth, 2s. 6d. net.

"THE ORGAN OLIO."

Edited by ARTHUR HENRY BROWN. A Collection of Short Pieces or the Organ or Harmonium, by various Composers. 2s. net.

London: B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster-row, E.C.

MUSIC SENT ON SALE OR RETURN on highly advantageous terms by B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster-row, London.

MUSIC of EVERY PUBLISHER supplied to Dealers, Teachers, and Schools. Having the largest varied Stock Europe. The terms, which are highly advantageous, sent on application

London: B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster-row.

ORGANS.—FACTS about ORGANS. Guide to the Purchase of an Organ; How to Order or Select one; What will it cost? By Dr. HINTON. Price 1s.—W. REEVES, 185, Fleet-street, London.

ASHDOWN EDITION
OF
STANDARD MUSICAL WORKS.
QUARTO SIZE.

PIANOFORTE.

		NETT. s. d.
1.	Chopin's Twenty-Seven Studies	2 6
2.	Stephen Heller's Album. Op. 138	1 6
3.	Henri Roubier's Twenty Melodies of Franz Schubert	2 0
4.	Stephen Heller's Twenty-Four Preludes. Op. 81	1 6
5.	Chopin's Eighteen Nocturnes	2 0
6.	Czerny's One Hundred and One Exercises	1 6
7.	Czerny's Etude de la Velocite	2 0
8.	Schumann's Phantasiestucke. Op. 12	1 6
9.	Schubert's Eight Impromptus	1 0
10.	Liszt's Soirees de Vienne	2 6
11.	Clementi's Six Sonatinas. Op. 36	1 0
12.	Stephen Heller's Thirty-Two Preludes. Op. 119 (a Mademoiselle Lilli)	1 6
13.	Rubinstein's Soirees a St. Petersburg. 6 Morceaux. Op. 44	1 0
14.	Chopin's Forty-Three Mazurkas	3 0
15.	Schumann's Album fur die Jugend. Op. 68	1 6

TO BE CONTINUED.

LONDON:

EDWIN ASHDOWN, Hanover-square.

Printed for the Proprietor by BOWDEN, HUDSON & Co., at 23, Red Lion Street, Holborn, London, W.C.; and Published by WILLIAM REEVES, at the Office, 185, Fleet Street, E.C. West End Agents:—WEEKES & CO., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W. Subscriptions and Advertisements are received either by the Publisher or West End Agents.—Communications for the EDITOR are to be forwarded to his private address, 6, Argyle Square, W.C.

SATURDAY, JUNE 2, 1883.—Entered at the General Post Office as a Newspaper.

Digitized by Google

THE MUSICAL STANDARD

A NEWSPAPER FOR MUSICIANS PROFESSIONAL AND AMATEUR

No. 985. VOL. XXIV. FOURTH SERIES. SATURDAY, JUNE 16, 1883. WEEKLY: PRICE 3D.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—Instituted 1822.
Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Under the immediate patronage of
Her Most Gracious Majesty the QUEEN and the Royal Family.
President—The Right Hon. the Earl of DUDLEY.
Principal—Professor Sir G. A. MACFARREN, Mus.D., Cantab.

The NEXT STUDENTS' ORCHESTRAL CONCERT, open to subscribers, members, associates, and licentiates, will take place at ST. JAMES'S HALL, on WEDNESDAY MORNING, JUNE 27th, at 2.30. Conductor, Mr. William Shakespeare.—Stalls, 5s.; balcony or area, 2s. 6d.; admission, 1s. Tickets may be obtained at the institution, and at St. James's Hall.

By order, JOHN GILL, Secretary,
Royal Academy of Music, Tenterden Street, Hanover Square, London.

MUSICAL ARTISTS' SOCIETY, President, His Grace the Duke of Beaufort, K.G.—The TWENTY-NINTH PERFORMANCE of NEW COMPOSITIONS will take place at the Royal Academy of Music on Saturday, June 23rd, 1883, when the Programme will include String Quartett in C, by F. Adler; Trio for Pianoforte, Violin, and Violoncello, in E flat, by Dr. Jacob Bradford; Pianoforte Compositions by Algernon Ashton, H. C. Bannister, and E. H. Thorne, and Vocal Music by Miss Prescott, Miss Moseley, C. J. Read, and Duncan Hume. Executants: Miss Von Hennig, Mr. Sinclair Dunn, Mr. Arthur Janatt, and Mr. W. J. Fletcher. Pianoforte: Miss Emily Lawrence, Miss Edith Goldsbro', Mr. H. C. Banister, Mr. Ashton, and Mr. Thorne. Violin. M. Victor Buziau and Herr Carl Schneider. Viola: Mr. W. H. Ham. Violoncello: Mr. Edmund Woolhouse.
Invitation Tickets for the Musical Artists' Society's twenty-ninth performance can be obtained of the Hon. Sec., Dr. BRADFORD, South London Musical Training College, 247, Lewisham High Road, S.E.

MR. W. S. HOYTE will give a PIANOFORTE RECITAL at 16, Grosvenor Street, Grosvenor Square (by kind permission of Messrs. Collard), on Wednesday afternoon, June 27th. Vocalists: Miss Clara Samuell, Madame Edith Wynne, and Mr. Harper Kearton. Violin: M. Victor Buziau. The programme will consist of selections from the works of Schumann, Bennett, Chopin, Rubinstein, Scharwenka, &c.—Tickets, 10s. 6d.; or Family Ticket to admit three, one guinea, to be obtained of STANLEY LUCAS, CHAPPELLS, and of Mr. W. S. HOYTE, 68, Boundary Road, N.W.

MR. CHAS. GARDNER'S 18th ANNUAL MATINEE MUSICALE, at the Prince's Hall, on Monday, June 18th. Artists: Miss Mary Davies, Mlle. Etty, Miss Marian McKenzie, Miss Florence May; Messrs. Arthur Thompson, W. H. Cummings, Egerton, Maycock, Albert, C. E. Stephens, Deacon, Randegger, and Mr. Charles Gardner. Stalls, half-a-guinea; to admit three, one guinea, of Stanley Lucas, Weber, and Co., and of Mr. Chas. Gardner, 3, Chilworth Street, Westbourne Terrace.

Collection of Italian Violins of the Late JOSEPH S. HULSE, Esq., of Ashton-on-Mersey, Cheshire.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will sell by AUCTION, at their House, 47, LEICESTER SQUARE, W.C., on Monday, June 25th, at 10 minutes past 1 o'clock, precisely, the Valuable Collection of about Sixty Italian Violins formed by the late JOSEPH T. HULSE, Esq., of Ashton-on-Mersey, Cheshire, comprising examples by Stradiuarius, Guarnerius, Amati, Bergozzi, &c. Catalogues on Receipt of 2 Stamps.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will sell by AUCTION, at their House, 47, LEICESTER SQUARE, W.C., on Tuesday, June 26th, at 10 minutes past 1 o'clock, precisely, a Large Assemblage of Musical Instruments, comprising Pianofortes, Harmoniums, Harps, Violins, Violoncellos, Wind Instruments, &c., from various Sources, Catalogues on Receipt of 2 Stamps.

The Orchestral and General Library of Music of the late WILLIAM LAIDLAW, Esq., of Liverpool.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, 47, LEICESTER SQUARE, W.C., on Wednesday, June 27th, at 10 minutes past 1 o'clock precisely, the very Extensive Orchestral and General Library of Music of the late WILLIAM LAIDLAW, Esq., of Liverpool (by order of the Executors).

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

TUESDAY, July 3rd, at 8, F. J. SAWYER, Mus.Bac., F.C.O., will read a Paper.—TUESDAY and WEDNESDAY, July 10th and 11th, Examination for Associateship.—THURSDAY, July 12th, Examination for Fellowship.—TUESDAY, July 17th, at 8, Annual General Meeting.
The above Meeting will be held at the NEUMEYER HALL, Hart Street, Bloomsbury.

E. H. TURPIN,
Hon. Secretary.
95, Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury, W.C.

MAKERS AND REPAIRERS.
GEORGE WITHERS & CO.
(Late of Coventry Street),
WHOLESALE IMPORTERS OF
MUSICAL STRINGS,
From Rome, Padua, and Naples.
A FINE COLLECTION OF ITALIAN INSTRUMENTS.
Bows, Cases, Music Stands, &c. See Price Lists.
51, ST. MARTIN'S LANE, LONDON.

HELE & COMPANY,
ORGAN BUILDERS,
WYNDHAM STREET, PLYMOUTH.
London Agency: Mr. W. H. HELE, 59, Gresham St., E.C.

Organs of any magnitude contracted for. Professional attendance when desired.

Extract from testimony by E. H. Turpin, Esq., of College of Organists, referring to organ at St. John's Church, Waterloo Road, S.E.:—
"To Messrs. Hele and Co. very high praise is due for the judgment and skill with which they have accomplished the rebuilding of the instrument. All the foundation work I noticed to be round, even, and admirably voiced. The "chorus" struck me as being well balanced and decisive, without being instrusive or too pronounced above the 8-feet work. The reeds are of very high quality, at once rich and characteristic in tone. The solo registers I found to be after their several types—delicate and finished in quality of tone and in their voicing. The mechanism throughout a trying night's work never failed me, and it is everywhere true, reliable, and admirable. My impressions were so pleasant, that I feel it is a duty to express an unqualified approval of the labours of the very able organ builders."

THE ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER of Cirencester Abbey desires RE-ENGAGEMENT. 14 years' Cathedral experience.—Address as above.

WAGNER'S "PERSIFAL."—Twelve Performances of the late RICHARD WAGNER'S "PERSIFAL," will be given at BAYREUTH, on alternate days, from July 8th.—Travelling Tickets may be had from THOMAS COOK & SON, Ludgate Circus; or 35, Piccadilly, where Plans of the Seats may be seen.

FIRST AND SECOND GRADES JUST PUBLISHED.
PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH.
Under the Sanction and Approval of the Rev. Sir FREDERICK A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart., M.A., Mus.Doc. Oxford, and of Sir G. A. MACFARREN, Mus.Doc., Cambridge.

THE MUSICIAN.

A GUIDE FOR PIANOFORTE STUDENTS.
Helps towards the Better Understanding and Enjoyment of Beautiful Music.
By RIDLEY PRENTICE.

"We are far from suggesting that there is any royal road for acquiring technical knowledge, but we are quite certain that Mr. Ridley Prentice's road is in every way the pleasantest that has yet been laid before any pianoforte student. If anyone will work through this first grade conscientiously, by the time he has reached the end of it he will have mastered many difficulties in harmony and musical form which he might have hitherto thought were almost insurmountable. The work supplies a deficiency in musical literature which has long been felt; and we earnestly recommend the study of it to all those who wish to become intelligent pianoforte players."—Saturday Review.
"A knowledge of form is imparted in simple and pleasant language. This is the right sort of instruction book, for it teaches people to think and study for themselves. We heartily commend it to all who desire to understand, satisfactorily interpret, and enjoy beautiful music."—Academy.

SECOND EDITION READY.
THE CHILD'S PIANOFORTE BOOK; a First Year's Course of the Piano, by H. K. MOORE, Mus.B., B.A., illustrated, 4to, 3s. 6d.
W. SWAN SONNENSCHEIN & CO., Paternoster Row;
And all Book and Music Sellers.

Digitized by Google

THE VOICE

MUSICALLY AND MEDICALLY CONSIDERED.

BY

ARMAND SEMPLE, B.A., M.B., Cantab., M.R.C.P., Lond.,

Physician to the Royal Society of Musicians.

(Continued from page 351.)

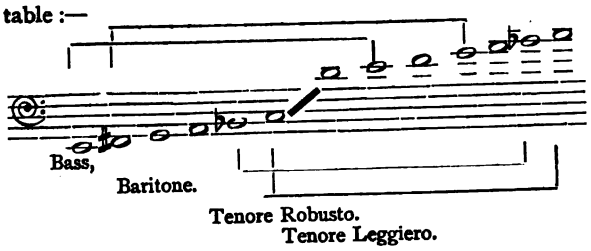
The full extent of male voices is shown in the following table :—

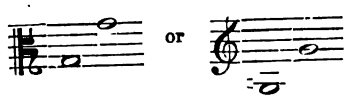


FEMALE VOICES.

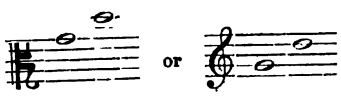
THE CONTRALTO VOICE.

Quality.—This voice is powerful, and not very flexible; and its musical construction being strong, the acute sounds are usually harsh, or weak, and deficient in flexibility. It is exceedingly difficult to render it full and of equal power throughout the whole of its compass.

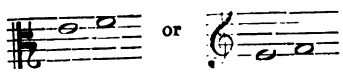
Its quality varies in strength and extent according to the construction of the organ. It is usually strong from Sol (G) to Sol (G)



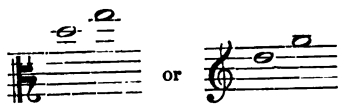
occasionally full from Sol (G) to Re (D)



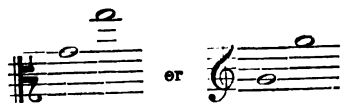
but frequently weak on Mi (E), and Fa (F)



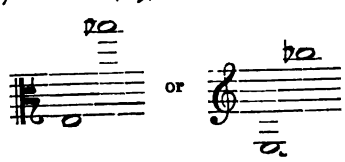
It is very uncommon to meet with a contralto voice which is not shrill, harsh, or indistinct, from Re (D) to Sol (G)



It sometimes happens that it is weak even from Sol (G) to Sol (G)

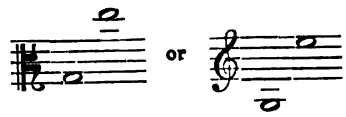


Extent.—This is very great when the voice has been judiciously trained, since the compass may then reach from Mi (E) to Si flat (B♭)



Cultivation. — Very great care is required in developing the contralto voice, since by nature it is not endowed with much flexibility, and if the extremes be at all forced, the quality rapidly degenerates, the muscles becoming weak, and the power of vibration is destroyed.

At first this voice should be limited from Sol (G) to Mi (E)



It is a matter of extreme difficulty to render the contralto voice smooth and equal, since its quality is indistinct, hard, or hollow; when, however, the power of modulation within the above limits has been acquired, it may be extended gradually to its high and low extremes.

The following table shows the compass of the Contralto voice :—

(To be continued.)

PRESENTATION TO MR. W. R. ATKINS.

A meeting of the Cork Orchestral Union was held on June 7th, at the Mayor's Office, for the purpose of presenting a diploma, conferred by the Academy of the Royal Institute of Music in Florence on Mr. William Ringrose Atkins, conductor of the Cork Orchestral Union. The Mayor presided.

The Mayor said that he received a letter from the Marquis of Torrigiani, dated the 22nd of May, which was formally acknowledged by him. Mr. Atkins happened to be in London when he received that letter, and so he was unable to present the diploma which he had received from the Academy of the Royal Institute of Music in Florence. He communicated with Mr. Atkins, and from documents he had received from the Marquis, and papers that had come to his hand, he thought the occasion was one that demanded of anyone in his position a formal and a public presentation to Mr. Atkins. The documents which he would read would prove that this was merit of very high distinction, and had been conferred on some of the most distinguished men in Germany and Italy. He then read the following communication :—

"From the Marquis of Torrigiani, President of the Academy of the Royal Institute of Music, Florence, to the Right Worshipful the Mayor of Cork.

"Florence, 22nd May, 1883.

"I beg, illustrious Sir, that you be kind enough to remit the enclosed letter, with a diploma and a pamphlet that will reach you with the same, to Mr. Wm. Ringrose Atkins, Director of the Orchestral Society of Cork, with the distinguished consideration. I am, etc.

"TORRIGIANI, Marquis, President."

"Letter from the Marquis Torrigiani, to Mr. Wm. Ringrose Atkins :—

"Florence, May 22nd, '83.

"At the meeting of the Musical Academy of this Institute, held on the 6th inst., you, Sir, were elected Honorary Academician. In sending the accompanying diploma, it gives me great pleasure to congratulate you on this work of esteem deservedly offered to you by our Academy, while I must congratulate the Academy as well on the acquisition it has gained in having admitted you amongst its members. I am, etc.,

"TORRIGIANI, Marquis, President."

He (the Mayor) was sure they all joined in the Marquis's congratulations to Mr. Atkins on this distinguished compliment which had been paid to him. It was not only that they congratulated him personally, but also with his connection with the musical people of Cork, and they congratulated him that the City of Cork through one of her sons had been complimented in this manner. He was sure all his friends in Cork—and they were all interested more or less in the advancement of music—felt proud in seeing Mr. Atkins' name connected with that distinguished Institute. The Mayor then handed the diploma to Mr. Atkins.

Mr. Atkins said he felt very much obliged to the Mayor for having summoned that meeting, and for the kind manner in which he had spoken about him.

Digitized by Google

Musical Intelligence.

CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS.

PROGRAMME.

Symphony No. 8, in B minor (Unfinished).... Allegro moderato—Andante con moto.	Schubert.
Recit. and Aria, "Leise, Leise" ("Der Freischütz") ..... Madame Leideritz.	Weber.
Romance, "When the Orb of Day" ("Euryanthe") ..... Mr. Edward Lloyd.	Weber.
Selection from "Colomba"	A. C. Mackenzie.
Prelude to the First Act.—Andante moderato e grave.
Vocero, "Gentle dove, thy voice is sad." Madame Valleria.
Ballet Airs and Rustic March
Allegretto grazioso in B flat, Saltarello in G minor.
Andantino in G major, Rustic March in E flat.
Old Corsican Ballad, "So he thought of his love." Miss Annie Marriott.
Duet, "Oh, Orso, see me here." Madame Valleria and Mr. Barton McGuckin.
Capriccio Brilliant for Pianoforte and Orchestra (Op. 22.) ..... Mdlle. Clotilde Kleeberg.	Mendelssohn.
Recit. and Air, "O Vision entrancing" ("Esmeralda") ..... Mr. Barton McGuckin.	A. Goring Thomas.
Prelude to "Parsifal"	Wagner.
Solos for Pianoforte—
Nocturne in E flat.....	Field.
Valse in A flat ..... Mdlle. Clotilde Kleeberg.	Chopin.
Overture, "Tannhäuser"	Wagner.

Conductor .. .. AUGUST MANNS.

The above attractive programme was, without exception, most successfully performed, and gave unfeigned pleasure to those who assembled on the occassion of Mr. Manns's annual benefit. Of Schubert's Unfinished B minor Symphony, it is scarcely needful to say anything, as it is so often performed and so well known; but of the composer himself much might still be written in admiration of his unbounded love for his profession, as shown by his incessant labour, in spite of many difficulties and disappointments. The following beautiful quotation from the preface to Coleridge's poems strikes me as being peculiarly applicable to Schubert, and indeed with perfect truth might have formed the preface to his musical works: "I expect neither profit nor fame from my writings, and I consider myself as having been amply repaid without either. My work has been to me its own exceeding great reward; it has soothed my afflictions; it has multiplied and refined my enjoyments; it has endeared solitude; and it has given me the habit of wishing to discover the good and the beautiful in all that meets and surrounds me."

Notwithstanding the disadvantage of performing extracts from an opera, the selections from Mr. Mackenzie's "Colomba" were listened to with admiration, and produced a most favourable impression. Mdme. Valleria's singing of the Vocero, "Gentle dove," was extremely charming, and her fine voice was again heard to advantage with Mr. McGuckin in the duet "Oh, Orso." Both the prelude to the first act and the ballet music were superbly played.

Mendelssohn's Capriccio in B seldom finds a better interpreter than Mdlle. Clotilde Kleeberg, who appeared here for the first time. Although young in years, she has an intelligent appreciation of the requirements of the respective composers whose music she so judiciously selected for her début, and this, combined with a most perfect technique, insured for her an undoubted success.

I must not forget to mention that Mdme. Leideritz and Mr. E. Lloyd appeared, in addition to the vocalists already mentioned. Of the latter, who is an old friend here, one need only say that he was in fine voice, and never sang better; and of the lady, who is new to us, it is my pleasing duty to say, that although at first suffering slightly from nervousness, she made a very favourable impression.

The Saturday concerts will be resumed in October.

R. S.

Miss Alma Sanders recently gave a concert of excellent quality at 26, Harcourt Terrace, Redcliffe Square. The programme included two movements from a musicianly pianoforte of her own composition.

RICHTER CONCERTS.

PROGRAMME.

Overture, "Die Tragische"	Brahms.
"Siegfried Idyll"	Wagner.
Concerto, No. 2, in G minor, for Pianoforte and Orchestra ..... Pianoforte, Madame Stepanoff.	Saint-Saëns.
Introduction to Act III. of "Die Meistersinger."...	Wagner.
Slavonic Rhapsody, No. 2. ..... (First performance in England.)	Dvorak.
Symphony, No. 4, in B flat	Beethoven.

The "Tragic" overture was rather apathetically received. The subjects themselves awaken no interest; and their treatment, though elaborate, is tedious; for few of us are philanthropic enough to care about the doings and the fate of those who fail to appeal in some degree to our sympathies. Brahms would have a better chance of satisfying others if he were not so pre-eminently satisfied with himself. He seems to have completely lost out of his nature the desire to please—a desire that is born in every true artist, and that dies only with his death.

M. Saint-Saëns's Concerto is not of a character to bring out the higher qualities of a pianist; it is, therefore, impossible to say more at present about Mdme. Stepanoff's playing than that she has a remarkably firm, brilliant, clear touch, and that her execution is faultless. The work is splendidly written for the solo instrument, and the orchestration shows an abundance of tact, savoir faire, and a certain amount of thought. But beyond this, Charity herself could find nothing to praise. The analysis given (from a new Philharmonic programme and signed "H. W.") spends much time in endeavouring to manufacture an excuse for M. Saint-Saëns, because he has made his middle movement a scherzo, instead of the usual adagio. The excuses offered may be satisfactory; but an unanswerable one might have been added—M. Saint-Saëns could not write a slow movement such as we have been taught to look for in a concerto if he tried. The musician who could perform a Beethoven Sonata with a lack of appreciation that would not have been creditable to a school-girl of ordinary intelligence (and in such a manner I have heard him play the "Waldstein"), is scarcely the man to whom we should look for the slow movement to succeed those contained in the concertos of the classical masters. One is at least satisfied to accept a scherzo in place of the attempt, especially as the scherzo is the most agreeable movement of the three. The first does not seem to aim at anything, and certainly does not attain it; while in the finale there is more noise than effect, and more effect than cause. It is to be regretted that so flimsy an affair should have introduced us to a pianist whose fame preceded her.

"C. A. B." provides a careful analysis of Dvorak's Rhapsody. He begins by telling us what a "Rhapsody," as applied to music, is:—"The word, which is strictly classical in its derivation, signifies the stringing together of verses or tunes. A work of this kind, which may be defined as an emanation from the variation form, may be briefly described as consisting of a series of movements, or rather changes of tempo, fused into one single and continuous movement, the leading subjects of one or the other of which, by a process of metamorphosis or thematic development, are made to serve as primary or secondary subjects in the others, in company with more or less matter of an incidental and independent character introduced transitionally."

I quote the passage at length because it would be impossible to explain better in so few words what a "Rhapsody" is. Its present perfected form (though, like all that is beautiful, it has been of gradual growth), we owe to Liszt.

Naturally, a "Slavonic" Rhapsody cannot carry away the hearer in the same way as a "Hungarian" Rhapsody does; because it does not deal with the music of a people, full of poetry, unbound by the laws of civilization. But this rhapsody left the impression on me of being too studied—not sufficiently extravagant. The melodies used are not of a striking or a particularly pleasing character; and the treatment, though clever and in its dissecting tendency—i.e., the tendency to make entire phrases and new themes out of two or three notes of the principal melodies—highly suggestive of Liszt, yet seemed to lack that inspiration and spontaneousness which alone can give life to such a work. A second hearing might, however, remove this impression: for Dvorak is so eminently agreeable a writer, and there is so much that is pleasant in this rhapsody, that any disparaging remarks, however well considered, seem to savour of ingratitude.

Digitized by Google

The two Wagner numbers and the Symphony met with the usual reception the works of Wagner and Beethoven enjoy at these concerts: they were applauded with an enthusiasm and persistency which in the case of the "Meistersinger" Prelude amounted to a demand for a repetition. Nothing could exceed the calm, contemplative peace of the "Siegfried Idyll," so perfectly reproduced in every beautiful detail. This, the most lyric of Wagner's writings, is the strongest proof he has left us that he could, when he chose, write without the fire of dramatic action to inspire him.

B. F. WYATT-SMITH.

M. VLADIMIR DE PACHMANN'S THIRD RECITAL.

M. de Pachmann is the crowning success of the season, and the undoubted favourite, among many favoured ones, of musical London. He is thoroughly worthy of the distinction; for the most lavish praises of him that we constantly hear are but poor and cold reflections of the admiration that he awakens. Two of the chief causes of his popularity are, however, not usually pointed out; these are, his excessive and unaffected modesty, and his child-like enjoyment of the passing moment, without apparently a thought or care, beyond the endeavour to give, not so much a perfect, as an enjoyable rendering of the work in hand. This simple wish, to be pleased and give pleasure, has, in the rare cases when it outlives childhood, a fascination peculiarly its own. In M. De Pachmann, it distinguishes him from Von Bülow, whose manner offended some of the critics, because he seemed to say, "Listen to the beauties that I will reveal to you in this work"; it distinguishes him in a more marked degree from Rubinstein, who, with his followers, seems to imagine that his extraordinary power creates rather than reveals the hidden poetry; for M. de Pachmann seems to say, "This is beautiful; let us hear it and enjoy it together!" His manner thus tends to establish an altogether unusual sympathy between himself and his audience, a sympathy that deepens into admiration with closer acquaintance.

His programme, last Saturday, was of varied interest.

Toccata and Fugue	Bach—Tausig.
Sonata (Op. 101)	Beethoven.
Novellette, (No. 4)	Schumann.
Variations, (Op. 104, No. 2) (First time in England.)	Rubinstein.
"Danklied nach Stürm"	Henselt.
Etude en forme de Valse	Saint-Saëns.
Nocturne, (Op. 27)	Chopin.
Mazurka, (Op. 33, No. 1)	"
Valse, (Op. 64, No. 1)	"
5 Etudes Op. 10, Nos. 3 and 4, Op. 25, Nos. 2, 6, and 8.	"
Polonaise, No. 8	"

The Chopin numbers, as usual, called forth the loudest expressions of approval; and the valse was repeated, as well as two of the most fatiguing études.

Rubinstein's Variations are founded on a sufficiently pleasing melody; but as its attraction lies in agreeable though rather cloying harmonies, and these harmonies are repeated in most of the variations, the interest rather diminishes than increases as the work proceeds.

Schumann's Novelette, No. 4, was included by M. de Pachmann in the programme of his first recital here, last year. It is indeed charming in his hands, though it would be difficult for a less gifted performer not to reveal some of its simple melodic beauty.

Henselt is, as M. de Pachmann reveals him, almost as individual and poetic as Chopin himself, though, of course, moving in a smaller circle.

M. de Pachmann's innate modesty prevented him from accepting the uproarious applause that greeted him when he had reached the end of his programme, as a natural tribute to his genius—a well earned ovation—but he considered it simply a request for more; so, with the good nature that those who know him say is characteristic of him, he re-seated himself at the piano, and played one more piece to an audience who were preparing to leave, but who gladly, one and all, stayed a few minutes more to hear the last notes from the pianist whom, a musician remarked, he "could listen to for ever!"

B. F. WYATT-SMITH.

The blind pupils of the Royal Normal College, the institution so admirably directed by Dr. E. J. Campbell, gave a morning concert at Grosvenor House on June 9th.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

"La Gioconda" was repeated on Saturday and Tuesday. Madame Durand firmly maintains her position. This opera of Signor Ponchielli will certainly constitute a regular number of the repertoire.

"L'Etoile du Nord" at last was produced on Monday night, with Madame Sembrich as Caterina; the Hungarian prima donna seemed to be very nervous, but she warmed up to the business of the scene in the Camp, and in the "mad" business of the last Act, already painfully overdone in "Lucia di Lammermoor" and other operas, a fair climax was attained. A débutante, Mdlle. Gini, who represented Prascovia, can hardly be reported as the conquérante of operatic spoils. M. Gailhard represented the part of Peter the "Great" (anything but "great") with dignity.

The Directors announce an extra performance of "Carmen" to-day at 2 o'clock, with Madame Pauline Lucca as the Gipsy. "Lohengrin" was done last week, with Mr. Maas in the title part; he was a success. Mdme. Albani is thought to have been too demonstrative as Elsa.

A. M.

MR. BONAWITZ'S CONCERTS.

Mr. J. B. Bonawitz held a sort of historical pianoforte recital at the Bluthner Rooms, Kensington Gardens Square, on Tuesday evening, when he played for two hours a long and interesting list of pieces with wonted energy and remarkable skill in respect of difficult executancy. The selections included many notable works of what Mr. A. G. Chappell calls "various masters."

Full and free drafts were made upon texts of Frohberger, Muffat, Couperin, Rameau, Scarlatti, Bach, Handel, Mozart, Haydn, Mendelssohn, Beethoven, Schubert, Schumann, and Chopin. The list is worthy of record.

Andante and Canon	Frohberger.
Gigue	Muffat.
Re Reveil—Matin	Couperin.
Le Tambourin	Rameau.
Allegro in G minor	Scarlatti.
Fuga in D major	Bach.
Suite in G minor	Handel.
Fantasia in D minor	Mozart.
Sonata, Op. 27. (No. 2)	Beethoven.
Impromptu in B flat major	Schubert.
Scherzo a Capriccio	Mendelssohn.
Novellette (No. 8)	Schumann.
Nocturne in D flat major Mazurka in F minor Scherzo in B flat	Chopin.
Wedding March, from Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream"	Lisst.

Miss Helen Akroyd sang some solos.

THE OOLOGNE CHOIR OF MEN'S VOICES.

The Cologne Choir, known (Germanicè) as the Kölner-Männer-Gesang-Verein," is again in our midst, and held the first of eight serial concerts last Monday afternoon, at St. James's Hall. The ninety-two members of the choir are all amateurs, and their laudable purpose is the erection and establishment of an "Anglican Church" in their great cathedral city. The society was formed in 1842 by a number of musical enthusiasts in Cologne, anxious not only to promote the interests of high art, but to aid charitable institutions—it is to be hoped only such as are really worthy of support, for the abuses of benevolent contributions in England are known to be enormous and abominable.

The Choir, on Monday and Tuesday, sang with excellent effect and ensemble. The scheme of Monday included Kreutzer's "Sabbath Song" (erroneously so entitled, seeing that the "Sabbath" to Christians is a dies non, or common-place "Saturday"); Mendelssohn's "Wasserfahrt"; Max Bruch's "Vom Rhein"; Schubert's "Gondolier;" the old Dutch song, founded on a Rembrandt etching, "Homm, O Homm, holdes Kindahen"; and "Corinthian Courtship," whereof the very "low" or patois German has been rendered into equally poor "Lowland Scotch" by F. Corder. Violin solos by M. Olive Musin, accompanied on the pianoforte by Mr. W. Ganz, agreeably relieved the choruses. M. Musin introduced a Romance in in G, by M. De Lange (first time in England).

These Cologne choralists command the notice of the British public. They ought to be heard, by "practitioners" especially, at this time, when the Handel Festival at the Crystal Palace is about to challenge the criticism of the wide, wide world.

A. M.

Digitized by Google

READING ORPHEUS SOCIETY.

The first open meeting of the Reading Orpheus Society was held, by invitation, in the New Town Hall, on Monday evening, and was attended by a large and fashionable company, including many of the clergy and principal inhabitants of the town. The society, which includes about thirty-five adult members, was established last autumn for the purpose of practising glees, part-songs, and choruses for male voices only, the members mostly belonging to Church choirs in the town. Mr. F. J. Read, Mus.Bac., organist of Christ Church, is the director. On this occasion a small band, led by Mr. Rippon, took part, and played an overture and symphony, besides accompanying the last chorus. Mr. Read was conductor, and Mr. C. H. H. Sippel (organist of St. Lawrence's), accompanied the songs. The programme included :—

Overture, "Italiana in Algieri"	Rossini.
Part-song, "Summer Eve"	Hatton.
Glee, "Queen of the Valley"	Callcott.
Pianoforte solo, "Invitation pour la Valse"	Weber.
Part-song, "Tar's Song"	Hatton.
Introduction and Allegro "Symphony in D"	Haydn.
Part-song, "The Lifeboat"	Hatton.
Glee, "Peace" (a fable)	Bridge.
Quartet, "By Celia's Arbour"	Horsley.
Solo and chorus, "My task is ended"	Balfe.

Miss Margaret Hoare is an accomplished vocalist, and made a very pleasing impression upon her audience, eliciting hearty applause by her excellent rendering of the two songs, the last being re-demanded. Miss Stokes sang very nicely, and was enthusiastically applauded—Milton Welling's song, "Tell me again," being encored. Of the part-singing of the Orpheus Society, one can scarcely speak too highly. The several numbers were given with excellent precision, well in tune, and with a remarkable degree of expression, and effect of light and shade. At the close of the programme Dr. Wells explained the objects of the society, and said they hoped next season to give two or three subscription concerts.

VARIOUS CONCERTS.

Signor Ria held a matinée on June 7th at the Marlborough Rooms. He sang Campana's Romance, "Mi credena in Paradiso" (by desire); also Castaldon's "Musica Proibita"; and a duet of Donizetti with Signor Susini. A cordial reception greeted this favourite tenor vocalist. Miss José Sherrington, Mdme. Rose Hersee, and other artists appeared; Mdme. Hersee chose the "Dove" song from "Colomba," and illustrated it. Signor Tito Mattei evoked much applause for his grand Fantasia on "I Puritani," and his new "Saltarello." Herr Oberthür's harp solo on "Marta" was another good hit.

Mrs. Edmund A. Netherclift held a concert on the afternoon of May 31st at Willis's Rooms. This lady sang, with taste and feeling, Vaccaj's air, "Ah, se tu dormi," and was much applauded. A ladies' chorus sang Romer's "Golden Summer," and Professor G. H. Macfarren's "Mermaid." Miss Santley, Miss Wakefield, and Mr. L. Thomas sang choice pieces, and Miss Madalena Cronin, whose successful concert was noticed a fortnight ago, played, in her always admirable style, Chopin's "Andante Spinato and Polonaise," Op. 22, and Rubinstein's Valse, "Le Bal." Mr. R. Blagrove favoured the audience with a solo on the concertina (Regondi's "La Sonnambula"), but the instrument itself is simply an infliction to "ears polite."

Mdlle. Clotilde Kleeberg held a pianoforte recital at the Marlborough Rooms, Regent Street, on the afternoon of June 4th, and will hold a second on Thursday, June 21st. Mdlle. Kleeberg is an excellent artist, of strictly classical style, and a refined as well as an emphatic executant. The scheme comprised Beethoven's Sonata in C sharp minor; five pieces of Chopin (inclusive of the "Study" in G flat), a Fugue of J. S. Bach, and several fugitive pieces by "Russian" Field (the Nocturne in E flat), Schubert, S. Heller, Mendelssohn, Schumann, Henselt, Hiller, and T. Dubois.

Miss Josephine Agabeg held her annual concert at St. George's Hall on Thursday evening, June 7th. Miss Agabeg played Beethoven's Sonata in A flat, Op. 26; Chopin's Noturne in C minor; and Schumann's "Etudes Symphoniques," in C sharp minor, for which she was much applauded, and received a bouquet. Miss Agabeg is recognized as a pianist of no small pretensions. Miss Mackenzie won a bis for Mr. W. Ganz's song "Forget me not." Mr. O. Musin played violin solos, and assisted Miss Agabeg and M. Gustave Libotton in an able interpretation of Schubert's Pianoforte Trio in E flat. Mr. Ganz conducted the concert, and played, with Miss Agabeg, Mendelssohn's "Allegro Brillante" in A, for two pianofortes.

At Mr. F. Von Zastrow's "drawing-room concert" on June 8th, Miss Mabel Bourne played Chopin's Scherzo in B minor, and Weber's Polonaise in E with éclat. Herr Polonaski entertained a select audience with violin solos by Schumann and Brahms, modestly introducing his own "Chanson du Nord," which ought to be in the publisher's hands if still in MS. Miss Bourne and Herr Polonaski played together a well-known Sonata of Handel in A major.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

The pupils' annual concert in connection with the Royal Irish Academy of Music was held on the 8th inst., in the large concert hall of the Royal University Buildings. If any evidence were wanted of the interest taken by the public in this institution, certainly the attendance at this concert would have been evidence abundant, not a vacant seat being visible in the building. The orchestra was remarkably well furnished; and viewed from the centre of the hall, produced a very elegant effect—the ladies appearing all in uniform costume (white dress and green sash). The programme opened with a Largo, by Handel for violins, organ, and piano, which was very creditably performed; and a Romanza from "L'Ombra," by Flotow, received a very good interpretation at the hands of Mrs. MacMullen. A special interest is always felt in the piano pupils, for it stands unsurpassed as a school of pianoforte playing. The performance of the pieces on this season's programme will, I am sure, tend to increase its high repute. The items were as follows :—"La Campanella" (Taubert), Miss Stirling; Scherzo in B flat minor (Chopin), Miss Krügger; "D'Après la Tarentelle" (Liszt), Miss Douglas; and Etude, in F sharp (Sgambato), Miss Walker. Miss Krügger's performance displayed all the qualifications of an excellent pianist, and the careful and beautifully finished manner in which she rendered her selection elicited very hearty applause. The other ladies were equally successful in their performances, and must have quite pleased the estimable professors of the Academy to whom this branch of their musical training is entrusted. I should not forget to mention that Miss Douglas, in addition, played an organ Prelude and Fugue by Hesse, and acquitted herself with great credit. Mr. Cox, who, by the way, possesses a nice baritone voice, which showed every sign of careful training, rendered "Awake, thou golden blush of morn," by Cushman, in a very superior style; Mr. Webb sang the aria, "No more sorrow languish," by Handel, but did not come up to my expectation. He has, nevertheless, a sweet tenor voice, though by no means powerful, and I doubt not that, with careful study, and a more judicious selection of a song, I shall have the pleasure of noticing him more favourably at the next Academy concert. "Thou fair and happy boy" (Hiller), was tunefully rendered by Miss Harris; and the recit. and aria, "Non paventar ah! infelice," from Mozart's "Flauto Magico," was undertaken by Miss Egerton. Truly it recalled the days of Italian opera, at the Old Royal, now a mass of ruins, and by a strange coincidence it was Miss Egerton's father, then stage manager, who perished in the flames in his endeavours to stay the action of the fire. To return to Miss Egerton, her voice is one of great flexibility; and her thoroughly artistic rendering of the above called forth an encore, which could not be denied. A pretty duet by Schumann, "La Villanelle," was done full justice to by Miss Goulding, and Miss Lynch; and a quartet by Wallace, "Though the world," was an equally meritorious production; the soprano part was sustained by Miss Kearne, with her usual ability. Miss O'Hart, who possesses a sweet contralto, nicely cultivated, rendered her part with a grace and judgment that makes one regret her name did not appear on the programme for a solo. Messrs. Marks and O'Farrel contributed their parts in good style. A violin solo, "Fantaisie," by Leonard, was capitally played by Mr. Richardson, and very warmly applauded; and a ladies' violin class gave a very successful rendering of a composition for strings by Steibelt, "Pezzo D'Assieme." "Benedizione dei Pugnali" (Meyerbeer), was well rendered by Messrs. Marks, O'Farrel, Whelan, and Foy, with chorus and orchestra; chorus and air, "Deh placatevi con me," by Glück, was very artistically got through by Miss Windsor, who was well supported by the chorus. The piece of the evening however, was the motet, "Gallia," by Gounod, which was composed for the opening of the International Exhibition, London, 1871; but this is the first time it has been performed in Dublin. The Dublin musical public are therefore highly grateful to the Academy for bringing forward what to the major portion was entirely new. It is written for soprano solo, chorus and orchestra, and, it must be said, received an excellent rendering upon this occasion. Miss Keane gave her music in a most artistic manner, and shewed what a careful study she had made of her part. The chorus performed its work in excellent style, and shewed a thorough knowledge and appreciation of the beautiful work. The orchestra was quite up to the requirements of the composition, and acquitted itself in a praiseworthy manner. The conductor, Signor Bozelli, is to be congratulated on the general success of the concert, a success he has been labouring so assiduously to bring about. T. J. B.

Digitized by Google

OXFORD.—The entertainments belonging to commemoration time are always more or less musical. A concert was given at Jesus College on June 6th. The Pembroke Musical Society gave a concert on June 7th in their Hall. Haydn's "Seasons" formed the programme of the Philharmonic Society's concert in the Sheldonian Theatre, on June 11th. Magdalen College gave a concert on June 13th. All these performances have displayed much artistic excellence.

EDINBURGH.—Prejudice dies hard. The instrumental music question, supposed to have been settled at the Assembly of the Free Church, is to be immediately revived. At a meeting of the minority opposed to the organ in church, it was resolved to form a Purity of Worship Defence Association, with branches throughout the country, and to adopt measures with a view to secure the reversal of what is described as the unsound decision of the General Assembly. That the cause of music will ultimately triumph, no sensible person will question, with all respect to worn out yet no doubt honest prejudices.

ST. MARY'S NEWINGTON CHORAL SOCIETY.—On Tuesday evening, June 12th, the above society gave its second concert in the parochial room adjoining the Church. Though it is of a very recent growth, it shows signs of much improvement. The members should feel gratified in having for their conductor Mr. W. Rayment Kirby, F.C.O., and knowing that under his careful guidance this class will grow, and in time perform music in a style worthy of the Church with which they are connected. The principal work was Bennett's "May Queen," the chorus, though rather weak, sang with a certain amount of precision, and a conscientious knowledge of the work, which, by the way, reflects no small amount of credit on the conductor. The soloists were Madame Worrell, who, as the May Queen, sang in her usual artistic style, while the remaining soloists, Miss Gatland, Mr. J. R. Jekyll, and Mr. H. Wilson, call for no special mention. The second part of the programme was of a miscellaneous character.

WORCESTER.—Nearly 1,800 members of Church choirs attached to the Worcester Archidiaconal Church Choral Association held their fourth triennial festival in the cathedral at Worcester recently, and notwithstanding a rainy morning, the cathedral doors were besieged early, and there was a complete rush to obtain seats, the portion of the cathedral not occupied by the choirs being quickly filled. The number of Church choirs joining in the festival was 63, and the total number of choristers more than 1,700, of which number a thousand were surpliced, one choir wearing blue cossacks under their surplices and birettas. The procession of choirs and clergy into and out of the church was the spectacle of the day for the congregation. Anthems by Walmisley and Barnby were given, the latter at the morning and the former at the afternoon Service. The general secretary to the association, Rev. H. H. Woodward, Mus.Bac., and minor canon of the cathedral, wrote a special Te Deum and Benedictus for the festival, and Mr. Lloyd, Mus.Bac., and organist of Oxford Cathedral, contributed a Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis. The whole went off well, although only one rehearsal of the united choirs had been possible.

A statue of Auber has been placed in the Theatre of Caen. The official inauguration on the 10th was attended by several notable French musicians. The music performed included a violin concerto by the author of "Massaniello."

A festival will be held at Ghent on the 1st and 2nd of July. The first day will be devoted to Belgian composers. The performers number 500. The new works to be performed include "La Pacification de Gand" cantata by M. Walput, and "Amor lex æterna," a lyrical cycle in six episodes, composed by M. Adolphe Samuel.

Organ News.

LIVERPOOL.

Mr. W. T. Best gave an organ recital in the St. George's Hall, on Thursday June 7th. The following is the programme :—

Overture, "Athalie"	Mendelssohn.
Romanza, "The Fishermaiden"	Meyerbeer.
Passacaglia (Variations and Fugue on a Pedal-Bass)	Bach.
Pastorale	Moriconi.
Military March, "La Garde passe"	W. T. Best.
Scherzo-Symphonique	Alex. Guilmant

On Saturday afternooon, June 9th :—

Overture, "I Lituani"	Ponchielli.
Andante in G major	H. Smart.
Fantasia in the Style of Bach in F minor	Mozart.
Chaconne with Variations in G major	Handel.
Romanesca (Italian Dance of the Sixteenth Century. Anciently accompanied by Singing)
Toccata for the Organ in B minor	Boëly.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

Mr. Eyre's recent Saturday programmes have included the following pieces :—

Concert Fugue in G	Krebs.
Andante Cantabile	Smart.
Fantasia in C minor	Hesse.
Adagio in E flat	Hopkins.
Fantasia	Lemmens.
Wedding March	Gounod.
Theme and Variations	Hesse.
Grand Prelude and Fugue in D	A. W. Bach.
Danse Ancienne	Sanders.
Allegretto in A	Henselt.
Pastorale	Guilmant.
Hero's March (Op. 22)	Mendelssohn.
Andante in G and Soprano Melody	Smart.
Barcarolle	Spohr.
Pastorale Sonata (1st movement)	Rheinberger.
Fantasia with Choral	Smart.

FISHERIES EXHIBITION.

An organ recital was given on Thursday, June 7th, by Mr. James Loaring. The following was the programme :—

Overture ("Masaniello")	Auber.
Adagio from Symphony	Haydn.
Organ Concerto (No. 2)	Handel.
Gavottes { a in D	Gluck.
Gavottes { b in F	Martini.
Selection from "Madame Favart"	Offenbach.
Fugue	Bach.
Festive March in D	Smart.

The organ recital on Friday June 8th, was given by Mr. James Loaring. The following was the programme :—

Overture, "L'Italiana"	Rossini.
Marche Heroique	Schubert.
Fugue in E flat	Bach.
Chorus, "Zadok the Priest"	Handel.
Andante and Allegro	F. E. Bache.
Selection from "La Perichole"	Offenbach.
March of the Crusaders	Churchill Sibley.

The recital on Tuesday, June 12th, was by Mr. T. Pettit. The following was the programme :—

March in D major	Smart.
Nocturne	Mendelssohn.
Gavotte in D	Bach.
Andante in G	Batiste.
Postlude	Wely.
Overture, "Le Cheval de Bronze"	Auber.
Pastorale	Handel.
March, "Tannhäuser"	Wagner.

PRESTON.

The following is the programme of the organ recital given by Mr. James Tomlinson, in the new Public Hall, on Thursday evening, June 7th.

Marche Religeuse	Chauvet.
Scherzo	Guilmant.
Adagio and Finale, from the Quartet in C	Spohr.
Overture to "Rosamunde"	Schubert.
Chaconne	Durand.
Cornelius March	Mendelssohn.

On Saturday evening, June 9th :—

Overture to the Oratorio "The Last Judgment"	Spohr.
Larghetto (Clarionet Quintet))	Mozart.
Selection from the "Water Music" Maestoso—Air—Minuetto—Allegro—Finale.	Handel.
Fantasia on the "Vesper Hymn"	E. H. Turpin.
Ballet Music from "Sylvia"	Delibes.
Overture in F minor	Morandi.

Digitized by Google

NORWICH.

Dr. Bunnett gave an organ recital at the St. Andrew's Hall, on June 9th, the following was the programme :—

Overture, "Don Pasquale"	Donizetti.
War March	Lichtenstein.
Adagio and Finale (from Quartet)	Spohr.
Air, Favori de Marie Antoinette
Gavotte in D	Bach.
Organ Concerto	Crotch.
Musette, Andante, and March	Handel.
Adagio Religioso (Hymn of Praise)	Mendelssohn.
Air in A (with variations)	Haydn.
Overture, "Egmont"	Beethoven.

BRISTOL.

Mr. George Risely gave an organ recital at the Colston Hall, on June 9th. The following was the programme :—

Festival March	Mendelssohn.
Momens Musicaux .. { a Andantino / b Allegretto }	Schubert.
Sonata, No. 4, in B flat	Mendelssohn.
Allegro—Andante Religioso—Allegretto—Allegro
Barcarolle	Sir S. Bennett.
Overture, "Midsummer Night's Dream"	Mendelssohn.
Andante in G major	Batiste.
Grand March, "Schiller"	Meyerbeer.

BOLTON.

An organ recital was given in the the Albert Hall, by Mr. William F. Mullineux, on June 9th. The following was the programme :—

Organ Concerto in G minor, (No. 4, 2nd set)	Handel.
Allegro—Variations on a Ground-Bass—Fuga.
Minuetto Romantique	Smith.
Fantasia on English Airs—
"Old King Cole."
"Home, Sweet Home."
"Rule Britannia."
Overture, "Le pré aux clercs"	Hérold.
Air, "O ruddier than the Cherry" (pedal solo)	Handel.
Romanza, "Rose softly blooming"	Spohr.
Fanfare Militaire	Ascher.

RAMSEY.

Miss Wood gave a recital on the new organ built by Messrs. Forster and Andrews, of Hull, in the St. Paul's Church, on Thursday, June 7th. The following was the programme :—

Four Preludial Pieces	E. J. Hopkins.
Adagio—Grazioso—Siciliano—Moto Continuo.
"Placido e il Mar," Mozart	Arr. by Hopkins.
Andante con Moto	Guilmant.
Priere	Lemmens.
Pastorale	Zipoli.
Toccata and Fugue in D minor	Bach.
Andante in A major	Smart.
Carillons de Dunkerque	E. H. Turpin.
Fanfare	Lemmens.
Andante in F major	Merkel.
Organ Sonata No. 2. { Grave, Adagio, Allegro Maestoso / e Vivace, Fuga }	Mendelssohn.

ROCHDALE.

The opening of the new organ in the Presbyterian Church (built by Alex. Young and Sons, of Manchester), took place on May 6th. The following is a synopsis of the organ :—

GREAT ORGAN. CC TO G, 68 NOTES.

1. Open Diapason	8 ft.	3. Wald Flöte	4 ft.
2. Dulciana	8 „

SWELL ORGAN. CC TO G, 68 NOTES.

4. Gamba	8 ft.	6. Hautboy	8 ft.
5. Lieblich Gedact	8 „

PEDAL ORGAN. CCC TO F.

7. Bourdon ..... 16 ft.

COUPLERS.

8. Great Octave on itself.	11. Swell to Pedals.
9. Swell to Great.	12. Great to Pedals.
10. Swell Octave on itself.

A recital on the new and effective organ, lately erected by Mr. Alfred Kirkland, of Wakefield, was given by Mr. E. H. Turpin, on June 12th, at the Wesleyan Church, Holly Park, Crouch Hill, N. Some excellent vocal music was added to the programme.

CANTERBURY.

The effort which Dr. Longhurst is making to obtain for Canterbury Cathedral an organ adequate for the performance of the highest class of sacred music, is being warmly supported. The total amount required to provide an organ cased in accordance with the designs of the late Sir Gilbert Scott, is about £3,500. Of this sum over £1,000 has been promised. Dr. Longhurst and the Rev. W. D. Wardell are secretaries to the committee, and will gladly receive subscriptions. The present instrument is supposed to have been built in 1661, and rebuilt in 1753, and 1784. Seven pedal pipes were added by James Longhurst, in 1825 ; and the organ was finally rebuilt, and a few additions made, by W. Hill, in 1841. It is wholly unfit for the performance of much of the music which the improved Services of the Cathedral require. It is inferior to the organs of most of the English Cathedrals. The following lists of organs and stops will show how far Canterbury is behind other cathedrals in this respect :—Canterbury, 34 ; Lincoln, 38 ; Gloucester, 40 ; Oxford, 40 ; Bagnor, 45 ; Westminster Abbey, 47 ; Llandaff, 48 ; Exeter, 48 ; Ely, 50 ; Rochester, 51 ; Carlisle, 52 ; Peterborough, 54, Wells, 54 ; Ripon, 56 ; Hereford, 65 ; Lichfield, 68 ; Winchester, 71 ; Worcester, 71 ; Durham, 76 ; Chester, 81 ; St. Paul's, 82 ; Salisbury, 86 ; and York, 87. Canterbury is the only one of these places with an organ built earlier than 1847. The following is the scheme proposed :—It is intended that all the stops should go through, and to consist of four complete manuals, from C C to A, 58 notes and two-and-a-half octaves of pedals, C C C to F 30 notes.

GREAT ORGAN.

1. Double Open Diap.	16 ft.	9. Twelfth	3 ft.
2. Open Diapason	8 „	10. Fifteenth	2 „
3. Open Diapason	8 „	11. Piccolo	2 „
4. Gamba	8 „	12. Mixture (4 ranks)
5. Stopped Diapason	8 „	13. Double Trumpet	16 „
6. Claribel Flute	8 „	14. Cornopean	8 „
7. Principal	8 „	15. Clarion	4 „
8. Flûte Harmonic	4 „

SWELL ORGAN.

16. Double Open Diap.	16 ft.	23. Mixture (3 ranks)	ft.
17. Open Diapason	8 „	24. Centra Fagotto	16 „
18. Lieblich Gedact	8 „	25. Trumpet	8 „
19. Salicional	8 „	26. Hautboy	8 „
20. Vox Angelica	8 „	27. Vox Humana	8 „
21. Octave	4 „	28. Clarion	4 „
22. Flageolet	2 „

SOLO ORGAN.

29. Flûte Harmonic	8 ft.	32. Corno-de-Bassetto	8 ft.
30. Concert Flute	4 „	33. Tuba	8 „
31. Orchestral Oboe	8 „	34. Clarion	4 „

CHOIR ORGAN.

35. Lieblich Gedact	16 ft.	40. Flûte Harmonique	4 ft.
36. Lieblich Gedact	8 „	41. Gemshorn	4 „
37. Open Diapason	16 „	42. Corno-de-Bassetto	8 „
38. Salicional	8 „	Clarinet or Cremona
39. Flauto Traverso	8 „

PEDAL ORGAN.

43. Double Open Diap.	32 ft.	48. Octave	8 ft.
44. Open Diapason	16 „	49. Flute	8 „
45. Open Diapason	16 „	50. Mixture (4 ranks)
46. Violono	16 „	51. Posanne	16 „
47. Bourdon	16 „	52. Clarion	8 „

COUPLERS.

53. Swell to Great.	58. Swell to Pedals.
54. Swell to Great.	59. Great to Pedals.
55. Swell to Great.	60. Choir to Pedals.
56. Choir to Great.	61. Solo to Great.
57. Solo to Pedals.	62. Swell to Choir.

Tremulant to Swell Vox Humana.

4 Pneumatic Combination Pistons to each Clavier, and 4 Combination Pedals to Pedal Organ. A double-acting Pedal to Great to Pedal Couplers.

That the Metropolitan Cathedral shall indeed have a worthy organ, is a matter calling for speedy fulfilment, and the proposal deserves earnest support.

In Memoriam.—On the 7th inst. Charles Luders died. A native of Germany, he resided for many years in this metropolis. He was a musician of rare skill, and as honest a soul as ever trod this earth. He needs no monument to extol his many noble virtues, for his memory will ever live in the hearts of all who knew him.—FERDINAND PRAEGER.

Digitized by Google

THE ORGANIST of the PARISH CHURCH, TIVERTON, offers his HOUSE during the month of August to anyone who would undertake his duties, or would exchange with organist at seaside, or deputise.—Address, T. RUSSE, Tiverton, Devon.

HOLIDAY DUTY.—ORGANIST and CHOIR-MASTER (Cathedral or Gregorian) open to DEPUTISE or EXCHANGE DUTIES for a few Sundays, sea-side preferred.—Address, ORGANIST, care of E. Dale, Music-seller, Chester.

MISS NORAH HAYES, CONTRALTO VOCALIST of the Albert Hall and St. James's Hall Concerts, is open to engagements for Concerts, Soirées, and At Homes. Good Press opinions. Services given free for Charities.—Address, 95, Edgware Road.

MR. E. DAVIDSON PALMER, Mus.Bac., Oxon., author of "What is Falsetto?" "Pronunciation in Singing," etc., gives LESSONS in VOICE TRAINING and SOLO SINGING, at his residence, 19, Gladesmore-road, Stamford Hill, N.

HANDEL'S FIRST ORGAN CONCERTO, with Orchestral Accompaniment, as performed at the Handel Festival, Crystal Palace, edited, arranged, and supplemented with a Cadenza by W. T. BEST. Organ Score, 1s. 6d.; Orchestra Parts, 2s.; complete, 2s. 6d. nett.—AUGENER & CO., 86, Moorgate Street, Foubert's Place, and 81, Regent Street, London.

ORGANIST (DEPUTY OR TEMPORARY).—An able performer, holding first-rate post, is at LIBERTY to act as above during part or whole of summer months. Could undertake Teaching Connection if desired, and would take pains with his work. Terms moderate.—Address, Mr. H. AMOS, Luton Villa, Bexley Road, Belvedere, S.E.

JOHN M. W. YOUNG'S 3 Festival Services in G (21st thousand), F, and C; V.Sc., 1½d. each. An easy Chant Service in A; Service in D for advanced Choirs; 5 Festival Anthems, and the Lincoln Psalter.—To be had of NOVELLO & CO., and of the COMPOSER, Lincoln.

PIANO.—To be SOLD a first-class Piano (by Debain, Paris), with mechanical as well as ordinary action, complete with box of tunes, &c. No reasonable offer refused. Must be sold, owner leaving London.—Apply. WM. COLLINS, SONS & CO., Lim., 4, Bridewell Place, New Bridge Street, E.C., where piano may be seen.

FISHERIES EXHIBITON, SOUTH KENSINGTON.—Mr. FRANK BRADLEY, Professor of the Organ, Trinity College, London, &c. (concert organist), will give RECITALS on MONDAYS and WEDNESDAYS, on the Organs of Messrs. Lewis, and Henry Jones & Sons, during the Exhibition.—Programmes gratuitously given in the Building.
For Concerts and Recitals, address Beaconsfield, Gunnersbury, W.

VIOLIN.—HERR POLONASKI (Violinist), open to ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts, Musical At Homes, and Violin or Accompaniment Lessons.—For Terms, please Address, HERR POLONASKI, 16, Wharfdale-street, South Kensington, S.W.

INTERNATIONAL FISHERIES EXHIBITION.—ORGAN RECITALS daily, upon the fine-toned Organ, in West Gallery. Supplied to the Executive Committee by HENRY JONES & SONS, 136, Fulham Road, South Kensington.

FOR SALE.—Organ Music, Violin, and other String Music, Operas, Oratorios, Full Scores, Treatises, Histories, Biographies, and English and Foreign Works in various Branches of Literature.—On Sale by W. REEVES, 185, Fleet-street, London.

Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged, cloth, 3s. 6d.
BEETHOVEN'S PIANOFORTE SONATAS, explained by ERNST von ELTERLEIN, translated by E. Hill. Preface by E. Pauer.
W. REEVES, 185, FLEET STREET, LONDON.

B. WILLIAMS, PATERNOSTER ROW.—Having purchased the lease and goodwill of the above old-established business, together with the very extensive trade stock, I beg to announce that, with the old staff of assistants which I have specially retained, I shall endeavour to carry on the concern with as much satisfaction as heretofore. The publishing department (of which I have had the sole management since the death of Mr. B. Williams) will receive every attention.
LUCY J. MULLEN.
(Daughter of the late Mr. B. Williams).

THE STUDENT'S HELMHOLTZ.
MUSICAL ACOUSTICS,
OR
THE PHENOMENA OF SOUND AS CONNECTED WITH MUSIC,
With Examination Questions and over 100 Illustrations,
BY JOHN BROADHOUSE.
Price 3s. net.
London: WILLIAM REEVES, 185, Fleet-street.

ALL WHO POSSESS A PIANOFORTE and canot play it, may now play at once, without any previous knowledge of Music, by ROYLANCE'S NUMERICAL SYSTEM, which contains a FIGURED DIAGRAM to fit on the Keyboard of any Pianoforte (or Harmonium, and a choice selection of forty SACRED and SECULAR MELODIES, composed for the use of those who have no time to study Music. Thousands are now able to play who did not believe such a thing possible. The diagram alone will be found most useful to Professors for teaching purposes. 6d. nett.—Price 2s. 6d. nett; post free 33 stamps.—C. ROYLANCE, 184, Tottenham Court-road; and all Music Sellers.

MUSIC STRINGS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
J. P. GUIVIER & CO.,
MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF ALL KINDS OF
STRINGS FOR VIOLIN, VIOLA, VIOLONCELLO, DOUBLE BASS, HARP, ZITHER, GUITAR, BANJO, &c., &c.,
Have always in Stock the Largest Assortment of Music Strings of any House in the World.
39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.
All Kinds of Strings covered in a superior manner by powerful machines, made on the best principle with all modern improvements.

JUST PUBLISHED.—Full Anthem, "BE NOT DRUNK WITH WINE, WHEREIN IS EXCESS." For Temperance Services, etc., by E. H. TURPIN. Price 4d. net.—Messrs. WEEKES & CO., 14, Hanover-street W

JUST PUBLISHED, "MORNING and EVENING SERVICE," set to music for the especial use of Parish Choirs, by FREDK. HUNNIBELL, F.C.O. Price, 1s.; or separately, 8d. and 6d.
London: NOVELLO, EWER & CO.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

THE VOICE MUSICALLY AND MEDICALLY CONSIDERED. By Armand Semple, B.A., M.B., Cantab., M.R.C.P., Lond.
PRESENTATION TO MR. W. R. ATKINS.
MUSICAL INTELLIGENCE:—Crystal Palace Concerts—Richter Concerts—M. Vladimir de Pachmann's Third Recital—Royal Italian Opera—Mr. Bonawitz's Concerts—The Cologne Choir of Men's Voices—Reading Orpheus Society—Various Concerts—Music in Dublin, etc., etc.
ORGAN NEWS:—Liverpool—Crystal Palace—Fisheries Exhibition—Preston—Norwich—Bristol—Bolton—Ramsey—Rochdale—Canterbury.
THE DANGER OF LOCAL REPORTS.
EDITORIAL:—The Position of the Cathedral Organist—The Logic of Counterpoint. Third Series—IX.
EXPERIENCES OF AN ORGANIST—VIII.
CORRESPONDENCE:—The Henry Smart Memorial Fund—"The Gregorian Association Festival Book"—Sunday School Festival.
PASSING EVENTS. Service Lists, &c.

LONDON: SATURDAY, JUNE 16, 1883.

THE POSITION OF THE CATHEDRAL ORGANIST.

WHAT complaints should have to be made anent the treatment and position of those important servants of the Church and nation, our cathedral organists, is indeed a scandal, even though it is true that exceptional cases show that surrounding circumstances have much to do with the difficulties the occupants of too many cathedral organ seats are called upon to face. In the very selection in early and unsettled times of quiet nooks, away from the turbulent tides of commercial life for the most part, the foundations of some of the disadvantages attending the life of the Church artist were laid; and the tide of modern busy life following generally the ancient streams, has rather drifted further from than more nearly approached many of our old cathedral cities. With the exception of such great centres as London, Manchester, Bristol, etc., the distinguished and often highly cultured musicians who consent, often to their own professional and artistic loss, to become our cathedral organists, have no proper opportunities for the full exercise, and for securing consequent due reward, of their self-denying artistic labour. The word "consent" was used advisedly, for the artist of distinction has hardly any chance of a due appreciation in a sleepy cathedral city, while, on the other hand, the cathedral atmosphere is by no means detrimental to the due advancement of its clerical staff. For the average pay of an express engine-driver, and in some cases for less remuneration still, an educated gentleman, and highly cultured artist, is called upon to undertake never-ending and such very responsible duties as uplift him into a national rather than a purely local position. In the midst of all his daily and anxious work, usually involving such ungrateful labour as everyday choir-boys' drill, the cathedral organist is generally denied the sympathy, and largely shut out from the proud, exclusive society, of his fellow and clerical cathedral officials, who are apt to forget the words, "All of you "be subject one to another," and who are called upon to teach that "he that humbleth himself shall be "exalted," and to proclaim and practise the virtues of brotherly love, hospitality, charity in thought, word, and deed, and humility in all things. Truly, we have much cause to be grateful to our cathedral organists for their patient, resigned self-abnegation and admirable devotion to their high and too little appreciated labours. Now and then it is hardly possible to avoid a feeling of indignation when some revelation or other comes into daylight in connection with our leading ecclesiastical musicians. In a recent instance the conditions of the acceptance of office by an incoming cathedral organist were degrading in their nature. The organist, to begin with, is practically to be shut out from the just advantages of a cathedral office as a life elected officer, and is to be liable to be discharged at three months' notice. The Dean and Chapter again impose the condition, that the organist shall not be absent without their consent, and only then by providing a deputy having their approval. Thus they take the power of refusing to allow their organist to be absent from, say, a week-day service, and may enforce their tyrannical, and if they choose impossible, condition by declining to permit anyone else, save, say Mr. Best for the sake of the argument, to release their hard-worked organ player even for a single day. Had these well meaning but ill-advised ecclesiastics advertised for a groom, or gardener, their anxiety to secure a due sense of responsibility on the part of the desired servant would be understandable enough; but to dictate such terms to a man of large artistic worth and necessary culture is surely as striking an offence against good taste as it is a violation of that good judgment which would desire to secure the best possible candidates for the organist's post. Perhaps the Dean and Chapter of the cathedral in question do not know of the existence of the detective clock, as used in our large prisons, by which the warders hourly register their presence and attention to duty. Had they possessed this knowledge, possibly such a mechanical register would have been adopted, whereby their to be pitied new organist might have been called upon daily to notify his presence at the organ key-board. This same severely conscientious Dean and Chapter are, however, possibly not unaware of the existence of a much easier form of cathedral officialism, and, it may be, have heard of clerical pluralists, and canons in occasional residence, to whom, in some instances, the environs of the clubs about Pall Mall are as familiar as the not too much frequented precincts of their several cathedrals. It is not my present purpose to probe further into a matter which can only be written about with much pain and dissatisfaction. It might, however, be told, how all the accumulations of Church property and changes in money value had been from age to age carefully assessed and balanced in favour of the leading clerical members of our cathedral staffs, and just as carefully discounted and re-adjusted to the loss and disadvantage of the organist and choristers. Such statements might be startlingly illustrated were I to place before my readers a comparison of the salaries paid to the deans and canons before the middle of the 16th century in several of our chief cathedrals and the salaries of the organ-playing priests of the same pre-Reformation period, with the like stipends paid to the clerical dignitaries and organists of the same cathedrals now. The subject should claim the attention of our legislative authorities. There is much to be done, indeed, before the "chief musicians" of our cathedrals are duly esteemed, honoured, and rewarded for their self-denying noble discharge of their trying and never-ending duties, and before cathedral worship stands forth in all its true beauty and grandeur.

Digitized by Google

E. H. Turpin.

THE LOGIC OF COUNTERPOINT.

Third Series.

IX.

The conduct of the fourth order in four parts necessarily calls for special observations, seeing that the additional or fourth part when employed in connection with the use of syncopations affecting triads must naturally add to the complication of the part movements. Expressed briefly, one of the four parts is apt to be in the way sometimes, in dealing with suspended harmonies. Cherubini's first rule anent the conduct of fourth species counterpoint in four parts runs thus: "The chord should always be com-"plete in a bar whether the syncopated part forms a "discord or a concord; in the latter case, if the chord "be not complete on the accented part of the measure, "it must necessarily be so at the unaccented portion." Read between the lines, this merely means, there is no excuse for incomplete harmony in a four-part score. The theorist continues to explain, that the chords are not complete at the occurrence of the discords, because the discords are simply the suspensions of concords; so if the discord in each instance is omitted and the resolution substituted for it, the particular complete chord will appear at once, having only been held in abeyance by the discord as it were. The idea of this kind of held-back harmony may be conveyed in the following repeated trite and simple words. The four parts represent four friends walking abreast. A prepared discord is one of the friends lagging behind the other three friends pausing in their progress until their lagging companion is again level with them. Cherubini goes on to say (doubtless bearing in mind that one of the four parts may be in the way so to speak, or may be utilised in adding fulness and completeness to the harmony formed), "The resolution of a discord may even be altered by exceptionally allowing the use of minims in one or more of the parts not engaged in the formation of syncopations. The following scheme in letters is an illustration :—

Digitized by Google

The theorist gives examples of such licenses applied to the discords of the fourth, seventh, and ninth. It is needless to add that the licenses so employed of extra minims may in this way lead to an unexpected change of root at the point of a resolution. Such an introduction of original minims in the parts usually taking one note only in each bar would seem to be of only rare use, as disturbing the accustomed flow of the several parts, and, what is of more consequence, accelerating the even procession of chord roots bar by bar. Further, such part actions belong naturally to the intermixture in four parts of second and four species counterpoint. There is a certain gain in the presence of a fourth part in the way of forming short pedal passages, as the fairly complete harmony may be successfully carried forward by three parts during a brief sentence in which a fourth part is stationary. One of the best means of escape from complications in four parts is by the process of absorption—that is, by a temporary reduction of the score, or a putting away of one part for an instant, by assigning two parts for the moment to one sound, thus—

E. H. TURPIN.

EXPERIENCES OF AN ORGANIST.

VIII.

When I had been a few months in my new position, our leading soprano, the lady about whose musical talents I had heard so much, and who, as I have already said, was absent from home when I first came to the church, returned to town, and was much chagrined on learning that the duties of choirmaster, which she had hitherto undertaken of her own accord, as a free-will offering, and which she had always fulfilled to her own perfect satisfaction, were now entrusted to the organist, who, presumptuously preferring to take upon himself the responsibilities of accompanist and conductor combined, had had the temerity to stipulate for and assume the control of both offices. She complained to the select vestry, as our board of directors was called, and informed the head of that rather weak-minded body that she entirely disapproved of their proceedings, not so much because they had superseded her as choirmistress (that, in her humble opinion, was quite a minor consideration), but rather because, in bringing over an Englishman to play the organ, they were taking the bread out of an Irishman's mouth (she said bread, but of course she meant potatoes) and pursuing what she felt bound to stigmatize in the very strongest parliamentary language as a most unpatriotic course. But it was too late for her complaints to be of any avail. The vestry had committed itself. The Saxon intruder was encamped upon the soil, or, to be more precise without being much less figurative, enthroned upon the organ-stool, and could not be immediately got rid of. To dislodge him from his position must be a work of time. Meanwhile, however, it was easy to harass the enemy, and that was what this feminine patriot, this Irish Joan of Arc, determined to do. When the happy thought occurred to her she regained her equanimity, and attended the choir-practices with a light heart and a smiling face.

The lady's antipathy to me was so marked, and she took so little pains to conceal it, that it was impossible not to perceive it at once. At the same time, as I was not conscious of having done anything to incur her displeasure, I could not understand it, for I would not at first allow myself to believe that my nationality was likely to create any prejudice against me in Irish minds. This patriotic prejudice, however, as I afterwards found, was not the only cause of her hatred of me. There was a disappointed candidate in the background, and she, in sporting phraseology, was his heaviest backer. In other words, among those who had made application for the post which I occupied, there had been one whom she had done the vestry the honour to recommend to them, and she had taken it as a matter of course that the appointment would have been made in his favour. Her candidate was a youth with whose father, an organist in the neighbourhood, she had been on intimate terms for what may be considered in her case as a long period, viz., several months. They had arranged the whole matter between them. The son was to have the organ; she was to continue to direct the choir, and the father was to give his assistance on festival-days and other special occasions. That they had the true welfare of the church at heart there can be no doubt, and it certainly was provoking to find their good intentions frustrated. But such is the ingratitude of human nature generally, and especially of vestries and churchwardens! I do not blame her for being angry with it or with them, but I do think it was a little unreasonable of her to be so inimical to me, whether from pique or patriotism, or both. It was not my fault that I was born in London. That was owing to circumstances over which (for obvious reasons) I had no control. Neither was it my fault (though, perhaps, it may be considered my misfortune) that I was elected organist of the church which she was good enough to patronize. I heard of the vacancy, and fondly imagining myself competent to fill it, and being, moreover, instigated by one or two Irish friends, who must, I suppose, have been entirely wanting in that lofty patriotism for which the Green Isle is so famous, I ventured to offer my services. "The very head and front of my offending had this extent, no more." Hence I cannot see why this musical matron should have been so determined to treat me as her mortal antagonist. Since, however, she was resolved to do so, it only remained for me to accept the inevitable as calmly as I could.

The principal sin which she laid to my charge was that of playing too slowly, and as she was considered by the congregation to be a great musical authority, and was looked up to, in fact, as the musical oracle of our little temple, it soon became a generally accepted fact that I did play too slowly. It seems somewhat strange that I, who had formerly been found fault with for playing much too fast, should now be accused of playing too slowly. But tempora mutantur, as (if I remember rightly) Valpy's Latin Delectus tells us. The times are changed, and it may be that I have not changed with them, as according to that delectable authority, that ancient proverbial philosopher, we are all expected to do. This is a fast age; an age of steam and electricity. Lightning-speed is what the world is striving after, and the Church, in this respect, is not behind the world. She is no longer content to "sit and sing herself away to everlasting bliss" at the same slow pace as she was accustomed to fifty years ago. Then she went to one extreme, and sang her "cheerful songs" like funeral dirges. Now she goes to the other extreme, reads her "title clear" with marvellous rapidity, and wipes her "weeping eyes" with an alacrity verging on indecency, taking all her "griefs and fears," and "rattling them off to a popular tune," like the "heavy dragoon" in the comic opera.

My protests against this irreverent style of singing, and my attempts to check it, were quite sufficient, even if there had been nothing else, to bring me at once into collision with our late choirmistress, seeing that her views on the subject were diametrically opposed to mine. Sometimes she positively refused to sing a note because I ventured to act upon my own judgment in preference to hers. At other times she would sing in advance of the organ, and try to get neighbouring members of the choir to do the same. Of course I could not tolerate this, and I had therefore to request her more than once not to sing so fast, but to endeavour to keep with the organ, which request I was generally careful to put as politely as possible. I must admit, however, that on one such occasion, when she declared, as she had so often done before, but this time with more asperity than usual, that she would rather not sing at all than sing so slowly (the hymn being a particularly solemn one), my natural politeness momentarily forsook me, and I replied that in that case I would prefer her silence to her assistance. I did not lose my temper: perhaps it would have been better if I had; for my calm and Christian bearing, combined with the epigrammatic way in which I expressed myself, was, I am afraid, not calculated to make us better friends. In fact, as time wore on, her enmity towards me increased, and she sought to undermine my influence in every possible way. She got up a concert in the neighbourhood of the church, and having arranged that the choir should sing some concerted music, she invited the organist of an adjacent church to act as conductor. Handbills were distributed, and placards posted up, announcing that on a certain date a concert would be given in a certain hall for the benefit of our organ-fund, and that the choir of our church, "and other distinguished amateurs," would perform certain pieces, conducted by a certain gentleman, who was no other than the father of the disappointed candidate before mentioned. I must confess that I was considerably annoyed, as well as somewhat astonished, on seeing these public announcements, and on finding that all the arrangements had been made without consulting me. It was also a matter of regret to me that any members of my choir could be found to support an undertaking which, as they must have been aware, was got up in a spirit of insubordination and opposition to their recognized leader. It is true that I was, almost at the last moment, though before the bills were printed (or, at least, before they were out), asked to conduct; but after I had undertaken to do it, at great inconvenience, since I had to alter and re-arrange, on this account, my classes at the college at which I was engaged, the night was suddenly and unaccountably changed, so that it was impossible for me to be present. The promoters of the concert then refused to again alter the night to suit me, and immediately made arrangements, as though in accordance with some preconcerted plan, to secure the services of the gentleman above alluded to.

Digitized by Google

I now began distinctly to perceive what I had surmised long before, that between a section of the choir and myself there existed no sympathy whatever, and, on reflection, I concluded that, as time went on, we were likely to become more and more estranged. I therefore resolved that I would sever my connection with the church before there was any serious disagreement between us. I was particularly anxious not to have it reported, as it had been in the case of each of my predecessors, that there had been any quarrelling, and I thought that the best, if not the only way to avoid such a report, would be to leave as soon as possible. Accordingly I sent in my resignation, giving, as my reason, that which was but one of several, and not the most important, viz., that I was residing at a considerable distance from the church, and that I would like to get a position nearer my house, as the time occupied in travelling to and from the church was more than I could conveniently spare. When I had done this I felt somewhat easier in my mind, and indulged in some self-congratulations, as I thought that, while former organists had every one of them quitted this scene of their labours only after much strife, I, in my superior wisdom, had been enabled to foresee the coming storm, like the prophet Elijah, while the cloud was "no bigger than a man's hand"; and that without being obliged to gird up my loins and take my departure at the same rate of speed as that ancient seer had found necessary, I should yet contrive to escape before the rains descended and the floods came; in other words, before I got into hot water. But my self-congratulations were premature. The "stars in their courses" fought against me as they did against Sisera, and my hopes of being able to depart in peace were not realized.

And this brings me to the last and worst of my experiences—an experience of a particularly unpleasant kind, the relation of which, while it will afford some relief to my ruffled spirit, may also prove not uninstructive to the incipient musician who reads these pages, as it will show him, more clearly perhaps than anything which has yet been revealed, that there is a kind of discord sometimes to be met with by organists, which, although it is much more easily explained than many of those which are to be found in scientific treatises on the art, is nevertheless much more difficult to resolve. We had been for some months practising and preparing for the harvest festival service which was shortly to be held, and on the Saturday night of the week preceding that in which the special service referred to was to take place we had a full rehearsal. In the course of this rehearsal I had occasion to correct the choir concerning the chanting, and to make some remark as to how a certain passage should be "pointed." Our disaffected soprano leader objected to what I had said, and expressed her opinion that the choir were right and I was wrong. At first I took no notice of her observation, and merely continued my instructions as to the singing of the passage, but when she repeated it, I answered somewhat curtly, having by this time lost a good deal of that amiability which I formerly possessed, that I thought I knew my business, and that, if I did not, I was sure she was not competent to teach me. Now as this lady considered herself quite competent to undertake anybody's musical education, and as her friends had for many years encouraged her in her humble opinion, she was, I suppose, mortally offended. She said nothing, but forgetting, in her indignation, that she was a woman and not a war-horse, snorted defiantly and pranced out of the church, with her bosom-friend the near-sighted contralto at her heels. On the Sunday following we had two more practices, one in the morning and one in the afternoon, both of which passed off without further disagreement between me and the fair matron whom I had so grievously offended on the previous evening, although, in consequence of what had occurred, the relations between us were, to speak in political phraseology, considerably strained. At the conclusion of the last practice, however, the bosom friend, prompted by her lady superior, asked me when they could have another practice. I said that I did not think that another practice was necessary; but they both declared that it was, and that they could not sing at the service without it, and demanded that we should have it either on Tuesday or on Wednesday, the service being fixed for Thursday. I replied that I could not conveniently come on either of those days, as it would interfere with my other engagements, and would occupy more of my time than I could spare. Nothing more was said then, but in the course of the evening I received a visit from the clergyman's wife. I am going into this matter somewhat minutely because, although it may seem unimportant, if not trivial, it led to serious results. The reverend lady (not to speak disrespectfully) brought me a note from her husband, in which he expressed a hope that I would give the choir another practice, rather than that there should be any unpleasantness. His wife, too, said she thought that as on the whole we had got on pretty amicably together up to the present, and as I was about to leave shortly, it was a pity that there should be any quarrelling at the last moment. I said I thought so too, and that was one reason why I was desirous of having no more practices than necessary. This was a sarcastic allusion to the Saturday evening duel between our leading songstress and myself. Ultimately, however, to satisfy my visitor, who was a very affable and lady-like woman, I agreed to give the choir another practice, on Thursday, an hour before the festival service commenced. As I heard nothing further about the matter on Monday, I took it for granted that it was settled, but on Tuesday morning, much to my surprise, I received a letter from the clergyman, informing me that "the choir" (by which I suppose he meant the rebel lady-leader and her hench-woman above-mentioned) had refused to practise on Thursday morning, on the ground that if they practised then they would afterwards be too tired to sing at the Service; that they, the choir, said they must have another practice; that he had, therefore, arranged with another gentleman to give them a rehearsal on Wednesday, and to conduct the music on Thursday, and that consequently my services would be dispensed with on the latter day. The gentleman whom he had thus engaged was, as I suspected, and as I afterwards learned, the same gentleman who had conducted the concert, and who was considered, and, I am sorry to say, seemed to consider himself, my rival. It was of course quite out of the question that I could willingly accept this arrangement, and indeed it was hardly to be expected that I should care to allow anyone to officiate in my place on an occasion of so much importance to our small, but genteel community, as the harvest festival Service. Moreover, it was easy to guess at whose suggestion the arrangement had been made, and to perceive that it was simply one more attempt, coming from the same rebellious quarter, to oust me from my position, and supersede me in my work. I therefore wrote, not without some indignation, that I certainly could not consent to any gentleman's taking my place at the organ on the occasion referred to, and that, if this were done in spite of my protest, I must decline to play any more in the church from that date; should consider myself summarily dismissed, and should claim, besides the salary then due, a further three months' salary in lieu of notice. In reply, I received a letter from the clergyman, in which he expressed regret that I should feel annoyed by the arrangements made, but, at the same time, defended the course he had taken and refused to alter it.

Digitized by Google

Immediately after the festival Service had taken place, I wrote to the select vestry, calling their attention to what had transpired, and informing them of my determination not to play again at the church. As it had previously been arranged, with my consent, that a candidate for the appointment was to play on the following Sunday, my refusal to officiate further as organist did not put the vestry in any difficulty as regards the obtaining of an immediate substitute, and therefore, considering the treatment I had received, I do not see that they could have had any reason to think that I had acted unjustifiably. I told them that, on its being found that I was unable to give the choir another rehearsal except on Thursday morning (no further practice whatever being in my opinion necessary), it had been decided, without my consent and in spite of my protest, to invite another gentleman to take my place at the organ on Thursday afternoon, and I considered this tantamount to a summary dismissal, as it was not to be expected that I could resume my duties after such an insult. I concluded by saying that I trusted that they would feel, as I did, that I had taken the only dignified course. The vestry, however, did not adopt this view of the case. Perhaps, looking at the matter in its financial aspect (for they were business men), they considered it wiser not to admit that I had any ground of complaint. Be that as it may, they simply sent a cheque for the amount due, and took no further notice of either me or my grievance. A great deal has been said by philosophers in praise of silence, and undoubtedly it is a very good thing sometimes (especially among musical people), but it is often exceedingly provoking. In this case it was not at all calculated to tranquilize my feelings or allay my irritation. Had they acknowledged that I had been badly treated and expressed any regret, I should have probably let the matter drop. As it was, knowing as I did that former organists had been subjected to similar ill-usage, I thought it only right that such treatment, even though it might remain unpunished, should not be allowed to pass unexposed. I therefore put the matter into the hands of a solicitor, through whom I requested payment of an additional quarter's salary, in lieu of notice, and whom I instructed to take proceedings in a court of law, if necessary. In spite of his letter, which they probably regarded as an idle threat, the vestry still refused to entertain my claim, or even to acknowledge the reasonableness of my complaint, and so I brought my action.

The case was tried at the county court, in due course. My solicitor, being a musical man, was well able to understand and appreciate the circumstances in which I had been placed, and knew how to put my case in the most favourable light. His opening statement was all that the most fastidious client could have desired. The opposing solicitor, on the other hand, did not appear to me to make even so plausible a defence as he might have done, for although his clients were, as I believe, morally in the wrong, it was quite possible, so I am given to understand, for a painstaking and conscientious lawyer to prove that they were legally in the right. I was therefore agreeably surprised at the weakness of his defence. But when the Recorder began to deliver his judgment, I was still more agreeably surprised, as I had been told over and over again by all my counsellors, legal and otherwise, that my hope of success was a forlorn one. He said he was perfectly satisfied of my being fully qualified for the position which I held, and he considered that, as choirmaster, I was the proper person to decide how many practices were requisite for the occasion referred to, and when they should be held. It seemed to him that a choir was something like a regiment of soldiers, in which implicit obedience to the commanding officer was absolutely necessary to ensure success. In the case before him, however, instead of the choirmaster controlling the choir, the choir appeared to think it their duty to control the choirmaster. Well, the select vestry chose to approve of that sort of thing, and his worship thought that the organist was justified in the letters he wrote. He then proceeded to comment on the letters, remarking that it was evident to him, on reading them, that the organist's position had been rendered intolerable by some of the choir. Ultimately, after referring to the passage in which I stated that I thought the course which had been taken by the clergyman was tantamount to a summary dismissal, he said, "And I think so, too." He then announced that he should give a decree in my favour for the full amount claimed, viz., £15, with costs.

In spite of its triumphant issue, this last experience of mine is by no means a satisfactory one, and I look back upon it with regret. But it is possible that, among those who read these pages, there may be some who either are, or have been, placed in circumstances similar to mine, and it will assuredly be to their advantage that they should know what are the rights as well as the wrongs of organists. For this reason I have felt justified in making revelations which, on account of their extremely disagreeable nature, it might otherwise have been desirable to suppress. I hope, however, that I have not wearied my readers by entering too much into detail, for I should be sorry if that which has been a trial to me should also prove a trial to them.

Not many months after the occurrence just related I left Ireland and returned to my native land. I had private reasons for doing so, but as I have already made a confidant of the reader as regards other private matters, I will not leave him (or her) entirely in the dark concerning this one. The fact is, I had news of a certain young lady, with whom it will be remembered I used to play pianoforte duets in years gone by. Her venerable progenitor, the oracular and dogmatic old gentleman whom I had found, or who (as some prejudiced people think), had found me so intractable, was dead, and thinking that I might be able to offer her some consolation in her bereavement, I proceeded with all speed to London. I found her in a somewhat low state of health, but am happy to say that she is now considerably better.

I have not yet obtained another organ appointment, and my experiences as an organist are therefore at an end for the present. I think, however, that what I have written is sufficient to prove the truth of my opening statement, that the organist is not without his full share of "the cares of this world." Whether it is any satisfaction to him to know that, in his case, those cares are not likely to be associated with "the deceitfulness of riches" is a question which I am not called upon to answer. Of one thing I am certain, namely, that while from a pecuniary point of view his position is rarely all that it should be, in other respects it is often all that it should not be. This being so, it is scarcely to be wondered at if he should sometimes have been found to have "left undone those things which he ought to have done," and to have "done those things which he ought not to have done" (like an orthodox Churchman); for even organists, though an exemplary body, are not absolutely impeccable, and it must not be expected that they should all of them act with that circumspection which, as will doubtless readily be admitted, has distinguished the present writer throughout his chequered career. In conclusion, however, let me venture to hope that every organist who reads these pages will in future always display similar circumspection, and that it may lead to less unfortunate results.

Sir Michael Costa's "Eli" is to be given at the St. James's Hall on Saturday morning the 16th inst., at 3 o'clock by Mr. Willing's Choir. Coming, as it will, the day after the full rehearsal of the Handel Festival, of which it is not necessary to remind readers, Sir Michael Costa has been the conductor since the initial performance in 1857. It is a happy thought of Mr. Willing thus to do honour to the composer-conductor by giving a performance of the work at such a time, and doubtless many of the chorus, as well as the general public who will be in London for the purpose of attending the Festival, will avail themselves of the opportunity to be present and to join in the demonstration of regard and esteem towards the renowned musician which the occasion will so opportunely permit.

Digitized by Google

Correspondence.

THE HENRY SMART MEMORIAL FUND.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "MUSICAL STANDARD."

SIR,—Without doubt, many of your readers would feel astonished, if not humiliated, when reading the announcement you made in your issue of June 2nd, relative to the sum that has been collected towards the Henry Smart Fund. How is it that such apathy has been shown to the memory of so great a man? The influence of his high-toned manly writing is not lost, but remains with us. Musicians have just cause to be proud, yet grateful, for what he has accomplished. It is, however, painful and humiliating to reflect, that the efforts of this truly great man were neither appreciated nor remunerated as they ought to have been during his life. It is well known that those who aspire to write sacred music must devote their lives to studying the highest and most difficult branches of the science before they feel themselves competent to write worthily for the Church. Our Church authorities ought to feel grateful to Henry Smart for what he contributed to their Services. What have they done in recognition of the services he rendered to the Church, or in contributing to the Memorial Fund? Nothing!! They were, however, most energetic a few years ago, which shows what they can accomplish in soliciting subscriptions, preaching sermons and having collections in their churches, to form an annuity in, aid of the wife and family of one of their brethren (the Rev. Dr. Dykes, of Durham). The result of their combined efforts was most gratifying—the sum of "ten thousand pounds" being subscribed. What have the music publishers done to perpetuate the memory of Smart? They have been vying with each other recently with their "hundreds" and their "thousands," in response to the invitation from the Prince of Wales, in founding a new College of Music. Their generosity has been heralded far and wide. The advocacy of the "Sailor" Prince (who is one of the Henry Smart Committee), does not appear to have attracted any attention. The "Sailor" Prince, unfortunately for the fund, went on a cruize, and the memorial fund, I fancy, followed his example; that is why we have heard so little respecting it of late.

It appears only the other day since a Mr. Moleneux, of Manchester, presented (shall I call it the "princely" sum of) 1,000 guineas towards a London Benevolent Musical Institution. Yet the combined efforts of Henry Smart's admirers, including our English publishers and English professors, can only manage to subscribe one-half that sum.

Oh, that there were other generous patrons of the Moleneux type to aid in an effort in perpetuating the names of those who have, and who may yet earn, our gratitude and esteem, by rendering true and noble service to the Art we follow.

As I before stated (see Dr. Spark's "Life of Henry Smart," page 350), "The influence of his high-toned, manly writing is not lost, but remains with us as a pattern for imitation, emulation, and perhaps development; and proves beyond doubt to the world that we in England have just cause to be proud, yet grateful, in possessing our own distinctive and characteristic school of music." We know quite well that our "men of mark," be they poets, musicians, or painters, have each their own peculiar individuality, their own distinctive style, or mode of thought and feeling. Therein lies the value of their productions. This power—or shall we call it originality?—cannot be transmitted or taught; it dies with its possessor. The outer world appear to forget this fact, and cannot be made to understand why a man of genius like Henry Smart, having such great ability for composition, should have persistently devoted himself to composing for the Church, writing organ voluntaries, and other high-class music, for which there would undoubtedly be appreciation, but very little remuneration.

Pardon me for my digression in introducing the name of a composer of a very different calibre to Henry Smart. M. Offenbach was considered (in a monetary sense) the most successful composer the world ever produced. The Musical Standard told us in November, 1874, "Opera-bouffe would appear to be a very lucrative property. . . . Within 1873, according to the Belgian Times, M. Offenbach received £80,000 for the author's rights of only three of his pieces!" In contrast to this statement, I would ask what kind of remuneration is there awaiting sober-minded Englishmen who strive to elevate their art? All the musical efforts of M. Offenbach during his life never approached the calm dignity, the chaste beauty, and the learning of our English master, who, had he descended to the "frivolous," could, without doubt, have written reams of tuneful wriggle, good enough, if not too good, for the easily-pleased audiences who generally assemble to see the showy girls who are engaged to sing and dance (it does not matter which) to the "high sentiment" (?) usually embodied in the librettos of so-called opera bouffe. The Divine Art is used for strange purposes in these enlightened days. We are told that music has the power of intensifying language; granted, but if the words are inane, what then? Music can have no meaning, but it is degraded and out of place by the association. Many examples might be quoted where other successful authors besides M. Offenbach have enriched themselves (but not their art) by adapting light, "pretty wriggle," called music, to the veriest nonsensical rubbish, which is nothing more than an insult to common sense. Yet it is received nightly with loud acclamations. I am afraid there is much truth in Thomas Carlyle's estimate of the inhabitants of this island. Surely the self abnegation, as shown by Henry Smart's unselfish life and the high tone of his writing, deserves something more than the barren laurels of journalistic commendation! I would respectfully suggest to the Committee of the Henry Smart Memorial Fund, that they delay disbursing the small sum they have in hand. Efforts should be made to add to the fund, and make it a more worthy offering to the memory and the honour of England's greatest musicians.

The proceeds of our musical festivals could not be more worthily bestowed than in aiding the formation of a "Henry Smart Benevolent Fund," for the use and encouragement of those who have, and who may yet distinguish themselves as composers of high-class music.

A re-issue in cheap pamphlet form of the letters that were addressed to the Musical Standard on the above subject, would prove of interest to many, who might be induced to add to the fund.

I am, yours truly,
THOS. HOPKINSON.

4, Pryme Street, Hull,
June 11th, 1883.

"THE GREGORIAN ASSOCIATION FESTIVAL BOOK."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "MUSICAL STANDARD."

SIR,—"Mus.Bac. Oxon." is right in saying that religious controversy is out of place in the columns of the Musical Standard, but your reviewer did not enter into any controversy; he merely and rightly stated that the celebration of the Festival of Corpus Christi is not sanctioned by the Church of England as established by law. "Mus. Bac." has no argument with regard to dedication and harvest festivals, for these do not involve the surreptitious introduction of doctrine or practice not in harmony with the Protestant position of the Anglican Church, as does the celebration of the Corpus Christi Festival, of the Roman branch of the Christian community. The Corpus Christi Festival was unknown in the earlier and purer ages of the Church, and only established as late as 1264 (some authorities with less evidence say 1249), and the festival was rejected by the reformers of the 16th century. If, as "Mus. Bac." asserts, the festival is now largely honoured in the Anglican Church, two propositions are set forth, viz., that law is powerless to direct the changing opinions of the religious world, and that the Anglican Church shelters within her fold many persons who have little sympathy with her tenets as legally established, and doubtless from earnest conviction are determined to make her conform more and more to the practices of the Roman Church. Like your reviewer, I offer no opinion and decline to enter into any controversy, merely contenting myself with the assertion that the Committee of the Gregorian Association can find no legal sanction for the recognition of the festival in question in the Protestant Anglican Church; while dedication, harvest, and musical festivals, as involving no outside doctrine, may be celebrated, and illustrate that freedom of action, peculiar to the Anglican Church, the elasticity of which the Gregorian Association seems inclined to overstrain. I do not venture to say what is right, or what is wrong spiritually or morally; I only refer to the question of legality. It would be a matter of interest to know why the Gregorian Association Festival at St. Paul's was, to use a polite expression, "unavoidably postponed"; and whether or not there is any truth in the idea that the Service Book involved too great a doctrinal flavour to justify the consent of the Cathedral authorities, usually so cordially given, and under the expectation of a possible disturbance to so cause the Association to retreat to St. Alban's, Holborn. Musically, I can but wish that every success will attend the labours of the Gregorian Association, and trust that every branch of the One Catholic Church will be taught to make a discreet and earnest use of the grand old ecclesiastical melodies.

Yours, etc.,
AN ORGANIST.

SUNDAY SCHOOL FESTIVAL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "MUSICAL STANDARD."

SIR,—Kindly permit me, through your columns, to invite the aid of tenors and basses of Church choirs for the annual Festival of the Church of England Sunday School Choirs, to take place at the Crystal Palace, on the afternoon, of Saturday, July 21st. A rehearsal will take place, at Albion Hall, London Wall, E.C., on the 9th of July, at 7.30 p.m., a ticket for which I will gladly forward to any gentleman who will forward me his name and address. The music consists of anthems, hymns, glees and part-songs, and will be issued to those taking part in the festival at a small charge.

Yours, &c.,
T. EARLE.

Digitized by Google

Passing Events.

Mozart's "Idomeneo," after a neglect of more than 20 years, has been revived at Munich.

There is a sense of relief in the practical retirement of Sir M. Costa from the conductorship of the Handel Festival.

The retirement of Mr. Cusins, a step to be regretted just now, puts another anxious burden upon the Philharmonic directors in the appointment of a successor.

A selection from Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" will be sung at Christ Church, Clapham, on Sunday evening, the 24th inst., St. John the Baptist's Day, under the direction of Mr. William Sewell.

Mr. Thomas and Dr. Damrosch, with their respective orchestras, have been, and are still, touring through America, giving admirable concerts, and playing a good deal of high-class music.

Mr. W. S. Hoyte, one of the few artists who make both organ and pianoforte their special study with marked success, announces an attractive recital, at which he will perform Bennett's "Maid of Orleans" sonata.

Mr. Henry Bird, at once an accomplished pianist and organist, gave his fifth annual concert at Collard's Rooms, on June 14th. The programme had, as two interesting features, a pianoforte Quartet in A minor by F. Kiel, and a similar work in E flat by Rheinberger.

The Dean and Chapter of York have announced their intention of advertising for candidates for the vacant organistship in their cathedral—a not very wise or necessary proceeding, because the question should surely be reduced to the examination of the names of a few men of repute who may choose to consider the appointment desirable.

The performance of the "Imperial" or "Nelson" Mass at a recent Richter concert was by no means a satisfactory undertaking, although the choir fairly claim praise for their department. The fantastic tempi the conductor chose to adopt was often utterly destructive to the character of the music, and the unfortunate departures from the composer's clear design in the use of the organ many critics cannot altogether overlook.

At Madame Antoinette Stirling's recent morning concert at St. James's Hall, a formidable array of singing stars appeared. The lady herself sang charmingly, though perhaps succeeding best in English music. Mr. Sims Reeves was in good voice. Mr. Santley also sang. The "Family Quartet" (the Coward family), gave much pleasure by their artistic performances. An interesting feature to musicians was the performance of Schumann's "Dichter-liebe" (1840), a cyclus of songs and a work of much character and beauty.

Selections from Mendelssohn's "Elijah" were given at St. John's Cathedral, Denver, Colorado, U. S., on May 25th. The Dean delivered a short synopsis of the intention of the oratorio, pointing out the salient features of the parts to be rendered. The soloists were Miss Callie Brinker, Miss Etta Butler, Mr. W. C. Nevin, Mr. Benj. Ives. Mr. Walter E. Hall was the organist, and Mr. Frank Damrosch, the son of Dr. Damrosch, acted as conductor. The chorus consisted of the Damrosch choral society and members of the cathedral choir. The skill of the organist and the many artistic features of the performance gave much pleasure.

The Querist.

QUERY.

ORCHESTRA v. PIANOFORTE.—Is it necessary, advisable, or correct to use a piano in a string band numbering twenty-two performers, unless the piano has a special and solo part?—W. T. J.

REPLY.

W. T. J.—The pianoforte should not be used save when a properly written part has been assigned to it by the composer. The instrument has but little sympathy with the orchestral functions, and is absolutely injurious to the development of a young orchestra, save when used with rare discretion.—EDITOR.

Service Lists.

FOURTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.
JUNE 17th.

London.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Garret in F; Introit, Lead us, Heavenly Father; Holy Communion, Weber in E flat. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Gadsby in C; Anthem, Whoso dwelleth under the defence (Martin).

WESTMINSTER ABBEY.—Morn.: Service, Turle in D; Continuation, Bridge in G. Even.: Service, Attwood in A; Anthem, Praise the Lord, O my soul (Mozart).

TEMPLE CHURCH.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum Laudamus, Cooke in G; Apostles' Creed, Harmonised Monotone; Anthem, Glory, honour, praise and power (Mozart). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Cooke in G; Apostles' Creed, Harmonized Monotone; Anthem, Ascribe unto the Lord (Travers).

LINCOLN'S INN CHAPEL.—Morn.: Service, Hatton in E; Kyrie, Steggall; Anthem, I beheld, and lo, a great multitude (Blow). Even: Service, Goss in A; Anthem, God came from Teman (Steggall).

CHRIST CHURCH, CLAPHAM.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Plain-song; Kyrie and Credo, Weber in E flat; Offertory Anthem, In the sight of the unwise (Ouseley); Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei, and Gloria in excelsis, Weber. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Smart in F; Anthem, What are these that are arrayed (Stainer).

FOUNDLING CHAPEL.—Morn.: Service, Barnby in E; Te Deum and Jubilate, Sullivan in D; Anthem, I was glad (Attwood). Aft.: Service, Dykes in F; Anthem, Blessed be Thou (Kent).

HOLY TRINITY, TULSE HILL.—Morn.: Chant Service. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Garrett in D; Anthem, Remember now thy Creator (Steggall).

ST. MICHAEL'S, CORNHILL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Thorne in C; Anthem, I have set God (Goldwin); Kyrie, Sullivan; Creed, Stainer in G. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Garrett in F; Anthem, Praise the Lord (Croft).

ST AUGUSTINE AND ST. FAITH, WATLING STREET.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Walmisley in F; Benedictus, Hopkins in F; Communion Service, Eyre in E flat; Offertory, Blessed are they (Tours). Even.: Service, Attwood in F; Anthem, How lovely are Thy dwellings (Spohr).

ST. PETER'S (EATON SQUARE).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Sergison in A. Evensong: Service, Eaton Faning in C; Anthem, O where shall wisdom (Boyce).

ST. MAGNUS, LONDON BRIDGE.—Morn.: Service, Opening Anthem, I will arise (Cecil); Te Deum and Jubilate, Travers in F; Kyrie, Mendelssohn. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Travers in F; Anthem, I was glad (Horsley).

ST. JAMES'S PRIVATE EPISCOPAL CHAPEL, SOUTHWARK.—Morn.: Service, Introit, O Lamb of God (Mozart); Communion Service, Garrett in F. Even.: Service, Garrett in F; Anthem, Rejoice in the Lord (Purcell).

ST. SAVIOUR'S, HOXTON.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Goss in F; Holy Communion; Kyrie, Credo, Sursum Corda, Sanctus, and Gloria in excelsis, Dykes in F. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Parry in D; Anthem, O taste and see (Goss).

ST. PAUL'S, AVENUE ROAD, SOUTH HAMPSTEAD.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Hopkins in G; Benedictus, Barnby; Kyrie, Merbecke; Offertory, Barnby; Credo, Sanctus, and Gloria in excelsis, Merbecke. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Smart in F; Anthem, He watching over Israel, from "Elijah" (Mendelssohn).

ST. SEPULCHRE'S, HOLBORN.—Morn: Service, Nares in F; Anthem, O taste and see (Goss). Even.: Service, Cooke in G; Anthem, Blessed be the God and Father (Wesley).

ST. PETER'S, LEIGHAM COURT ROAD, STREATHAM, S.W.—Morn.: Holy Eucharist, Purge me with hyssop (Chantwise); Introit, The Lord is my light (Chantwise); Mass, Osborne in E flat; Gradual, Be merciful (Chantwise); Offertory, If we have sown (Osborne). Even.: Service, Magnificat, Gadsby in C; Anthem, As pants the hart (Spohr).

ST. PAUL'S, BOW COMMON, E.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Chants; Holy Communion; Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus, and Gloria in excelsis, Garrett in D; Agnus Dei, Monk in C; Offertory, Calkin. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Parry in D; Anthem, What are these (Stainer).

Digitized by Google

ST. MARY BOLTONS, WEST BROMPTON, S.W.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Dykes in F; Holy Communion, Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei, and Gloria in excelsis, Monk in C; Offertory, Barnby. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Parry in D; Anthem, What are these (Stainer).

ST. MARGARET PATTENS, ROOD LANE, FENCHURCH STREET.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Tuckerman in F; Communion Service: Offertory Anthem, On Thee each living soul (Haydn); Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei and Gloria, Hummel in B flat. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Garrett in F; Anthem, I will mention (Sullivan).

ST. BARNABAS, MARYLEBONE.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Travers in F; Anthem, Turn thy face (Attwood); Kyrie and Nicene Creed, Travers in F. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Travers in F; Anthem, Be thou faithful; and See what love (Mendelssohn).

ST. PETER'S, VERE STREET, W.—Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Gadsby in C; Anthem, Rejoice in the Lord alway (Purcell).

ALL SAINTS, MARGARET STREET.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Stainer; Holy Communion, Weber in G; Offertory Anthem, From Thy love as a Father, from "Redemption" (Gounod). Even.: Service, Garrett in F; Anthem, Hear my prayer (Mendelssohn).

Country.

ST. ASAPH CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, King in C; Anthem, Sweet is Thy mercy (Barnby). Even.: Service, The Litany; Anthem, The Lord is my light (Hiles).

ASHBURNE CHURCH, DERBYSHIRE. — Morn.: Service, Steggall in G; Kyrie, Credo, and Gloria, Eyre in E flat. Even.: Service, Thackwray in C; Anthem, Blessed be the God and Father (Wesley).

BEDDINGTON CHURCH, SURREY.—Morn.: Service, Garrett in F; Introit, O what the joy and the glory; Communion Service, Garrett in F. Even.: Service, Garrett in F; Anthem, I will alway give thanks (Whitfeld).

BIRMINGHAM (ST. CYPRIAN'S, HAY MILLS).—Morn.: Service, Field in D; Anthem, I waited for the Lord (Mendelssohn). Even.: Service, Clarke-Whitfeld in E; Anthem, Unto Thee have I cried (Elvey).

BIRMINGHAM (S. ALBAN THE MARTYR).—Morn.: Service, Holy Communion: Introit, Kyrie, Credo, Offertory, Sursum Corda, and Sanctus, Smart in F; Benedictus and Agnus Dei, Redman in F; Paternoster and Gloria, Smart in F. Evensong: Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Barnby in E.

BIRMINGHAM (S. PHILIP'S CHURCH). — Morn.: Service, Best, Chant Service; Holy Communion, Woodward in E flat. Evensong: Service, Hopkins in F; Anthem, O come, let us worship (Mendelssohn).

BRISTOL CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Garrett in D. Even.: Service, Garrett in D; Anthem, Hear my prayer (Kent).

CANTERBURY CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Barnby in B flat; Te Deum, Hopkins in B flat; Jubilate, Praise the Lord (Scott); Communion. Even.: Service, Roberts in G; Anthem, Ponder my words (Corfe).

CARLISLE CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Mendelssohn in A; Introit, Blessed is the man (Stainer); Kyrie, Mendelssohn; Nicene Creed, Harmonized Monotone. Even.: Service, Cooke in C; Anthem, Come, said a voice, and Behold the Lamb that has sacrificed (Spohr).

DONCASTER (PARISH CHURCH).—Morn.: Service, Boyce in C. Even.: Service, Ebdon in C; Anthem, O taste and see (Goss).

DUBLIN, ST. PATRICK'S (NATIONAL) CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Stanford in B flat; Communion, Kyrie, Creed, and Sanctus, Stanford in B flat; Anthem, Blessing, glory, wisdom (Bach). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Stanford in B flat; Anthems, O Lord, my God, hear Thou (Stewart); The Lord is a man of war (Handel).

EXETER CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, King in C; Communion, Gilbert in E. Even.: Service, Hopkins in F; Anthem, O come hither (Crotch).

ELY CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Ouseley in G; Kyrie and Credo, Ouseley in G; Gloria, "Ely"; Anthem, I know that the Lord (Ouseley). Even.: Service, Ouseley in G; Anthem, As pants the hart (Spohr).

GLOUCESTER CATHEDRAL. — Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Mendelssohn in A; Kyrie and Creed, Turle in D; Anthem, In Thy sight (Ouseley). Aft.: Service, Walmisley in D; Anthem, Let us lift up (Wesley).

LLANDAFF CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Smart in F; Introit, I am the bread of life (Stainer); Holy Communion, Smart in F. Even.: Service, Anthem, Wherewithal shall a young man (Elvey).

LIVERPOOL CATHEDRAL.—Aft.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Calkin in B flat; Anthem, Plead Thou my cause (Mozart).

LEEDS PARISH CHURCH.—Morn.: Service, Chants, 100, 101, 155; Anthem, O rest in the Lord (Mendelssohn); Kyrie and Creed, King in C. Even.: Service, Cooke in G; Anthem, The souls of the righteous (Nares).

LICHFIELD CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Calkin in B flat; Anthem, He that shall endure (Mendelssohn). Even: Service, Calkin in B flat; Anthem, What are these? (Stainer).

MANCHESTER CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Tours in F; Holy Communion, Tours in F; Anthem, As pants the hart (Spohr). Aft.: Service, Tours in F; Anthem, Remember now (Steggall).

MANCHESTER (ST. BENEDICT'S). — Morn.: Service, Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei, and Gloria in excelsis, Monk in C. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Wesley in F.

MANCHESTER (ST. JOHN BAPTIST, HULME).—Morn.: Service, Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, and Gloria in excelsis, Dykes in F; Benedictus and Agnus Dei, Calkin in B flat. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Redhead.

PETERBOROUGH CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Goss in A; Anthem, As pants the hart (Spohr); Communion Service, Tours in F. Even.: Service, Fitzgerald in B flat; Anthem, Praise the Lord (Mozart).

SHEFFIELD PARISH CHURCH. — Morn.: Service, Kyrie, Sullivan in D. Even.: Service, Trimnell in D; Anthem, O rest in the Lord (Mendelssohn).

SHERBORNE ABBEY.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Chants; Kyrie, Howells; Offertories, Barnby. Even.: Service, Anthem, O Lord the protector (Corfe).

SOUTHAMPTON (ST. MARY'S CHURCH).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Woodward in E flat; Communion Service: Introit, They that put their trust (Macfarren); Service, Woodward in E flat; Offertory, Barnby; Paternoster, Field. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Woodward in E flat; Apostles' Creed, Harmonized Monotone; Anthem, Blessed be the God (Wesley).

WELLS CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Rogers in G; Introit, Behold, to obey (Macfarren); Kyrie, Browne in G. Even.: Service, King in A; Anthem, O Lord my God (Nares).

 Post-cards must be sent to the Editor, 6, Argyle Square, W.C., by Wednesday. Lists are frequently omitted in consequence of not being received in time.

NEWSPAPERS sent should have distinct marks opposite to the matter to which attention is required.

NOTICE.—All communications intended for the Editor are to be sent to his private address. Business communications to be addressed to 185, Fleet Street, E.C.

[The attention of the several Organists is called to the favour they confer upon their brother musicians by forwarding their notices regularly: this column of the paper is much valued as an index to what is going on in the choice of cathedral music, so much so that intermissions constantly give rise to remonstrance. Lists should be sent in a week in advance if possible.—ED. Mus. Stand.]

HENRY SPEECHLY,

CAMDEN ORGAN STEAM FACTORY,

KING'S ROAD, ST. PANCRAS, LONDON, N.W.

ESTABLISHED 1860.

Specifications and Estimates for Organs of any Magnitude, also for Reconstructions, Repairs, and Re-voicing.

Tunings contracted for, and Tuners sent to all parts of the Country at regular intervals or when required.

ORGANS ON HIRE WITH OPTION OF PURCHASE.

 Church, Chamber, and Chancel Organs for Sale or Hire; One or Two Manuals. Ready for immediate use. Easy Terms if required.

☞ All Pipes and other Parts manufactured on the Premises.

BEETHOVEN'S SYMPHONIES CRITICALLY DISCUSSED. By A. T. TEETGEN. 3s. 6d.

FREDERIC CHOPIN; His Life, Letters, and Works. By M. KARASOWSKI. Translated by E. HILL. 2 vols., 12s. 6d.

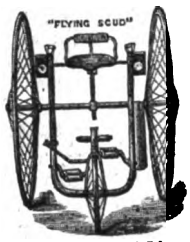
ELEMENTARY MUSIC. By Dr. WESTBROOK. 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

TO ORGANISTS and CHOIRMASTERS.—VOCAL EXERCISES for CHOIRS and SCHOOLS, by Dr. WESTBROOK, in neat cover, 2d.

London: W REEVES, 185, Fleet-street

Digitized by Google

BICYCLES AND TRICYCLES.
NEW AND SECOND-HAND.



"FLYING SCUD" and "ECLECTIC" TRICYCLES, are the Machines for 1883. Spoken of by the Daily News of January 30th as "Splendid machines." "NANCY LEE," Weldless Steel," and "NONSUCH" Steel Bicycles, from £5 5s. Any machine at maker's price for twelve or less equal monthly payments, or for £5 down and 20s. per month, or large discount and carriage paid for cash. Can be seen and tried before purchasing in our school (60 by 40, concrete floor, tuition free), adjoining Show-rooms, the largest in London, with over 400 new and second-hand on View. Machines bought, sold, cleaned, repaired (estimates given), warehoused, advanced upon and exchanged.

Illustrated Lists post free. Hours 9 till 7; Saturdays till 4.

Repairs of all kinds neatly, cheaply, and promptly executed. Cheapest house in the trade for fittings. Parts and sundries of all descriptions kept in stock.

Machines Let on Hire with Option of Purchase.

SOUTH LONDON MACHINISTS' COMPANY.

STEAM WORKS: Suffolk Works, Suffolk Grove, Great Suffolk Street, S.E. Show Rooms and Offices: 28 and 29, Suffolk Grove. Bicycle and Tricycle School: 18, Suffolk Grove. City Depot, Show Rooms, and School: Tower Chambers, Moorgate Street, E.C. (Nearly opposite Moorgate Street Station.) PERAMBULATORS and all Domestic Machines at lowest prices for cash, or on easy terms without extra charge. Lists free. State kind required.

ESTABLISHED 1872.

When writing please say where you saw this advertisement.

T. R. WILLIS,

Organ Builder, Metal & Wood Pipe Maker and Voicer,

TOWER ORGAN WORKS, 29, MINORIES, LONDON.

AN ORGAN KEPT FOR PRACTICE.

REBUILDING, TUNING, AND REPAIRING.

E & W. SNELL,

Manufacturers of Harmoniums, and Reed Pedal Organs,

KING STREET NORTH, CAMDEN TOWN, LONDON, N.W.

NOTE.—These are the only Instruments at which an Organist can really find himself "at home," as all Scales, Positions, and Measurements are adopted strictly in accordance with the Resolutions of the Council of the College of Organists. Estimates free.

MALEY, YOUNG & OLDKNOW,
ORGAN BUILDERS,

KING'S ROAD, ST. PANCRAS, LONDON, N.W.

Specifications, Estimates, and Designs for Church, Chamber, Concert, and all Descriptions of Organs.
Materials, Workmanship, and Tone guaranteed to be First Class.
Organs rebuilt to suit any position, enlarged, and Revoiced at very moderate charges.
Tunings in all parts of the Kingdom.

PROSPECTUS FREE ON APPLICATION.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts, excepting under exceptional circumstances.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit, at Three per cent. interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables, the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons, and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares, and Annuities.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

The Birkbeck Building Society's Annual Receipts exceed Five Millions.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with immediate Possession, and no Rent to Pay.—Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate Possession, either for Building or Gardening purposes.—Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

WITH 25 PER CENT DISCOUNT FOR CASH, OR 15/- PER MONTH, SECOND HAND 10/0 Per Month ON THE 3 YEARS' SYSTEM.

BORD'S PIANOS

PIANOS EXCHANGED. LISTS FREE OF

C. STILES & Co., 42 SOUTHAMPTON ROW, W.C.

CONSTANT LAURENT, HARMONIUM and ANGLO-ORGAN MANUFACTURER, Established in 1859 at 85, HIGH STREET, MARYLEBONE, LONDON, W.—Repairing and Tuning Executed Promptly. Price List on Application.—Intending Purchasers are respectfully solicited to inspect my Instruments and Factory.

EUSTACE INGRAM, Organ Builder,

Combines excellence of Tone and Workmanship with Economy.

INSPECTION INVITED.

WORKS:—Burnard Place, Eden Grove, Holloway, London, N.

PASTORALE from Corelli's CHRISTMAS CONCERTO. Arranged for Organ by E. H. TURPIN.—Price 4s. WEEKES & CO., 14, Hanover-street, W.

"HARMONY SIMPLIFIED."

A Concise Treatise on Harmony, Thorough Bass, and Modulation, for the Use of Students. By FARLEY NEWMAN. In paper cover, 1s. 6d. net; bound in cloth, 2s. 6d. net.

"THE ORGAN OLIO."

Edited by ARTHUR HENRY BROWN. A Collection of Short Pieces for the Organ or Harmonium, by various Composers. 2s. net.

London: B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster-row, E.C.

MUSIC SENT ON SALE OR RETURN on highly advantageous terms by B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster-row, London.

MUSIC of EVERY PUBLISHER supplied to Dealers, Teachers, and Schools. Having the largest varied Stock Europe. The terms, which are highly advantageous, sent on application

London: B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster-row.

ORGANS.—FACTS about ORGANS. Guide to the Purchase of an Organ; How to Order or Select one; What will it cost? By Dr. HINTON. Price 1s.—W. REEVES, 185, Fleet-street, London.

POPULAR CLASSICS,

A SELECTION OF STERLING COMPOSITIONS

FOR THE

PIANOFORTE.

SEVENTH SERIES.

		NETT. s.	d.
73.	Haydn's Fantasia in C	4	0
74.	Chopin's Polonaise in A. Op. 40	3	0
75.	Scarlatti's Sonata in A. No. 31	3	0
76.	Hummel's Rondeau villageoise. Op. 122..	4	0
77.	Mendelssohn's Andante in E minor. Op. 7, No. 1	3	0
78.	Bach's Prelude in B flat. 1st Partita	2	0
79.	Dussek's Adagio from "L'Invocation." Op. 77	3	0
80.	Chopin's Berceuse. Op. 57	3	0
81.	Weber's Adagio from Sonata. Op. 24	3	0
82.	Hummel's La bella capriciosa. Op. 55	6	0
83.	Bach's Allemande in B flat. 1st Partita	3	0
84.	Mendelssohn's Andante and Rondo capriccioso. Op. 14..	4	0

SELECTED, EDITED, AND FINGERED BY

WALTER MACFARREN.

LONDON:

EDWIN ASHDOWN, Hanover-square.

Printed for the Proprietor by BOWDEN, HUDSON & Co., at 22, Red Lion Street, Holborn, London, W.C.; and Published by WILLIAM REEVES, at the Office, 185, Fleet Street, E.C. West End Agents:—WEEKES & CO., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W. Subscriptions and Advertisements are received either by the Publisher or West End Agents.—Communications for the EDITOR are to be forwarded to his private address, 6, Argyle Square, W.C

SATURDAY, JUNE 16, 1883.—Entered at the General Post Office as a Newspaper.

Digitized by Google

The Musical Standard

A Newspaper for Musicians Professional and Amateur

No. 986. Vol. XXIV. Fourth Series. SATURDAY, JUNE 23, 1883. Weekly: Price 3d.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—Instituted 1822.
Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.
Under the immediate patronage of
Her Most Gracious Majesty the QUEEN and the Royal Family.
President—The Right Hon. the Earl of DUDLEY.
Principal—Professor Sir G. A. MACFARREN, Mus.D., Cantab.

The NEXT STUDENTS' ORCHESTRAL CONCERT, open to subscribers, members, associates, and licentiates, will take place at ST. JAMES'S HALL, on WEDNESDAY MORNING, JUNE 27th, at 2.30. Conductor, Mr. William Shakespeare.—Stalls, 5s.; balcony or area, 2s. 6d.; admission, 1s. Tickets may be obtained at the institution, and at St. James's Hall.

By order, JOHN GILL, Secretary,
Royal Academy of Music, Tenterden Street, Hanover Square, London.

THE LONDON MUSIC PUBLISHING and GENERAL AGENCY COMPANY (Limited). Incorporated under the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1880. The Liability of Shareholders is limited to the amount of their Shares. Capital Ten Thousand Pounds, in 10,000 Shares of £1 each, of which 5s. per Share will be payable on Application, and 5s. on Allotment. Two clear months' notice will be given of future calls.

DIRECTORS.

Professor Sir G. A. MACFARREN, Mus.D. Cantab., Chairman, 7, Hamilton Terrace, N.W.
Sir Julius Benedict, 2, Manchester Square, W.
F. Davenport, Esq., Ridge House, near Barnet, N.
Thomas Ward, Esq. (Managing Director), 180, Oxford Street, W.

BANKERS.

London and County Bank (Limited), Oxford Street Branch.

SOLICITORS.

Messrs. H. A. Lovett and Co., 47 and 48, King William Street, City, E.C.

AUDITOR.

Mr. J. J. Kent, Public Accountant, 55, Basinghall Street, E.C.

SECRETARY.
Mr. A. W. White.

Registered Offices—180, Oxford Street, London, W.

PROSPECTUS.

The Directors believe that, notwithstanding the activity of private publishing firms, full provision in some particulars has not even yet been made for the growth of the national musical taste, and that a large field of operations is open in facilitating the publication of meritorious works by young and unknown musicians. To secure so far as possible against the issue of music that would be unworthy of public attention, a jury of three musicians will examine works offered for publication, which will be accepted or otherwise according to the verdict of these judges. Inasmuch as the profits of the music trade are large, which is evident from the high financial position of many members of the trade, the Directors have every confidence that the profits arising from this branch of their business alone will be sufficient to pay a good and increasing dividend.

The Company being desirous of meeting the requirements of the large number of persons who very justly complain that the present high price of pianofortes places the attainment of a really good instrument quite beyond their reach, have determined to supply for cash genuine pianofortes, which for volume of tone, quality of touch, solidity of construction, durability, and finish, compare most favourably with the productions of the best makers, both English and Foreign, and at prices which have never before been attempted. This they will be enabled to do by supplying the instruments direct from their factory at first cost, and as they will supply for cash only, it is obvious that purchasers dealing with the Company will save the amount usually added for credit, middle profits, and bad debts. The prices at which these instruments will be sold will range from 10 to 40 guineas, and as this tariff will inevitably command a large sale, and is sufficiently remunerative to yield a fair profit, a considerable and safe income from this branch of the business may be relied upon.

The General Agency Branch of the Company's operations (which will comprise the business usually carried on by Trade Protection Societies, including the collection of debts and the transaction of all business in any way connected with the Music Trade and Profession), although it will not occupy the most prominent position therein, will doubtless contribute largely to the Company's returns. The number of subscribers to the Trade Protection Department may, at a low estimate, be fairly taken at 250 for the first year, and if each subscriber only gives debts to the ridiculously small amount of £150 to collect, the commission at £5 per cent. on the total amount, together with the subscriptions of members, will produce an income of upwards of £2,000, to which, of course, must be added the profits on the manufacture and sale of musical instruments, sale of music, the engagement of vocalists and instrumentalists, the management of concerts, &c.

The services of Mr. Thomas Ward have been secured as Managing Director, and the Company will thus reap the advantages of his large and varied experience, and extensive connection with the music trade and profession.

It is proposed to call up 10s. per share only in the first instance, viz., 5s. on application and 5s. on allotment. Two clear calendar months' notice will be given of future calls.

Applications for Shares to be made to the Secretary, at the Offices of the Company, accompanied by a remittance of 5s. per Share. If no allotment is made, the amount paid on application will be returned in full.

MAKERS AND REPAIRERS.
GEORGE WITHERS & CO.
(Late of Coventry Street),
WHOLESALE IMPORTERS OF
MUSICAL STRINGS,
From Rome, Padua, and Naples.
A FINE COLLECTION OF ITALIAN INSTRUMENTS.
Bows, Cases, Music Stands, &c. See Price Lists.
51, ST. MARTIN'S LANE, LONDON.

HELE & COMPANY,
ORGAN BUILDERS,
WYNDHAM STREET, PLYMOUTH.
London Agency: Mr. W. H. HELE, 69, Gresham St., E.C.

Organs of any magnitude contracted for. Professional attendance when desired.

Extract from testimony by E. H. Turpin, Esq., of College of Organists, referring to organ at St. John's Church, Waterloo Road, S.E.:—

"To Messrs. Hele and Co. very high praise is due for the judgment and skill with which they have accomplished the rebuilding of the instrument. All the foundation work I noticed to be round, even, and admirably voiced. The "chorus" struck me as being well balanced and decisive, without being instrusive or too pronounced above the 8-feet work. The reeds are of very high quality, at once rich and characteristic in tone. The solo registers I found to be after their several types—delicate and finished in quality of tone and in their voicing. The mechanism throughout a trying night's work never failed me, and it is everywhere true, reliable, and admirable. My impressions were so pleasant, that I feel it is a duty to express an unqualified approval of the labours of the very able organ builders."

THE ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER of Cirencester Abbey desires RE-ENGAGEMENT. 14 years' Cathedral experience.—Address as above.

WAGNER'S "PERSIFAL."—Twelve Performances of the late RICHARD WAGNER'S "PERSIFAL," will be given at BAYREUTH, on alternate days, from July 8th.—Travelling Tickets may be had from THOMAS COOK & SON, Ludgate Circus; or 35, Piccadilly, where Plans of the Seats may be seen.

FIRST AND SECOND GRADES JUST PUBLISHED.
PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH.
Under the Sanction and Approval of the Rev. Sir FREDERICK A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart., M.A., Mus.Doc. Oxford, and of Sir G. A. MACFARREN, Mus.Doc., Cambridge.

THE MUSICIAN.

A GUIDE FOR PIANOFORTE STUDENTS.

Helps towards the Better Understanding and Enjoyment of Beautiful Music.
By RIDLEY PRENTICE.

"We are far from suggesting that there is any royal road for acquiring technical knowledge, but we are quite certain that Mr. Ridley Prentice's road is in every way the pleasantest that has yet been laid before any pianoforte student. If anyone will work through this first grade conscientiously, by the time he has reached the end of it he will have mastered many difficulties in harmony and musical form which he might have hitherto thought were almost insurmountable. The work supplies a deficiency in musical literature which has long been felt; and we earnestly recommend the study of it to all those who wish to become intelligent pianoforte players."—Saturday Review.

"A knowledge of form is imparted in simple and pleasant language. This is the right sort of instruction book, for it teaches people to think and study for themselves. We heartily commend it to all who desire to understand, satisfactorily interpret, and enjoy beautiful music."—Academy.

SECOND EDITION READY.
THE CHILD'S PIANOFORTE BOOK; a First Year's Course of the Piano, by H. K. MOORE, Mus.B., B.A., illustrated, 4to, 3s. 6d.

W. SWAN SONNENSCHEIN & CO., Paternoster Row
And all Book and Music Sellers.

Digitized by Google

Musical Intelligence.

THE HANDEL FESTIVAL AT THE ORYSTAL PALACE.

Beautiful and unique as the Crystal Palace is, with all its lovely surroundings; with its countless attractions within the building; with its large and efficient staff of professors and teachers in arts and science, and with its powerful influence, exerted on behalf of the best possible music; the bare fact of its being able only to keep its head just above water, financially, is not an agreeable one to digest, and reflects not a little on our refined and æsthetic age. The shareholders of the Crystal Palace may, however, have this consolation, that the work carried on there is bearing fruit, the result of which will have a most refining influence on their children and others. With regard to music, it has for nearly a generation been associated with our greatest composers, several of whom have found an English home there, and nowhere in the world has Handel's music been given with such magnificence and grandeur. Such performances as those given at the Handel festival are impressive in the highest sense, and notwithstanding the much talked of "new departure" from antiquated paths, we become more than ever devoted to the grand old master, whose works were often feebly and inadequately interpreted in the days of our youth. But on the other hand it is to be regretted that this very perfection makes us less tolerant of more humble attempts in Handel's music, and the introduction of noisy brass bands in our villages, with harmoniums in our village churches superseding the old-fashioned strings and reeds, has, alas! caused Handel's music to become quite a thing of the past in many places where he was once thoroughly enjoyed. Formerly the greatest achievment of a country choir was to be able to prepare a few of Handel's songs and choruses, for what was called the "charity sermon," and Handel himself must have heard and encouraged humble efforts of this kind, as the following true anecdote will show:—Going along a country road one evening, he overtook an aged rustic, with a 'cello under his arm, and asked him where he was going with his instrument. "I'm going, sir to practise Mr. Handel's music, for next charity sermon." Handel: "Don't you find his music rather tough, especially when you get much among the sharps and flats?" Rustic: "Well, sir, some on it is tough enough; but we generally stick to his easy pieces, and when we get to an out-of-the-way thing, with a many sharps or flats, we follow Jack the blacksmith's rule." Handel: "Ah, and what's that?" Rustic, emphatically: "Why, sir, he leaves 'em all out, and so do we." Handel laughed heartily, but warmly urged the old man for the future to steer clear of hard keys and frequent accidentals.

The history of Handel's compositions is well known to all musicians, but his fine example as a man can never be sufficiently estimated. Tortured by his frequent failures, by bitter persecution and bodily anguish, he suddenly became inspired with a noble desire to devote himself entirely to the production of grander works than his former ones, thereby soothing his afflictions, and procuring fame to a greater extent than he could ever have anticipated. But fame was the result of his magnificent labours, not the object of them. His desire, as he himself tells us, was to compose music, "not merely for the entertainment of his hearers, but to make them better." How grand and touching, therefore, to see this honest, truth-telling, God-fearing man, in the midst of adversity, nobly struggling at first to obtain a hearing for those grand conceptions which were destined to become as immortal as the works of Homer or Shakespeare. "It is always interesting," writes Mr. Besant, in one of his new works, "to read in the biographies of writers, great or small, how at the outset the candidate for glory is invariably received with a most prodigious quantity of cuffs, coups de pied, thwacks, black eyes, snubs, disgraces, disappointments, down knockings, out kickings, rebuffs, rudenesses, broken promises, prejudices, cheats, robberies, rejections, woundings of vanity, pullings down of pride, dampings of ambition, and so forth. The most curious thing is, that all these kicks seem in the long run to be good for a man. They teach him, I believe, to feel for other people, and so help him to get a hold of them. And presently his wounds heal up, and you would never think, to see him, now so magnificent and triumphant, that he was once a mere down-trodden, squirming worm. Behold him! He leadeth the people by the ear, just as in old days they used to lead their captives by a hook in the nose, or as all-conquering Venus still drags her prisoners by a single hair."

One of the great features of Handel's oratorios, as differing from other sacred music of those days, was their preponderance in the way of choruses; he also greatly augmented the instrumentation, and it is amusing to find that he is often accused of excess and violence in his powerful choral combinations, and reproached with having exaggerated the orchestra; but no one ever dreamt of his impoverishing the vocal parts for the mere sake of orchestral effects, as some of our recent composers are doing. This is very much like making the instruments represent the statue, and the voices the pedestal; but as this question would occupy too much space if properly dealt with, I hasten to speak of

THE GRAND REHEARSAL.

The glowing sky with which we had become so familiar of late did not greet the visitors who, on the morning of the rehearsal, poured into the Crystal Palace, and the graceful summer costumes of the ladies consequently did not appear to so great advantage, especially when in a short time the rain came pouring down and so cooled the air, that on leaving the Palace those wise persons who had brought warm wraps were only too glad to make use of them. Some 6,000 persons more were present than on the corresponding day in 1880, and the scene, as witnessed from the galleries, was a very impressive one. The thousands of human beings in the orchestra, all more or less skilled musicians; the still larger number assembled in the nave, were all gathered together for one purpose, and that to honour the memory and to listen to the works of a man who died more than a century ago, and who, until past the middle age of life, was comparatively little appreciated by his contemporaries. The large audience was anxiously waiting to give Sir Michael Costa a hearty greeting, when it became generally known that he was too ill to undertake the weighty responsibility of the festival; but as the services of Mr. Manns, the able conductor of the Crystal Palace concerts, were available, no misgivings were felt as to the success of the undertaking. Doubtless the choir and orchestra who have so long enjoyed the advantage of Sir Michael's steady hand and unfailing tact, felt a slight pang of regret, but that was soon dispelled by their successful achievements in what may be called the test choruses; indeed, one of the most complicated, "Wretched lovers," was never better sung or more thoroughly enjoyed. The solos were entrusted to Mdme. Valleria, Mdme. Trebelli, Mdme. Patey, Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. Maas, Mr. Barton McGuckin, and Mr. Santley,—Mdme. Albani, the prima donna, reserving herself for the "Messiah." Of course at a rehearsal criticism would be in bad taste, but the above names are a guarantee that the solo singing was quite worthy of the occasion.

One of the ladies was just a little disappointing in her rendering of one of the songs which Mdme. Adelina Patti sings so exquisitely, and comparisons, though forbidden, were very naturally made; but the voice, as we know, is a most delicate organ, and is not always equal to the demands made upon it.

THE "MESSIAH."

Perhaps in some respects the "Messiah" is the most impressive performance of the whole festival, inasmuch as the subject of it transcends all others, and in these days, when infidelity is but too common, it is a sight one may well be thankful for, to behold thousands of persons listening with rapt attention to a work whose subject is the sum and substance of the Christian religion.

Seldom have the beautiful gardens of the Crystal Palace appeared more lovely than on Monday last—the shrubs and flowers, all refreshed by the rain of last week, so welcome after the long drought that in this neighbourhood preceded it. The sun for the most part shone brightly, and the occasional clouds tempered the heat that might otherwise have been too great. Most delightful was it during the interval, to enjoy the air and the extensive view from the balcony, to those especially who, coming from the crowded cities of our busy nation, seldom have time or opportunity to enjoy a view such as this. Within the Palace everything appeared admirably arranged, and, assisted by the courteous officials, both audience and performers, in spite of the crowd, made their way to their seats with but little difficulty. The enthusiasm with which the National Anthem was received must have been gratifying to those members of the royal family who honoured the performance by their presence. Immediately at its close, Mdme. Trebelli, Mr. Maas, and Signor Foli entered, and the overture began.

Digitized by Google

The "Messiah," which was at first rejected in London, April 12th, 1741, and afterwards was received at Dublin, and became the corner-stone of Handel's fame, was on no occasion in the history of the Handel festival more grandly performed than on Monday last. To speak of the different numbers in detail, both solos and choruses, with a string of adjectives, would occupy too much space, and perhaps savour too much of the penny local paper; I will, therefore, content myself by saying that the effect produced by the choir in the jubilant choruses: "For unto us," "Lift up your heads," the "Hallelujah," and "Worthy is the Lamb," with its "Amen," was grand and overwhelming; that in contrast, the pathetic choruses, "Behold the Lamb of God," and "Surely he hath borne our griefs," produced an impression of a more deep and solemn character; and that in none of the other choruses was there a single hitch to call for remark.

The efforts of the eminent soloists were also crowned with success, and it was interesting to notice the sympathy shown by each division of the choir to the vocalist whose compass of voice was similar to their own, Mdme. Trebelli and Mdme. Patey being the favourites of the altos, whilst Signor Foli and Mr. Santley were much applauded by the basses, and so on throughout. The greatest impression of all was made by Mdme. Albani's chaste and fervent interpretation of "I know that my Redeemer liveth," the effect being deeply and unanimously felt by the entire choir and audience.

The tempo of Mr. Manns was, taken as a whole, in strict accordance with Handelian traditions; two exceptions, however, were noticeable. The chorus, "And with His stripes"—one that cannot be hurried with impunity—was taken faster than usual; and the tenor solo, "But Thou didst not leave," suffered from the same cause, but in this case the alteration may possibly have been suggested by Mr. Maas, who sang the tenor part throughout, as Mdme. Albani did the soprano. Mdme. Trebelli and Signor Foli were succeeded in the second part by Mdme. Patey and Mr. Santley.

The organ, at which Mr. Willing ably presided, was heard to great advantage, having been entirely reconstructed and improved since the last festival. Of the admirable performance of the orchestra it is needless to speak, and my last words must be of congratulation to Mr. Manns, who conducted with such readiness and efficiency, that, though the absence of Sir Michael Costa was regretted, his presence could have added nothing to the perfection of this grand performance. R. S.

P.S.—The Selection day was a great success, but details cannot be given until next week.

RICHTER CONCERTS.

Last Monday, Herr Richter and his magnificent orchestra fairly surpassed even their own high standard of excellence; consequently expressions of approval, more fervent and prolonged than those which usually reward their ever-warmly appreciated efforts, proceeded from their highly critical audience. The overture to Tannhauser, as originally written, and as it must ever remain for concert-room purposes, headed the programme, and called forth an enthusiasm which was little short of an ovation; an enthusiasm which, once aroused, scarcely grew less throughout the evening. With this overture, perhaps the best known of Wagner's writings, the performers are, of course, thoroughly at home, and at one with their conductor; but even taking these facts into consideration, there remains something so unusually excellent in the performance, as to render it a memorable one. The return of the Pilgrim's Chant, above all, was given in a manner that Wagner himself must have pronounced perfect, and that vividly brought before the mind's eye his own picture of the scene:—"Day at length begins to dawn, and the song of the returning pilgrims is heard in the distance. As their song draws nearer, and day succeeds to night, that whirring and murmuring in the air, which but just now sounded to us like the horrible wail of the damned, gives way to more joyful strains, till at last, when the sun has risen in all its splendour, and the pilgrims' song with mighty inspiration proclaims to the world and to all that is and lives, salvation won, its surging sound swells into a rapturous torrent of sublime ecstasy."

"Perfection," however, is but a relative term, or one might be tempted to say of such a performance as this, "we can no further go." But all true artists have an unattainable goal, be they creators or interpreters. Like Mazeppa and his steed:—

"Dans le désert immense,
Dans l'horizon sans fin qui toujours recommence,
Ils se plongent."

PROGRAMME.

Overture, "Tannhaeuser"	Wagner.
Concerto in A minor, Op. 129, for Violoncello and Orchestra	Schumann.
Violoncello, Herr Hausmann.
Preislied, "Die Meistersinger"	Wagner.
Mr. Edward Lloyd.
Symphonic Poem, "Mazeppa"	Liszt.
Symphony, No. 2, in D	Brahms.

Schumann's concerto is more in the style of his beautiful sonatas for violin and piano, than of his symphonies, or his pianoforte works. The three movements of which it consists, follow each other without pause, and abound in expressions characteristic of their author; though, judged as a whole, the concerto cannot be said to rank among Schumann's most genial productions. Herr Hausmann has already established his position as an artist of the first rank. He was twice recalled at the conclusion of his difficult and grateful (though not so considered by Sir G. Grove), task. A similar compliment awaited Mr. Edward Lloyd for his rendering (in English!) of Walther's Prieslied. Mr. Corder had a hopeless task in hand when he undertook to re-produce this wild effusion in matter-of-fact English. There is something irresistibly ludicrous about the lines:—

"By rugged way
My feet did stray
Towards a mountain,
Where a fountain
Enslaved me with its sound."

and

"She stood beside me,
Who shall my bride be?" &c.

It is doubtful whether Walther would have obtained the prize if, like Mr. Lloyd, he had delivered his address in English.

Thanks to Mr. Bache, and Mr. Manns, Liszt's "Mazeppa" is not altogether unknown to us. Like Schumann's concerto, which preceded it, it consists of three movements; the first and last in quick time, and the second slow; but in the case of Liszt the movements are more closely linked, and each is more absolutely and indivisibly a part of the other. One may hope that it is not necessary now to defend "music with a poetic basis," or to renew the contest of some years ago, for or against so called "pure music;" but "C. A. B." says a few words on the subject, wisely and well, in his analysis of "Mazeppa."

The term, "Symphonic Poem," it will be remembered, is of Liszt's creation; and, like his other invention, the Rhapsody, it has been found so happy, that composers in abundance have adopted it as applicable to their own writings.

Wagner, in his warm-hearted criticism of these "Symphonic Poems," insists on their most powerful characteristic; which is, their extreme melodiousness. This characteristic, he says, cannot fail to secure for them a speedy popularity with the great mass of musicians. Wagner may, or may not, be right in his conclusion (though Liszt has to fight every inch of ground with the critics); but he is certainly right in his main fact. Liszt's melodies are of the most downright, straightforward, description: melodies which, whatever we may think of them, are living realities, that take their allotted place fearlessly, and with unadorned simplicity.

An amusing misprint crept into the earlier advertisements of this concert, and remained unaltered throughout in the announcements posted at St. James's Hall. Instead of Brahms's second symphony, the printer promised us "Beethoven's symphony, No. 2, in D." As Beethoven's second symphony, like Brahms's, happens to be in D, and as the opus number was not given, the announcement passed unchallenged; though some of us probably wondered that Herr Richter chose to give unpromised works, when so many promises for the season remained unfulfilled.

Digitized by Google

Especial care had evidently been bestowed on this symphony, and "Mazeppa" in rehearsing, and the result was all that the most exacting could desire. It is necessary again to raise a protest against Sir G. Grove's misleading remarks (reprinted from a Crystal Palace programme), that preface his analysis of this symphony. Once more then, be it said, that Schumann did not seriously "fear that the name of symphony" would in the future belong only to history at the very moment when he was reviewing a new symphony with enthusiastic admiration; and that we have to thank a publisher (not an uncommon occurrence) for the title, "Concert sans orchestra" applied to Schumann's Op. 14, and not the wish even, far less a settled theory, of the author.

B. F. WYATT-SMITH.

THE HANDEL SOCIETY.

This society was established last year by Mrs. Ellicott, wife of the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol; she is a highly accomplished musician, and boasts of a daughter who composes very clever and agreeable songs for the chamber. A first concert was held by the society on June 14th, when the director, Mr. Docker, performed a selection from "Belshazzar"; a selection from the "Water Music"; Gluck's overture to "Iphigenia in Aulis," and (unaccompanied) part-songs of Brahms. "Belshazzar" bears the date of A.D. 1745, four years after "The Messiah" (1741), and one before "Judas Maccabeus" (1746). In "Belshazzar" Miss Ellicott sustained the part of Nitocris, alternately with Miss May Moon; Miss Wakefield enacted Cyrus; Mr. Harper Kearton, Belshazzar; and the Hon. Spencer G. Lyttleton, Daniel. Miss Ellicott proved her proficiency as a vocalist, and was much applauded. Miss May suffered from a cold. Miss Wakefield excelled, and Mr. Kearton is known as a professional, therefore bound so to do. The choruses were finely sung, but how long the programme! The oratorio did not come to an end until nearly eleven o'clock. The most impressive choruses were "Recall, O King, thy rash command" (sung by the Jews), and "By slow degrees the wrath of God." Miss Wakefield's best achievement was in the air "O God of truth," and Mr. Lyttleton scored a point in the "interpretation" recitative of Daniel the Seer. The German lieder were delicately rendered. The lateness of the hour prevented many of the audience from waiting to hear the beautiful "Water Music." Why will the projectors of concerts thus "spoil sport"? People will not sit up half the night even for Handel! Most concerts are too long by a third at least.

THE COLOGNE CHOIR.

The Cologne Choir should be heard by all admirers of genuine vocal music. Six concerts have already taken place. The ensemble and balance of tone are perfect. The tenors have been complained of as unduly prominent, but they are only too powerful in the episodial quartets, not in the choruses; the tenor voices are pure, fresh, and penetrating; the basses deep and sonorous. A baritone soloist came out well in "D'Hamkehr." Three pieces were encored on June 15th, viz., Schubert's "Der Entfernten," and Veit's "Schön-Rohtraut." Some delicious effects of piano were heard in the "Old Dutch Song" of Kremser (also encored). Herr W. Hoss played violin solos of Bruch and Brahms-Joachim; and with Fräulein Johanna Hesse, two movements from a sonata of Gade in D minor.

On Saturday evening M. de Lange, the able conductor of the choir, played a Toccata of Bach for the organ in splendid style, and on Monday Mdlle. Heimlicher introduced some pianoforte pieces on a very stiff "Steinway," whereby the Polonaise which follows Chopin's "Andante Spianato" suffered loss. An air of Pergolesi and Rubinstein's "Valse Caprice" were also played by this lady.

MR. CHARLES HALLE'S CHAMBER CONCERTS.

These go on swimmingly. At the soirée of June 15th, Spohr's string quartet in E minor was performed, and Fibich's pianoforte quartet in the same key repeated by desire. The pianoforte solos were Beethoven's "Rondo à Capriccio" in G, Op. 129, and the Fantasia, Op. 77. Last (Friday) evening Schumann's "Humoreske" in B flat was set down for Mr. Hallé as solo; the concerted works were Dvorak's string quartet in E flat, Op. 71, and Haydn's pianoforte trio in E flat, Op. 12.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

A morning performance of "Carmen" took place on Saturday, June 16th, and in the evening Mdme. Adelina Patti made her rentrée for the season, with splendid success, in our old friend "Il Barbiere di Siviglia." The voice is in fine condition, and the execution, as ever, unrivalled. The "Lesson Scene" of Act 2, the grande situation of the opera, was made a medium for the introduction of the florid air from "Ernani," "Ernani involami," one of Titiens' triumphant achievements, and the very poor English ditty, "Home, sweet home," quite out of place at the Italian Opera, and, weighed on its own abstract merits, worthless, because intrinsically vapid, common-place, and indeed almost vulgar. The sentiment, "There's no place like home" (not always true by the way), of course appeals to the soft brains and flabby hearts of ordinary humanity. Signor Nicolini is not thought to have made a very brilliant Almaviva on this occasion. Signor Cotogni and Signor De Reszke completed the caste as Figaro and Bartholo. The Prince and Princess of Wales were present. Mdme. Patti appeared on Tuesday in Verdi's naughty opera "La Traviata."

A. M.

MR. CHARLES GARDNER'S MATINEE.

Mr. Charles Gardner gave a matinée at the Prince's Hall, on Monday last. The vocalists were Miss Mary Davies, Mdlle. Etty, Miss Marian McKenzie, Mr. Arthur Thompson, and Mr. W. H. Cummings. M. Albert contributed a violoncello solo, and joined Mr. Gardner and Mr. Egerton in Beethoven's Trio, Op. 11, for piano, clarionet, and violoncello. Mr. Gardner played several solos with finish, and was ably assisted by Miss Florence May in duets for two pianofortes. A noteworthy feature of the concert was the production for the first time in England, of Mendelssohn's second Duet, Op. 114, for clarinet and corno di bassetto. Mr. Egerton and Mr. Maycock gained well earned applause for their artistic rendering of this, a work of singular interest, originally written for two celebrated performers on these two of Mozart's favourite instruments. Mr. C. E. Stephens, Mr. H. Deacon, and Signor Randegger assisted with the accompaniments in their usual efficient manner.—F. E. T.

MISS AGNES BARTLETT'S RECITAL.

This was given on June 15th at the Alexandra Hall, Blackheath. The young lady hails from the Dresden Conservatorium. She possesses an excellent technique, and a charming touch. Her first piece was Beethoven's Sonata in C sharp minor, Op. 27. The melancholy of the adagio, the grace of the scherzo and the fire of the finale were admirably expressed by Miss Bartlett. Mendelssohn's fine Prelude and Fugue in E minor was rendered with much breadth and power. Three of Chopin's Etudes, and several other works of his, including the Preludes in C and G, displayed Miss Bartlett's poetical feeling to advantage, and the Ballade in A flat was given with admirable finish, light, and shade. A Polonaise by Liszt was played with much brilliancy and fire, and Miss Bartlett claims, for her excellent and varied performances, a high place in the list of our more promising pianists. Miss Carlotta Elliott, though suffering from a cold, sang several songs in an artistic manner.

MR. AND MRS. GEORGE HENSCHEL'S VOCAL RECITAL.

Mr. and Mrs. George Henschel's vocal recital at St. James's Hall on Saturday, 16th inst., was a really musical treat; indeed, it was quite a bonne-bouche for the connoisseur. The rendering of the programme was as felicitous as it was rare. Mr. Henschel's versatility is surprising; he is a composer, conductor, singer, and last, but not least, a pianist. Indeed, in the first and last of these qualities, he will appear at the Richter concert on Monday night next, where he will perform a pianoforte concerto of his own composition. Mrs. Henschel has undoubtedly made great progress since her last début in the metropolis.

I cannot help thinking that a repetition of such a charming concert would meet with general approbation.

FERDINAND PRAEGER.

Digitized by Google

ST. CECILIA SOCIETY.

The fourth concert was given on June 14th at St. James's Hall. It would be difficult to name a better programme of the kind. Marcello's Psalm "Jehovah's Power," came first with organ accompaniment, and served to display a good body of pure, fresh, well trained female voices. The most important feature of the scheme was Pergolesi's "Stabat Mater." This work had been re-scored by Mr. Lawson for strings (in which he followed pretty closely the composer's own parts), and organ (which was treated freely, and not from the figured bass so much as the means of supplying a certain amount of wind tone-colour). The lovely melodies, quaint grace, and inexhaustible power of the composer in the invention of detail even with but limited executive means, were felt and enjoyed. The performance reflected high credit upon Mr. M. L. Lawson the able conductor and his highly intelligent executants. It did, indeed, seem strange, to see and hear the ladies' orchestra, playing with remarkable skill, generally good intonation and reliable firmness. The solos were expressively and artistically rendered by Miss Edith Phillips (a rising soprano of excellent gifts), Miss Emily Lawson, Miss Howell (a young lady with an excellent contralto voice), etc. The chorus singing was throughout of an admirable character; and the fine old poetical work proved most attractive, and thanks are due to the society for its presentation. The second part opened with Bach's F minor Concerto for pianoforte and strings. The solo part was neatly executed and artistically expressed by Miss Mary Carmichael. Another feature of special interest was a solo and chorus from C. V. Stanford's "Veiled Prophet," a movement of much variety, well-sustained interest, and musicianly workmanship. The solo part was gracefully sung by Miss Everett Green, to whom the society is much indebted for a great deal of earnest, well directed labour as Hon. Secretary. This performance did not fail to create a desire for a hearing of the complete opera. Wuërst's "Russian Suite" for violin, solo, and strings, was, on the whole, piquantly and prettily played. Miss Amy Hickling sustained the solo violin part, with a pure tone and graceful style. Some short excerpts from Mr. Lawson's music to "The Tale of Troy" for soli voices and chorus, were very tuneful, graceful, and expressive. Several songs, well sung by Mr. Probert, varied the programme, which closed with two of Lachner's part-songs. Miss Mary Carmichael was the painstaking pianoforte accompanist, Mr. E. H. Turpin was the organist and Mr. Lawson occupied his usual post as conductor. A large, and evidently much pleased audience attended the performance.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.

A Dramatic and Choral Amateur Festival in aid of the Newcastle fund of the Royal College of Music has been recently held at the Tyne Theatre. On Wednesday and Thursday nights Sophocles' "Antigone," with Mendelssohn's music, was given; on Friday night dramatic recitals by Mrs. Scott-Siddons, with music by a choir, and on Saturday night, June 16th Sullivan's operetta "Cox and Box," and Byron's comedy "Old Soldiers," were performed by members of the Northumberland Amateur Dramatic Club.

The performance of Sophocles' "Antigone" with Mendelssohn's music may be considered as generally satisfactory. The chorus, of upwards of sixty performers, was led by Mr. James Dick, and the orchestra, consisting mostly of professional players from Manchester, Newcastle, and the district, was under the painstaking conductorship of Mr. W. Rea. The fine singing of the choir, was, perhaps, the principal feature of the performances, and on Thursday night the singers received well-merited encores for "O Eros" and "Hymn to Bacchus," which were sung with fine effect. The playing of the orchestra was on the whole very satisfactory, but occasionally too loud in the accompaniments, and in some of the piano passages in the overtures, and the first two movements from the Italian Symphony, by Mendelssohn, performed before and between the parts of the tragedy.

The part of Antigone was taken by Mrs. Scott-Siddons, and that of Creon by Mr. R. W. Younge, the energetic manager of the Tyne Theatre. The other parts of the tragedy were rendered by amateur performers. The houses have not been so well filled as they ought to have been, considering the efficient way in which the drama was put before the public; but, somehow, every scheme of furthering the fund in aid of the Royal College of Music has only received an inadequate support here. The lack of interest evinced in the matter by the public may possibly arise from having not a single representative from Newcastle, nor even the whole of Northumberland and Durham, among the successful candidates who gained scholarships of the Royal College of Music.

Messrs. Howard and Wyndham are the new managers of the Theatre Royal, and Mr. W. H. Bachelor, a musician of ability, the new musical director of the establishment. A few weeks ago Miss Lila Clay, the clever lady conductor, and her company of ladies performed with great success the musical oddity, "An Adamless Eden."

Last week "H.M.S Pinafore," the most popular work by Messrs. Gilbert and Sullivan, proved to be as attractive as ever, for it drew good houses, notwithstanding Sophocles' "Antigone" was performed at the Tyne Theatre. The principal characters by Miss Rivers (Josephine), Miss M. Stavart (Buttercup), and Henry Walsham (Rackstraw), were well rendered, and the singing of the choruses excellent. The cast altogether was exceptionally strong. H. W.

The Newcastle Daily Journal says: "Antigone" was first heard in this country on Thursday, January 2nd, 1845, at the "Old" Covent Garden Theatre, under the direction of Sir (then Mr.) George A. Macfarren. On this occasion, it is said, Mendelssohn wrote a highly complimentary letter to Mr. Macfarren acknowledging and thanking him for his services. The work has been but rarely heard in this country since the occasion of which we have been speaking, the most notable performances, probably, being those which took place at the Crystal Palace on December 14th, 1875, and at the Theatre Royal, Newcastle-on-Tyne, in 1876.

The same journal, speaking of the second performance, observes: Excellent as was the performance of "Antigone" at the Tyne Theatre, that of last night may be said to have surpassed it. The artists—professional and amateur—engaged in the performance appeared one and all to exert themselves to their utmost to make the representation as perfect as possible, the result being that none but a pessimist could, with any degree of fairness, discover a fault worth mentioning. The choruses were rendered in a manner even more effective than upon the previous occasion of their performance. "O Eros" and the "Invocation to Bacchus" were so finely sung that they were re-demanded in a most unmistakable manner, and had to be repeated. It would be a great pity to allow so fine a choir of male voices to quietly disperse, now that the "Antigone" performances are over.

The orchestra, led by Mr. J. H. Beers, gave a splendid performance of Mendelssohn's fine orchestration. In addition to the music of "Antigone," the band also played with excellent effect the march from Gounod's "La Reine de Saba," the overture to Mozart's "Die Zauberflote," and Mendelssohn's overture to "Athalie." Mr. James Dick, as leader of the chorus, sang exceedingly well; and Messrs. Idle and Lohmeyer sang their parts with capital effect. To Mr. Dick a large share of the success of the festival is due; for he has laboured incessantly in its cause. Mr. Rea, who conducted the performance, performed his arduous duties as perhaps few could have done. It may be said that the whole of the success of the actual performance depended upon him; but he has proved himself in the past, and it is to be hoped will yet again and again prove himself, capable of guiding to a successful issue many a great undertaking.

VARIOUS CONCERTS.

Herr S. Lehmeyer held his annual concert on June 12th, when he played Chopin's Ballade, Op. 47, a Fugue of Bach, and Handel's Variations in E major, falsely ascribed to a mythical "blacksmith," who did not live at Edgware, although the impudent impostor's tombstone, in Whitchurch Yard, still asserts the falsehood. Some of Herr Lehmeyer's pupils played with proficiency, to wit: Miss E. D'Egville, Miss Furness, Mr. G. Sumpter, and Miss Elcock. The last-named lady joined Herr Lehmeyer in Erkel's "Grande Marthe Hongroise."

Mr. W. G. Cusins, whose retirement from the Philharmonic Society as conductor is felt to be a great loss, held a matinée on June 8th at St. James's Hall. Hummel's superb Septet in D minor, for pianoforte, wood-wind, and strings, headed the scheme, and was very welcome, as the work could never, or only very seldom be heard, except at the "Grande Matinée" of Mr. Ella's "Musical Union," which has unfortunately ceased to exist. Mr. Cusins executed the pianoforte part of the Septet with great efficiency; he afterwards played J. S. Bach's grand Fantasia and Fugue in G minor (arranged by Liszt), and Chopin's "Andante Spianato and Polonaise," also Thalberg's Fantasia on "Mosé." Part of the "Kreutzer" sonata was played by Mr. Cusins, with Mdlle. Levallois as violinist. Mdme. Marie Roze sang deliciously Gluck's "Divinités du Styx," and with Mdme. Trebelli, the pretty duet from "Mefistofeles," "Canta, o Sirena." Mdme. Trebelli chose for solo an air of Bizet's, and Mdme. Sembrich Délibes' "Air de la Clochette" (first time in England). Mdlle. Levallois, whose avenir (as foreseen by Mdme. Viard-Louis) is ensured, played a violin piece of Von Wieniawski with éclat. Everything went off capitally. The assistant artists in Hummel's Septet were Messrs. Svendsen, Lebon, Paersch, Blagrove, Heygesi, and Progratzky.

Digitized by Google

At a quiet "reception," held by the Rev. Alfonso and Mrs. Matthey on the afternoon of June 13th, in Warwick Gardens, Kensington, several pianists of note were present, viz., Mr. Eugène Wagner, Mdme. Viard Louis, Miss M. Cronin, Mr. J. B. Bonawitz, &c. M. Wagner played some of his own pleasing compositions, and Miss Cronin delighted the assembly so much with her readings of Chopin (the "Andante Spianato" especially), that she was detained, perforce, at the pianoforte, a "fine grand iron drawing-room" of Messrs. Collard and Collard. Miss Helen Matthey repeated her careful and correct version of Schumann's "Faschingsschwank aus Wien," so much admired by professors and "lay people" at Mr. Aguilar's recital on April 23rd. The three Misses Matthey sang together some very pretty German and French part-songs. Mr. W. G. Cusins was unable to be present from the pressure of "Palace" and other engagements. Mrs. Meadows-White, the composer of "The Ode to the Passions," was one of the guests, with her husband, Mr. Meadows-White, Q.C.

Mr. Harvey Löhr held his annual soirée on June 13th. He conducted with ability Götz's pianoforte trio in G minor, Op. 1, and played Schumann's "Faschingsschwank" in B flat with Herr A. Hummer. M. Lohr played Beethoven's sonata in F, Op. 24. M. Hummer won a bis for a Gavotte of Franz Ries in G, and Mr. W. E. Whitehouse played M. Lohr's Ballade for violoncello, "Liebes-Geständwiss."

Mdlle. Victoria Bunsen gave a grand "Scandinavian" concert on Tuesday afternoon at Portman House, Portman Square, W., which, although a palatial mansion, the writer was only able to find after fifty inquiries, for even the flunkeys of houses in the square did not know the house by name, nor the carriage-drivers either. Gross ignorance of topography marks the English, alike in town and country! Miss De Bunsen sang most splendidly, and con amore, as a fair Swede should do, several Scandinavian airs, notably, "The ocean's lovely maiden," a Swedish "Dancing Song," and "Little Ole," whereof (pace Herr Andersen), the words are supremely silly. Miss De Bunsen's rich lower notes came out well. Miss Felicia De Bunsen accompanied her sister on a grand Broadwood, on which Mr. W. G. Cusins afterwards played a Notturne of Chopin and his own Valse in E flat with good effect. Many more national ditties were sung by other artists. Mdme. Marie Roze, radiant and lovely, sang with eclat a grand air from Poniatowski's Pierre de Medicis, "Doux rêve de ma vie" in E flat and D flat, with a range from low D to B flat in alt. The cadenza was a splendid display of vocalisation, and a recall ensued. Part of Niel Gade's pianoforte trio in F, Op. 42, was performed by Miss Felicia De Bunsen, Herr W. Hess, and Herr Hollman. Herr Hess and his sister, Mdlle. Johanna Hess (who has recently appeared at the Cologne Choirs concerts with éclat), played together two movements in F. The concert went off well.

A concert in aid of a hospital (S. Raphael's, Torquay), was held at Prince's Hall, on Thursday, June 14th. The vocalists included Mdme. Antoinette Sterling, Miss Santley, Miss Wakefield, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. J. Robertson, and Mr. Santley. Mr. Santley was much applauded on his two solos, especially in "The Devout Lover" (M. V. White), accompanied by the composer; the song won a bis. Mdme. Antoinette Sterling evoked comparatively little applause, although she sang beautifully. Miss Santley was encored and sung a second song. Mr. E. Lloyd sang "I will come," by Mr. Cowen, also a trio with Mr. and Miss Santley. Miss M. V. White played a solo on the piano, and was well received. Mr. Sutton played a violin solo.

CORK.—In consequence of the continued severe illness of Mr. T. J. Sullivan, the Musical Committee of the Exhibition some time ago asked Herr Swertz to take his place as choirmaster, to which he consented. How happy they have been in their choice was shown by the fact that when last down, Mr. Robinson complimented Herr Swertz on the admirable manner in which he had trained the voices under his care. Mr. Sullivan is rapidly recovering from the severe attack of fever with which he was struck down.

CAMELFORD.—The annual festival of the Trigg Minor Church Choir Union was held on Wednesday, when the following parishes were represented:—St. Breward, Forrabury and Minster, St. Juliot, Lanteglos and Advent, Lesnewth, Michaelstow, St. Teath, Tintagel, and Trevalga. The service, which was very attractive, was held in the parish church of Lanteglos, in the evening. The first lesson was read by the Rev. E. Townend, Lesnewth, and the second by the Rev. E. A. Hammick, Forrabury and Minster. The anthem, "Hear the voice and prayer," by J. L. Hopkins, was well rendered. The sermon was preached by the Rev. V. H. Aldham, M.A., rector of Boconnoc, who took for his text 2nd Chronicles, XXIX. chapter, and part of the 27th and 28th verses. The singing of the choirs was excellent throughout. Mr. C. Bate led on the harmonium, accompanied by the following brass instruments—Cornets by Messrs. H. Bray and A. Cann, tenor baritone by Messrs. W. Langdon and J. Bate, and euphonium by Mr. A. Langdon.

WEYBRIDGE.—The first concert of the Weybridge Amateur Musical Society took place on Tuesday evening 12th inst. The first part of the programme consisted of an excellent performance of Dr. Stainer's cantata "The Daughter of Jairus," the solo parts being undertaken by Madame Talbot Cherer, Mr. Alfred Kenningham, and Mr. Adam Longmore. The orchestral accompaniments were played by a small but effective string band under the leadership of Herr Silberberg, the lack of wind instruments being supplied by Mr. W. T. Russell on the American organ, Mr. Burnell (pupil of Mr. G. E. Lake) ably presiding at the pianoforte. The whole performance reflects great credit on the conductor Mr. G. E. Lake, the choruses especially being admirably rendered, and shewing evidence of a very careful and judicious training. The second part of the programme consisted of a miscellaneous selection, in which Miss More deserves great credit for her admirable rendering of Cowen's beautiful song "Light and Darkness." Mr. Longmore, a gentleman well known among musical circles in Edinburgh, and possessed of a very fine bass voice, is much to be commended for the way in which he sang "Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep," and Mozart's "Qui sdegno." Mr. G. E. Lake gave an artistic rendering of Beethoven's pianoforte sonata Op. 90 No. 1, besides accompanying the songs with great taste. The choir also contributed two part-songs, which were noticeable for the excellent way in which they were phrased, the pianos and fortes being most judiciously attended to.

STEINWAY'S Astoria factories contain eight steam boilers of the aggregate power of 500 horses, by which the necessary amount of steam is generated for the 60,000 feet of pipe used in heating the drying-rooms and workshops, and driving four steam-engines aggregating 300 horse power, which in turn put in motion the various labour-saving machines. In the extensive lumber-yards, located between the dock, basin, and these factories are constantly stacked upward of 5,000,000 square feet of the choicest kind of lumber in the open air for seasoning purposes, each separate piece of which is exposed to all the atmospheric changes for two years, and then kept in the steam-drying kilns for three months prior to being used in the factory.—Art Journal.

READING Henry Vizetelly's "Berlin Under the New Empire" the other day we were struck with his description of one of the Conservatories at Berlin as described to the writer by a young Englishman, who had enrolled his name as a pupil, and who states that he was admitted without any preliminary examination, except the merely farcical one of being asked to play any tune he liked on the piano, upon doing which he was told that at the end of two years he would be a first-class musician. Whilst the pupils play, the master sits in a chair beside them—asleep! In fact, soporous professors are the rule; for a gentleman, who is one of the lights of Stern's Conservatorium, and indeed of the musical world of the Prussian capital, slept regularly throughout the lessons during the time the writer attended the institute—a period of six months. Certainly the learned professor must have considered his "bread and water sure."—Musical Opinion.

Digitized by Google

Foreign Musical Intelligence.

"King Lear" is the subject of a new opera by Signor Cagnoni.

The composer, Vincenzo De Meglio, died recently at Naples, aged 50.

A new opera by Suppé will probably be presented in Vienna in September.

Wagner's son, Siegfried, was confirmed on June 20th at the Protestant Church, Bayreuth.

A statue of Auber was recently unveiled at Caen, his birthplace, amid great festivities.

A new opera, "Eugéne Onegrin," by Iscbarkowski, has been well received in St. Petersburg.

The performances of Wagner's "Nibelungen Ring" in Italy have not been financially successful.

"The Queen of Scotland" is the title of a new opera for Turin, by a lady composer, Signora F. M. Stresa.

Mr. S. P. Warren, a prominent New York organist, is giving just now an interesting series of organ recitals in his church there.

A new symphonic poem called "Tamara," by a Russian composer, M. Balakireff, has been received with considerable favour in St. Petersburgh.

Three madrigals, by John Dowland, John Wilbye and Thomas Morley, were sung at a recent concert of the Leipsic Bach Society.

The well-known composer Merkel, who is court organist at Dresden, has been decorated by the King of Saxony with the Albrecht order.

The death is announced at Trieste, of Madame Hedwig Reicher-Kindermann, the talented prima donna of Wagnerian opera, at the early age of thirty.

A Mozart Festival will be held in Vienna in the autumn. Artists of all nationalities have been invited to assist, and Rubinstein has promised his co-operation.

After an interval of twenty years, Mozart's "Idomeneo," has been heard in Munich, for which city it was originally written. The leading parts were taken by Herr and Madame Vogl.

The Belgian Musical Festival will take place on July 1st and 2nd in Ghent, under the direction of M. Waelput. The first day is to be devoted to modern Belgian music, the second to classical works.

M. Gounod has been engaged to write a new work for the next Birmingham festival. Report says that it will be a sequel to the "Redemption." Mr. Villiers Stanford has also been asked to write a choral work for the same occasion.

Gounod's oratorio of "The Redemption" was given for the first time at San Francisco on the 8th of May, in the First Congregational Church, by the Choral Society of the said church under the direction of the pastor, Rev. Chas. Dana Barrows. It is to be repeated next fall.

The Orchestral Union of San Francisco lately gave the third and last concert of the fourth series. These amateur musicians are doing excellent work. They number about forty-five active members. Prof. Wm. Toepke, their leader, leaves for Europe in June, for further study. Herr Fredick Zech, Jr. (pianist and composer), will be their musical director next season. It is mainly supported by associate or subscribing members.

Says the New York Courier: The nomenclature of organ stops and their arrangements is a matter of much importance. It is, however, like most things relating to the instrument, in an unsettled condition. In many organs the printed label on the stop-handle does not correctly indicate its character. With regard to the arrangement of registers, much might be, as much has already been, written, but organ-builders do not appear to care to adopt some general plan (with only little variation), and thus things remain for ever in statu quo.

The Kyrle Society gave "Samon" at St. John the Evangelist's, Grove Street, Commercial Road, on June 20th. Mr. M. L. Lawson conducted, and Mr. E. H. Turpin was the organ player.

NOTES OF THE CUCKOO.

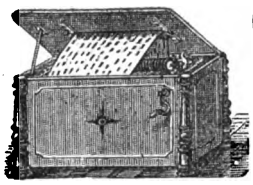
Gilbert White, of Selborne, affirms that the cuckoo in his time, was heard to sing at various intervals, from a major second to a perfect fifth—a margin of five semitones. Beethoven in the "Pastoral" adopts the major third (D natural to B flat) in his second movement. The writer, with an experience of some sixty "summers," (such as "summers" are in England), can state that the general (or average) interval is this major third. He has never, so far as memory will serve, heard the perfect fourth more than twice or three times, and only on damp gloomy days, a compromise between the major and minor third, for the lesser interval was never quite exact or decisive according to "commas."

Another question is about the key. The writer has almost always fixed the tonality of the cuckoo's third in D major, (F sharp to D) never in C, which he thinks is the key noticed by Gilbert White. An interesting variation, however, may be noticed. Last Saturday, in a remote village in south Essex, near the sea, the cuckoo was heard at 7 o'clock P.M., to sing in D major, the next day (Sunday, June 17th) at about 2.15 P.M., with the sun brightly shining, and a change of wind from cold N.W. to balmy W.S.W., the cuckoo (suspected to be the same), sang in D flat, and again on Monday morning. The high pitch is referred to, but not the operatic. A. M.

EXTRAORDINARY DISPUTE IN A CHURCH.

An extraordinary dispute has arisen in connection with the parish church of St. James, Taunton. Desirous of making some alteration in the nature of the musical services, the churchwardens of St. James's served a notice to leave on the organist (Mrs. Chapman), who, bye-the-by, is the wife of the sexton, bellringer, vestry clerk, and assistant overseer of the parish, practically giving her three months' notice. This seems to have met with the disapproval of the parishioners, and a crowded vestry meeting called by the overseers was held, at which it was unanimously resolved that the appointment of the organist should be confirmed. On the same day as the meeting was held, the organist received a demand from the vicar and the church-wardens, who did not attend the meeting, to deliver up the keys of the organ. This she refused to do, acting under legal advice. On Wednesday evening, last week, at the usual weekly service, the organist was in her place at half-past six o'clock, and a large congregation had assembled in anticipation of a scene. The vicar accompanied by the new organist who had been appointed, walked up to the organ and asked the lady to resign her seat. This she firmly refused to do, and the vicar then retired with the newly-appointed organist to the vestry. He next demanded that the sexton, the lady's husband, should order her off her seat, but he declined to do so, stating that he had nothing to do with the office of organist. The vicar then sent for the organ blower, and ordered him not to supply any wind for the instrument. Matters remained in this position for some time, the people anxiously waiting until the service should commence. Ultimately the vicar and the new organist walked off, and no service was held. The congregation dispersed, and the sexton and organist were left in possession of the building. The sexton locked the doors of the church and went home. Sunday morning there was a crowded congregation in anticipation of a repetition of the scene. The church doors were opened at ten o'clock, and the vicar, the churchwardens, and the newly-appointed organist proceeded to the organ, when to their astonishment they found Mrs. Chapman already there. She refused to give way, and the organ having been locked by the churchwardens, the service was held without music. Not a single chant was sung, and the hymns went by default. The new organist during the service remained in the vestry of the church. A strange incident in connection with the affair is that the new organist, who has been organist to the Temple Wesleyan church, seems to have given no notice of his intention to absent himself from that place of worship on Sunday morning, and the consequence was that there also the service proceeded without the instrumental music. The congregation were, however, not to be done out of their singing, and they rendered their psalms and hymns under the direction of a voluntary precentor, and without the organ. John Mattock Chapman, the sexton, was charged on Wednesday, with riotous, indecent, and insolent conduct in the church, but the magistrates dismissed the case.

Digitized by Google



ORCHESTRIONETTES,
Ehrlich's Patent.

Are the greatest invention of modern times in the sphere of mechanical Music Works! It is only necessary to put in a note, made of fine pasteboard, in order to play a new piece. The smaller instruments suffice as accompaniment to dance music. The larger ones can be used IN PLACE OF AN ORGAN.

Preparatory knowledge not necessary; therefore the instruments can be sent to any part of the world. Large number of Notes, suitable for all countries, always on hand. Extra Notes made to order, after supplied originals, at any time. Please send orders to any dealer in musical instruments.

Commission allowed to Dealers.

FABRIK LEIPZIGER MUSIKWERKE VORM. PAUL EHRLICH & CO., ZU GOHLIS BEI LEIPZIG (GERMANY).

MISS NORAH HAYES, CONTRALTO VOCALIST of the Albert Hall and St. James's Hall Concerts, is open to engagements for Concerts, Soirées, and At Homes. Good Press opinions. Services given free for Charities.—Address, 95, Edgware Road.

MR. E. DAVIDSON PALMER, Mus.Bac., Oxon., author of "What is Falsetto?" "Pronunciation in Singing," etc., gives LESSONS in VOICE TRAINING and SOLO SINGING, at his residence, 10, Gladesmore-road, Stamford Hill, N.

FISHERIES EXHIBITON, SOUTH KENSINGTON.—Mr. FRANK BRADLEY, Professor of the Organ, Trinity College, London, &c. (concert organist), will give RECITALS on MONDAYS and WEDNESDAYS, on the Organs of Messrs. Lewis, and Henry Jones & Sons, during the Exhibition.—Programmes gratuitously given in the Building.

For Concerts and Recitals, address Beaconsfield, Gunnersbury, W.

VIOLIN.—HERR POLONASKI (Violinist), open to ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts, Musical At Homes, and Violin or Accompaniment Lessons.—For Terms, please Address, HERR POLONASKI, 16, Wharfdale-street, South Kensington, S.W.

INTERNATIONAL FISHERIES EXHIBITION.—ORGAN RECITALS daily, upon the fine-toned Organ, in West Gallery. Supplied to the Executive Committee by HENRY JONES & SONS, 136, Fulham Road, South Kensington.

WESLEYAN COLLEGE, TAUNTON.—WANTED, a RESIDENT MASTER to TEACH MUSIC (Piano, Singing, and Organ), and to assist in the General Work of the School.—Apply to Mr. REGINALD BARNICOTT, Hon. Sec.

VIOLIN by Nicholas Dodd, BOW, and CASE for SALE. Cash, £15.—Apply to T. C. ATTWATEN, 8, Albion Terrace, Faversham.

CHRIST CHURCH, NEWGATE STREET, E.C. (with St. Leonard's, Foster Lane). An ORGAN RECITAL will be given at this church on MONDAY, June 25th, at 7.30 p.m., by Dr. Charles Joseph Frost. Admission free.

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

TUESDAY, July 3rd, F. J. SAWYER, Esq., Mus.Bac., will read a Paper on Mozart's "Organ Concertos," with musical illustrations, organ and strings, at 8.—TUESDAY and WEDNESDAY, July 10th and 11th, Examination for Associateship.—THURSDAY, July 12th, Examination for Fellowship. Candidates names must be sent in on or before July 5th.—TUESDAY, July 17th, at 8, Annual General Meeting.

The above Meetings will be held at the NEUMEYER HALL, Hart Street, Bloomsbury.

E. H. TURPIN,
Hon. Secretary.

95, Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury, W.C.

HANDEL'S FIRST ORGAN CONCERTO, with Orchestral Accompaniment, as performed at the Handel Festival, Crystal Palace, edited, arranged, and supplemented with a Cadenza by W. T. BEST. Organ Score, 1s. 6d.; Orchestra Parts, 2s.; complete, 2s. 6d. nett.—AUGENER & CO., 86, Newgate Street, Foubert's Place, and 81, Regent Street, London.

TECHNICAL EXERCISES for the PIANOFORTE by JOHN POOLEY: price 4s. Contains every variety.—Write to the AUTHOR, 2, Cecil Street, Carlisle.

MR. W. S. HOYTE will give a PIANOFORTE RECITAL at 16, Grosvenor Street, Grosvenor Square (by kind permission of Messrs. Collard), on Wednesday afternoon, June 27th. Vocalists: Miss Clara Samuell, Madame Edith Wynne, and Mr. Harper Kearton. Violin: M. Victor Buziau. The programme will consist of selections from the works of Schumann, Bennett, Chopin, Rubinstein, Scharwenka, &c.—Tickets, 10s. 6d.; or Family Ticket to admit three, one guinea, to be obtained of STANLEY LUCAS, CHAPPELLS, and of Mr. W. S. HOYTE, 68, Boundary Road, N.W.

ALL WHO POSSESS A PIANOFORTE and canot play it, may now play at once, without any previous knowledge of Music, by ROYLANCE'S NUMERICAL SYSTEM, which contains a FIGURED DIAGRAM to fit on the Keyboard of any Pianoforte (or Harmonium, and a choice selection of forty SACRED and SECULAR MELODIES, composed for the use of those who have no time to study Music. Thousands are now able to play who did not believe such a thing possible. The diagram alone will be found most useful to Professors for teaching purposes. 6d. nett.—Price 2s. 6d. nett; post free 33 stamps.—C. ROYLANCE, 184, Tottenham Court-road; and all Music Sellers.

MUSIC STRINGS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF ALL KINDS OF STRINGS FOR VIOLIN, VIOLA, VIOLONCELLO, DOUBLE BASS HARP, ZITHER, GUITAR, BANJO, &c., &c.,

Have always in Stock the Largest Assortment of Music Strings of any House in the World.

39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

All Kinds of Strings covered in a superior manner by powerful machines, made on the best principle with all modern improvements.

JUST PUBLISHED, "MORNING and EVENING SERVICE," set to music for the especial use of Parish Choirs, by FREDK. HUNNIBELL, F.C.O. Price, 1s.; or separately, 8d. and 6d.

London: NOVELLO, EWER & CO.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

MUSICAL INTELLIGENCE:—The Handel Festival at the Crystal Palace—Richter Concerts—The Handel Society—The Cologne Choir—Mr. Charles Halle's Chamber Concerts—Royal Italian Opera—Mr. Charles Gardner's Matinee—Miss Agnes Bartlett's Recital—Mr. and Mrs. Henschel's Vocal Recital—St. Cecilia Society—Newcastle-on-Tyne—Various Concerts.

FOREIGN MUSICAL INTELLIGENCE.

NOTES OF THE CUCKOO.

EXTRAORDINARY DISPUTE IN A CHURCH.

EDITORIAL:—The Handel Festival—Henry Smart—Form in Vocal Music.

REVIEWS OF BOOKS AND MUSIC.

ORGAN NEWS:—Norwich—Preston—Liverpool—High Wycombe—Christ Church, Newgate Street—Bolton—Oxford—Fisheries Exhibition—Halstead, Essex—Crystal Palace—Padfield, near Hadfield—Netherwarden.

STUDY.

HENRY SMART MEMORIAL FUND.

ACADEMICAL INTELLIGENCE:—Cambridge University.

CORRESPONDENCE:—National College of Music.

PASSING EVENTS. Service Lists, &c.

LONDON: SATURDAY, JUNE 23, 1883.

THE HANDEL FESTIVAL.

THIS event, now fully established as one of the recurrent incidents of the cycle of English musical life, has taken place with no diminution of éclat and enthusiasm. Even though HANDEL'S position in the world of art has suffered some modification of late years, and it is now conceded that he did not alone possess the secrets of grandeur and contrapuntal power, it remains undeniably true that he had, perhaps, pre-eminently, the faculty of reaching the largest proportion of musical minds by the creation of colossal effects through the well applied agency of clear decisive harmonies and of those musical powers, as rhythm and strong accentuation, which are not in themselves the highest and most abstract powers of the divine art. HANDEL in his nervous sentences relies much upon the "long" pull, strong pull, and a pull all together" type of writing. Herein lies much of the source of his popularity, for his sledge-hammer power of striking out effects sublime in their way, does and will ever continue to, appeal to the majority of minds who would fain rise into heights of musical eloquence upon the wings of physical health and strength. So the great, sturdy Saxon will naturally command more admirers for his trenchant thoughts, the highest expression of the age of carved fat-faced Cherubim and bag-wig mannerisms, while the most abstract sublimities in which high spiritual thought is present with a comparative absence of the more physical sources of musical power, such as may be found in the works of HANDEL'S kindred geniuses PALESTRINA and BACH, will only command the appreciation of the comparatively few cultured and thoughtful intellects. To enter upon the questions here indicated would be to advance into a dissertation concerning the connection between body and soul, and their mutual sources of re-action and influence, and their mutual relationship in art through the intervening power of the mind, a matter in which, as my readers well know, I should at once be out of my depth. Briefly, HANDEL has, with a strong hand and a REMBRANDT-like vividness amounting at times almost to a coarseness of manner, grandly struck out such half-physical and half-spiritual musical truths, as have with more or less success called for such a mighty exposition of material musical force, as no other composer has hitherto claimed. This is not the time either to discuss another of our complex mental phenomena, the fact that results in art are by no means governed by the measure of means employed, as our conception of what is sublime greatly surpasses our but limited powers of seeing, hearing, and realising, and mighty thoughts are beyond the application of any accumulated forms of practical expression. Still, though the cathedral choir may at times uplift us with heaven-bound aspirations when the great army on the HANDEL Festival Orchestra might fail to do more than astonish us with a weight of tone probably without a parallel in the history of musical festivals, the HANDEL celebration presents effects calling for the attention of both artist and layman. What has been noted before has been noted again. Certain great orchestral effects, for the strings as the violin figures, and the moving basses in certain of the splendid chain of descriptive choruses in "Israel in Egypt," have never produced anything but comparatively small effect. It may be somewhat unfair criticism to point out, that such failures are easily to be explained when it is borne in mind that the effects have been sought for from the wind or rather military band point of sight; that the orchestra contained flutes, piccolos, and drums enough to make up a drum and fife band for a regiment of the Foot Guards, granting certain differences in pitch, and that there were brass instruments in a sufficient abundance to make brass bands for two cavalry regiments. Naturally, development in such directions demoralizes the sense of hearing, and no effect is sufficiently spiced without the keen pointing of the wind instruments notwithstanding the presence of a large array of strings, which however included many players of feeble grip and indifferent bow discipline. On the other hand some of the more purely choral effects were truly imposing. The ungracious and possibly affected surprise expressed by some critics who have been accustomed to belaud unduly the eminent conductor, Sir MICHAEL COSTA, that the Festival could be carried forward successfully even in the lamented absence of the veteran chef-d'orchestre, only serves to show up an unfortunate tendency to judge by precedents rather than by reason. And it is to be hoped that the present occasion will administer a severe blow to the absurd spirit of conductor worship, even while furnishing an opportunity for the congratulation of Mr. A. MANNS upon his vigorous and courageous assumption of a trying position. Sensible people know that in the matter of conducting, as in every other walk of life, there is an abundance of the necessary ability, though there are but few opportunities for its exercise. It is to be hoped that the proposal to celebrate HANDEL after his own manner by a Festival, with an orchestra built up as he knew and expected it to be built up, will indeed, be arranged for in the course of the next two years. Such an event would be a matter of special interest to the musician.

Digitized by Google

E. H. TURPIN.

HENRY SMART.

THE long-continued Henry Smart Memorial Fund movement has been successfully brought to an issue by the few earnest friends who were determined to perpetuate the appreciation in which the distinguished English composer and organ-player was held in during his own time. Now his memory will be celebrated in two of our musical institutions, the authorities of Trinity College having, with commendable spirit and liberal forethought, already erected a Henry Smart Scholarship, and now, by the decision of the meeting held in Trinity College on the 19th, a scholarship will commemorate the manly artist and noteworthy composer within the walls of the Royal Academy of Music. There is no present opportunity to dilate upon the genius, mental power, and remarkable acquirements of Henry Smart. He is, as a composer, one of the men to whom time must be gracious, for he sought not to discount public favour in advance by friendly influences. Henry Smart's music has never been performed, it may be fairly said, save upon the strength of its own merits, and a future is assured to it such as may not await the works of men who in their personal careers seem to the casual observer to have been more fortunate than was the composer of "Jacob" and "The Bride of Dunkerron." The life of Henry Smart is not without lessons for the student. His artistic conscientiousness and earnest perseverance, despite many difficulties, will not be forgotten. Again, his manly independence by which, together with his splendid abilities, he contrived to build up a great name without the external influences of the world's favour peculiar to our immediate times, in the shape of a specially conspicuous official position, University popularity, patronage in high places, and "troops of busy friends," should indeed encourage the English musical student who will elect to stand chiefly upon his own merits. Such an example in these days, when happily art is in fashion and carefully nurtured by colleges and musical corporations, is not without power and significance, and teaches us that however valuable the extraneous and rightly sought-for advantages modern appreciation of art has secured for the artist may be, the real foundation of the good artist will still in any case be built upon the rock-like strength of an independent, manly love of art for its own sake. So the works and example furnished by the labours of Henry Smart are to be ranked among the honourable records of English art; and it is gratifying and satisfactory to know that loving admirers have succeeded in perpetuating his memory in so honourable a manner.

Digitized by Google

E. H. Turpin.

FORM IN VOCAL MUSIC.

IV.

That the development of form in vocal music should have proceeded not only through the simple process of reiteration or re-presentation of the early song plans, but also should have grown through the complex counterpoint of the church is a matter of much interest, and the task of tracing such growth would be doubtless an undertaking of much instruction. Without dipping too deeply into this profoundly interesting matter, it is well to notice that in proportion to growth of contrapuntal power the advance of the constructive or architectural faculty in music was a slow process, while in modern times, as the contrapuntal genius grow more neglected, the growth of form advanced with seemingly accelerated rapidity. But in the transition period, towards the close of the seventeenth and at the beginning of the eighteenth century, it is of moment to note that counterpoint, in its highest demonstration the fugue, had arrived at the three general principles of form, presentation, development, and recapitulation. Thus the fugal exposition corresponds with the primary presentation of the leading theme or themes; the episodes in effect answer to the employment of developed and episodical thoughts as propounded in the modern musical constructions; the processes applied to the fugue subject, as augmentation, diminution, the formation of new counter subjects, etc., take the place of the function of development, or the "Free Fantasia" as some authorities call the specially set aside section for development and modulation; the counter exposition and fugal stretto are the contrapuntal equivalents for the recapitulation of the various architectural schemes; and the listener to the fugue is brought finally home by such devices as the pedal point, just as the coda of the different constructive forms furnishes the listener with a satisfactory and final assertion of tonic harmonies.

E. H. Turpin.

Reviews.

The Technics of Violin Playing. By Karl Courvoisier, translated by H. E. Krehbiel. (W. Reeves).—One of those somewhat rare, but useful books, which give us valuable but well condensed information. The chapters on intonation, and the various departments of the art of bowing, are very valuable.

The Child's Pianoforte Book. By H. Keatley Moore, B.A. (W. Swan Sonnenschein & Co.)—A really charming book for small children, with nice little tunes, pretty little pictures, and clearly written little lessons, something after the Kindergarten method. To the musical mother, anxious to teach her own children, and to elementary teachers, this handsome, instructive, and entertaining book ought to be a treasure.

Organ News.

NORWICH.

Dr. Bunnett gave an organ recital at the St. Andrew's Hall, on June 16th; the following was the programme:—

Offertoire in F	Wely.
Pastorale in G	Merkel.
March (from "Tannhäuser")	Wagner.
Organ Concerto in D Allegro—Andante con Moto, and Fuga.	Handel.
Andante in C (from a Concerto)	Mendelssohn.
Postlude in D	Smart.
Studio per Flauto	Fumagalli.
Grand Chœur in D	Lemmens.
Gavotte, from the opera "Ottone," Siciliana and Allegro from the "Fire Music"	Handel.
Hallelujah Chorus, "Messiah"	Handel.

PRESTON.

The following is the programme of the organ recital given by Mr. James Tomlinson, in the new Public Hall, on Saturday evening, June 16th.

Concerto in C minor Maestoso—Allegro—Minuetto—Allegro	Handel.
Andante con Moto (Symphony in C minor.)	Beethoven.
Fugue in D	Bach.
Grand Fantasia, "The Storm"	Lemmens.
Rigaudon	Silas.
Overture to "L'Etoile du Nord"	Meyerbeer.

LIVERPOOL.

Mr. W. T. Best gave an organ recital in the St. George's Hall, on Thursday evening, June 14th. The following is the programme:—

Overture, "Maria di Rohan"	Donizetti.
Prelude, (D flat major, Op. 28)	Chopin.
Organ Sonata, (No. 1, F minor)	Mendelssohn.
Mazurka, (G minor, Op. 21)	Saint-Saëns.
Andante (Six Concert Pieces, No. 5)	W. T. Best.
Toccata (A flat major)	Adolph Hesse.

On Saturday afternooon, June 16th:—

Ouverture Solennelle	Flötow.
Gavotte (E major), and Fugue (A minor)	Bach.
Offertorio, (E flat major)	Morandi.
Allegro Scherzoso, (F minor)	Schubert.
Andante Cantabile, (E major)	C. V. Alkan.
Hungarian March, ("Rakoczy")	Liszt.

HIGH WYCOMBE.

On Monday evening June the 4th, a recital was given on the organ in the Parish Church, by Mr. J. G. Wrigley, Mus.Bac., Oxon., F.C.O. The following was the programme:—

Choral Song and Fugue	S. S. Wesley.
Allegretto Cantabile	Lemmens.
Tema con Variazioni (from the Sinfonie in D)	Haydn.
Marche Funebra et Chant Seraphique	Guilmant.
"Ave Maria d'Arcadelt" (16th Century)	Liszt.
Heroic March in D	Schubert.

CHRIST CHURCH, NEWGATE STREET.

An organ recital will be given by Dr. Charles Joseph Frost, at Christ Church, on Monday evening, June 25th, to commence at 7.30 p.m. The following was the programme:—

Organ Solos, Toccata and Double Fugue	Eberlin.
Fantasia (on the Choral "St. Mary")	Stephens.
Marche Religieuse	Baptiste Calkin.
Organ Solos, Sonata Allegro—Moderato—Adagio—Menuetto—Finale	Westbrook.
Marche Funebre	Gigout.
Organ Solos { a Andante in G ; b Allegretto in F }	Frost.
Marcia di processione	Morandi.

BOLTON.

An organ recital was given in the Albert Hall, by Mr. Wm. Mullineux, F.C.O., on June 16th. The following was the programme:—

Chorus, "See! the proud Chief advances now" ("Deborah")	Handel.
Adagio for the Organ (D major)	Morandi.
Grand Organ Sonata in D minor (No. 6.) Chorale with Variations and Fugue—Andante.	Mendelssohn.
Serenade "L'Enfance du Christ"	Berlioz.
Serenade "Good night! Good night! beloved"	Balfe.
Postlude in D	Smart.

Digitized by Google

OXFORD.

No one who cares for the organ in its modern form could willingly omit from his programme of commemoration proceedings the organ recital given by Mr. Dodds, Mus.Bac., the College organist, in Queen's chapel. The instrument is by far the largest in Oxford, containing four rows of keys, over sixty actual stops (besides couplers, etc., etc.), all of which run throughout the entire compass of the instrument, and possessing, moreover, one of the most splendid swell organs in England. The programme, which, in at least two pieces, was identical with that performed in the Sheldonian on Wednesday, was as felicitiously chosen as it was ably performed, and adapted to show off to the utmost the unusual capacity of the enormous instrument. The following is the programme :—

Concerto (No. 2.)	Handel.
Air with Variations	Wely.
Overture (Occasional)	Handel.
Fugue in E flat	Bach.
Fantasia Pastorale	Wely.
March, from Molique's Oratorio "Abraham" arranged by Best.

FISHERIES EXHIBITION.

The recital on Wednesday, June 13th, was by Mr. Wm. H. Stocks. The following was the programme :—

Motet ("Deus Tibi")	Mozart.
Placidamente in A, and Grazioso in B flat	E. J. Hopkins.
Fugue in D minor	Bach.
Quasi Pastorale in G	H. Smart.
Chorus, "And the Glory" ("Messiah")	Handel.
Prelude and Fugue in G	Mendelssohn.
Prelude in C minor, (Op. 28, No. 20.) (Arranged for the Organ by W. H. Stocks.)	Chopin.
Quoniam ("Second Mass")	Haydn.

An organ recital was given on Thursday, June 14th, by Mr. James Loaring. The following was the programme :—

Overture "Guy Mannering"	Bishop.
Organ Concerto, (No. 1.)	Handel.
Gavotte in G minor	Bach.
Prelude and Fugue	Loaring.

The organ recital on Friday June 15th, was given by Mr. James Loaring. The following was the programme :—

Prelude and Fugue	Bach.
Offertoire in F	Clark.
Andante Grazioso	Smart.

On Monday June 18th, an organ recital was given by Mr. Frank Bradley. The following was the programme :—

Overture ("Semele")	Handel.
Marcia Eroica and Finale	Best.
Prelude and Fugue in G major (1st Book)	Bach.
Harmonious Blacksmith, (with variations)	Chipp.
Intermezzo in E major—Scherzo in A minor, and Passacaglia in E minor (from 7th Sonata for Organ)	Rheinberger.

And on Tuesday Mr. Bradley gave the following :—

Overture ("Amadige")	Handel.
Choral Study, eleven Variations	Merkel.
Trio in C minor, Adagio and Allegro	Bach.
Fugue in G major (from the 9th Volume.)
Marche de Procession and Grand Chorus in F	Guilmant.
Concert Variations on an Original Theme	Archer.

HALSTEAD, ESSEX.

The following is the programme of an organ recital given by Mr. G. Leake, A.C.O., at Holy Trinity Church, after the evening service on Sunday, June 17th :—

March, "St. Polycarp"	Ouseley.
Sonata, No. 4	Mendelssohn.
The Lost Chord	Sullivan.
Funeral March and Chorus of Seraphs	Guilmant.
Concerto, No. 2	Handel.
"If with all your hearts" ("Elijah")	Mendelssohn.
Grand Offertoire in D	Batiste.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

Mr. Eyre's programme on Saturday last was as follows :—

Concerto Fantasia in C minor	Hesse.
"My heart ever faithful"	Bach.
Overture, "Henry VIII."	Hatton.
Finale and Fugue on the 8th Tone	Rheinberger.
Bourrée in D	A. Sanders.
Adagio in E flat	Hopkins.
Intermezzo	A. Macbeth.
March from a Capriccio	Mendelssohn.

PADFIELD, NEAR HADFIELD.

The opening of the new organ for the Wesleyan Chapel (built by Alex. Young and Sons, of Manchester), took place on March 23rd. The following is the specification of the organ :—

GREAT ORGAN. CC TO G, 56 NOTES.

1. Open Diapason	8 ft.	5. Principal	4 ft.
2. Stopped Diapason	8 „	6. Harmonic Flute	4 „
3. Clarabella	8 „	7. Fifteenth	2 „
4. Dulciana	8 „

SWELL ORGAN. CC TO G, 56 NOTES.

8. Spitz Flöte	8 ft.	11. Gemshorn	4 ft.
9. Salcional	8 „	12. Hautboy	8 „
10. Voix Celestes	8 „

PEDAL ORGAN. CCC TO F, 30 NOTES.

13. Bourdon ..... 16 ft.

COUPLERS.

14. Swell to Great (unison).	16. Swell to Pedals.
15. Swell to Great (super-octave).	17. Great to Pedals.

Two Composition Pedals to Great Organ.

NETHERWARDEN.

The new organ (built by Alex. Young and Sons, of Manchester) for Netherwarden Church, near Hexham, was opened on April 21st. Mr. William Metcalfe, of Carlisle, presided at the organ. The following is a specification of the instrument :—

GREAT ORGAN. CC TO G, 56 NOTES.

1. Open Diapason	8 ft.	3. Dulciana	8 ft.
2. Clarabella	8 „	4. Principal	4 „

SWELL ORGAN. CC TO G, 56 NOTES.

5. Gamba	8 ft.	7. Flute	4 ft.
6. Lieblich Gedact	8 „	8. Hautboy	8 „

PEDAL ORGAN. CCC TO F, 30 NOTES.

9. Bourdon ..... 16 ft.

COUPLERS.

10. Swell to Great.	13. Great to Pedals.
11. Swell to Great Octave.	14. Swell to Pedals.
12. Great Octave.

Two Composition Pedals to Great Organ.

STUDY.

As a rule the casual observer of art is not satisfied with its productions, and for this reason, that a man, unless he be an artist, or rather theoretically understands an art, is never gratified with a work of artistic merit; it is something beyond him; something he cannot grasp; he beholds the work with astonishment at first, and probably becomes infatuated with its beauties, but this infatuation, like all spontaneous delight, withers and departs in as short a space of time as it took to take possession of him. An observer of this kind looks upon art in the same way as the fox looked upon the grapes, and, on finding they were out of its reach, walked away, endeavouring to convince itself they were sour. And the man, in turning his back upon a work of art which he cannot appreciate, will look upon it as something ridiculous, whereas if he examined himself carefully, he would most probably discover that it was his own stupidity, and lack of knowledge and study, which is the stumbling block to his appreciating that which is artistic. It is through our imagination, if refined, that we are enabled mentally to behold things that are beautiful, things that are heavenly; but we must have something to feed and guide it, as humanity is naturally prone to evil, there is something required to direct our footsteps into a right channel, and this I hold is the indirect cause of crime that exists in our midst. If an imagination be left to itself, it of course inclines to that which is human, and that is sin, "humanum est errare." It is the training that an infant mind will receive which will find for it either a good or bad path through the world, and thereby decide its future lot. There are two things which a child first feels, pleasure and pain. It has its passions and its pains, and when excited vent is given unto them. The things of the world crowd so suddenly upon the little brain, that reflection is out of the question.

Digitized by Google

As time goes on fear takes possession of the child, and teaches it to modify its feelings. It is chastised when it attempts to return displeasure, and through harshness a child will become deceitful, from the fact that when a thing is promised, and the promise is not kept; when a child is threatened and the threat is not carried out, the timidity becomes cruelly and falsely excited, and the childish wish, built upon the highest pinnacle of hope, is wilfully broken down, so the child, being terribly satiated with disappointment and delusion, its young mind cannot fail to become deceitful.

Reid, on the human mind, aptly remarks: "From being forced into concealing the thoughts which we conceive, we begin to affect those which we do not. So early do we learn the two main tasks of life, to suppress and to feign, that our memory will not carry us back beyond that period of artifice to a natural state when the twin principles of veracity and belief were so strong as to lead philosophers of a modern school into the error of terming them innate."

The basest of criminals possess an imaginative power, as we do ourselves; but it is the terribly wrong groove into which their imagination has been allowed to move, that has led them to crime of the worst description. What is crime but indiscretion and lack of knowledge? It is proved without doubt daily. Criminals and indiscreet persons are their own dupes in the long run. It has truly been said that man is his own sharper and bubble, and the sharpest of men in course of time outwit themselves; they become so entangled in their own vice, that as time goes on they are quite powerless to free themselves from the maze of sin and wrong in which they are held. In his own peculiar way the criminal is a philosopher; he invents laws, ways, and means by which he can find an excuse for crime, and gets so thoroughly permeated with his own special code of order, and having become so used to cheat others, he invariably, and I think quite naturally, cheats himself.

Bad emanates from idleness and lack of study, neglect which, in progress of time, will ruin our mind, and thereby stop our right imaginative power; for the brain is a machine which requires to be carefully and regularly fed to begin with, but when it is thoroughly in working it will go, and nothing will stop it; but if neglected nothing will make it go, the machinery will become rusted and clogged up.

Now this brain motive power is study. A studious life need not necessarily be a secluded one, although learning and knowledge of all description is best grasped in solitude; but am I right in speaking of solitude in connection with study? There is nothing like learning to drive away loneliness, for in the depth of knowledge and science the student is in the realm of happiness, and where true happiness exists, there can be no solitude.

There are students of thought and students of imagination, and in both instances, before they are able to reach anything that is at all reasonable, they must dive deep into the stream of metaphysical investigation, so as to find the origin of intellect, and if we do this we shall find that our studies will greatly strengthen our principles and establish whatever good may exist within us. It is by study of the arts, music, painting, poetry, sculpture, &c., that we learn to look upon virtues in their true light. The virtues in uneducated people arise from emotion, but in the learned from principle. It may be remarked that, apart from the origin of the virtues in learned and unlearned, the effect is the same in each; not so, principle is to be relied, emotion is not. Those who have not studied are very apt to draw false conclusions from nature, which conclusion study alone can prove to be untrue. There can be no education in which the lessons of the world do not take a part, for it is by study that we become acquainted with the world, and learning in whatever sphere of life we may be placed should bring content.

"Of all that belongs to us the least valuable parts can alone fall under the will of others; whatever is best is safest, lies out of the reach of human power, can neither be given nor taken away. Such is this beautiful work of nature, the world. Such is the mind of man which contemplates and admires the world, whereof it makes the noblest part. These are inseparably ours, and as long as we remain in one, we shall enjoy the other."

Has not the student moments of secret and overflowing delight; the glory of gratified research; lightnings of pleasure, which fully repay the loneliness of thought, "and light up his solitude as a revel"?

Lord Lytton observes, "If the certainty of future fame bore Milton rejoicing through his blindness, or cheered Galileo in his dungeon, what stronger and holier support shall not be given to him who has loved mankind as his brother and devoted his labours to their cause? Who has not sought but relinquished his own renown? Who has braved the present censures of men for their future benefit, and trampled upon glory in the energy of benevolence? Will there not be for him something more powerful than fame to comfort his sufferings and to sustain his hopes?"

Virtue has been compared to the precious odours as being most fragrant when crushed, for prosperity does so well discover vice; but adversity does best discover virtue, and it is in possession of certain expedients which lie buried deep within itself waiting until the time may come when they shall be summoned from their hiding places.

In my opinion it is the good that exists in the world working out in its pure and holy path, not only among the cultured, but the most uncivilised. Have you not, reader, ever observed with a certain amount of awe and wonder when gazing upwards, during a severe storm, the blackness that pervades the firmament on all sides; the utter and hopeless solitude that exists around, and suddenly from out the midst of the murky darkness, and when you are beginning to feel that the sky has been shut off from the gaze for ever and ever, there appears a flash of lightning, illuminating the whole heavens, and for the moment the black darkness (which an instant before seemed impenetrable) is forgotten on beholding this sudden dart of fire. And indeed can we not observe the working of the Seraph Virtue, in this way among the most degraded, and where we should least expect to find it? Virtue has truly been called the realm of God; it is the guardian angel of civilisation, the ruling power of knowledge. Verily there is virtue in wisdom; and can we not observe in a benevolent and studious genius the self-sacrificing nature, the high and lofty virtue? A man of this description will (unlike an untutored genius) give up his time to sound reading and reason rather than to fiction and fancy; principle will overrule his inclination, and his love for others will predominate over that of himself. These men, rare though they are, make human misery the object of their search, and the happiness of humanity their sole desire—who, "by a zeal and labour that brings to habit and inclination a thousand martyrdoms, makes their lives a very hour-glass in which each sand is a good deed of a virtuous design." Study and research into wisdom, however shallow, can never be undeserving of attention. Though at first the road of study is hard and laborious to travel, we may depend upon it that sooner or later we shall meet with a sign-post to direct us into the paths of wisdom and into the avenue of learning; we are sure by careful study to find the Garuda stone of knowledge which will act as a future talisman against unhappiness and sin. However great a genius a man may be, unless he possesses application and is fond of study, his talents must become misguided, for genius is little else than "natural inclination," and this, if not properly guided, will most assuredly fail. But in our studious genius we have our natural knowledge converted into natural wisdom, and such characters may be said to make life beautiful; when we behold the utter ignorance that exists, these men indeed act as a consolation, for however black the darkness we still feel the effects of the light. Such men are called proud by the world, but men of genius open to their own interest a world in themselves, and so become consoled for the ill-feeling in the world without; they teach us to love the vanities of earth for their graces and not for their utility. The loves of the world, coarse and low, feed their rank fires from an unmingled and gross depravity; but these men show us the serpent's teeth in such errors and point out the sublime extreme. Though wisdom and genius be scattered by the wind, still the seeds are dispersed by unselfish hands to hearts which would willingly forego the whole harvest of their labours upon those who know not the good intent of the workmen. As I have before observed, genius must be nurtured and guided by study before it can hope to succeed, and then its progress will be limited unless modesty be associated with it, for a vain man can never hope to reach a successful standard of excellence, from the fact that he will never listen to the advice of others; he never knows peace of mind because he is sure to find someone who will excel him in something. Vanity is a growing and insatiable disease, for what it prizes to day to-morrow it will reject as useless. Yet there are vain men who are not blind to the glories of Virtue, but not until they become matured in years and see the follies of vanity, do they avail themselves of their perceptions. But let us not mistake a vain for an ambitious man; the difference is this, a man whose failing is vanity requires an immediate reward for labour done, he cannot wait, and that which he attempts he must at once seize; nor are his cravings easily satisfied, unless they procure all, and so his whole time is taken up, and wasted away by stretching out for that which is hopelessly beyond the power of his reach. It has been remarked that there are certain characters which in the world are evil, and in seclusion are good. These persons are of such a morbid sensitiveness that they are perpetually galled by the collision of others. Such men are under the dominion of vanity; and that vanity, never at rest in the many competitions of society, produces nothing but hatred. But often in solitude the good dispositions, with which our vanity or self love no longer interferes, have room to expand and ripen without being cramped by opposing interests; yet with all this a ruling passion in a man will never part from him, he may modify it, but rid himself—never! A vain man is detestable to society, for vanity often brings with it that most despicable of weaknesses "Jealousy." Yet how often it exists in men of talent, and it must show itself. But vanity and jealousy I care not how deftly they may be practised, must in the end bring discontent with the things of life. Jealousy and vanity can only exist in selfish people, but I hold that studious men of genius are not in possession of these petty trifles; we may be certain that a man so vain of his work lacks knowledge, and in whatever sphere of art he may move in or whatever talents he may be in possession of, he must study to become proficient. How often do we not see in painters and musicians lives wasted for the want of knowledge to direct the talent, and these are the men whose very life desire is fame; it is the one hope always present, yet never realized; it is present in the dreams, it darkens the thoughts, shuts out entirely the energies and enjoyments of life. Such characters as these do not possess that vanity and jealousy of which I have spoken, but the greater weakness, contempt; they look upon humanity as beneath themselves yet they forget that they themselves make up a portion of the one sordid mass which they are so willing to condemn. The thirst for fame in an untutored genius is a deadly plant, which grows up to the exclusion of all else, but in a studious genius it shelters rather than withers the virtues by which it is encompassed, and is a means of binding such an one by charity closer to mankind; in the former it produces a disgust to his species, but in the latter a love, with the one, power has "the badge of distinction, with the other the means to bless."

Digitized by Google

Fame is a passion which should not be suppressed but directed, and to clothe oneself with hope and humility is the surest way of winning it. Then may we look for a brilliant future, which, though it may place us a step above our fellow-men, will bring charity and not pride with our success.

G. J. GROVER.

HENRY SMART MEMORIAL FUND.

At a meeting of the subscribers to the "Henry Smart Memorial Fund" (the Rev. Canon Duckworth, D.D., in the chair), held on the 19th inst. at Trinity College, Mandeville Place, W., it was resolved that the amount available after expenses, about £500, should be devoted to the establishment of a perpetual exhibition at the Royal Academy of Music bearing the name of Henry Smart. It had been found impracticable to carry out the original idea of establishing a Musical Scholarship at Oxford or Cambridge. The committee having expressed their great disappointment at the smallness of the sum contributed, it was resolved by the meeting that the trustees, in whose names the capital sum will be invested, be empowered to receive and add thereto any additional contributions which may be offered them. The musical public which has so largely profited by the genius of Henry Smart will thus still have an opportunity of doing honour to the memory of one of the most gifted English composers. Contributions may still be paid to the "Henry Smart Memorial Fund" at Messrs. Coutts's, 59, Strand, W.C.

Academical Intelligence.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY.

The following result of the preliminary examination for the Degree of Mus.Bac., and special examination for the ordinary B.A. degree has been issued:—

Class 1 (in order of merit): James; Karn; Pluine, Corpus; Frye; Ewer, Trinity; Skynner; Sykes. Class 2 (in alphabetical order): Bullock, Trinity; Capel-Cure, King's; Hulburt, Corpus; Merrick, Trinity; Reichardt, Corpus; Vasper; Walters, Emmanuel. Examiners: Sir G. A. Macfarren, F. E. Gladstone, Mus.Doc., R. Pendlebury, M.A.

Correspondence.

NATIONAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "MUSICAL STANDARD."

SIR,—The establishment of a National College of Music, so universally responded to, induces me to ask "what will ultimately be the fate of its scholars?" The College will be the means of, firstly—educating, and secondly—throwing upon the musical world, a vast number of instrumentalists. The fact appears to be ignored that there is already in London alone a considerable number of talented English players who cannot obtain a living, owing to the distinguished patronage lavished on foreign artists. British musicians naturally look forward to the London season for their harvest, but as regularly as the season approaches we find two Hungarian bands located here, advertising themselves "under the immediate patronage of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, and the nobility," engaged day and night at various garden parties, dinners, balls, &c., to the exclusion of the English musician. There is also another band here from Vienna, whose arrival has thrown an entire orchestra out of employment, as they first play at a theatre, and afterwards at an aristocratic club, recently formed.

The manifest injustice to English artists must be apparent, and I feel sure the facts need only to be brought under the notice of those who have the power of bestowing their patronage on native talent to remedy the evil.

By kindly inserting these few remarks in your influential paper, you will greatly oblige a large section of the musical profession.

I am, sir, yours obediently,

AN ENGLISH MUSICIAN.

Passing Events.

The Tonic Sol-fa College gave an enjoyable breakfast to the Cologne choir at Exeter Hall, Strand, on June 15th, 1883.

Sunday concerts are being given at New Brighton, Liverpool. Last Sunday the programme included the vocal portion of Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise."

A new Mass by Signor Mazzoni, for male voices, orchestra, and organ, will be used for the first time at the Italian Church, Hatton Garden, on Sunday, July 1st.

The number of MSS. sent in for the Cardiff Eisteddfod in August is no less than 317, including 17 cantatas. The gathering will, it is believed, be one of much importance.

Mr. Gabriel Thorp gave an evening concert on June 12th at the Steinway Hall. A good miscellaneous programme was well gone through, Mr. Gabriel Thorp himself sang several songs, French, Italian, and English, and proved himself to be a useful and promising vocalist.

The Scarborough Daily Post speaks highly of the abilities of Miss Gertrude Jackson, a young artist and daughter of a local professor, who has attained distinction at the recent R. A. M. Examination in Harmony and Pianoforte Playing.

The days of the Leeds Triennial Musical Festival are October 10th, 11th, 12th, and 13th. The programme includes Mendelssohn's "Elijah" and "Lobgesang," Raff's symphony oratorio, "The End of the World," which will then be performed for the first time in England; Niels Gade's secular cantata, "The Crusaders," Sir G. A. Macfarren's oratorio "King David," and Rossini's "Stabat Mater." Sir A. Sullivan will conduct.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Russell Lochner and Herr Alto Booth give violin and organ recitals at the Lancaster Hall on June 30th, July 7th, and 14th. The first performance was given on June 16th.

The London Music Publishing and General Agency Company propose to meet two important requirements now pressing upon the musical world. The publication of meritorious compositions, by young composers, is a matter sure to command public sympathy. The systematic construction of good and cheap pianofortes may also be productive of good. It may be that company's scheme will call for further consideration at an early opportunity.

Mr. C. F. South, the esteemed organist of St. Augustine and St. Faith's, City, has been appointed organist of Salisbury Cathedral. Mr. South, hitherto an amateur organist, will henceforth take rank, it may be presumed, as a professional artist. He has done much good work in his London appointment during the past thirteen years. He is an excellent organ player, and an earnest and accomplished church musician.

The College of Organists meeting on July 3rd at the Neumeyer Hall will be one of special musical interest. Mr. F. J. Sawyer will speak about Mozart's "Organ Concertos" and selections from those hitherto overlooked works will be given by the lecturer, upon a small organ built by Mr. A. Kirkland, of Wakefield, and supplied through Messrs. Weekes and Co. expressly for this occasion, and by several stringed instrumentalists.

Oxford has wrested from Cambridge the honour of first properly recognising a distinguished and highly esteemed musician. In a Congregation held on June 14th, the honorary degree of Doctor of Music was conferred upon Charles Villiers Stanford, M.A., organist of Trinity College, Cambridge. He was presented for the degree by Mr. C. H. Lloyd, organist of Christ Church, in the absence of the professor of music. Mr. Lloyd, in a short Latin speech, alluded to the reputation Mr. Stanford's compositions had obtained, especially in Germany, and to the lustre he had already shed on the English musical name, expressing the wish that an opportunity could have been given those present of hearing some of his compositions performed.

Miss Eva Lynn gave her first matinee musicale on June 20th, at 26, Cambridge Square, Hyde Park, W. The artists included Mdme. Liebhart, Miss Edith Phillips, Miss Adèle Myers, Miss Eva Lynn, Mdme. Olga de Morini, Signor Ria, Mr. Levetus, Mr. Hirwen Jones, and Mr. Arthur Oswald. The instrumentalists were: solo pianoforte, Signor Tito Mattei; harp, Mr. F. Chatterton; violin, Mr. Bernhard Carrodus. Miss Eva Lynn sang several songs effectively, including Mozart's "Addio" and Mr. Salaman's "Hebrew Love Song." Miss Edith Phillips gave an artistic rendering of Buoncini's "Per la gloria." An instrumental feature of interest was the excellent violin playing of Mr. Bernard Carrodus, a son of the eminent English violinist. The duet, "Una Notte a Venezia," was excellently sung by Miss A. Myers and Mr. Levetus. A good miscellaneous programme was well gone through.

On June 15th a number of ladies waited on Mr. Monk at the Philharmonic Hall, Liverpool, where the examinations in connection with Trinity College, London, have been carried on during the week, for the purpose of presenting him with a testimonial of their esteem. The subscribers, about forty in number, past and present pupils of Mr. Monk, who has occupied the position of honorary local secretary to the college for several years. The testimonial took the form of an illuminated address, the work of Mr. Thomas Eyres, Church Street, and was a most artistic work of art. The address conveyed the subscribers' appreciation of Mr. Monk's earnest and untiring efforts towards the improvement of musical art in this city, expressing a hope that he might be long spared to labour as successfully as he had done in the past. Major R. E. Stewart occupied the chair, and the presentation was made, on behalf of the subscribers, by Humphrey J. Stark, Mus.Bac. Oxon., who spoke of Mr. Monk's musical ability, adding that his exertions as honorary local secretary had made Liverpool the most important centre of Trinity College in the whole country. The presentation was acknowledged in feeling terms.

The Querist.

REPLY.

E.B.—"ALLEGRO VIVACISSIMO," Scarlatti, played by Madame Menter, at her pianoforte recital, on May 19th, is only published in the original edition. Madame Menter played her own arrangement, and this is not published.—WILLIAM H. STOCKS.

Service Lists.

FIFTTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.
JUNE 24th.

London.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Oakeley in E flat; Introit, Lo, from the desert homes; Holy Communion, Oakeley in E flat. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Barnby in E flat; Anthem, Behold, God hath sent Elijah (Mendelssohn).

WESTMINSTER ABBEY.—Morn.: Service, Mendelssohn in A; Continuation, Garrett in D. Even.: Service, Cooke in C; Anthems, O Praise the Lord of heaven (Goss), and I waited for the Lord (Mendelssohn).

TEMPLE CHURCH.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum Laudamus, Attwood in A; Apostles' Creed, Harmonised Monotone; Anthem, The wilderness (Wesley). Even.: Service, Cantate Domino and Deus Misereatur, Attwood in D; Apostles' Creed, Harmonized Monotone; Anthem, Sing, O heavens (Sullivan).

LINCOLN'S INN CHAPEL.—Morn.: Service, Steggall in D; Kyrie, Steggall; Anthem, O praise the Lord of heaven (Goss). Even: Service, Turle in D; Anthem, I will sing of Thy power (Greene).

CHRIST CHURCH, CLAPHAM.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Plain-song; Kyrie and Credo, Schubert in B flat; Offertory Anthem, In the sight of the unwise (Ouseley); Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei, and Gloria in excelsis, Schubert. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Bunnett in F; Anthem, A selection from Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise."

FOUNDLING CHAPEL.—Morn.: Service, Nares in F; Anthem, How beautiful are the feet (Handel). Aft.: Service, Foster in A; Anthem, Hallelujah (Handel).

HOLY TRINITY, TULSE HILL.—Morn.: Chant Service. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Gregory in E flat; Anthems, Comfort ye, and, And the glory of the Lord (Handel).

HIGH WYCOMBE PARISH CHURCH.—Even: Service, Anthems, From Thy love as a Father, and, Unfold ye portals everlasting, "The Redemption" (Gounod).

ST. MICHAEL'S, CORNHILL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Wesley in F; Anthem, Awake, awake (Wise); Kyrie, and Creed, Thorne in G. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Attwood in C; Anthem, Prepare ye the way (Wise).

ST. PETER'S (EATON SQUARE).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Garrett in F. Evensong: Service, Smart in B flat; Anthem, Blessed be the God and Father (Wesley).

ST. MAGNUS, LONDON BRIDGE.—Morn.: Service, Opening Anthem, I will arise (Cecil); Te Deum and Jubilate, Travers in F; Kyrie, Mendelssohn. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Travers in F; Anthem, Thou wilt keep him (Wesley).

ST. JAMES'S PRIVATE EPISCOPAL CHAPEL, SOUTHWARK.—Morn.: Service, Introit, Blessed is he that cometh (Mozart); Communion Service, Mozart. Even.: Service, Calkin in B flat; Anthem, Jerusalem, happy and blest (Mendelssohn).

ST. SAVIOUR'S, HOXTON.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Goss in F; Holy Communion; Kyrie, Credo, Sursum Corda, Sanctus, and Gloria in excelsis, Dykes in F. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Parry in D; Anthem, And the Glory (Handel).

ST. PAUL'S, AVENUE ROAD, SOUTH HAMPSTEAD.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Sullivan in D; Jubilate, Helmore; Kyrie, Nares in F. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Walmisley in D minor; Anthem, What are these, that are arrayed (Stainer).

ST. SEPULCHRE'S, HOLBORN.—Morn: Service, Barrow in F; Anthem, Incline thine ear (Himmel). Even.: Service, Nares in F; Anthem, How lovely (Mendelssohn).

ST. PETER'S, LEIGHAM COURT ROAD, STREATHAM, S.W.—Morn.: Holy Eucharist, Purge me with hyssop (Novello); wise); Introit, The Lord hath called me (Chantwise); Mass, Hoyte in D; Gradual, Before I formed thee (Chantwise); Even.: Service, Magnificat, Stainer in A; Anthem, Comfort ye (Handel).

Digitized by Google

ST. PAUL'S, BOW COMMON, E.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Chants; Holy Communion; Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei; Offertory, and Gloria in excelsis, Calkin in B flat. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Tours in D; Anthems, Blessed are they, Among those that are born, and There is not a greater prophet, from "St. John the Baptist (Macfarren).

ST. MARY BOLTONS, WEST BROMPTON, S.W.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Dykes in F; Holy Communion, Kyrie, Credo; Offertory, Sanctus, and Gloria in excelsis, Stainer in E flat; Benedictus, and Agnus Dei, Goring in F. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Gounod in D; Anthem, Prepare ye the way of the Lord (Crament).

ST. MARGARET PATTENS, ROOD LANE, FENCHURCH STREET.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Sullivan in D; Communion Service: Offertory Anthem, Comfort ye (Handel); Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei and Gloria, Schubert in B flat. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Hopkins in F; Anthem, as pants the hart (Spohr).

ST. PETER'S, VERE STREET, W.—Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Hopkins in F; Anthem, The Lord is my shepherd (Macfarren).

ST. MARY ABCHURCH, E.C.—Morn.: Service, Wesley in F; Communion, Garrett in D. Even.: Service, Stainer in A.

Country.

ST. ASAPH CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Boyce in C; Anthem, Listen, O Isles (Allen). Even.: Service, Roberts in F; Anthem, Prepare ye the way (Garrett).

ASHBURNE CHURCH, DERBYSHIRE. — Morn.: Service, (throughout), Garrett in F. Even.: Service, Garrett in F; Anthem, The voice of one crying (Garrett).

BEDDINGTON CHURCH, SURREY.—Morn.: Service, Smart in F; Introit, Lo, from the desert homes; Communion Service, Calkin. Even.: Service, Stainer; Anthems, Comfort ye, every valley, and The Glory of the Lord (Handel).

BIRMINGHAM (ST. CYPRIAN'S, HAY MILLS).—Morn.: Service, Field in D; Anthem, O be joyful (Hayes). Even.: Service, Clarke-Whitfeld in E; Anthem, The Heavens declare (Boyce).

BIRMINGHAM (S. PHILIP'S CHURCH). — Morn.: Service, Chipp in A; Anthem, O be joyful (Palestrina). Evensong: Service, Hopkins in F; Anthem, O that I knew where I might find Him (Sterndale Bennett).

BRISTOL CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Garrett in F. Even.: Service, Garrett in F; Anthem, And to a mighty host (Spohr).

CANTERBURY CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Smart in G; Anthem, Blow ye the trumpet (Leslie); Communion, Smart in G. Even.: Service, Smart in G; Anthem, Comfort ye my people, And the glory (Handel).

CARLISLE CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Smart in F; Introit, The Lord is in His Holy Temple (Thorne); Kyrie, and Nicene Creed, Dykes in F. Even.: Service, Hopkins in F; Anthem, The voice of one crying (Garrett).

CHESTER (ST. MARY'S CHURCH).—Morn.: Service, Boyce in C; Communion Service, Lee in G. Even.: Service, Barby in E; Anthems, Comfort ye, Every valley, And the glory of the Lord ("Messiah," Handel).

DONCASTER (PARISH CHURCH).—Morn.: Service, Boyce in C. Even.: Service, Ebdon in C; Anthem, What are these? (Stainer).

DUBLIN, ST. PATRICK'S (NATIONAL) CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, King in D; Communion, Kyrie, Creed, and Sanctus, King in C; Anthem, What went ye out into the wilderness to see (Macfarren). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Stainer in A; Anthems, And sorrow and sighing (Wesley), Be thou faithful unto death (Mendelssohn).

EXETER CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Travers in F; Communion, Wesley in F. Even.: Service, Travers in F; Anthem, Comfort ye my people (Handel).

ELY CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Barnby in E; Benedictus, Plain-song; Kyrie and Credo, Thorne in E flat; Gloria, Chipp in A flat; Anthem, It is high time (Barnby). Even.: Service, Barnby in E; Anthem, Jerusalem! thou that killest, Happy and Blest (Mendelssohn).

LLANDAFF CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Stainer in E flat. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Stainer in E flat; Anthem, Prepare ye the way (Wise).

LIVERPOOL CATHEDRAL.—Aft.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Farebrother in B flat; Anthem, Prepare ye the way of the Lord (Wise).

MANCHESTER CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Stainer in A; Holy Communion, Stanford in B flat; Anthem, Listen O Isles (Allen). Aft.: Service, Stainer in A; Anthem, This is the record of John (Gibbons).

MANCHESTER (ST. BENEDICT'S). — Morn.: Service, Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei, and Gloria in excelsis, Monk in C. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Wesley in F.

MANCHESTER (ST. JOHN BAPTIST, HULME).—Morn.: Service, Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus and Agnus Dei, Tours in F. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Bunnett in F; Anthem, Praise the Lord (Scott).

NORTH BERWICK, N.B. (S. BALDRED'S).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Steggall in G; Kyrie, Mendelssohn. Even.: Service, Chants; Anthem, What are these? (Stainer).

PETERBOROUGH CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Stainer in E flat; Anthem, Listen, O Isles (Allen); Communion Service, Thorne in E flat. Even.: Service, Stainer in E flat; Anthem, Comfort ye (Handel).

SHEFFIELD PARISH CHURCH. — Morn.: Service, Kyrie, Sullivan in D. Even.: Service, Chants; Anthem, O Lord our governor (Marcello).

SHERBORNE ABBEY.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Lyle in D. Even.: Service, Anthem, Come, mighty Father (Handel).

RIPON CATHEDRAL. — Morn.: Service, Boyce in C; Anthem, Be thou faithful (Mendelssohn); Kyrie and Credo, Garrett in F. Aft.: Service, Stainer in E; Anthem, What are these? (Stainer).

ROCHESTER CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Dean in A; Anthem, From the rising of the sun (Ouseley). Even.: Service, E. J. Hopkins in B flat (cantata); Anthem, Stand up and bless (Goss).

WELLS CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Bryan in G; Introit, Let us not be weary (Macfarren). Even.: Service, Stacy in A; Anthem, I was glad (Purcell).

 Post-cards must be sent to the Editor, 6, Argyle Square, W.C., by Wednesday. Lists are frequently omitted in consequence of not being received in time.

NEWSPAPERS sent should have distinct marks opposite to the matter to which attention is required.

NOTICE.—All communications intended for the Editor are to be sent to his private address. Business communications to be addressed to 185, Fleet Street, E.C.

[The attention of the several Organists is called to the favour they confer upon their brother musicians by forwarding their notices regularly: this column of the paper is much valued as an index to what is going on in the choice of cathedral music, so much so that intermissions constantly give rise to remonstrance. Lists should be sent in a week in advance if possible.—ED. Mus. Stand.]

HENRY SPEECHLY,

CAMDEN ORGAN STEAM FACTORY,

KING'S ROAD, ST. PANCRAS, LONDON, N.W.

ESTABLISHED 1860.

Specifications and Estimates for Organs of any Magnitude, also for Reconstructions, Repairs, and Re-voicing.

Tunings contracted for, and Tuners sent to all parts of the Country at regular intervals or when required.

ORGANS ON HIRE WITH OPTION OF PURCHASE.

 Church, Chamber, and Chancel Organs for Sale or Hire; One or Two Manuals. Ready for immediate use. Easy Terms if required.

☞ All Pipes and other Parts manufactured on the Premises.

BEETHOVEN'S SYMPHONIES CRITICALLY DISCUSSED. By A. T. TEETGEN. 3s. 6d.

FREDERIC CHOPIN; His Life, Letters, and Works. By M. KARASOWSKI. Translated by E. HILL. 2 vols., 12s. 6d.

ELEMENTARY MUSIC. By Dr. WESTBROOK. 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

TO ORGANISTS and CHOIRMASTERS.—VOCAL EXERCISES for CHOIRS and SCHOOLS, by Dr. WESTBROOK, in neat cover, 2d.

WOMAN AS A MUSICIAN, an Art Historical Study. By F. RAYMOND RITTER. Price One Shilling.

TO PIANOFORTE TEACHERS.—Plaidy's (professor at Leipzig Conservatory) PIANOFORTE TEACHER'S GUIDE can be had in boards, price 1s.

ART of MODULATION: Handbook, showing at a glance the Modulations from one Key to any other in the Octave, for Orgaists and Musical Directors. 2s. 6d., paper; 4s., cloth.

ART IN EARNEST; or, Wagner and no End. An Essay on the "Meistersinger," and the "Nibelungen Ring." By B. F. WYATT-SMITH. Price 6d.

W. REEVES, 185, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

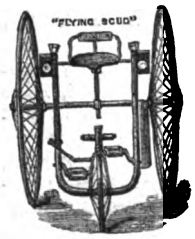
BICYCLES AND TRICYCLES.
NEW AND SECOND-HAND.



"FLYING SCUD" and "ECLECTIC" TRICYCLES, are the Machines for 1883. Spoken of by the Daily News of January 30th as "Splendid machines." "NANCY LEE," Weldless Steel," and "NONSUCH" Steel Bicycles, from £5 5s. Any machine at maker's price for twelve or less equal monthly payments, or for £5 down and 20s. per month, or large discount and carriage paid for cash. Can be seen and tried before purchasing in our school (60 by 40, concrete floor, tuition free), adjoining Show-rooms, the largest in London, with over 400 new and second-hand on View. Machines bought, sold, cleaned, repaired (estimates given), warehoused, advanced upon and exchanged.

Illustrated Lists post free. Hours 9 till 7; Saturdays till 4.

Repairs of all kinds neatly, cheaply, and promptly executed. Cheapest house in the trade for fittings. Parts and sundries of all descriptions kept n stock.

Machines Let on Hire with Option of Purchase.

SOUTH LONDON MACHINISTS' COMPANY.

STEAM WORKS: Suffolk Works, Suffolk Grove, Great Suffolk Street, S.E. Show Rooms and Offices: 28 and 29, Suffolk Grove. Bicycle and Tricycle School: 18, Suffolk Grove. City Depot, Show Rooms, and School: Tower Chambers, Moorgate Street, E.C. (Nearly opposite Moorgate Street Station.) PERAMBULATORS and all Domestic Machines at lowest prices for cash, or on easy terms without extra charge. Lists free. State kind required.

ESTABLISHED 1872.

When writing please say where you saw this advertisement.

T. R. WILLIS,

Organ Builder, Metal & Wood Pipe Maker and Voicer,

TOWER ORGAN WORKS, 29, MINORIES, LONDON.

AN ORGAN KEPT FOR PRACTICE.

REBUILDING, TUNING, AND REPAIRING.

E & W. SNELL,

Manufacturers of Harmoniums, and Reed Pedal Organs,

KING STREET NORTH, CAMDEN TOWN, LONDON, N.W.

NOTE.—These are the only Instruments at which an Organist can really find himself "at home," as all Scales, Positions, and Measurements are adopted strictly in accordance with the Resolutions of the Council of the College of Organists. Estimates free.

MALEY, YOUNG & OLDKNOW,
ORGAN BUILDERS,

KING'S ROAD, ST. PANCRAS, LONDON, N.W.

Specifications, Estimates, and Designs for Church, Chamber, Concert, and all Descriptions of Organs.
Materials, Workmanship, and Tone guaranteed to be First Class.
Organs rebuilt to suit any position, enlarged, and Revoiced at very moderate charges.
Tunings in all parts of the Kingdom.

PROSPECTUS FREE ON APPLICATION.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts, excepting under exceptional circumstances.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit, at Three per cent. interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables, the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons, and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares, and Annuities.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

The Birkbeck Building Society's Annual Receipts exceed Five Millions.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with immediate Possession, and no Rent to Pay.—Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate Possession, either for Building or Gardening purposes.—Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

WITH 25 PER CENT DISCOUNT FOR CASH,
OR 15/- PER MONTH,
SECOND HAND 10/0 Per Month
ON THE 3 YEARS' SYSTEM.
BORD'S PIANOS
PIANOS EXCHANGED.
LISTS FREE OF
C. STILES & Co. 42 SOUTHAMPTON ROW, W.C.

CONSTANT LAURENT, HARMONIUM and ANGLO-ORGAN MANUFACTURER, Established in 1859 at 85, HIGH STREET, MARYLEBONE, LONDON, W.—Repairing and Tuning Executed Promptly. Price List on Application.—Intending Purchasers are respectfully solicited to inspect my Instruments and Factory.

EUSTACE INGRAM, Organ Builder,

Combines excellence of Tone and Workmanship with Economy.

INSPECTION INVITED.

WORKS:—Burnard Place, Eden Grove, Holloway, London, N.

"HARMONY SIMPLIFIED."

A Concise Treatise on Harmony, Thorough Bass, and Modulation, for the Use of Students. By FARLEY NEWMAN. In paper cover, 1s. 6d. net; bound in cloth, 2s. 6d. net.

"THE ORGAN OLIO."

Edited by ARTHUR HENRY BROWN. A Collection of Short Pieces or the Organ or Harmonium, by various Composers. 2s. net.

London: B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster-row, E.C.

MUSIC SENT ON SALE OR RETURN on highly advantageous terms by B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster-row, London.

MUSIC of EVERY PUBLISHER supplied to Dealers, Teachers, and Schools. Having the largest varied Stock Europe. The terms, which are highly advantageous, sent on application London: B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster-row.

B. WILLIAMS, PATERNOSTER ROW.—Having purchased the lease and goodwill of the above old-established business, together with the very extensive trade stock, I beg to announce that with the old staff of assistants which I have specially retained, I shall endeavour to carry on the concern with as much satisfaction as heretofore. The publishing department (of which I have had the sole management since the death of Mr. B. Williams) will receive every attention.

LUCY J. MULLEN.
(Daughter of the late Mr. B. Williams).

POPULAR CLASSICS,

A SELECTION OF STERLING COMPOSITIONS

FOR THE

PIANOFORTE.

SEVENTH SERIES.

		NETT. s. d.
73.	Haydn's Fantasia in C	4 0
74.	Chopin's Polonaise in A. Op. 40	3 0
75.	Scarlatti's Sonata in A. No. 31	3 0
76.	Hummel's Rondeau villageoise. Op. 122.. ..	4 0
77.	Mendelssohn's Andante in E minor. Op. 7, No. 1	3 0
78.	Bach's Prelude in B flat. 1st Partita	2 0
79.	Dussek's Adagio from "L'Invocation." Op. 77	3 0
80.	Chopin's Berceuse. Op. 57	3 0
81.	Weber's Adagio from Sonata. Op. 24	3 0
82.	Hummel's La bella capricciosa. Op. 55	6 0
83.	Bach's Allemande in B flat. 1st Partita	3 0
84.	Mendelssohn's Andante and Rondo capriccioso. Op. 14..	4 0

SELECTED, EDITED, AND FINGERED BY

WALTER MACFARREN.

LONDON:

EDWIN ASHDOWN, Hanover-square.

printed for the Proprietor by BOWDEN, HUDSON & Co., at 23, Red Lion Street, Holborn, London, W.C.; and Published by WILLIAM REEVES, at the Office, 185, Fleet Street, E.C. West End Agents:—WEEKES & CO., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W. Subscriptions and Advertisements are received either by the Publisher or West End Agents.—Communications for the EDITOR are to be forwarded to his private address, 6, Argyle Square, W.C

SATURDAY, JUNE 23, 1883.—Entered at the General Post Office as a Newspaper.

Digitized by Google

THE MUSICAL STANDARD

A NEWSPAPER FOR MUSICIANS PROFESSIONAL AND AMATEUR

No. 987. VOL. XXIV. FOURTH SERIES. SATURDAY, JUNE 30, 1883. WEEKLY: PRICE 3D.

THE MUSICAL STANDARD is published every Saturday, price 3*d.*, by post, 3½*d.*; and may be had of any bookseller or newsagent by ordering its regular supply.

SUBSCRIPTION.—The Musical Standard is posted to subscribers at 15*s.* a year; half a year, 7*s.* 6*d.*, payable in advance.

The rate is the same to France, Belgium, Germany, Italy, United States, and Canada.

Post Office Orders to be made payable to the Publisher, William Reeves, 185, Fleet Street, London, or to the West-end Agents, Messrs. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W.

ADVERTISEMENTS.—The charge for ordinary advertisements in The Musical Standard is 2*s.* 6*d.* for three lines or less; and 6*d.* for each line (10 words) in addition. "Organist wanted," 3*s.* 6*d.* for 3 lines or less. A reduction is made for a series.

FRONT PAGE.—Concert and auction advertisements, &c., are inserted in the front page of The Musical Standard, and charged one-third in addition to the ordinary rates. Other advertisements will be inserted on the front page, or in the leader page, if desired, at the same terms.

YORK ORGAN FACTORY,

BLENHEIM PLACE, MONKGATE.

SPECIFICATION of NEW ORGAN, built by the late ROBT. POSTILL, in Pitch Pine Case, Stained and Varnished, with Spotted Metal Speaking Pipes in Front.

GREAT ORGAN.

Open Diapason	8 feet.		56 Notes.
Salcional	8 ,,		44 ,,
Stop Diapason	8 ,,		56 ,,
Principal	4 ,,		56 ,,
Flute Harmonic	4 ,,		56 ,,
Fifteenth	2 ,,		56 ,,
Sesqualtra	—		112 ,,
Pasoune	8 ,,		56 ,,

SWELL ORGAN.

Double Diapason	16 feet.		44 Notes.
Open Diapason	8 ,,		44 ,,
Stop Diapason	8 ,,		12 ,,
Clarabella	8 ,,		44 ,,
Gemshorne	4 ,,		56 ,,
Viol de Gamba	8 ,,		44 ,,
Echo Dulcet	8 ,,		44 ,,
Hautboy	8 ,,		56 ,,

PEDAL ORGAN.

Bourdon (large scale)	16 feet.		30 Notes.

COUPLERS.

Swell to Great. Swell to Pedals.

Great to Pedals.

Three Composition Pedals for Changing the Stops.
Two Octaves and a third of German Pedals for the Feet.

Front of Organ	10 feet 3 inches.
Front to Back	9 ,, 6 ,,
Height	16 ,, 6 ,,

The above Instrument is for SALE, and may be seen and heard by applying at the Works, or Mrs. J. POSTILL'S, 25, Monkgate.

MR. HUMPHREY J. STARK begs to announce his REMOVAL to 12, Norwood Road, Herne Hill, S.E.

WANTED a CHAMBER ORGAN. Must be by a good maker and in good condition.—Address, Mrs. SIMONDS, Fishtoft, Boston.

WANTED, by the Advertiser, PRACTICE on an ORGAN, three manuals, near Cannon Street or Charing Cross Stations.—Address, "F. D.," care of Davies & Co., Finch Lane, Cornhill.

GENTLEMAN (well recommended), with thorough knowledge of music, DESIRES SITUATION in a London house (publishing department preferred).—Address E. G., care of Mr. REEVES, 185, Fleet Street, E.C.

MAKERS AND REPAIRERS.

GEORGE WITHERS & CO.

(Late of Coventry Street),

WHOLESALE IMPORTERS OF

MUSICAL STRINGS,

From Rome, Padua, and Naples.

A FINE COLLECTION OF ITALIAN INSTRUMENTS.

Bows, Cases, Music Stands, &c. See Price Lists.

51, ST. MARTIN'S LANE, LONDON.

AN ORGANIST will shortly be open to RE-ENGAGEMENT, in or near London preferred. 1st Class Certificate from Society of Arts; good testimonials and references.—Address, F. J. PARKER, 10, Sangora Road, New Wandsworth, S.W.

A CLERGYMAN wishes to recommend an EX-PUPIL TEACHER as CLERK or ASSISTANT in a Firm where he could obtain employment and also further instruction in music.—Address Rev. E. HARMAN, Pickwell Rectory, Oakham.

TO SOLO BOYS.—A Professional Organist wishes to meet with a BOY having GOOD SOPRANO VOICE for Church Choir. In return first class tuition on organ, piano, and singing is offered, with expenses.—"ORGANIST," Beaconsfield House, Iverson Road, Kilburn, N.W.

Post 8vo., boards, 2s. 6d., post free.

TECHNICS OF VIOLIN PLAYING, by KARL COURVOISIER. Edited and translated by H. E. Krehbiel. Numerous illustrations.

Joachim says: "It is my opinion that this book will offer material aid to all violin players.

W. REEVES, 185, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

THE ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER of Cirencester Abbey desires RE-ENGAGEMENT. 14 years' Cathedral experience.—Address as above.

JUST PUBLISHED, "MORNING and EVENING SERVICE," set to music for the especial use of Parish Choirs, by FREDK. HUNNIBELL, F.C.O. Price, 1s.; or separately, 8d. and 6d.

London: NOVELLO, EWER & CO.

FIRST AND SECOND GRADES JUST PUBLISHED.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH.

Under the Sanction and Approval of the Rev. Sir FREDERICK A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart., M.A., Mus.Doc. Oxford, and of Sir G. A. MACFARREN, Mus.Doc., Cambridge.

THE MUSICIAN.

A GUIDE FOR PIANOFORTE STUDENTS.

Helps towards the Better Understanding and Enjoyment of Beautiful Music.

By RIDLEY PRENTICE.

"We are far from suggesting that there is any royal road for acquiring technical knowledge, but we are quite certain that Mr. Ridley Prentice's road is in every way the pleasantest that has yet been laid before any pianoforte student. If anyone will work through this first grade conscientiously, by the time he has reached the end of it he will have mastered many difficulties in harmony and musical form which he might have hitherto thought were almost insurmountable. The work supplies a deficiency in musical literature which has long been felt; and we earnestly recommend the study of it to all those who wish to become intelligent pianoforte players."—Saturday Review.

"A knowledge of form is imparted in simple and pleasant language. This is the right sort of instruction book, for it teaches people to think and study for themselves. We heartily commend it to all who desire to understand, satisfactorily interpret, and enjoy beautiful music."—Academy.

SECOND EDITION READY.

THE CHILD'S PIANOFORTE BOOK; a First Year's Course of the Piano, by H. K. MOORE, Mus.B., B.A., illustrated, 4to, 3s. 6d.

W. SWAN SONNENSCHEIN & CO., Paternoster Row

And all Book and Music Sellers.

Digitized by Google

Musical Intelligence.

THE HANDEL FESTIVAL AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.

THE SELECTION DAY AND "ISRAEL IN EGYPT."

The grand success of the eighth triennial Handel Festival is now more than a thrice told tale, and it would be both stale and unprofitable to write more than a few words on the subject.

The selection was, as usual, made up from opera, cantata, and oratorio, with the G minor concerto for the organ. The advantage which Handel gained in an artistic point of view, from writing no less than thirty-nine operas, is not to be lightly esteemed. Some writers have drawn a striking parallel between the operas of Handel and the comedies of Shakespeare, and think that the early schooling both had in these forms of art, was the very means by which they gained so complete a mastery of them, as to enable them hereafter to free themselves from their constraining influence. This they would never have effected in so remarkable a degree, if they had from the first devoted themselves to the highest form of their respective arts, but as in Shakespeare comedy preceded tragedy, so with Handel did oratorio succeed to opera, and I cannot but think that in both instances the lighter style was the foundation of nobler and grander productions. On the part of Handel the advantage was even greater, for in many of his oratorios we find whole songs of a suitable character transferred from his secular works and adapted to sacred words, and many of his instrumental pieces, as is well known, were changed into choruses; indeed much honest labour that at one time seemed destined to be forgotten, was utilized for a nobler purpose. Thus it is with all honest and conscientious work. Sooner or later the time will come when the labourer shall meet with his reward.

In the selection both the sacred and secular parts were sung with wonderful precision. Only in one—"Oh the pleasure of the plains"—did Mr. Manns feel it necessary to beat his book, and in that but for a few bars. With regard to the numerous solos, Mdme. Valleria was heard, if not to perfection, certainly to much greater advantage, in the song "From mighty kings" than on the rehearsal day. Mdme. Albani was charming in "Let the bright seraphim" as well as in "Angels ever bright and fair," transposed by the orchestra into six sharps. Mdme. Trebelli and Mdme. Patey were no less successful in their respective songs, and Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. Barton McGuckin, and Mr. Santley did not fail to do justice to some of the finest and most exacting of Handel's songs. One of the most beautiful features of the programme was the organ concerto No. 1, and of Mr. Best's admirable performance of it, it would be impossible to speak too highly.

"ISRAEL IN EGYPT."

The broad grand choruses which occupy the chief part of this mighty work, with their varied and skilful treatment, make it especially interesting to musicians, and the fact that on this day there was a larger attendance at the Crystal Palace than on any other of the Festival, is not to be passed over, for it is a sure sign that we are not yet indifferent to the effects produced by combined human voices, effects often more grandly impressive than those of any orchestra.

Of the performance, a word or two will suffice. Absolute perfection was scarcely to be expected, but it was little short of this. I have attended four of these festivals, and on no occasion has the choir reached so high a standard of perfection. This remark is not only applicable to "Israel in Egypt," but to the other performances. A friend of mine has taken the trouble to count over the names in the choir list, in order to ascertain the proportion the contingent from the provinces bears to that of London, and I am told that including the names of men from nearly all our cathedrals, only about one-sixth of the whole are from the country. London may, therefore, be justly proud of what she has achieved, and it would, I think, be quite practicable to have in each of the two years succeeding the Handel Festival, a musical festival at Sydenham, at which both symphonies and the choral works of our greatest composers might be performed. London, with its wonderful resources, its unbounded wealth, and its growing musical taste, is more than able to effect this desirable object, especially with a conductor who has proved himself so skilful and efficient as Mr. Manns has done, in conducting not only a large orchestra, but also in the less familiar task of commanding so large a body of voices as that gathered together at the Handel Festival.

R. S.

M. SAINTON'S FAREWELL CONCERT.

ALBERT HALL, JUNE 25TH.

PROGRAMME.

PART I.

Overture, "Zampa" ..... Hérold.
Part Song, "Fair and Young" ..... J. Coward.
The Coward Family Quartet.
Aria, "Caro mio ben" ..... Giordani.
Miss Annie Lord.
{a. Serenade, "Through the night" ..... Schubert.
{b. Song, "Devotion" ..... Schumann.
Mr. Vernon Rigby.
Air, "Creation's Hymn" ..... Beethoven.
Miss Damian.
Concerto (Andante and Finale) ..... Mendelssohn.
Mons. Sainton.
Song, "I will come" ..... Cowen.
Mr. Edward Lloyd.
Aria, "Ah, quel giorno" ("Semiramide") ..... Rossini.
Madame Trebelli.
Romanza, "Salve dimora" ("Faust") ..... Gounod.
Signor Scovello.
Couplets, "Aux bruits des lourds Marteaux" ("Philémon et Baucis") ..... Gounod.
Mr. Santley.
Song, "The Days that are no more" ..... Blumenthal.
Madame Sainton-Dolby.
Air, "Sweet Saint" ("St. Dorothea") ..... Mme. Sainton-Dolby.
Mr. Edward Lloyd.
Violoncello obbligato, Mons. Lasserre.
(Accompanied by the Composer.)
Suite de Pièces "Language of Flowers" ..... F. H. Cowen.
No. 2. Lilac (First emotion of love).
No. 5. Yellow Jasmine (Elegance and grace).
No. 6. Lily of the Valley (Return of happiness).

PART II.

Overture, "William Tell" ..... Rossini.
Aria, "La bella mea" ..... Schira.
Madame Trebelli.
"Ave Maria," on a Prelude by ..... Bach.
(arranged by Gounod for voice, violin, pianoforte, and harmonium.)
Mdme. Adelina Patti, Mons. Sainton, Mr. Leipold, and Mr. Louis Engel.
Duo Concertante, for two Pianofortes.
Variations in B flat ..... Schumann.
Miss Margaret Gyde and Miss Cantelo.
Song, "Save me, O God" ..... Randegger.
Miss Mary Davies.
Nocturne, Violoncello ..... Chopin.
Mons. Lasserre.
Song, "Here's a health unto his Majesty" ..... Old English.
Mr. Santley.
Ballad, "Strangers yet" ..... Claribel.
Madame Sainton-Dolby.
Solos, Violin {a. "Un rien" {b. "Valse" ..... Sainton.
Mons. Sainton.
Song, "The Nightingale's Trill" ..... Ganz.
Miss Hilda Coward.
March from "Le Prophète" ..... Meyerbeer.

Conductors:—Sir Julius Benedict, Mr. Frederick Cowen, Mr. Leipold, Mr. Willing, Mr. Sidney Naylor, and Mr. Randegger.

As might have been expected, the leave-taking from the public of so popular an artist as M. Sainton has ever been from the beginning of his career in the metropolis, was of more than usual interest. Admired as a virtuoso, respected and beloved as a man, and united to a lady who, as a vocalist, held for many years the first rank—and by her noble qualities endeared herself to all who had the good fortune of knowing her—the worthy pair not only enchanted their audiences but created a school by transmitting their excellent methods to a large number of pupils.

The great popularity of these distinguished artists could not have been better proved than by the fact, that when M. Sainton came forward as an apologist for Mdme. Adelina Patti and Mr. Sims Reeves, both artists, who, amongst the many "ills that flesh is heir to," had been visited—Mdme. Patti by "un enroument," whilst Mr. Sims Reeves had been assailed with "hay fever"—the announcement, excepting a general titter when the great English tenor's name was mentioned, caused no visible sign of disappointment.

M. Sainton's vigour, brilliant execution, and sympathetic tone, found full scope in Mendelssohn's Concerto and two of his own graceful compositions. His pupils of the Royal Academy, represented by Mdlle. Vaillant, presented him a wreath of golden laurel leaves amid the enthusiastic and overwhelming applause of the whole audience, who rose en masse.

Digitized by Google

Nothing could better show the excellence of Mdme. Sainton-Dolby's method than her rendering of the two popular songs, which she accompanied herself in an admirable manner. Her full clear notes and her remarkably distinct enunciation and impressive declamation might well serve as a valuable lesson to many vocalists of the present day. The floral gifts, in the form of magnificent bouquets, were as plentiful as the ovations were enthusiastic.

Cela va sans dire, that all the artists, who assisted, did so con amore, and were at their best.

FERDINAND PRAEGER.

Another contributor says:—

The writer has known and borne willing testimony to the merits of this eminent violinist for the last twenty-five or thirty years, and remembers him in his heyday of summer. M. Sainton, a Frenchman by birth, has long been a leading man amongst us, and for some years acted as chef-d'orchestre at Her Majesty's "Opera" (formerly yclept Her Majesty's Theatre and the King's Theatre), under Sir Michael Costa. As a soloist, M. Sainton always commanded splendid successes, notably in classical music, and the severe "quartet" department of art. The veteran, who married a favourite and super-excellent contralto, well-known as Miss Dolby, took his farewell of an admiring public last Monday afternoon at the Albert Hall, and was favoured not only with a large audience, but a cordial and enthusiastic greeting. How M. Sainton played his own part at this farewell concert, it boots not to say. Ca va sans dire! He chose the andante and finale from Mendelssohn's (one) violin concerto in E minor, and two solos from his own pen, "Un rien" and a Valse. Part of the finale, in the concerto, was repeated by express "desire." Madame Sainton-Dolby, reappearing for this great success only, condescended to sing, and in finest style, Blumenthal's air "The days that are no more," and Claribel's "Strangers yet." How melancholy to think that we must, henceforth, submit to miss two so great artists, vocal and instrumental!

Mdme. Trebelli volunteered "Ah quel giorno" (Rossini), and Schira's "La bella mia." Mr. Sims Reeves could not appear as announced. Mr. Edward Lloyd sang Mdme. Dolby's "Sweet saint," and Mr. Santley Gounod's "Hammer song." A band of 100 performers was engaged. The conductors of the concert were Sir Julius Benedict, Mr. F. Cowen, Mr. Leipold, Mr. Willing, Mr. Sidney Naylor, and Mr. Randegger. M. Sainton retires full of years and honours.

A. M.

The Times thus notices the antecedents of M. Sainton, and the facts are sufficiently interesting:—

"It was in 1844 that M. Sainton, at that time a young and promising artist of continental repute, made his first appearance in London at a Philharmonic concert, and the reception he met with led to his return in the next season, and finally, to his permanent settlement amongst us. M. Sainton appeared before the public in various capacities, and was successful in each of them. His technique, acquired under Habeneck at the Paris Conservatoire, and his highly cultivated taste, enabled him to interpret the great classical masters, and he was one of the original members of the Beethoven Quartet Society, in which he acted as 'first violin.' The same important post he occupied frequently at the late 'Musical Union,' founded by Mr. Ella, the 'Monday Popular,' and other high class concerts, besides continuing his activity as a solo player. But perhaps the most signal and permanent services to the cause of music M. Sainton has rendered are as first violinist,' or as it is technically called the 'leader' of orchestras. In that capacity his name will always be connected with that of his famous chief, Sir Michael Costa, under whom he worked with unwearying zeal at the Italian operas of Covent Garden and her Majesty's, the Sacred Harmonic Society, and the great provincial festivals, and whom he now follows into well-merited otium cum dignitate. At Monday's concert a large and distinguished audience had assembled to do honour to a 'good and faithful servant.'"

The Continental and American sea-side and pleasure places of resort announces their summer musical arrangements. We may well ask here, is anything being done to make the bands at certain of our waterside places more complete, better balanced, and more generally effective? and further, are steps being taken to secure the performance of higher class music than one generally hears at our sea-side pleasure places?

BRIGHTON.

The newly formed Musical Society gave their first concert recently at the Hove Town Hall, under the able direction of Mr. F. J. Sawyer, Mus.Bac. The programme included Attwood's "Coronation Anthem," the overture to Spohr's "Last Judgment," the 1st movement from Mozart's G minor Symphony, Romberg's "The Transient and the Eternal," and several vocal pieces, including two old madrigals. This interesting programme was admirably performed, the chorus singing being exceptionally good; and the enthusiastic recall of Mr. Sawyer at the end of the concert showed how well the audience appreciated the performances under his bâton. Madame Rose Kœnig played Mendelssohn's G minor pianoforte concerto in good style and the band accompaniments were very satisfactorily rendered.

MR. W. CARTER'S CHOIR.

Mr. William Carter held another grand concert at the Albert Hall on June 16th, when his choir sang Auber's chorus in E flat, known as the "Prayer," from "Masaniello," otherwise "La Muette de Portici," a gem of that beautiful opera; also Mendelssohn's "Farewell to the forest," "Rule Britannia," and E. Bending's grand "Patriotic March." The united bands of the three regiments of foot-guards played pieces at proper intervals. Miss Ellicott, daughter of the Bishop of Gloucester, gave a very intellectual and effective reading of Handel's air in A, "From mighty kings." Mdme. Trebelli, Mr. Foli, Mr. Maybrick, Mr. Barrington Foote, and Miss A. Larkcom, sang in turn. Haydn's "Toy" symphony had the honour to be performed by Sir Julius Benedict, Mr. W. Ganz, Signor Tito Mattei, M. Poznanski, M. Jacob (of Brussels), Mr. Lindsay Sloper, Mr. E. Bending, Mr. W. Carter, and Mr. C. Oberthür; the vocalists were Mr. Foli, Mr. Barrington Foote, and Mr. Maybrick. Mr. Oberthür and Mr. Poznanski played solos on harp and violin with their customary success. The recitations, always de trop, do not, happily, lie within my province. At private parties they are simply inflictions, "cruelty to animals" of the higher order!

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

Nothing particularly new this week. "La Gioconda" (repeated on Monday), continues to draw the public, and no wonder. Last week the directors revised Mozart's genuine Italian opera, "Le Nozze di Figaro," with Mdme. Albani as the Countess Almaviva, Mdme. Repetto as Susanna, Signor Cotogni as Figaro, Signor De Reszke as the Count, and last, not least, Mdme. Pauline Lucca as the love-sick page Cherubino, whose "Voi che sapete," with its delicious change of tonality (on the same vocal note), from C minor to A flat major, made a deep impression from the finished phrasing and expressive delivery of the text. Mdme. Albani sang her music with consummate skill. Signor De Reszke makes the Count rather too stiff and statuesque for the character. Almaviva, after all, is something of a libertine, and libertines, if jealous of wives, seldom rise to the dignified grandeur of the "injured husband." How rotten the morality of an age when such "fine gentlemen" as Don Juan, Almaviva, and the like, were not only tolerated, but popular! A French revolution of morals, no less than politics, are certainly called for; and Beaumarchais gave the movement a hard shove!

Mdme. Patti on Friday, June 22nd, appeared in the title part of "Semiramide," the dismal and dreary tragic opera of Rossini, which it is impossible to sit out without yawning. A dull repulsive plot is not redeemed by florid vocalisation on texts whereof the style now sounds vapid, effete, and utterly out of date. "Bel raggio," of course, excited applause, and the duet "Giorno d'orrore" (with Mdme. Scalchi as Second) went well as usual. M. Gailhard was the Assar.

A. M.

MOZART'S definition of prima vista reading is one which musicians in general, and young students in particular, should commit to memory. It is this:—To play the piece in the time in which it ought to be played, and to express all the notes and appoggiaturas, etc., with proper taste and feeling, as written, so that it should give the impression of being composed by the person who plays it. This is an art in itself, and can only be acquired by faithful, persistent study.—Church's Musical Visitor.

Digitized by Google

MUSICAL ARTISTS' SOCIETY.

The twenty-ninth performance of new compositions took place at the Royal Academy of Music, Saturday evening, June 23rd. Three very charming English dances, for pianoforte duet (Algernon Ashton), were played by the composer, and Mr. E. H. Thorne, the second one narrowly escaping a bis. A pianoforte trio in E flat (Dr. Jacob Bradford), was played by Miss Emily Lawrence, Mons. Victor Buziau, and Mr. Edmund Woolhouse. Mr. H. C. Banister presented his own Romance and Tarantella, No. 2; and four melodious and poetical characteristic pieces (E. H. Thorne), were sympathetically performed by Miss Edith Goldsboro. Songs by Oliveria Prescott, and C. J. Read, were sung by Mr. Arthur Jarratt, and Miss Von Hennig. "The Safeguard," a sea song (Duncan Hume), sung by Mr. W. J. Fletcher, was redemanded and repeated. Through some misunderstanding the string quartet, by F. Adler, was not played.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY MUSICAL SOCIETY.

Mr. Hubert Parry's "Second Symphony in F," was given with very encouraging success at a recent concert. The first movement is tuneful and charming, though here and there a little overwrought perhaps. The Scherzo in D minor and major is piquantly instrumented. The Larghetto in B flat is a charming and characteristic movement. The finale is an interesting movement, though perhaps less spontaneous in its themes than are the preceding pieces. The whole work is one of remarkable musicianship, with not too much obscured form outlines. The composer was enthusiastically received. Other items of the concert were Schumann's highly characteristic "Pilgrimage of the Rose," and Brahms's "Schicksalslied." The chief vocalists were Miss Amy Aylward, Miss Helen Arnim, Mr. Walter Ford of King's College, and Mr. Herbert Thorndike. Both band and chorus, under the very excellent beat of Mr. C. V. Stanford, did their parts very satisfactorily. The Society deserves much praise for consistent efforts in the production of new and little used musical works.

THE COLOGNE CHOIR.

Recent concerts have fully maintained the reputation of this famous choral society. The members had the honour of a "command" to sing before the Prince of Wales and the Royal Family at Marlborough House last Saturday afternoon. On June 21st, when the writer was present for the last time, the Choir sang pieces by Kreutzer, Mendelssohn ("Wasserfahrt" and "Wanderlied"), Schubert, Rietz, Herbeck, Koschat, &c. The fine tone, the nuances, and the crescendo of the Choir, were particularly noticeable in Mendelssohn's part-song "Der Frohe Wandersmann." Signor Eugenio Pirani and Mr. W. Ganz played an effective pianoforte duet, a Polonaise and Valse composed by the first-named gentleman, who had previously introduced his own "Fantasia," Op. 16, also a Prelude and a Study of Chopin. Concerts were held on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, when this interesting series was to terminate. It is suspected, however, that extra concerts will be asked for by the public. Herr De Lange deserves the highest praise for his able direction.

Another contributor says:—

The Cologne Choir's visit has been one of the most important events of the season. It has shown us the perfection to which part singing by a large body of men can be brought, when each individual that makes up the whole is an enthusiast and a musician. How thoroughly they were appreciated was proved by the fact that at the last concert there was a strong tendency to encore each number on the programme. The very way the whole Choir rise as one man at the instant the conductor gives the signal, the attention with which they watch his movements till the moment to begin arrives, shows how, one and all, they are heart and soul in their work. Their influence has been good, for it has given us a higher ideal of part-singing; and they may reckon on a hearty welcome when they shall again visit our metropolis.

B. F. WYATT-SMITH.

The next students' invitation orchestral concert at Trinity College will take place on July 3rd, at eight o'clock.

MDLLE. KLEEBERG'S RECITALS.

Mdlle. Clotilde Kleeberg, although her patronymic is obviously Teutonic, happens to be a Parisian by nationality, and a pupil of M. Massart. Her second pianoforte recital, held at the Prince's Hall, Piccadilly, on the afternoon of Thursday, June 21st (the longest day, alas!), passed off with the greatest éclat. Mdlle. Kleeberg, it may be repeated, is an artist of the first rank, and seems to have a special aptitude for the exposition of modern pianoforte literature, especially the works of Schumann and Chopin. The scheme included Beethoven's Sonata in E flat, Op. 31, No. 3, which the writer had the misfortune to miss ("such a busy life"), Fugues of J. S. Bach in F sharp and B flat, an Impromptu of Schubert in E flat, Wehlé's "Berceuse," a Romance by Mendelssohn in A minor, Rubinstein's Barcarolle in G minor, "La Fille des Aulnes" by G. Pfeiffer, and four pieces of Chopin, viz.—two Preludes in A flat and B flat minor, two Mazurkas in B minor and A flat, an Etude in C minor, and Ballade in G minor. Schumann's "Carnival" supplied, about half way, the pièce de résistance, and excellent, in every sense, was the interpretation by this accomplished and exceedingly modest young French lady. Brilliant execution and aplomb; force, defined purpose, and decision; flexibility, versatility of style, and delicate colouring, may be noted as essential qualities—not to deal in vague generalities, or to be content with eulogy which, if not analytical, conveys no compliment to the performer. The "Carnaval" piece requires as many different "humours" as the spangles of friend "Arlequin's" parti-coloured suit of tights. The recital only lasted an hour and a half, and the public were delighted. Mdlle. Kleeberg played upon an iron-grand Erard. A. M.

RICHTER CONCERTS.

A notice was given with the programmes last Monday to the effect that, "owing to unforeseen circumstances, Herr Henschel's concerto, Herr Richter regretted to say, could not be included in the programme; the 'Vorspiel und Isolde's Liebestod' would therefore be substituted."

The "unforeseen circumstances' are much to be deplored; for so unusual an event as the appearance of a successful singer in the character of instrumentalist was looked forward to with great interest; the more so as those who had the privilege of being present at Herr and Mdme. Henschel's Vocal Recitals were struck with the distinguished vocalist's power—not only as an excellent accompanist, for that was known before; but—as a pianist with no inconsiderable amount of executive ability.

The programme was given in the following order:—

Symphony, No. 6, in C ("Linz")	Mozart.
Walther's Probelieder (Trial Songs,) from "Die Meistersinger"	Wagner.
a. "Am stillen Herd" ("By silent hearth in winter-tide")
b. "Fanget an!" ("Now begin!")
Mr. Edward Lloyd.
Vorspiel und Isolde's "Liebestod" from "Tristan und Isolde"	Wagner.
Symphony, "Harold en Italie," Op. 16.	Berlioz.
Viola, Herr B. Holländer.

Mozart's Symphony cannot be said to rank among the noblest of his works; it was, however, admirably performed and much applauded. Mr. Lloyd's rendering of Walther's songs was earnest and appreciative, well meriting the double recall that testified to his success.

The introduction and closing scene of "Tristan und Isolde" was again, as at the first concert of the season when it was given, the most impressively perfect performance of the evening. The Harold Symphony has been heard to as great advantage in England on previous occasions. Possibly insufficient time was given to rehearsing; for the more than average excellence that Herr Richter accustoms us to expect was not attained. Those who have heard the work under Mr. Manns would not only fail to find anything particularly striking in the performance of last Monday, but might not improbably, be disposed to give the preference to the interpretation presented at the Crystal Palace. There appeared to be a lack of that repose which is born of perfect trust and confidence between conductor and performers; consequently, the delicate attention to detail, into which Herr Richter throws his whole soul when he has nothing else to think of, was to a great extent absent. Herr Holländer's part was, however, in every respect, all that could be desired: he is an artist of the first rank.

Digitized by Google

Probably most of us can say now, with Schumann:—"Berlioz is as clear to me as the blue sky above me." But it is only within the last few years that he has been allowed to make headway among us; and—"Honour to whom honour is due"—it was the Wagner Society that kept the name of Berlioz before the musicians of London by including his works in their programmes more often than those of any master but Beethoven and Wagner, at a time when his compositions were not to be heard here by any other means.

It is to be regretted that our leading musicians should as "C. A. B." has done in our programmes, take up Dr. Hiller's unworthy and ignoble version of the well-known story relating to Paganini's gift of 20,000 francs to Berlioz. We have been taught to believe—what indeed it was perfectly natural for anyone possessed of a spark of generosity to believe—that Paganini, in an overflow of enthusiastic admiration for the master whom he considered was the worthy successor of Beethoven, proved his admiration in the substantial way that was most acceptable to the struggling artist. Not so! We learn in these wise latter days that the "gift was by no means a voluntary one, but was extorted from him by Jules Janin, the editor of the Journal des Débats, then the source of all artistic fame in Paris. Paganini, fearful of losing his prestige with the public if the Débats should turn against him, yielded to Janin's persuasions, and sent the sum named to Berlioz." This is one version of an old and honourable story. Dr. Hiller says it was Armand Bertin, the proprietor of the paper, who obliged Paganini to send the money. But neither version agrees very well with Paganini's own remarks:—"It is the profoundest satisfaction I ever felt in my life," and "Now all those who are in league against you will dare to say nothing more; for they know I am not easy." (Fr. aisé; probably meaning here "easily parted from my money.")

We know that Berlioz's gratitude to Paganini never grew less; that he had no greater wish than to prove himself worthy of his benefactor's generosity by some musical offering noble enough to be dedicated to him: we know further that the "Romeo and Juliet" symphony was inspired by this high-souled artistic gratitude: and shall we say now that Berlioz was only the dupe of a kindly-meant, but none the less vile plot; that Paganini was no more capable of artistic enthusiasm and self-forgetfulness than we are of appreciating such feelings; that all the "calumnious insinuations" against him referred to by Berlioz as having arisen at the time, are solid truths; and that it is a duty we owe our fellow-creatures to discover a base, despicable motive for everybody's actions, there being nothing pure, unselfish or honourable under the sun? Each one of us must decide in this matter as his own heart directs him.

B. F. WYATT-SMITH.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

The University Choral Society concluded the present season on 22nd instant with an evening concert in the Dining Hall of Trinity College. By comparison with what the Society has previously produced, it must be confessed, that the programme on this occasion was of a somewhat modest character. At their first concert for this season they produced "Acis and Galatea" (Handel), and the oratorio "Jonah," by Carissimi, and their second performance was Gade's "Pysche." The concert under notice consisted principally of solos, part songs, and glees, with a departure which I am delighted to chronicle, viz., the introduction of orchestral music. The concert opened with Haydn's No. 12 Symphony in B flat. The venture was indeed a bold one, as the orchestra was composed chiefly of amateur talent; all the more credit is therefore due for the admirable manner in which the symphony was performed. The composition is brimful of melody and delicate orchestration, and was rendered with excellent effect, and listened to with very marked attention. The ballet from Schubert's "Rosamunde" was also very tunefully rendered by the orchestra. For the production of some of the vocal music the society procured the services of Mrs. Scott Fennel and Miss Keane, both professionals. Mrs. Scott Fennel sang "How Like a Flower" (Schumann, "A Dream on the Waters" (Schubert), "When the Tide comes in" (Barnby), and "Fond and Firm" (E. H. Seymour), and were one and all rendered by her with that grace and finish which characterises the true artist. A special interest attaches itself to the last song, "Fond and Firm," the composer being a member of the University Choral Society Committee, and for which song he obtained the first Balfe Memorial Prize. Miss Keane rendered "Thou Fair and Happy Boy," from Hiller's "Lurline," and "For Pity's sake" (Adams), in a very agreeable manner, and was warmly applauded. A gentleman amateur possessed of a nice quality tenor voice, sang with great expression "Sweet Morn of May" (Sir Robert Stewart), also "The Paradise in Herrenalf," by Mr. Arthur Patton; the composer in each case playing the accompaniment. A member of the Society rendered "Droop not, Young Lover" (Handel), in commendable manner, but it was quite apparent that the bass music of Handel is not suited to his voice. Another member of the Society sang an Aria by Handel in a very good style. Two part-songs "The Hawthorn Tree" and "The Hawthorn in Berry," both by Sir R. Stewart, were given in excellent style by the chorus, as was also "The Song of the Vikings," by Eaton Faning. I should not forget to mention a violoncello solo, "The Last Rose of Summer," and a "Gavotte," from Carolan's Concerto, which was exquisitely played by an amateur. The foregoing comprised the principal items of the programme. It is to be hoped the Society will continue to introduce into its programme the production of classic orchestral music, which I am sure would be very successful under the able guidance of its esteemed conductor, Sir R. Stewart.

T. J. B.

LIVERPOOL.

(From our Own Correspondent.)

June 26.

The Liverpool Philharmonic Society has undergone several changes lately. The proprietors held meetings and denounced the doings of the committee, and ousted several of them, when the election of members to serve on the committee occurred; the other members resigned, and so there is now an entirely new committee elected by the enraged proprietors. The cry was, that there was too much of the foreign element in the concerts, and that an English conductor ought to be engaged; and yet the very first thing that this new committee does is to elect Mr. Hallé as the new conductor, thereby lowering the Liverpool society to that of second fiddle to Manchester! Mr. Hallé's terms are that he continues his own concerts as before, and introduces some drastic change into the chorus. Why this worship of Hallé? Is there no Englishman equal to conducting the musical affairs of the Liverpool Harmonic Society? The re-election of the committee is to be ratified by the proprietors to-morrow (Wednesday) if they agree to their insane arrangement; if the proprietors do confirm the committee's nomination, it will be an evil day for the Liverpool Harmonic Society.

I cannot do better than give a few quotations from a letter which appears in the Liverpool Daily Post of to-day:

"The new committee of the Philharmonic Society have issued a circular calling an extraordinary general meeting for Wednesday next, the 27th inst., at which meeting they will submit for the consideration and approval of the proprietors an appointment of a conductor.

"No name is mentioned in this circular; but it is an open secret by this time that the committee will propose on Wednesday to offer the post to Mr. Charles Hallé, of Manchester, and to omit from his contract the principal clause imposed on all former conductors—viz., that the conductor shall not arrange to give, or conduct, any orchestral or other concerts in Liverpool or the immediate neighbourhood, excepting those of this society or in connection with it.

"As to Mr. Hallé's pre-eminence as a conductor there can scarcely be two opinions. But, notwithstanding our unbounded respect for Mr. Hallé, there exists an opinion that his appointment to the conductorship of the Philharmonic Society will prove an irretrievable mistake.

"There are many persons who share in the opinion that the Liverpool Philharmonic Society is something more than a concert-giving society—that, as the leading musical society, it exerts a fatherly protectorate over musical matters in this city; that it is the recognised home of local musicians; and that it is and should remain essentially a Liverpool institution. Such it has been for over forty years, and now it is proposed to merge the individuality of our musical life into that of Manchester.

Digitized by Google

"One might understand this eagerness to secure the services of Mr. Hallé if we had not already the opportunity to enjoy his concerts in our own hall; but the policy of handing over unconditionally the management of our society to a gentleman, however eminent he may be, who represents Manchester if he represents anything, and who will continue to give a series of concerts in our own hall for his own benefit, is to many most unintelligible. What would the shareholders of the National Steamship Company say if it were proposed that Mr. Guion should manage their company for a small salary, and at the same time be allowed to continue his business in their office? By men of business that would be called a suicidal policy. I see no difference between that and what is proposed by the new committee of the Philharmonic Society.

"That the fullest control should be given to the conductor over all the musical arrangements of our society—in fact, that his authority should be commensurate to his responsibilities—is a policy generally acknowledged to be essential; but no man can serve two masters equally well, and our conductor, if invested with the unlimited powers that are his due, should be ours only. There should be no possibility of any suspicion that such a thing as a rival interest could ever stand between him and our society.

"Let the best man be chosen that can be found, or let us be as patriotic as we like in our choice; but above all let us remain loyal to our society and to our city, and do not let us sell our birthright for a mess of pottage."

Mr. Martin Schneider gave an organ recital upon the organ in Mossley Hill Church (to the organistship of which he has just been appointed) on Saturday afternoon, which was very successful in every way. Mr. Schneider's playing is always of a refined and artistic character. The programme of the recital will be found in the proper column. J. J. M.

MR. WILLING'S CHOIR.—By a graceful thought, Sir M. Costa's "Eli" was given on June 16th, at St. James's Hall. Miss Robertson announced to take the soprano part did not appear, but Miss Griffin took her place. The soloists were Mdme. Patey, Mr. Vernon Rigby, Mr. Ludwig, and Mr. Lewis Thomas. The oratorio, on the whole, was well rendered.

NORWOOD.—The St. Luke's summer concert was given at the Institute, Lower Norwood, on Monday evening, June 25th, under the able direction of Mr. R. Sloman, Mus. Doc., Oxon, the principal vocalists being Mdme. Clara West, Miss Lottie West, Miss A. Percival, Mr. F. J. Smith, Mr. C. G. Goodall, and Mr. H. Hancock; flautist, Mr. H. Pope; pianists, Miss Plowright and Dr. Sloman. Everything passed off admirably and there was a good attendance.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.—A Students' concert was given at the City of London School, on Wednesday evening the 20th inst. Mr. Weist Hill conducted and Mr. J. Henry Leipold was the accompanist. A large number of students took part, and their efforts were much appreciated by a crowded audience. After two songs—those of Miss Clara Dowle and Mr. Sydney Beckley—demands for encores had to be submitted to. Mr. Beckley gave "The Bedouin's Love Song" (Pinsuti), in very good style, and displayed the quality of his fine baritone voice; Miss Clara Dowles' "Softly Sighs" (Weber) was given in an excellent manner, her voice being heard to much advantage. This was her first appearance at a Students' concert, and she was warmly congratulated on her successful debût.

ST. MARY, HORNSEY RISE.—This church was formally re-opened for divine service on Wednesday morning, June 20th, the anniversary of the Queen's accession, and the 22nd of the consecration of the church. It has been enlarged, cleaned, and has undergone considerable structural alterations. The organ, a two-manual instrument, which was greatly in need of repair, has at the same time been thoroughly overhauled and cleaned by Mr. Henry Willis, the original builder, under the direction of Mr. Thos. H. Bunbury, the organist and a special committee. The organ chamber has been entirely re-built and enlarged, the pedal organ re-modelled, and its tracker work dispensed with by Mr. Willis's admirable pneumatic apparatus. A violoncello stop has been added to the pedal organ and a new set of Bourdon pipes substituted for the old ones. The new case of pitch pine, designed by the architect, with its beautifully surmounted pipes of spotted metal, forms an elegant feature in the north transept. The tone quality of the instrument is vastly improved, and its power considerably augmented. Mr. C. W. Pearce, Mus. Bac., Cantab., F.C.O., presided at the organ and played a selection of music after the service. The Sermon was preached by the Bishop of Bedford.

EXETER.—An organ recital was given on the 23rd at the Victoria Hall, by Mr. Harold Ryder. The organist made a very favourable impression, and he was warmly applauded at the close of each piece; two or three times, in fact, the audience wished to have the piece repeated, but Mr. Ryder wisely refrained from yielding to the wish, and thereby unduly prolonging the performance. His programme opened with an Allegretto in E flat, by Wely, played in a style which showed that the organist was master of his subject, and which promised a careful and intelligent rendering of the other selections. No. 2 was Beethoven's beautiful Andante con Variazione in G. This Mr. Ryder performed with great skill, and the piece was long and loudly applauded. C. J. Frost's March in B flat was well rendered, the rhythm being excellently marked. In Pleyel's Variations on the German Hymn the pedal part in the last variations was finely done. Guilmant's Caprice in B flat, with its taking echo effects, proved a delightful morceaux. Here again the performer might have interpreted the sustained applause of his audience as an encore, but after a brief interval he passed on to the extract from Handel's Concerto in G minor—allegro, adagio, and andante—which was given with admirable manipulation. E. H. Turpin's fantasia on a Theme by Weber was effectively treated. The performance concluded with a fine rendering of Bach's Toccata and Fugue in D minor.

GLASGOW.—By the death of Mr. Thos. Logan Stillie on June 6th, Glasgow has lost sight of its best known musical worthy. He was for a considerable time musical critic of the Glasgow Herald, in which capacity he gained the esteem of many of the famous artists who visited Glasgow, and did much to make known what is good and classical in music by his admirable writings. His valuable library of musical works is bequeathed to the Glasgow University, a fact which is not altogether satisfactory in itself, inasmuch as the bequest will be practically inaccessible to musical students. This places Glasgow in the peculiar position of having the most extensive musical libraries, both of which are carefully packed from the public reach. We understand that the Ewing library in Anderson's University is still unarranged, though it was bequeathed and catalogued many years ago. There is nothing stirring in the music section of Glasgow at present, nor is there much likelihood of anything occurring till after the holidays. J. B.

NOTTS CHURCH CHORAL UNION.—The twenty-sixth annual festival of the choirs comprising the Notts Church Choral Union was held in the Collegiate Church of St. Mary's, Southwell, better known as the Minster. The musical portion of the morning service was admirably rendered. Mr. A. Marriott presided at the organ, and the Rev. W. G. Cruft, of Edwalton, Nottingham, conducted. The service was intoned by the Rev. R. F. Smith, minor canon of Southwell Minster. The afternoon service had evidently more attractions for the general public than the morning, for long before the hour fixed for service the Minster was crowded. At half-past three there was not standing room to be obtained, and probably such an immense concourse of people has never been seen at the festival before. The musical portion of the programme was again well rendered, even better than in the morning. The anthem, "The God of Jeshurun," was admirably sung, the quartet deserving special mention. The whole of the services were most successful. A large number of the clergy from the neighbourhood were present, and with but few exceptions all the clergy came with their various choirs. The organ was played throughout by Mr. A. Marriott, of the Minster. The choirs present (including that of Southwell Minster), numbered 30, and consisted of some 685. As usual the alto part was too weak in numbers for the securing of a just tone balance, and the trebles in the same way just as much too strong in proportion. All things considered the music was effective.

Foreign Musical Intelligence.

"Königin Mariette," a comic opera by Ignaz Brull, has been successfully played in Munchen.

A large new organ, built by the firm of Merklin, for Rouen Cathedral was opened by M. Guilmant the other week.

It is announced that Madame Augusta Holmes has finished an opera, "La Montague Noire," of which according to custom she has written both words and music.

The Concordia Society of Prague offered a prize for the best essay on the music of Richard Wagner and its national character. Ten manuscripts were sent in, and the prize was awarded to M. Louis Nohl, who is already favourably known by his works on Beethoven and Mozart.

The three-act opera "Sappho" of Charles Gounod, which was almost forgotten after its production in Paris in 1851, will, in the ensuing winter, be again given at the Grand Opera House at Paris. Emile Augier (the author of the words) and Gounod, have through an entire alteration and the addition of a fourth act, given a new form and interest to the work.

In the well-known instrument manufactory of Biese, in Berlin, there has been lately two pianos completed, which are, in their way, the only types existing. Their oak cases, as the inscription on them states, are cut from parts of the wooden Rhine bridge which Claudius Nero Drasus built between Mainy and Castel in the last century before the birth of Christ, fragments of which were discovered in 1880. The wood is of a dark and in some places, black colour, and is exceedingly hard. This peculiar condition intensifies the tone of the instruments, which are to be exhibited in the Nüremberg Exhibition for a short time. The inscription runs: "Once on the bottom of the Rhine I served the Roman war god, now in this new form I am content to assist in the battle of music."

Digitized by Google

A highly interesting autograph is in the possession of Herr Carl Kindworth, namely a copy of Beethoven's "Meeresstille and Glückliche Fahrt" ("Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage" cantata), corrected by his own hand. The copy, in oblong quarto, belonged formerly to Richard Wagner, who seems to have considered it of little value in comparison to the original score of his "Reingold." Wagner has written on the title-page, with reference to exchanging Beethoven's MS. for his own score, which Klindworth had obtained: "Willst du für 'Wagner' der was Koofen, gewinnst du sicher mit Beethoven. Auf Wiederschen."—R. W. (By disposing of Wagner thou wilt surely gain Beethoven. To meeting again.—R. W.) Upon the lower margin of the first page of the manuscript Beethoven had written in red ink: "N.B.—There are again 150 florins already sunk on me up to the present date, mea culpa, mea maxima culpa. Upon the remembrance of this the old mountain again poured out fire and flames.—Junna, 19th Dec. 1822." From the 28th to the 30th bars the copyist had written the second chord of D major in demi-semiquavers, tremolo. Beethoven has crossed out this, and instead of it put long holding notes, tying the chords for three bars together. As a marginal note appears the following words: "N.B.—It sounds too powerful; how could it be said directly afterwards 'locked in slumber is each wave'?" The repetition of this part occuring again in the bars from 36 to 38 is crossed through and marked: "Exactly as before." In the second part the corrections are more numerous. In the bars 82 to 85, where the copyist had written chords for the upper part, is remarked: "The wind whistles are an octave too low." Beethoven put them an octave higher, and wrote underneath, "Oh you stupid." In the bars 108 to 111, the bass part to the passage "The billows divide" was written an octave too high. Beethoven made his corrections, and remarked in a marginal gloss, "Oh! you merry rabble." Wagner had the volume bound in red morocco leather, and labelled in large gold letters, "Autograph of Beethoven."

COMPETITION FOR DESIGNS IN ARTISTIC PIANOFORTE CASES.

The jury appointed to decide the competitive merits of the designs sent in for an artistic cottage pianoforte case for the firm of Rud. Ibach Sohn of Barmen, report thus:—

The number of the competitive designs amounted to 133. In accordance with the main conditions laid down, the designs were to be sketched according to a given measurement, provision being made for sufficient space, as specified, for the admittance of the instrument. And further, the several kinds of wood proposed were to be specified, or indicated in the drawing. These conditions have been observed by all the competitors, with a few trifling deviations. The conditions were:—(1) Artistic beauty, (2) originality in conception, and (3) the case not to exceed the sum of £12. 10s in value.

After careful inspection, the jury were unanimously of opinion that not one of the designs met all the conditions required, and they felt sorry that those who entered the lists as competitors, paid no attention to the manufacture of the cases, and that they have thus neutralised the object in view. The jury were compelled to decline adjudicating the prize. But in order some way to utilize the labour bestowed on these designs, they have induced Mr. Ibach to buy up eleven of the designs by distributing among the competitors the sum total originally intended for the successful competition. It is of course evident that the purchase of these designs depend upon the consent of the respective competitors, and as the jury declined to open the letters corresponding to the mottoes, Mr. Ibach desires to know the names of the respective parties by publication of these particulars, with a view to obtaining their consent.

THE DANGER OF LOCAL REPORTS.

All who love the art of music for the sake of itself, and therefore have its general welfare in their innermost hearts, must admit that its age of conventionalism is now fast drawing to a close, and that quite a new era is awaiting us, though it will not necessarily be a Wagnerian epoch in the annals of music (which to a certain extent would mean a tendency for violating and setting aside many accepted rules based upon sound principles), but rather a time when all true musicians, professional and amateur, shall be of one mind as to music's future career, and in this revolution the Press should not occupy an inferior position. It is admitted by many true artists that the greatest lessons they have learned, and the most valuable hints given, have been brought home and pointed out to them by true criticism. Let the student study as hard as he may, and as long as he pleases, he will look forward with anxious hope to what the papers have to say of his first performance, and if he be a sensible man he will at once see that an unbiassed rebuke in a paper of good reputation is not an act of unkindness, but one of true charity—yet at the same time I would warn those who set a value on criticism not to shut their eyes to the fact that biassed praise is just as uncharitable and insulting as prejudicial condemnation, that is such praise as most local reports contain.

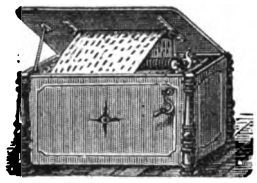
Then, again, inferior critics, owing to their ignorance, are often deterred from venturing on a fair criticism for fear of opening up a controversy on a subject quite unknown to themselves.

Let us consider the word "criticism," and we shall find that its accepted meaning is "judgment." Now, it is plainly an absurdity to attempt to judge and form an artistic opinion upon that of which we are quite ignorant. George Macdonald remarks, "Unless a man be a musician, he cannot criticise music; he can simply say whether he likes it or not." Now local musical reporters, of course, thoroughly ignore this axiom; hence, art is maltreated and writers devoid of trained judgment are dangerous, and I contend that their ridiculous flattery is often detrimental to the real progress of many young artists who form the class which suffers most from false notices. Professional people of good standing are quite independent of inferior criticism, and should accept as a great compliment the absence of their names from reports written by biassed or ignorant critics; it would take a thousand stupid notices to destroy a Sims Reeves, but one paper might contain sufficient to seriously injure the future prospects of a hundred young artists. Or, again, such reporters cannot harm an established artist, neither could a whole regiment of prejudiced reporters establish a single performer. Flattery and encouragement are as different as dark from light, for when we flatter we may, perchance, insult; but when we encourage we truly acknowledge that ability exists. With flattery the majority of these local notices are crowded, but of encouragement but little is seen. We should with a firm hand endeavour to stop the mischievous habit of writing fulsome notices, for we cannot be blind to the fact that the harm they do to young beginners is a matter for grave consideration. I will give an example: A young lady leaves school, having at her fingers' ends a few valses, etc., and who, by the advice of her friends, determines to try a public performance. What is the result? her playing, which only approaches mediocrity, and is void of all feeling and expression, is applauded by the local press as a grand performance, and by upholding the girl as a musical prodigy. So, fondly imagining all this to be true, she forthwith turns her attention to music "as a profession," refuses every advice, until she finds that she is not so successful as she anticipated; and when she appears in the big world of music, she learns how utterly helpless she is, and looks back with regret to find that the valuable time she has wasted in one profession cannot be made up by another. I have seen such palpable untruths in local reports that I endeavour to impress upon my pupils and all whom I may know who are "fighting for fame," not to heed such notices as criticisms, but to reject them as insults. Want of sense of duty is at the bottom of much defective criticism. Byron, smarting under bad criticism, said—

> A man must serve his time to ev'ry trade,
> Save censure; critics all are ready made.
> Take hackneyed jokes from Miller, got by rote,
> With just enough of learning to misquote.
> Care not for feeling, pass your project jest,
> And stand a critic, hated yet caress'd.

GEO. F. GROVER.

Digitized by Google



ORCHESTRIONETTES,
Ehrlich's Patent.

Are the greatest invention of modern times in the sphere of mechanical Music Works! It is only necessary to put in a note, made of fine pasteboard, in order to play a new piece. The smaller instruments suffice as accompaniment to dance music. The larger ones can be used IN PLACE OF AN ORGAN.

Preparatory knowledge not necessary; therefore the instruments can be sent to any part of the world. Large number of Notes, suitable for all countries, always on hand. Extra Notes made to order, after supplied originals, at any time. Please send orders to any dealer in musical instruments.

Commission allowed to Dealers.

FABRIK LEIPZIGER MUSIKWERKE VORM. PAUL EHRLICH & CO., ZU GOHLIS BEI LEIPZIG (GERMANY).

MISS NORAH HAYES, CONTRALTO VOCALIST of the Albert Hall and St. James's Hall Concerts, is open to engagements for Concerts, Soirées, and At Homes. Good Press opinions. Services given free for Charities.—Address, 95, Edgware Road.

MR. E. DAVIDSON PALMER, Mus.Bac., Oxon., author of "What is Falsetto?" "Pronunciation in Singing," etc., gives LESSONS in VOICE TRAINING and SOLO SINGING, at his residence, 10, Gladesmore-road, Stamford Hill, N.

FISHERIES EXHIBITON, SOUTH KENSINGTON.—Mr. FRANK BRADLEY, Professor of the Organ, Trinity College, London, &c. (concert organist), will give RECITALS on MONDAYS and WEDNESDAYS, on the Organs of Messrs. Lewis, and Henry Jones & Sons, during the Exhibition.—Programmes gratuitously given in the Building.

For Concerts and Recitals, address Beaconsfield, Gunnersbury, W.

VIOLIN.—HERR POLONASKI (Violinist), open to ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts, Musical At Homes, and Violin or Accompaniment Lessons.—For Terms, please Address, HERR POLONASKI, 16, Wharfdale-street, South Kensington, S.W.

INTERNATIONAL FISHERIES EXHIBITION.—ORGAN RECITALS daily, upon the fine-toned Organ, in West Gallery. Supplied to the Executive Committee by HENRY JONES & SONS, 136, Fulham Road, South Kensington.

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

TUESDAY, July 3rd, F. J. SAWYER, Esq., Mus.Bac., will read a Paper on Mozart's "Organ Concertos," with musical illustrations, organ and strings, at 8.—TUESDAY and WEDNESDAY, July 10th and 11th, Examination for Associateship.—THURSDAY, July 12th, Examination for Fellowship. Candidates names must be sent in on or before July 5th.—TUESDAY, July 17th, at 8, Annual General Meeting.

The above Meetings will be held at the NEUMEYER HALL, Hart Street, Bloomsbury.

E. H. TURPIN,
Hon. Secretary.

95, Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury, W.C.

THE STUDENT'S HELMHOLTZ.

MUSICAL ACOUSTICS,

OR

THE PHENOMENA OF SOUND AS CONNECTED WITH MUSIC,

With Examination Questions and over 100 Illustrations,

By JOHN BROADHOUSE.

Price 3s. net.

London: WILLIAM REEVES, 185, Fleet-street.

PASTORALE from Corelli's CHRISTMAS CONCERTO. Arranged for Organ by E. H. TURPIN.—Price 4s. WEEKES & CO., 14, Hanover-street, W.

ORGANS.—FACTS about ORGANS. Guide to the Purchase of an Organ; How to Order or Select one; What will it cost? By Dr. HINTON. Price 1s.—W. REEVES, 185, Fleet-street, London.

FOR SALE.—Organ Music, Violin, and other String Music, Operas, Oratorios, Full Scores, Treatises, Histories, Biographies, and English and Foreign Works in various Branches of Literature.—On Sale by W. REEVES, 185, Fleet-street, London.

Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged, cloth, 3s. 6d.

BEETHOVEN'S PIANOFORTE SONATAS, explained by ERNST von ELTERLEIN, translated by E. Hill. Preface by E. Pauer.

W. REEVES, 185, FLEET STREET, LONDON.

ALL WHO POSSESS A PIANOFORTE and canot play it, may now play at once, without any previous knowledge of Music, by ROYLANCE'S NUMERICAL SYSTEM, which contains a FIGURED DIAGRAM to fit on the Keyboard of any Pianoforte (or Harmonium, and a choice selection of forty SACRED and SECULAR MELODIES, composed for the use of those who have no time to study Music. Thousands are now able to play who did not believe such a thing possible. The diagram alone will be found most useful to Professors for teaching purposes. 6d. nett.—Price 2s. 6d. nett; post free 33 stamps.—C. ROYLANCE, 184, Tottenham Court-road; and all Music Sellers.

MUSIC STRINGS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF ALL KINDS OF STRINGS FOR VIOLIN, VIOLA, VIOLONCELLO, DOUBLE BASS HARP, ZITHER, GUITAR, BANJO, &c., &c.,

Have always in Stock the Largest Assortment of Music Strings of any House in the World.

39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

All Kinds of Strings covered in a superior manner by powerful machines, made on the best principle with all modern improvements.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

MUSICAL INTELLIGENCE:—The Handel Festival at the Crystal Palace—M. Sainton's Farewell Concert—Brighton—Mr. W. Carter's Choir—Royal Italian Opera—Musical Artists' Society—Cambridge University Musical Society—The Cologne Choir—Mdlle. Kleeberg's Recitals—Richter Concerts—Music in Dublin—Liverpool.

FOREIGN MUSICAL INTELLIGENCE.

COMPETITION FOR DESIGNS IN ARTISTIC PIANOFORTE CASES.

THE DANGER OF LOCAL REPORTS.

EDITORIAL:—The Cardiff Eisteddfod—Artistic Conscientiousness.

ORGAN NEWS:—Norwich—Preston—Fisheries Exhibition—Sherborne—Crystal Palace—Boscombe—Lichfield—Liverpool—Ware Parish Church—Weybridge.

REVIEWS OF BOOKS AND MUSIC.

SIR WALTER SCOTT'S PIANO.

THE EFFECT OF CHORUS SINGING UPON THE VOICE.

THE RESTFULNESS OF MUSIC.

THE EXTRAORDINARY DISPUTE ABOUT AN ORGANIST.

SUGGESTIONS TO SINGERS.

OCEAN VOICES.

PASSING EVENTS. Service Lists, &c.

LONDON: SATURDAY, JUNE 30, 1883.

THE CARDIFF EISTEDDFOD.

IN Eisteddfod is no new event. For generations the music loving Welsh people have maintained with unabated enthusiasm their great music and literary competitions. And such meetings have undoubtedly done much to preserve and foster the musical and artistic instincts of the inhabitants of the Principality. But the National Eisteddfod to be held during the first week of next August promises to be a meeting of exceptional interest and one likely to leave a permanent mark for good upon the history of art in Wales. Nations and cities, like men, have their duties, responsibilities, and opportunities. This year the task of holding with due dignity and liberality the great Welsh meeting has fallen to the lot of rich, prosperous, energetic, hospitable, and art-loving Cardiff; and the men of that ancient and now powerful port—where commercial prosperity advances "by "leaps and bounds"—know full well how to do their duty, and how to carry forward to a successful issue every cause they take in hand. The fame of Cardiff, and the high reputation of its inhabitants for spirited, energetic and judicious activity in matters of education and art, have invoked expectations and called forth indeed responsibilities which will neither be neglected or unfulfilled, as those who are acquainted with the ancient town know just as well as they know the sun will continue so long as the world lasts to rise and set. The arrangements made justify large expectations, and promise a truly memorable Eisteddfod. Not only are the usual features of such a gathering amply provided for, as may be seen by a glance through the long list of prizes and by the numerous entries of choirs, and competitors of all types, but there are special features which it cannot but be assumed will make the meeting one of special artistic value and interest. In the first place, the Committee have determined upon giving a series of orchestral performances during the week by a select, complete, and well-balanced orchestra of distinguished London players. At these concerts, Symphonies by BEETHOVEN, SCHUBERT, MENDELSSOHN, SPOHR, and STERNDALE BENNETT will be given. Concertos for organ, pianoforte and violin by HANDEL, MENDELSSOHN, etc., may also be included in the scheme. The best typical overtures by MOZART, MENDELSSOHN, SPOHR, WEBER, ROSSINI, WAGNER, STERNDALE BENNETT and Sir G. A. MACFARREN are likewise included in the scheme. The introduction of high class orchestral music for the first time in an Eisteddfod scheme is a matter of high import as regards the future of art in Wales. It is a step in strict keeping with the liberal traditions of these great meetings, at which both vocal and instrumental music stand side by side in the annals of the arena of Welsh art. Further, it is an advance which must bear much good fruit as calculated to disseminate throughout the Principality a love of the art in some of its highest, purest, and grandest forms. The significance of the introduction of good, classical orchestral music in competent hands at the forthcoming Festival is already felt by the shrewd, art-loving people of Wales; and it is no mere figure of speech to say that the eyes of all the many thousands of singers, players, and listeners in our sister land are fixed upon this notable feature of the Cardiff scheme. Another gain upon this occasion will be the presence of a large concert organ temporarily secured from Messrs. BRINDLEY and FOSTER with such an ample specification, including a large pedal organ, as will make the organ recitals and performances to be given highly satisfactory illustrations of the noble music written by BACH, MENDELSSOHN, etc. for the "King of instruments." A leading musical authority of North Wales has testified to the writer of these words as to the real interest felt by some of the influential Welsh music lovers in the liberal scheme of the Cardiff committee, especially in the addition of orchestral performances. The lead thus taken by the great commercial centre of South Wales will surely bear good fruit, and is nothing short of a national service in the cause of the art. The umpires chosen by the Cardiff committee include such men as Sir G. A. MACFARREN, Mr. J. BARNBY, Mr. J. BENNETT, and Mr. JOHN THOMAS; so the decisions arrived at will be awaited with confidence. From every point of sight, therefore, the Cardiff National Eisteddfod promises to be a specially satisfactory and notable meeting. The old town too, comprising Llandaff within its rapidly extending area, has rare attractions, both architectural and artistic. The lovely surrounding country, and the excellent railway facilities are such as should tempt many visitors. Those who go will not fail to see and hear much which will be gratifying to the admirers of scenery, antiquities, and artistic and commercial progress. And visitors may rest assured that the good accounts so often given of the hospitality and earnest love of art of the now University town of Cardiff, will be duly justified by any amount of personal experience. That success may attend the artistic efforts of the Cardiff Eisteddfod will surely be the wish of all anxious for the progress of music in our midst.

Digitized by Google

E. H. TURPIN.

ARTISTIC CONSCIENTIOUSNESS.

No charge is to be preferred against any individual or against any collective body of artists in these words. But as we are all of one common weak nature composed of many delicately balanced characteristics of good and evil, it is well to contemplate even the possibilities of our inherent tendencies to err. There can be no grander tribute to the greatness of art than the acknowledgment of the fact, that its successful pursuit can only be hoped for on the part of the artist by his complete self-abnegation and by the exercise of the noblest of our moral qualities. However advantageous selfish considerations may seem at the moment, they are in the long run destructive to the high, pure motives of the true artist and inimical to real lasting success. The composer who descends to a low type of popular taste in his writings, the organist who does not take the trouble to always play with the same determined accuracy because he does not know that any of his listeners are critical, the singer who thinks the stale song and the royalty ballad form the best means of success and the orchestral performer who thinks because he plays on an instrument of soft tone qualities that he may unobserved spare his efforts and even not play at all in some of the forte passages, all furnish familiar types of the unconscientious artist, who, reaping the just punishment of their neglect, wonder how it is they are less fortunate than their neighbours. Shortsightedness ever accompanies selfishness. So the composer madly hunting for popularity fails to see that the only safe course for the productive artist is to write for the future and according to the highest standards of the art, the indifferent organist discovers too late, that people have "ears to hear" with, the silly singer who seeks for a butterfly popularity finds that the fame of a great executive artist can only be built up by the performance of great music, and the negligent orchestral player discovers that conductors will in the end only pin their faith upon men who do not spare their fingers or breath. The true artist is in the highest sense of the term a good soldier who spares not himself for the cause he follows, and gives his first thought and strength to his duty and concerns himself least of all about his pay. Some one says "mankind is divided "into two classes, those who will and those who will "not advance." This saying may be well applied to the artist's career; for without wishing to discourage the exercise of worldly prudence, a necessity and a virtue when governed under high motives, there is no lasting fame or success obtainable, save by the power of noble, self-sacrificing motives; and it is of the highest importance that young artists should be taught the splendid morality of art while they are studying the technicalities of its power, for in art moral worth and artistic beauty are inseparable companions. E. H. TURPIN.

Digitized by Google

Organ News.

NORWICH.

Dr. Bunnett gave an organ recital at the St. Andrew's Hall, on June 23rd; the following was the programme :—

Overture, "Stradella"	Flotow
Reverie Cantabile	Jordan.
Introduction and Fugue in F (by request)	F. R. Greenwood.
Andante con Moto	Boëly.
"May no Rash Intruder" ("Solomon")	Handel.
Offertoire in F	Batiste.
Ave Maria	Bunnett.
Finale to Organ Concerto	Handel.
"O Rest in the Lord"	Mendelssohn.
Marche Religieuse de "Lohengrin"	Wagner.
Overture, "Fidelio"	Beethoven.

PRESTON.

The following is the programme of the organ recital given by Mr. James Tomlinson, in the new Public Hall, on Saturday evening, June 23rd.

Overture to the Oratorio "St. Paul"	Mendelssohn.
Air with Variations (Notturno)	Spohr.
Allegro Maestoso (from the Serenade for Wind Instruments)	Mozart.
Overture to "Preciosa"	Weber.
Air from the Opera "Serse" (Largo)	Handel.
Military March (Posthumous Work)	Beethoven.

FISHERIES EXHIBITION.

Mr. James Loaring, F.C.O., gave organ recitals last week. The following amongst other pieces were included in the programmes :—

Organ Concertos (Nos. 3 and 4)	Handel.
Air with Variations from Overture in D	Haydn.
Flute Concerto	Rink.
March Heroique in C	Schubert.
Festive March in B flat	Loaring.

An organ recital was given on Thursday, June 21st, by Mr. James H. Rooks. The following was the programme :—

Overture, "Zanetta"	Auber.
Andante and Allegro	Bache.
Allegro Cantabile (from 5th Symphony)	Widor.
Gavotte	Benedict.
No. 5 of "Original Compositions"	Batiste.
March from "Herne the Hunter"	W. Meyer Lutz.

On Monday June 25th, two organ recitals were given by Mr. Frank Bradley. The following were the programmes :—

Overture, "Die Zauberflöte" (arranged by Best)	Mozart.
Schiller March	Meyerbeer.
Adagio from Symphony in C (arranged by Dr. Stainer)	Schumann.
Rhapsodie No 1.	Saint-Saëns.
Prelude and Fugue in C minor, (No. 6)	Bach.
Postlude in E flat, Andante and Allegro	Smart.
Double Fugue in B minor	Kühmshdt.
Sonata in D minor (3 movements). Allegro Maestoso—Andante—Allegro con Brio.	A. Mailly.
Andante in A minor	Merkel.
Toccata and Fuga in F	Bach.
Rhapsodie No 2.	Saint-Saëns.
Chaconne in A major	Handel.
Fantasia in A flat	Guirad.
Grand Chorus in E flat	Guilmant.

SHERBORNE.

The following is the programme of an organ recital given in the Abbey Church on Thursday, June 21st, by Mr. C. E. Lyle.

Overture to "Athaliah"	Handel.
"Chœur des Anges"	Scotson Clark.
Offertoire in C minor	Batiste.
Andante	Haydn.
Fanfare	Lemmens.
Air, "Thou shalt bring them in" / Double Chorus, "Sing ye to the Lord" ("Israel in Egypt")	Handel.
"La Carita"	Rossini.
"Ave Maria"	Schubert.
A Concert on a Lake interrupted by a Thunderstorm	Neukomm.
"God Save the Queen," varied by G. E. Lyle.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

Mr. Eyre's programme on Saturday last included the following :—

Motet, "Deus tibi"	Mozart.
Aria from a Sonata	Paradies.
Offertoire in C	Wely.
Serenata	Kullak.
Introduction and Fugue, alla Marcia	Tiley.
The Turkish Patrol	Michaelis.
Spring Song	Hensaelt.
Hungarian March ("Faust")	Berlioz-Liszt.

BOSCOMBE.

An organ recital was given in the Church of St. George's-in-the-Wood, on the new organ, on Thursday, June 7th, by Mr. T. A. Aldridge. The following is the programme :—

PART I.

Præludium in G major / Fugue in G minor	Bach.
Andante in A	Smart.
Barcarole (from 4th Concerto)	S. Bennett.
Air, "O Rest in the Lord"	Mendelssohn.
March in D	Smart.

PART II.

Air, "But the Lord is Mindful"	Mendelssohn.
Cantilene Pastorale / Grand Chœur in D	Guilmant.
Air, "I Dreamt I was in Heaven"	Costa.
Marcia Religiosa	Meyerbeer.

LICHFIELD.

Messrs. Hill and Son have received instructions to rebuild and enlarge the organ at Lichfield Cathedral. Subjoined is the specification.

GREAT ORGAN. CC TO A.

1. Double Diapason	16 ft.	9. Harmonic Flute	4 ,,
2. Large Open Diapn.	8 ,,	10. Twelfth	2⅔ ,,
3. Small Open Diapn.	8 ,,	11. Fifteenth	2 ,,
4. Clarabella	8 ,,	12. Grave Mixture (4 ranks).
5. Bell Gamba	8 ,,	13. Mixture (3 ranks).
6. Stopt Diapason	8 ,,	14. Grand Posaune	8 ,,
7. Octave	4 ,,	15. Clarion	4 ,,
8. Octave Gamba	4 ,,

SWELL ORGAN. CC TO A.

17. Double Diapason	16 ft.	25. Mixture (3 ranks)	ft.
18. Open Diapason	8 ,,	26. Mixture (2 ranks)
19. Pierced Gamba	8 ,,	27. Contra Fagotto	16 ,,
20. Voix Celestes	8 ,,	28. Trumpet	8 ,,
21. Stopped Diapason	8 ,,	29. Oboe	8 ,,
22. Principal	4 ,,	30. Cornopean	8 ,,
23. Celestina Flute	4 ,,	31. Clarion	4 ,,
24. Fifteenth	2 ,,

CHOIR ORGAN. CG TO A.

32. Lieblich Bourdon	16 ft.	37. Principal	4 ft.
33. Open Diapason	8 ,,	38. Wald Flöte	4 ,,
34. Dulciana	8 ,,	39. Piccolo	2 ,,
35. Stopped Diapason	8 ,,	40. Clarionet	8 ,,
36. Keraulophon	8 ,,

SOLO ORGAN. CC TO A.

42. Harmonic Flûte	8 ft.	45. Corno-de-Bassetto	8 ft.
43. Concert Flute	4 ,,	46. Grand Tuba	8 ,,
44. Orchestral Oboe	8 ,,

PEDAL ORGAN. CCC TO F.

48. Double Open Diap.	32 ft.	53. Bass Flute	8 ft.
49. Open Diapason	16 ,,	54. Fifteenth	4 ,,
50. Open Diapason	16 ,,	55. Mixture (4 ranks)
51. Bourdon	16 ,,	56. Trombone	16 ,,
52. Principal	8 ,,	57. Trumpet	8 ,,

COUPLERS.

58. Great to Pedal.	65. Swell to Great (Sub octave).
59. Great to Pedal.	66. Swell to Choir.
60. Choir to Pedal.	67. Choir to Great.
61. Solo to Pedal.	68. Solo to Great.
62. Swell to Great.	69. Swell to Pedal.
63. Swell to Great.	70. Pedal Ventil.
64. Swell to Super-octave.

TEN PNEUMATIC COMBINATION PEDALS.

4 to Great and Pedal Organs combined.
4 to Swell Organ.
1 to Choir Organ.
1 to reduce Pedal Organ to soft 16 ft.
Double acting pedal for "Great to Pedal."

To be blown by gas engine. Solo organ to be placed in separate swell box, with separate crescendo pedal; stops to be placed at an angle of 45°.

Pneumatic action to great, swell, and pedal organs. The whole of the action throughout the organ to be new, and the instrument to be built on the plans adopted by the College of Organists.

His Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury has accepted the office of President of the College of Organists, a position held by his predecessors in the Primacy since the foundation of the College.

Digitized by Google

LIVERPOOL.

Mr. W. T. Best gave an organ recital in the St. George's Hall, on Thursday evening, June 21st. The following is the programme :—

Fantasia and Fugue (E minor)	Best.
Canzonetta, "In distant lands I rove"	Taubert.
Marche et Cortége de Bacchus ("Sylvia")	Delibes.
Prelude and Fugue (D major)	Mendelssohn.
Andantino, (1. Cradle Song. 2. The Dance. 3. Serenade.)	Spohr.
From the Symphony "The Power of Sound"
Finale :—Allegro Vivace (A minor)	Morandi.

On Saturday afternooon, June 23rd :—

Fantasia with Chorale (G major)	Smart.
Scherzo from the Music to "A Midsummer Night's Dream"	Mendelssohn.
Adagio and Fugue (C minor)	Mozart.
Romanza, "Arpa gentil"	Rossini.
Andante from an Organ Sonata	H. Mailly.
March from the Third Organ Symphony	Widor.

WARE PARISH CHURCH.

An organ recital was given in this church on Tuesday, June 26th, by Mr. James L. Gregory, A.C.O. The following was the programme :—

Minuet from Overture to "Joseph"	Handel.
Fuga (No. 4 of Six "Petites Fugues" for the Harpsichord.
Adagio in E (Op. 35)	Merkel.
Prelude and Fugue in G	Mendelssohn.
Adagio from Sonata in G minor for Violin and Piano	Bach.
Grand Chœur in D	Guilmant.
Andante from Quartet in D minor	Mozart.
Fantasia on "Vesper Hymn"	Turpin.

WEYBRIDGE.

The following is the specification of the new organ erected by Messrs. Brindley and Foster in the church of St. Michael and All Angels, from designs by Mr. G. E. Lake, organist of the parish church.

GREAT ORGAN. CC TO G, 3.

1. Open Diapason	8 ft.	5. Principal	4 ft.
2. Hohl Flöte	8 „	6. Piccolo	2 „
3. Dulciana	8 „	7. Clarionet	8 „
4. Wald Flöte	4 „

SWELL ORGAN. CC TO G, 3.

8. Lieblich Bourdon	16 ft.	12. Flauto Traverso	4 ft.
9. Violin Diapason	8 „	13. Mixture (3 ranks)
10. Lieblich Gedact	8 „	14. Oboe	8 „
11. Voix Celestes	8 „	15. Horn	8 „

PEDAL ORGAN. CCC TO F.

16. Contra Bass	16 ft.	18. Flute Bass	8 ft.
17. Sub Bass	16 „

COUPLERS.

19. Swell to Great.	22. Great to Pedals.
20. Swell to Super Octave	23. Tremulant to Swell.
21. Swell to Pedals.

Self balancing swell pedal, pedal board concave, "College of Organist's measurement." The tone of the instrument is pronounced to be very pure and round.

In his new book "From Ponkapog (a little New England village) to Pesth," Mr. T. B. Aldrich, an accomplished American author, thus speaks of Arab music :—"Looking at it carelessly, it struck me that Moorish enjoyment was composed of very simple ingredients ; but, looking closer, I suspected there were depths and qualities in this profound and nearly austere repose, in this smouldering passion, with its capricious fiery gleams, which I had not penetrated. Perhaps it was the drug in the tobacco, or perhaps it was the pungent property in the coffee, that sharpened my sense ; but, presently, I began to detect in the music, which had rather irritated me at first, an undercurrent of meaning, vague and perplexing. The slow dragging andante and the sudden wailing falsetto seemed half to assist and half to baffle some inarticulate spirit that strove to distil its secret into the ear. Something that was not the music itself was struggling to find expression through it,—the pride, the rage, the inertia, the unutterable despair of an ancient and once mighty people passing away."

Reviews.

X. Y. Z. Railway Guide.—Musicians do not employ the final letters of the alphabet in their art, but they travel extensively, and will be glad to know that X. Y. Z. is a conveniently arranged time table for the railways radiating out of London, at the remarkably small cost of one penny.

Elementary History of Music. By N. D. Anvers, edited by Owen J. Dulled. (Sampson Low, Marston, Searle & Rivington).—A useful and well got up little book, giving its information in a clear, concise manner. The book is adorned by some well selected, and well engraved illustrations. Though its pages only number about 100, the work is so well planned and condensed that it contains a really large amount of information.

The Pianoforte Teacher's Guide. By L. Plaidy, translated by Fanny Raymond Ritter. (W. Reeves).—A sign of the increased interest in art is the studied advance in the appliances for learning and teaching. This valuable work deals concisely and happily with the technicalities and mannerisms of the leading household musical instruments. The work should be in the hands of all who play, or hope to be able to play, or who wish to teach with every advantage and knowledge.

The Girl's Own Annual.—(56, Paternoster Row, E.C.) —It would be impossible to over-estimate the value and usefulness of this admirably got up and artistically illustrated annual. The variety of the information given, the sensible guidance afforded throughout its pages in the formation of female character upon a good, sound basis, and the endless entertainment and artistic delight the volume provides for our girls, make the book a veritable home treasure. The list of writers includes many of eminence in their several ways. The illustrations, including a dozen handsome coloured and toned paper plates, are excellent and abundant. Interspersed through the book are admirable articles on the performance of given schools of music, and anent different instruments and musical topics ; in addition to this valuable instruction, there are charming songs from the pens of well known and esteemed composers. Every girl should, in short, possess "The Girl's Own Annual."

SIR WALTER SOOTT'S PIANO.

At a marriage which took place in Edinburgh a short time ago, the presents received by the bride embraced an old piano, prized as having been a gift to her mother's family, so far back as the year 1817, from Sir Walter Scott. It was understood to have been the instrument on which Sir Walter's daughters, Anne and Sophia, had received their first instruction in music ; but having only thirty-six notes, it had been replaced by a more modern piano suitable to their advancement. It is of the spinet form, and looked, at the date referred to, as if it had belonged to the middle of the last century, the name it bore being "John & Hugh Watson, Edinburgh, makers, from London." For twelve years the piano again did service in the school-room, but was again deposed to meet the requirements of advanced pupils. Yet it retained an honoured place in the heart, especially of one who had enjoyed the friendship and confidence of Scott before he was recognized as the author of "Waverley." It was always spoken of as "Old Sir Walter," and accompanied its owners in many changes long after it had ceased to "discourse sweet music ;" though, sooth to say, for many years it occupied the place of a lobby table. In 1854 the instrument descended to the second generation, which necessitated a long and weary journey. Age had brought infirmities and very shaky legs, but no better refuge was forthcoming than the corner of a bath-room. Here it remained undisturbed until 1872, when another change brought it back to Edinburgh, when, alas ! the new owner could not afford even standing-room. An asylum was sought in the relict-room of the Scott monument, but the piano was deemed too large for admission. Only one alternative remained—that of amputation. The legs were taken off, and for nine years dangled from the roof of a butler's pantry, while the honoured trunk was deposited under a bed. Now the instrument, as a heirloom, descends to the third generation, and brighter days are apparently in store for it.—The Musical Visitor.

Digitized by Google

THE EFFECT OF OHORUS SINGING UPON THE VOICE.

Anent Mr. Deaken's articles on singing in Grove's Dictionary, the Tonic Sol-fa Reporter says :—

It would be hiding the truth not to point out to the writer of the article that his views had been anticipated by Mr. Curwen by nearly forty years ; and that his remedy has been applied for that period by an army of several thousand teachers. On every side of them have existed "Choral Societies," whose members have been accepted on their own opinions of their abilities, without test of question of any kind. In such societies many promising voices have been ruined by the absence of the restraining effect of a course of elementary lessons. It is a common thing for those having a taste for singing and some amount of voice, to be snapped up by the local society, thrust into the middle of an oratorio or cantata, and expected to read their notes and control their voices by intuition, supplemented by large doses of instrumental aid. When there is no individual certainty of the sounds to be produced notes will be "taken by hook or by crook and voice production forgotten." The conductor must then concentrate all his attention upon cramming the music into their heads, and forcing it out of their throats. He will fly for aid to the most powerful instrument he can command, a three-manual organ for preference. What consideration have the pipes of an organ for the delicately-constructed human larynx? "The sopranos are wrong," shouts the conductor, "put on the full organ, Mr. Diapason." "The tenors are all at sea—add the trumpet." Fierce wages the conflict ; fragile throats and weak lungs versus huge metal pipes and hydraulic blown bellows. A good knowledge of notation (singing from notes) must precede a proper delivery of the voice when the music is difficult either in interval or pitch. If an instrument is played with the singers, to lead them, it must be with much greater force than they are using or it would not be heard by them. In proportion to the strength of the accompaniment (?) will be utterances of the choir. The conductor then gets "the maximum of effect out of his little army of singers." Away they go, basses roaring, tenors shouting, altos bleating, and sopranos shrieking.

"Much overdrawn," some may say. Perhaps so. But can it be denied that the modern rage for the "Dramatic" in music—works with difficult music, huge bands, violent contrasts—leads to high pressure both at rehearsals and concerts. Excited by the orchestral din singers exert themselves to the utmost, perpetrating sounds which, if heard without the instruments, they would be quite ashamed of.

The decrease of madrigal and unaccompanied part-singing is to be deplored, for the reason (amongst many others) that those forms of choral music compel the conductor to care for "individual voices." There, one strained chest A^{1} by a tenor in the midst of the pure, natural "thin" register of his companions will stand out as distinctly as a black cloud against a blue sky. Not less distinctly can the heavy forced G's be heard of a contralto voice, the possessor of which is either desirous of coming out as a prima donna, or is too indolent to master her proper (albeit much more difficult) part. Soft singing abounds in unaccompanied choral music. There is an indefinable charm about the pianissimos of a number of voices, of which composers of all periods and styles have largely availed themselves. Rarely is the sign ff to be found in a motet or madrigal. Singers of this class of music instinctively listen to the effects they are creating. The parts follow each other in melodious strains delightful to the ear as a stream winding through a fertile valley is to the eye. Listening to the general effect leads them to give attention to their own voices. Then badly-formed tones are corrected, and "forced" voices almost impossible. Compare motet, madrigal, glee and part-song with the awkward, instrumental-like parts of the declamatory chorus or the "fff tuttis" of the "dramatic cantata." Gone is the sweetness of tone and the delicate feeling induced by the pastoral character of the music ; in place of it there is noisy, strained singing and evident physical exertion which, without heavy accompaniments would be simply unbearable.

Much harm may be done to young and untrained voices by joining choral societies which may be engaged upon heavy works, and that all singers should be educated up to the standard required for the complete mastery of the music they may be called upon to perform. On the other hand there can be no harm in allowing a number of young and immature voices to sing choral music, if the latter be within their ascertained means, and be guided by a conductor who knows the danger of misusing a voice—who recognizes the fatigue induced by long continued vocal exercises, and has the tact to give his choir sufficient variety in their work and rest between their pieces—who is in fact a singer, feels as a singer, and acts as a singer.

The Church of England Temperance Chronicle for June 23rd has a portrait of Mr. W. H. Jude, the Liverpool organist, with a biographical notice and a spirited part-song from his pen.

THE RESTFULNESS OF MUSIC.

BY PAUL PASTNOR, IN The Musical Visitor.

Rest is a process, not a product. It restores to body and mind expended energy, but itself is not this energy,—only the means of obtaining it. We ought not, in strictness to say that we are rested, but renovated, rather. Our natural forces recover their tone and vigour through a period of quiet, but no vital force is added to them by rest. Indeed, it is questionable whether rest, so called, has any objective reality at all, and is not altogether a state, and a variable state at that.

Music as a means of restoring expended vigour of mind and body—music at rest—has long been acknowledged to be one of the most natural and available methods. Its qualities are such as to induce the pleasurable quiet and soothing repose which are necessary for mental and physical recuperation. How naturally music aids itself to sleep. The first melody that floats in consciousness, and will always remain there, as one of the sweetest reminiscences of life, is the lullaby crooned by the mother over the cradle of her babe. We are all familiar with the fairy tales and the romances, where the queens and the princes, and the maidens are wooed to sleep in fragrant bowers, by soft, sweet strains from hidden players. All romance is idealized common life, and so it is here. The hidden players and the fragrant bowers are all that give the tale its glamour. Music soothes the weary and the care burdened to sleep, as truly as it does the beautiful people in the stories. The strain must be soft and slow and of no great range. Let it be monotonous, the more so the better—a singing and a re-singing of a plaintive gentle theme. Such music, run in the thoughts, will put one, however restless, speedily to sleep. Some birds, I have heard, sing themselves to sleep—why should not we ?

But music is useful otherwise than a composer to sleep. In this manner it is chiefly a physical rest ; but in another manner it is more restful to the mind.

I think that very few who have a natural taste and love for music, and yet neglect it, for very weariness sake, realize that it is more useful than absolute quietness itself. There are hundreds and thousands of brain-weary and heart-weary men and women, who will doze and wake by the fireside all the evening and go to bed more weary than at first, who might be rested and refreshed and prepared for sweeter slumber by their latent or forgotten love of music. If there be any employment in our homes during the evening, it is apt to be reading ; and people think that reading rests, because it requires no movement of the body. The fact is that reading is tiresome, compared with music. Not that I would cry down reading, but I say it should have the best hours of the day, when the mind is fresh, for it is an appropriative act, and requires energy. Almost anybody will gape over a book that is really worth reading, after nine o'clock in the evening. The attempt to incorporate another's thoughts exhausts the already weary mind, and, almost before the reader knows, the sense has run away and is lost.

But it is otherwise with music. Music rests the mind. It does not require a mental process to appropriate it. The heart-mind—the spirit—apprehends music, and it does it intuitively, without the use of the reasoning power. Do you ask why it rests us more than absolute quietness does? I answer, because as we have seen, rest is a process, not a product ; we must make use of some means to reinvigorate our powers. What we may call "absolute quietness" does not exist—only relative quietness ; and while the mind and body are relatively quiet, they are only preying upon themselves by a sort of ceaseless subjective activity. What is needed is not complete relaxation of nerve and muscle, but something to tone these up and restore wasted energy.

The conductors of the Philharmonic concerts next season are to be, it is said, Sir A. Sullivan, Dr. Stainer, Messrs. Mount, Cowen, Barnett, and C. V. Stanford.

It seems that Mr. Willing was engaged at the Handel Society in association with Sir M. Costa and retained his engagement naturally, although his chief and friend was unfortunately prevented from attending in consequence of ill health. Otherwise no doubt Mr. A. Eyre, the admirable and gifted organist of the Crystal Palace, would have been invited to take some part in the Festival.

Digitized by Google

THE EXTRAORDINARY DISPUTE ABOUT AN ORGANIST.

The service of St. James's, Taunton, have been again conducted without either organ or accompaniment. The psalms were not chanted, nor were any hymns sung. Mrs. Chapman, the late organist, was at her seat at the organ 20 minutes before 11 o'clock, but the instrument was still locked, and the key in possession of the churchwardens. Mr. Dudeney, the new organist was not present. Mr. Dudeney has published a letter, in which he states that he made no application for the appointment, which was voluntarily conferred upon him. He understood that deafness was the cause of Mrs. Chapman leaving, and was not aware that there would be any unpleasantness. Indeed, he had offered to give £5 5s. towards a testimonial to her, and a concert in aid of the same object. Mr. Hitchcock, one of the churchwardens, writes to say—"It is true that Mrs. Chapman has held the position of organist for more than 20 years, but it is equally true that she suffers from deafness, according to her own admission to myself, and such an infirmity must necessarily interfere with a person who would have the training and management of a large choir."—A vestry meeting of the parishioners was held on Monday under the presidency of Councillor George Webber, for the purpose of considering the conduct of the vicar and churchwardens towards the parishioners, and of considering various questions and business matters relating to the parish. There was a good attendance, but the proceedings were not so lively as on some former occasions. It was resolved, "That this vestry views with commiseration and alarm the destitute and hopeless condition of the service and attendance at St. James's Church, in this large and increasing parish, and desires to express its regret that the vicar and newly-appointed churchwardens should continue to ignore the unanimous voice and decision of the parish, in vestry assembled, by creating a scandal and attempting during the hours of Divine service to deprive the congregation of the organist of their selection—one who has at all times given the greatest satisfaction—and also by attempting to force upon the congregation another organist; and that to prevent further scandal, this vestry is of opinion that the time has arrived when an inquiry should be instituted by the bishop, and the cause of the wholesale digressions from the church of a number of ratepayers, and also as to the legality of the appointment of Mr. S. Farrant as churchwarden." A deputation was appointed to visit Wells and lay the whole of the facts before the bishop.

SAYS a musical contemporary—When John Jacob Astor went to America he took with him six flutes, which his brother in London had made. He started his modest little business in furs with the proceeds of the sale of these instruments. A hundred years ago the box-wood flute with six keys was considered a great improvement on anything of the kind then made, four keys, in addition to the ten holes, being the highest number then in use, and each of Mr. Astor's flutes was valued at seventy-five dollars. Of the six original flutes with which Mr. Astor began his career in New York, one, bearing the mark of the maker, "Astor, No. 6, W. Y. C. R. Street, London," fell into the hands of a gentleman of Hoboken, and by him was sent to a flute maker for repairs. Time had cracked the old flute, and the keys were bent and worn. It has been made whole again and restored to its pristine vigour, though its value lies in its associations rather than in its musical qualities.

THE growth of large musical festivals in this country is an encouraging sign. Although many faults are to be discerned in their management, together with some crudeness in the musical performances thereof, these festivals indicate the extent to which musical taste is developed, and the sterling worth of the material taking part in them. That they have even been as financially successful as they have proves the deep and keen interest taken by a large mass of the American public in performances given on a grand scale. If we are not, as yet, a nation of music producers, we can claim to be a nation of good music listeners, and from these must future creators evolve. The future of this country, with regard to music and musicians, is indeed bright for those who will come after us, and although people do not generally care to work for posterity's sake without present reward, it is as well for all earnest musicians to remember that what they can do to help the good work along, without undue sacrifice, will redound to the credit of their native or adopted country.—New York Courier.

SUGGESTIONS TO SINGERS.

Never breathe through your mouth in walking, especially at night, or on coming out into the open air after singing. Keep the lips closed, and inhale the air through the nostrils. This is easily acquired, and to be able to do this will be found of great service in taking breath for singing; but, out of doors, it is most important, for the immediate rush of cold or damp air to the delicate organs of the throat, especially when the latter have been excited by the exertion of singing, is dangerous.

It is a good plan, and a profitable use of the time, to practise breathing while walking, by filling the lungs and utilizing each inspiration for as long a distance as possible. Nothing can be said in favour of our climate for singing. With proper precaution, however, a great deal of trouble arising from this cause may be averted.—In summer as well as in winter, the writer would strongly urge the wearing of moderately thick-soled boots or shoes. Then, again, the neck and chest should never be exposed alike to a June sun and a December frost, but instead, it should be moderately and reasonably covered.

Great care should be taken never to get wet, especially wet, or damp feet.

In going out of a hot room into the open air, much pains should be exercised to keep the throat and chest covered up with an overcoat or cloak, however warm the weather may be.

In very severe winter weather, the singer will derive much comfort by wearing a flannel chest-protecter.

Sitting about in gardens and on lawns in the evenings, on even the warmest days, is not a safe indulgence for the student who is in earnest in the pursuit of his art. One caution is necessary as to "wrapping up," however. Do not overdo it. The constant use of a "comforter" renders the throat delicate and susceptible. All you have to fear is damp, not cold, in the atmosphere. A comforter closely wound around the throat promotes perspiration, and the risk of chill in removing it is greater than in not wearing it at all. Common sense must guide every one. It is impossible to make a rule for all.

Never practise or sing upon an empty stomach or soon after a meal. Either of these habits will unfairly tax your digestive organs, and in so doing damage your voice. After a meal, all the energy of the body is required for the stomach. In a healthy person, the extremities will generally be cold after a full meal; and the reason is that the digestive organs are using all the blood that the body can give for their special work. Nature thus points to a rest of every other organ at that time, and you must not fight against nature by attempting any such severe physical strain as the practice of the voice demands.

Avoid late hours. You require not only a certain amount of sleep, but to take that sleep before the body and mind are at all overtasked.

From many causes, it is well known, the human frame is always at its lowest from about 2 A.M. till 5 A.M.; and the nearer you approach those hours in going to bed, the less able are you to derive all the benefit you require from sleep.—Musical Herald, U.S.

OCEAN VOICES.

(For Music.)

[COPYRIGHT.]

Like a stately monarch resting,
Lay the ship awaiting him,
And anon it lifted anchor
While my straining eyes grew dim;
Slowly fading from my vision
Sailed the goodly barque away,
As I stood in yearning fancy
Watching from the silent bay.
Suddenly I heard a whisper,—
'Twas a promise breathed to me
In the cadences of twilight
Coming from the placid sea!

Roll ye billows, swell beneath me!
Once soft ripples made me glad;
Now I love the waking storm-blast,
Softer music makes me sad;
There's deceit in your fond wooing
Like the summer skies of youth;
But when tempest fights with tempest
There's a voice that speaks the truth!

Yes! I know that thou wilt never
Come across the deep to me,
But when raging winds are blowing
Then I seem more near to thee;
So whene'er I sail the ocean
Swell ye billows as I go,
For I hear another whisper
Coming from the depths below:
Some day I shall reach my haven,
After one fierce storm is past;
I shall hear a dear voice calling,
And shall find my love at last!

EDWARD FOSKETT.

Digitized by Google

Passing Events.

The Richter concerts have this year resulted in a financial loss.

"L'Orfèvre du Roi" is the title of the Marquis d'Ivry's new opera. The story is built upon Balzac's "Désespérance d'Amour."

The death of Mr. Matthew Arbuckle, a well known American bandmaster and cornet soloist, is announced, says the New York Tribune.

The Society of Arts have awarded their silver medal to Mr. A. J. Hipkins for his interesting lecture on the history of the pianoforte, which he read before the Society on March 7th.

Mr. Sims Reeves recently played Tom Tug in "The Waterman" at Mr. Toole's Theatre, and the pretty old-fashioned musical burletta seems not to lose its charm and freshness.

At Mr. F. Von Zashow's drawing-room concert on Tuesday last, a fashionable audience were regaled with several pieces by standard composers. Miss Mabel Bourne and Herr Polonaski played artistically.

A gratifying proof of successful training of the talented students of the Royal Normal College for the Blind is testified to in the invitation from Herr Richter to a gifted young pianoforte pupil to play a concerto at one of the eminent German conductor's concerts.

Miss Ellaby's fifth annual pupils' concert at Bath on the 27th of June consisted of a miscellaneous programme of well selected pianoforte works and songs. The young ladies acquitted themselves very satisfactorily, and did credit to their able and industrious instructress.

It is stated that a sacred song, composed by King Alfonso the Wise of Castile (thirteenth century), and modernized by Hilarion Eslava, together with a "Stabat Mater" by the latter, was recently performed, under the direction of the Chevalier van Elewyck, at St. Peter's, Louvain.

The second annual entertainment of the Browning Society was to take place at University College last night. The programme consists of songs from Mr. Browning's works, and readings and recitations. Mr. Malcolm Lawson was to direct the musical part. Mr. Gabriel Thorpe sing the solos in Mr. Stanford's cavalier songs which were given last year.

The desirability of introducing a compact theoretical and practical examination, (the College of Organists offers the particular model to be discussed), into the various professional departments in America is to be considered at the forthcoming meeting of the Teachers' Association there, and the proposal is a sign of the musical earnestness of our relations across the Atlantic.

Mr. A. Manns' courageous and successful conductorship of the Handel Festival was not unaccompanied by much plotting and antagonism, when only help and support should have been given. However, it is satisfactory to know that Mr. Manns did his work just as well as ever the same work was done by Sir M. Costa, and so administered a severe practical rebuke to the foolish conductor worshippers.

A despatch from Boston conveys the intelligence that a bill in equity has been filed, praying for an injunction to restrain the Music Hall Corporation from removing the big organ from the hall. The big organ belongs to Boston, and Boston to the big organ. Mankind can no more think of Boston without the big organ than they can think of Hero without Leander, or of Paul without Virginia, or of Mason without Dixon, or of Chang without Eng.

The other week the lady orchestra of the St. Cecilia Society attracted attention. Now Viscountess Folkestone gives concerts with a lady orchestra of some 47 strings, very fairly balanced, one taking place on June 29th, in aid of the funds of the St. Andrew's Convalescent Home, Folkestone, and the People's Entertainment Society. Such efforts call for cordial encouragement, and our aristocracy, both ladies and gentlemen, are doing well in making such good use of their talents and acquirements.

The Querist.

QUERY.

VOLUNTARIES.—Would any of the musical readers of the Standard kindly favour me with the names and publishers of some pretty, effective, and pleasing Voluntaries, either in volume or in sheets?—VERITAS.

Service Lists.

SIXTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

JULY 1st.

London.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Prout in F; Introit, Blessed is he who cometh (Gounod); Holy Communion, Schubert in G. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Thorne in D; Anthem, God is a Spirit, and, Blessed be the Lord God (Bennett).

TEMPLE CHURCH.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum Laudamus, Smart in F; Apostles' Creed, Harmonised Monotone; Anthem, I was glad (Purcell). Even.: Service. Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Smart in F; Apostles' Creed, Harmonized Monotone; Anthem, God is our hope (Greene).

LINCOLN'S INN CHAPEL.—Morn.: Service, Aldrich in G; Kyrie, Aldrich; Anthem, Sing to the Lord a new made song (Mendelssohn). Even: Service, Aldrich in G; Anthem, Unto Thee will I cry (Calkin).

FOUNDLING CHAPEL. — Morn.: Service, Garrett in D; Anthem, The wilderness (Goss). Aft.: Service, Children's Service, Chants and Hymns.

CHRIST CHURCH, CLAPHAM.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Plain-song; Kyrie and Credo, "Messe Solennelle" (Gounod); Offertory Anthem, Blessed be the Lord God (Nares); Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei, and Gloria in excelsis, Gounod. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Hoyte in B flat; Anthem, O taste and see (Goss).

HOLY TRINITY, TULSE HILL. — Morn.: Chant Service. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Gadsby in C; Anthem, Sing praises unto the Lord (Gounod).

ST AUGUSTINE AND ST. FAITH, WATLING STREET.—Morn.: Service, Stainer in E flat, Offertory, O love the Lord (Sullivan). Even.: Service, Smart in B flat; Anthem, Whoso dwelleth (Martin).

ST. PETER'S, LEIGHAM COURT ROAD, STREATHAM, S.W.—Morn.: Holy Eucharist, Purge me with hyssop (Chantwise); Introit, How dreadful is this place (Agutter); Mass, Schubert in G; Gradual, This place was made by God (Sutton); Communion, "Ave verum corpus" (Fagan). Even.: Service, Magnificat, Stark in D; Anthem, The Lord is with thee (Osborne); Solemn Te Deum, Hopkins in G.

ST. PETER'S, VERE STREET, W.—Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Hopkins in F; Anthem, Staud up and bless the Lord (Goss).

ST. PAUL'S, AVENUE ROAD, SOUTH HAMPSTEAD.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Dykes in F; Benedictus, Lawes; Kyrie, Stainer in E flat. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Gounod in D; Anthem, God came from Teman (Steggall).

ST. PAUL'S, BOW COMMON, E.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Chants; Holy Communion; Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei and Gloria in excelsis, Vernham in F; Offertory, Calkin. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Tours in F; Anthem, Here by Babylon's wave (Gounod).

ST. JAMES'S PRIVATE EPISCOPAL CHAPEL, SOUTHWARK.—Morn.: Service, Introit, O Lamb of God (Gounod); Communion Service, Messe de Orphéonistes (Gounod). Even.: Service, Stanford in B flat; Anthem, O rest in the Lord (Mendelssohn).

ST. MARY BOLTONS, WEST BROMPTON, S.W.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Smart in F; Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Smart in F; Anthem, I was glad (Elvey).

ST. MARY ABCHURCH, E.C.—Morn.: Service, Boyce in C, and Stainer in A; Holy Communion, Smart in F. Even.: Service, Garret in D.

ST. MARGARET PATTENS, ROOD LANE, FENCHURCH STREET.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Smart in F; Benedictus, Dykes in F; Communion Service: Offertory Anthem, For the mountains shall depart (Mendelssohn); Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei and Gloria (Mozart). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Hopkins in F; Anthem, His salvation, and, God is a Spirit (Bennett).

Digitized by Google

ST. MICHAEL'S, CORNHILL. — Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Dykes in F; Anthem, In Christ dwelleth (Goss); Kyrie, and Creed, Marbecke. Even.: Service, Magnificat and and Nunc Dimittis, Nares in F; Anthem, O Lord, give ear (Greene).

ST. MAGNUS, LONDON BRIDGE.—Morn.: Service, Opening Anthem, I will arise (Cecil); Te Deum and Jubilate, Travers in F; Kyrie, Mendelssohn. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Travers in F; Anthem, God is gone up (Greene).

ST. SAVIOUR'S, HOXTON.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Hopkins in G; Holy Communion; Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, and Gloria in excelsis, Smart in G. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, (Best); Anthem, Holy, holy (Spohr).

ST. SEPULCHRE'S, HOLBORN.—Morn: Service, Sullivan in D; Anthem, I know that the Lord (Ouseley) Even.: Service, Cooke in G; Anthem, We will rejoice (Croft).

Country.

ST. ASAPH CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Ordination Service, "Veni Creator" (Palestrina). Even.: Service, The Litany; Anthem, Now we are ambassadors (Mendelssohn).

ASHBURNE CHURCH, DERBYSHIRE. — Morn.: Service, Dykes in F; Holy Communion, Lloyd in E flat. Even.: Service, Lloyd in E flat; Anthem, Sing a song of praise (Stainer).

BIRMINGHAM (S. ALBAN THE MARTYR).—Morn.: Service, Plain-song; Holy Communion; Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Gloria, Garrett in D; Benedictus and Agnus Dei, Redman in D. Evensong: Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Tours in F.

BIRMINGHAM (ST. CYPRIAN'S, HAY MILLS).—Morn.: Service, Field in D; Anthem, Praise the Lord, O my soul (Mozart). Even.: Service, Clarke-Whitfeld in E; Anthem, Be Thou my judge (Corfe).

BIRMINGHAM (S. PHILIP'S CHURCH). -- Morn.: Service, Chant Service (Best); Holy Communion, Best in G. Evensong Service, Chipp in A; Anthem, Blessed are they (Tours).

CANTERBURY CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Hopkins in G; Jubilate, Hake in G; Anthem, O Lord we trust (Handel); Communion, Garrett in D. Even.: Service, Goss in A; Anthem, The glory of the Lord (Goss).

DUBLIN, ST. PATRICK'S (NATIONAL) CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Smart in F; Communion, Kyrie, Creed, and Sanctus, Smart in F; Anthem, Grant us Thy peace (Mendelssohn). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Smart in F; Anthems, Distracted with care (Haydn), and, I looked, and lo, a Lamb (Stevenson).

DURHAM CATHEDRAL. — Morn.: Service, Calkin in D (throughout); Anthem, for this mortal must put on immortality (Wesley); Introit, O taste and see (Rogers). Even.: Service, Anthem, On Thee each living soul (Haydn).

ELY CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Hopkins in E flat; Benedictus, Plain-song; Kyrie and Credo, Arnold in B minor; Gloria, Jackman in E flat; Anthem, Thou visitest the earth (Greene). Even.: Service, Arnold in F; Anthem, I will sing of thy power (Greene).

GLOUCESTER CATHEDRAL. — Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Stanford in B flat; Kyrie and Creed, Stanford in B flat; Anthem, O Lord, my God (Wesley). Aft.: Service, Stanford in B flat; Anthem, Hear my prayer (Mendelssohn).

LEEDS, ST. MARTIN'S CHURCH (POTTERNEWTON). — Te Deum and Benedictus, Chants; Introit, I will wash my hands in innocency (Wesley); Kyrie, Torrance in D; Nicene Creed, (Marbeck); Offertory Sentences (Farebrother). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittus, Chants; He in tears that soweth (Hiller).

LICHFIELD CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Tuckermann in E flat; Communion Service, Tuckermann in E flat; Anthem, Praise the Lord (Hayes). Even: Service, Turle in D; Anthems, Whosoever drinketh, and, Therefore with joy "Woman of Samaria" (Bennett).

LLANDAFF CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate Garrett in D; Introit, O Saviour of the world (Goss); Holy Communion, Garrett in D. Even.: Service, The Litany; Anthems, Now we are ambassadors, and, How lovely (Mendelssohn).

LIVERPOOL CATHEDRAL.—Aft.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Stainer in E flat; Anthem, I was glad when they said unto me (Horsley).

MANCHESTER CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Attwood in F; Anthem, There is Joy (Sullivan); Holy Communion, Parry in D. Aft.: Service, Attwood in F; Anthem, Glory be to God (Haydn).

MANCHESTER (ST. BENEDICT'S). — Morn.: Service, Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei, and Gloria in excelsis, Thorne in G. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Bunnett in F.

MANCHESTER (ST. JOHN BAPTIST, HULME).—Morn.: Service, Kyrie, Credo, and Gloria in excelsis, Stainer in A; Sanctus, Benedictus and Agnus Dei, Gounod. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Bunnett in F; Anthem, I will lift up mine eyes (Clarke-Whitfield).

RIPON CATHEDRAL. — Morn.: Service, Chants; Kyrie and Credo, Armes in B flat; Anthem, O Saviour of the World (Goss). Aft.: Service, Haynes in E; Anthem, The wilderness (Wesley).

ROCHESTER CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Goss in A; Anthem, O Father, blest (Baum); Holy Communion, Hopkins in G. Even.: Service, Hopkins in A; Anthem, Blessed be the God (Wesley).

SHEFFIELD PARISH CHURCH. — Morn.: Service, Kyrie, Tours in F; Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Barnby in C; Anthems, Then shall the righteous, and, He that shall endure (Mendelssohn).

SHERBORNE ABBEY.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Chants, Kyrie, Goss in G; Offertories, (Barnby). Even.: Service, Anthem, O God who hast prepared (Corfe).

SOUTHWELL COLLEGIATE CHURCH, NOTTS.—Morn.: Service, King in C; Kyrie, Calkin in B flat; Creed, Marriott in F. Even.: Service, Walmisley in D minor; Anthem, Ascribe unto the Lord (Wesley).

SOUTHAMPTON (ST. MARY'S CHURCH).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum Calkin in B flat; Benedictus, Aldrich; Holy Communion; Introit, O how amiable (Macfarren); Service, Monk in C; Offertory, "Charge them" (Barnby); Paternoster, Field. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Steward in G; Apostles' Creed, Harmonized Monotone.

WELLS CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Banks in G (throughout). Even.: Service, Aldrich in A; Anthem, Praise the Lord (Mozart).

WORCESTER CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Garrett in F; Anthem, Holy, holy (Crotch). Even.: Service, Garrett in F; Anthem, Send out Thy light (Gounod).

APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. RICHARD LEMAIRE has been appointed Choirmaster at the Royal Military Chapel (the Guards' Church), St. James's Park. Mr. Lemaire will continue to hold his present appointment at St. John's, Horsleydown, S.E.

Mr. C. A. HODGKINSON has been appointed Organist and Choirmaster of Christ Church (Parish Church), Bexley Heath.

Mr. ALFRED A. PHYSICK has resigned the organistship of the Church of the Ascension, Lavender Hill; and has been appointed Organist and Director of the Choir, to Holy Trinity Church, Upper Tooting. Mr. Hand, late Organist of S. Chad's, Haggerton, succeeds Mr. Physick at Lavender Hill, upon his leaving there during the next month.

 Post-cards must be sent to the Editor, 6, Argyle Square, W.C., by Wednesday. Lists are frequently omitted in consequence of not being received in time.

NEWSPAPERS sent should have distinct marks opposite to the matter to which attention is required.

NOTICE.—All communications intended for the Editor are to be sent to his private address. Business communications to be addressed to 185, Fleet Street, E.C.

[The attention of the several Organists is called to the favour they confer upon their brother musicians by forwarding their notices regularly: this column of the paper is much valued as an index to what is going on in the choice of cathedral music, so much so that intermissions constantly give rise to remonstrance. Lists should be sent in a week in advance if possible.—ED. Mus. Stand.]

HENRY SPEECHLY,

CAMDEN ORGAN STEAM FACTORY,

KING'S ROAD, ST. PANCRAS, LONDON, N.W.

ESTABLISHED 1860.

Specifications and Estimates for Organs of any Magnitude, also for Reconstructions, Repairs, and Re-voicing.

Tunings contracted for, and Tuners sent to all parts of the Country at regular intervals or when required.

ORGANS ON HIRE WITH OPTION OF PURCHASE.

 Church, Chamber, and Chancel Organs for Sale or Hire; One or Two Manuals. Ready for immediate use. Easy Terms if required.

☞ All Pipes and other Parts manufactured on the Premises.

ART IN EARNEST; or, Wagner and no End. An Essay on the "Meistersinger," and the "Nibelungen Ring." By B. F. WYATT-SMITH. Price 6d.
W. REEVES, 185, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

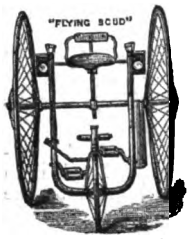
BICYCLES AND TRICYCLES.
NEW AND SECOND-HAND.



"FLYING SCUD" and "ECLECTIC" TRICYCLES, are the Machines for 1883. Spoken of by the Daily News of January 30th as "Splendid machines." "NANCY LEE," Weldless Steel," and "NONSUCH" Steel Bicycles, from £5 5s. Any machine at maker's price for twelve or less equal monthly payments, or for £5 down and 20s. per month, or large discount and carriage paid for cash. Can be seen and tried before purchasing in our school (60 by 40, concrete floor, tuition free), adjoining Show-rooms, the largest in London, with over 400 new and second-hand on View. Machines bought, sold, cleaned, repaired (estimates given), warehoused, advanced upon and exchanged.

Illustrated Lists post free. Hours 9 till 7; Saturdays till 4.

Repairs of all kinds neatly, cheaply, and promptly executed. Cheapest house in the trade for fittings. Parts and sundries of all descriptions kept in stock.

Machines Let on Hire with Option of Purchase.

SOUTH LONDON MACHINISTS' COMPANY.

STEAM WORKS: Suffolk Works, Suffolk Grove, Great Suffolk Street, S.E. Show Rooms and Offices: 28 and 29, Suffolk Grove. Bicycle and Tricycle School: 18, Suffolk Grove. City Depot, Show Rooms, and School: Tower Chambers, Moorgate Street, E.C. (Nearly opposite Moorgate Street Station.) PERAMBULATORS and all Domestic Machines at lowest prices for cash, or on easy terms without extra charge. Lists free. State kind required.

ESTABLISHED 1872.

When writing please say where you saw this advertisement.

T. R. WILLIS,

Organ Builder, Metal & Wood Pipe Maker and Voicer,

TOWER ORGAN WORKS, 29, MINORIES, LONDON.

AN ORGAN KEPT FOR PRACTICE.

REBUILDING, TUNING, AND REPAIRING.

E & W. SNELL,

Manufacturers of Harmoniums, and Reed Pedal Organs,

KING STREET NORTH, CAMDEN TOWN, LONDON, N.W.

NOTE.—These are the only Instruments at which an Organist can really find himself "at home," as all Scales, Positions, and Measurements are adopted strictly in accordance with the Resolutions of the Council of the College of Organists. Estimates free.

MALEY, YOUNG & OLDKNOW,
ORGAN BUILDERS,

KING'S ROAD, ST. PANCRAS, LONDON, N.W.

Specifications, Estimates, and Designs for Church, Chamber, Concert, and all Descriptions of Organs.
Materials, Workmanship, and Tone guaranteed to be First Class.
Organs rebuilt to suit any position, enlarged, and Revoiced at very moderate charges.
Tunings in all parts of the Kingdom.

PROSPECTUS FREE ON APPLICATION.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts, excepting under exceptional circumstances.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit, at Three per cent. interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables, the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons, and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares, and Annuities.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

The Birkbeck Building Society's Annual Receipts exceed Five Millions.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with immediate Possession, and no Rent to Pay.—Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate Possession, either for Building or Gardening purposes.—Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

WITH 25 PER CENT DISCOUNT FOR CASH, OR 15/- PER MONTH, (SECOND HAND 10/6 Per Month) ON THE 3 YEARS' SYSTEM.

BORD'S PIANOS

PIANOS EXCHANGED. LISTS FREE OF

C. STILES & Co., 42 SOUTHAMPTON ROW, W.C.

CONSTANT LAURENT, HARMONIUM and ANGLO-ORGAN MANUFACTURER, Established in 1859 at 85, HIGH STREET, MARYLEBONE, LONDON, W.—Repairing and Tuning Executed Promptly. Price List on Application.—Intending Purchasers are respectfully solicited to inspect my Instruments and Factory.

EUSTACE INGRAM, Organ Builder,

Combines excellence of Tone and Workmanship with Economy.

INSPECTION INVITED.

WORKS:—Burnard Place, Eden Grove, Holloway, London, N.

"HARMONY SIMPLIFIED."

A Concise Treatise on Harmony, Thorough Bass, and Modulation, for the Use of Students. By FARLEY NEWMAN. In paper cover, 1s. 6d. net; bound in cloth, 2s. 6d. net.

"THE ORGAN OLIO."

Edited by ARTHUR HENRY BROWN. A Collection of Short Pieces for the Organ or Harmonium, by various Composers. 2s. net.

London: B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster-row, E.C.

MUSIC SENT ON SALE OR RETURN on highly advantageous terms by
B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster-row, London.

MUSIC of EVERY PUBLISHER supplied to Dealers, Teachers, and Schools. Having the largest varied Stock Europe. The terms, which are highly advantageous, sent on application
London: B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster-row.

B. WILLIAMS, PATERNOSTER ROW.—Having purchased the lease and goodwill of the above old-established business, together with the very extensive trade stock, I beg to announce that, with the old staff of assistants which I have specially retained, I shall endeavour to carry on the concern with as much satisfaction as heretofore. The publishing department (of which I have had the sole management since the death of Mr. B. Williams) will receive every attention.

LUCY J. MULLEN.
(Daughter of the late Mr. B. Williams).

SYDNEY SMITH'S
FOUR NEW PIANOFORTE PIECES.

LA FEE DES ONDES.	Morceau brilliant ...	4 0
LE DOMINO NOIR.	Fantaisie brillante sur l'opéra d'Auber	4 0
MARGUERITE.	Chanson d'une fileuse	4 0
STYRIENNE	... ...	4 0

SYDNEY SMITH'S
FOUR NEW PIANOFORTE DUETS.

GAVOTTE ET MUSETTE	... ...	5 0
I PIFFERARI.	Musette moderne	5 0
LOHENGRIN.	Grande Fantaisie sur l'opéra de R. Wagner	6 0
NONCHALANCE.	Caprice de Concert	5 0

LONDON:

EDWIN ASHDOWN, Hanover-square.

printed for the Proprietor by BOWDEN, HUDSON & Co., at 23, Red Lion Street, Holborn, London, W.C.; and Published by WILLIAM REEVES, at the Office, 185, Fleet Street, E.C. West End Agents:—WEEKES & CO., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W. Subscriptions and Advertisements are received either by the Publisher or West End Agents.—Communications for the EDITOR are to be forwarded to his private address, 6, Argyle Square, W.C.

SATURDAY, JUNE 30, 1883.—Entered at the General Post Office as a Newspaper.

Digitized by Google

The Musical Standard,

A NEWSPAPER FOR MUSICIANS,

PROFESSIONAL AND AMATEUR.

VOL. XXV. NEW SERIES.

JULY TO DECEMBER, 1883.

"The powers of music are felt or known by all men."—SIR W. TEMPLE.

LONDON:

WILLIAM REEVES; "MUSICAL STANDARD" OFFICE, 185, FLEET STREET.

Price Nine Shillings, bound in cloth.

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

INDEX TO VOL. XXV. NEW SERIES.

ACADEMICAL INTELLIGENCE :
College of Organists, 11, 41, 132, 147, 294
Royal Academy of Music, 225, 407
Royal College of Music, 312
Social Science Congress, 225
Trinity College, London, 11, 57, 86, 183, 225, 342
Trinity College, Liverpool Centre, 259
University of Cambridge, 279
University of Oxford, 86, 249, 279, 342
Æsthetic Effect of Altered Key, 28
An Experience in Pianoforte Playing in New Orleans, 183
Annual Musical Festival of the North American Saengerbund, 145
APPOINTMENTS : 31, 43, 59, 107, 139, 155, 171, 186, 201, 235, 267, 283, 299, 315, 331, 363, 379, 412
Approaching Church Congress, 121
A Ruin and a Monument, 340
Asmodeus in the Musical World, 89
Beauty in Music, 83
Birthday Letter, A, 113
Bow and Bromley Institute, 355
Cantus Transcendentalis, 207
Carter's, Mr. George, New Cantata, 343
Children's Voices, 22
Church Choirs, 358
Church Music and Congregational Singing, 228
Clarke, The late Rev. Scotson, 19, 115
CORRESPONDENCE :
America, and the Copyright Law, 12
Ancient Organ in the Duomo of Orvieto, Tuscany, 361
Colour-Music, 264
Counterpoint, 89, 105, 122, 152, 184, 215
Curiosities of Musical Criticism, 409
Cyphering, 153
Dr. Arnold's New Sacred Cantata, "Sennacherib," 169, 184
Dr. Tuckerman, 153
Festival Chamber Concert in Honour of Spohr, July 2nd, 1843, 296
Harmoniums, 280
Improvisation, 330, 345
International College of Music, 57
John Smith's Doctorate, 280
Majority of The Musical Standard, 74
Memorial to Sir John Goss, 313
Mendelssohn and Moscheles, 313
On the Teaching of Counterpoint, 169
Orchestral Tuning, 280
Organ Recitals at Kensington, 122
Orphan School for Daughters of Musicians, 57
Puritanism and Music, 344
Right of Performance Question, 330
Royal Academy Pupils, 122
Royal College of Music, 393
Royal Society of Musicians, 409
Sacred Harmonic Society and the Library Money, 29, 57
Scale Colour, 264, 296
Second Inversion of the Dominant Seventh, 137
Smart's, Henry, "Jacob," 296
Suggestions to Singers, 12
Windsor Organ, The, 153
Counterpoint, 26, 46, 62
Cremonas, 120
Croydon, 41
Cuttings from Ferdinand Praeger's Rhymes for Young and Old Children, 302
D'Albert, Eugene, 404
Decline of Congregational Singing, 209
Distribution of Prizes at the Royal Academy of Music, 63
Dream, A, 206
Edinburgh University Musical Society, 374
EDITORIAL :
A Few Words of Registering on the Organ, 117
A Form Question, 292
A Good Example, 69
A Groundless Alarm, 214
A Lutheran Tune, 308
A Musical Experience in Wales, 100
A Neglected Church Festival, 294
An Observation anent Military Bands, 102
A Notable Programme, 276
A Singular Career, 166
A Veteran Artist, 325
Church Congress and Church Music, 212
Expression, 40
Female Singers in Church Choirs, 38
EDITORIAL—continued.
Few Words to "The British Public," 293
Foreign Musical Produce, 52
Form in Vocal Music, 40, 85, 148, 180, 277
Goss, John, 260
Italian Opera in Both Worlds, 277
Logic of Counterpoint, 3rd series, 25, 53, 134, 181, 214, 246, 356, 373, 391, 405
Majority of The Musical Standard, 85
Music at City Dinners, 309
Music Not an Amusement, 133
Musical Festivals and their Fruits, 150
Noise versus Music, 198
"Nose" Music in Church, 198
On Musical Thinking, 84
On the Origin of a Famous Tune, 244
On the Origin of the Word "Mass," 357
Orchestral Effects and Key-board Mannerisms, 24
Philharmonic Society, 388
Pianoforte Pedals, 196
Present Position of the Composer, 26, 68
Present Season, The, 11
Professional Eagerness, 326
Promenade Concerts, 340
Proportionate Strength of Band and Chorus, 372
Prospects of the Next Opera Season, 341
Puritanism and Music, 324
Purpose in the Composition of Music, 132, 164, 230
Signor Schira, The late, 247
Signs of Mistaken Clanship, 228
Some Account of an Ancient Institution, 116
The Autumn Season, 246
The Concert Season of 1883-84, 118
The Opera ; Past, Present, and Future, 103
Tone versus Colour, 230
Triple-stringed Harp, The, 149
Vain Repetitions, 261
What Will They With It ? 8
Where the Old Pianos Go ! 54
Words Retrospective and Prospective, 404
Field, John, and his Habits, 71
Fifty Thousand Pianos, 37
FOREIGN MUSICAL INTELLIGENCE: 4, 21, 37, 50, 65, 81, 96, 112, 129, 145, 162, 177, 196, 212, 225, 249, 259, 295, 312, 324, 344, 360, 377, 388, 407
Gasparo, Spontini, and Hector Berlioz, 94
Goss Reminiscence, A, 254
Gounod's "Redemption," 7
Harp, The, 23
History of the Pianoforte, 71, 87, 98, 209
Hymnology, 231
Improvisation, 302
International Copyright, 24
Macfarren, Sir G. A., on the Cardiff Eisteddfod, 136, 143
Mandoline, The, 337
Mario, The late Signor, 382
Modesty in connection with Music and its Sister Arts, 99
Mozart's Organ Works, 110, 126, 142
Music, 199
"Music hath charms," 51
Music in Ladies' Schools, 56
Music in New York, 244
Music Lecture of the Olden Times, 66
Music of a Hundred Years Ago, 121
Music of Thought, The, 70
Musical Association, 357
Musical Festivals, 175
MUSICAL INTELLIGENCE :
A New American Musical Pitch, 144
Armin's, Mdlle. Hélène, Concert, 2
Avenue Theatre, 128
Babbacombe, 387
Banbury, 387
Bath, 259, 354, 370
Beddington, Surrey, 243
Bedford, 306, 322, 403
Beethoven's Symphony in A, 303
Belfast Choral Association, 224
Berkhampsted, 353
Bermondsey, 48
Beverley, 96
Birmingham, 161, 258, 322, 401
Bishop's Stortford, 80
Blackburn, 306, 387
Bonawitz's, Mr. J. B., Historical Recitals, 257, 305, 335, 368
Boston, Lincolnshire, 192
Bow and Bromley Institute, 176, 288, 305
MUSICAL INTELLIGENCE—continued.
Bray, Dublin, 176
Bridport, 371
Brighton, 242, 386
Brighton Aquarium Orchestral Concerts, 323
Brixton, 242, 371
Burton-on-Trent, 209, 371
Camberwell, 402
Cardiff, 96
Carmarthen, 96
Carnarvon, 96
Chelsea, 305
Cheltenham, 305, 353
Chicago, 193
Christ Church, Woburn Square, 257
Church Congress, 128
Cirencester, 402
City of London College, 20
Claremont Lecture Hall, 289
Comic Opera at the Royalty Theatre, 321
Concert at Guildhall, 34
Cork, 80, 112, 192, 208, 354, 403
Croydon, 403
Crystal Palace, 127, 160, 241, 256, 272, 287, 303, 320, 334, 350, 367, 383
Dartford, 307
Dedham, 3
Derby, 258
Dorchester, 322
Ealing Choral Society, 352
Eastbourne, 20, 144
Edinburgh, 402
Ely Cathedral, 176
Enniskillen, Ireland, 355
Exeter, 224
"Falka" at the Royal Comedy Theatre, 351
Festival of Associated Choirs at Whitby, 128
Folkestone, 161
Francis', Miss Beata, Concert, 3
Glasgow, 129, 193, 258, 274, 289, 336
Gloucester Musical Festival, 64, 128, 144, 159
Greenock, 371
Guildhall School of Music, 352, 369
Gwennap, Cornwall, 20
Hallé's, Mr. Charles, Chamber Concerts 19
Halstead, Essex, 403
Harrow, 369
Heaton, 259
Higher Broughton, Manchester, 243
High Wycombe, 335
Hollman's, M., Annual Morning Concert, 19
Horns Assembly Rooms, 224, 337, 369
Imperial Theatre, 192
Kendal, 21
"King David," 319
Lancaster Hall, 63
Leamington, 307, 354
Leeds, 176, 224, 257, 274, 306, 321, 370, 402
Leeds Musical Festival, 48, 111, 223, 240
Leeds Organ School and Academy of Music, 80
Leicester, 370
Liverpool, 19, 35, 49, 64, 161, 176, 193, 258, 274, 306, 353, 403
Lombard Amateur Musical Society, 352
London Literary and Artistic Society, 319
London Tricycle Club, 369
Long Eaton, 96
Lyne Chertsey, 337
Maidenhead, 355
Manchester, 192, 289, 370, 386
Melbourne, 96
Mile End, 289
Mirfield, 354
Monday Popular Concerts, 287, 304, 321, 334, 350, 368, 384
Montigny-Remaury's, Mdme., Recital, 385
Mori's, Mr., New Operetta, 48
Moulsham, 243
Music at St. George's Hall, 273
Music in Cork, 20
Music in Dublin, 306, 323, 336, 354, 386
Music in Edinburgh, 386
Music in Paris, 372
Music Teachers' National Association U.S., The, 20
Musical Artists' Society, 384
Musical Visit to Manchester, 323

Digitized by Google

MUSICAL INTELLIGENCE—continued.
Nantwich, 224
New Barnet, 289
Newbury, 354
Newcastle-on-Tyne, 35, 64, 208, 223, 307, 371
Northampton, 353
Norwood, 323
"Notes" of the Church Congress at Reading, 222
Nottingham, 21
Oldham, 129, 387
Oxford, 386
Pachmann's, M. de, Recitals, 368, 385
Penna's, Mr. Frederick, Concert, 369
"People's, The," Entertainment Society, 321, 352
Preston, 242, 259, 323, 355, 387
Promenade Concerts, Covent Garden, 81, 96
Pudsey, 369
Reading, 336, 387
Reception at Kensington, 257
"Redemption," Gounod, 351
Richter Concerts, 2, 272, 288, 303
Royal Academy of Music, 2
Royal Academy of Music Local Examinations, Manchester Centre, 20, 273
Royal Albert Hall, 288, 335
Royal Italian Opera, 2, 19, 34, 47
Royal Normal College for the Blind, 400
Royal College of Musicians, 385
Sacred Harmonic Society, 400
Salisbury, 355, 386, 402
Saturday Popular Concerts, 304, 320, 334, 350, 368, 383, 400
Southampton, 274
Southend, 21
South Kensington School of Music, 19
South Norwood, 49
Spohr's "Last Judgment," at St. Margaret Pattens, E.C., 401
St. Andrew's Day at the Albert Hall, 352
St. Botolph, Aldgate, 242
St. George's Glee Union, 289
St. John's, Angell Town, 209
St. Mary of the Angels, W., 289
St. Paul's, Avenue Road, N.W., 242
St. Paul's, Bow Common, 273
St. Paul's Cathedral, 351
Strolling Players' Orchestral Society, 385
Taunton, 193, 209, 370, 403
Temperance Fête at the Crystal Palace, 34
Tiverton, 400
Tottenham, 369
Tulse Hill, 242
Vaillant's, Mdlle. Gabrielle, Matinée Musicale, 2
Various Concerts, 3, 34, 48, 64
Victoria Coffee Hall, 273
Wandsworth, 257, 387
Ware, 352
Watford, 243
Wellington Barracks, 274
Welsh National Eisteddfod, 79
Western Madrigal Society, 289, 305, 334, 385
West London College of Music, 63
West London Tabernacle, 336
Weymouth, 353
Whitby, 129
Willing's, Mr., Choir, 369
Winchester, 274
Windsor, 369
Wolverhampton, 176, 337
Worcester, 353, 370
Yarmouth, 353
Zastrow's, Mr. von, Drawing-room Recitals and Concerts, 48, 64, 400
Musical Needs of Derbyshire, 343
Natural Laws of "Expression" in Musical Exposition and Practical Delivery, 366, 398
New England Conservatory of Music, 180
New Opera Scheme, 175
Notes about Paganini, 207
Orchestral Conducting, 12
ORGAN NEWS:
Aberdare, 178
Aberfeldy, 195
Accrington, 114, 339, 408
Alyth, 275
Amsterdam, 249
Astbury Church, 115, 248
Bakewell, 98
Bamburgh, 82
Beckenham, Kent, 179
Bedford, 275
Belfast, 211
Berkeley Square, W., 130, 194
ORGAN NEWS—continued.
Beverley Minster Organ, 227
Bilston, 311
Birkenhead, 211, 248
Birmingham, 179, 356
Blundellsand, 211
Bolton, 4, 22, 210, 226, 248, 276, 329, 339, 375, 392
Boston, 211, 227, 409
Bow and Bromley Institute, 195, 210, 226, 248, 263, 276, 328, 338, 375, 393
Bradford, 5, 66, 195
Brechin, N.B., 311
Brighouse, 114
Brighton, 249, 275, 291, 329
Brisbane, 227
Bristol, 4, 22, 226, 248, 290, 312, 356
Brixton, 338
Broad Green, 275
Brownswood Park, N., 408
Burnley, 408
Burton-on-Trent, 210, 248, 292, 376
Cambridge, 291
Cape of Good Hope, 35
Cardiff, 97
Castle Howard, 376
Charlton, 226
Chatteris, Cambridgeshire, 55
Chelmsford, 35, 114
Cheltenham, 35
Chester, 263
Christ Church, Folkestone, 339
College of Organists, 210
Copperhouse, 178
Cork, 55, 66, 82, 276
Cornwall, 178
Coventry, 22
Crystal Palace, 22, 54, 146, 163, 178, 210, 263, 275, 290, 339, 355, 375
Darlington, 339
Deal, 36
Devenport, 130
Dundee, 227, 292, 408
Ealing, 22
Eccleshall, 195
Edinburgh, 340, 356, 376
Exeter, 22, 226, 329
Fisheries Exhibition, 5, 22, 36, 52, 66, 82, 97, 114, 130, 146, 163, 178, 194, 210, 226, 248, 263, 276
Friern Barnet, 130
Galashiels, 211, 408
Glasgow, 130, 146, 179, 211, 248, 329, 408
Godalming, 97
Greenock, 291, 376
Halstead, Essex, 66, 82, 248
Harwich, Essex, 130
Haworth Church, 248, 263
Helensburgh, 131
Higher Blackley, 195
High Wycombe, 22, 226
Hindley, Wigan, 4
Hinkley, 226, 292
Holloway, 130
Hope, Derbyshire, 227
Huddersfield, 329
Ilkeston, 226
India, 291
Keighley, Yorkshire, 376
Kingston-on-Thames, 376, 408
Lambeth Road, 275
Leeds, 36, 82, 146, 163, 178, 291, 376
Lewisham High Road Congregational Church, 312
Limerick, 97
Liverpool, 4, 35, 54, 114, 130, 163, 178, 194, 210, 226, 290, 338, 339, 355, 375, 392
Maidstone, 114, 290
Malvern, 146
Manchester, 35, 66, 264, 290
Margate, 163
Mirfield, 328
Monton, 328
Morningside, Edinburgh, 5, 227, 408
Mossley Hill, 311, 375
National Opera House, 409
New Kent Road, 5
North Berwick, 36, 82, 146
Norwich, 4, 290, 311, 328, 355, 375, 392
Nottingham, 194, 249
Novel Organ Scheme, 163
Oldham, 146, 178, 195, 210, 226, 290, 311
Old Street, E.C., 328
Organ Performance on Bank Holiday, 82
Oxford, 376
Peel, 263
Pelynt, Cornwall, 131
Perth, 195, 375, 408
Pool, 210
Portsmouth, 291, 408
ORGAN NEWS—continued.
Preston, 4, 22, 35, 55, 66, 194, 211, 226, 290, 312, 339, 408
Reading, 311, 339
Reigate, 211
Rotherham, 147
Royal Albert Hall, 114
Sandringham, 115
Scholes, 147
Seaford, 339, 376
Sheffield, 276
Southborough, Tunbridge Wells, 311
Stepney, 275
Stoke Damarel, 82
Strangeways, 355
St. John's, Brownswood Park, N., 408
St. Leonard's-on-Sea, 114, 263, 291
St. Margaret's Church, Westminster, 311
St. Mary's, Brookfield, Highgate, 292
St. Michael's, Folkestone, 376
Taunton, 264
Tewkesbury, 195
Towcester, 179
Tunbridge Wells, 5, 329
Upton Chapel, Lambeth, 291
Walmersley, 210
Ware, 55, 130, 210, 291, 375
Waterloo Road, 146, 263, 311
Watford, 264, 328
Wavertree, 408
Weingarten Organ, The, 36
Welford, 163
West Croydon, 339
West Hartlepool, 376
West Newton, 115
Wick, 55
Windsor Castle, 83
Wisbech, 97
White Abbey, 36
Woodberry Down, N., 339
Woolwich, 290
Wormley, Herts, 227
Yarmouth, 82
Orphan School for Daughters of Musicians, 81
Packer, Charles S., The late, 255
PASSING EVENTS: 13, 29, 42, 58, 72, 90, 105, 121, 138, 153, 169, 184, 200, 217, 233, 249, 265, 281, 297, 313, 330, 345, 361, 377, 393, 410
Points in Pianoforte Teaching, 179
Popular Songs, 23
Professionals and Amateurs, 88
Promising Prize Pupils of the Royal Academy of Music, 78
Proposed Goss Memorial, 254
Proposed Welsh Musical Festival, 100
Public Singing, 24
QUERIST, THE: 14, 30, 42, 58, 74, 138, 154, 170, 185, 202, 218, 250, 266, 282, 297, 314, 346, 362, 378, 394, 410
Raphael's Musical Instruments, 280
Remarks on Dr. Stainer's Cantata, "St. Mary Magdalene," 162
Reminiscence, A, of Heine, 56
Reminiscences of an Old Reporter, 115, 131, 182, 191, 271, 327
REVIEWS: 11, 41, 50, 120, 168, 193, 232, 278, 295, 360, 392, 406
Royal College of Music, 65
Russian National Hymn, 318
Sacred Harmonic Society, 50
Sacred Music in the Roman Church, 255
SERVICE LISTS: 14, 30, 42, 58, 74, 90, 106, 122, 138, 154, 170, 185, 202, 218, 234, 250, 266, 282, 297, 314, 330, 346, 362, 378, 394, 411
Social Science Congress, 243
Society of Arts, 70
Society of Professional Musicians, 247
Some Musical Ethics and Analogies, 158, 238
Song for October, 318
Songs of Schubert, 302
Stephens', Mr. Charles E., Sonata Piacevole, 406
Testimonial to Sir Michael Costa, 135
"The Coming Opera," 281
Tonic Sol-fa College, 67
Tonic Sol-fa Movement, 6
Tournaphone, The, 41
Trinity College, London, 65
Two Letters written by Wagner, 183
"Virginia," Dr. Parry's New Opera, 38
Voice, The, Musically and Medically Considered, 18, 55, 78, 104, 119, 135, 151, 174, 270, 286, 318, 338, 399
Wagner's "Parsifal," 51
Welsh Musical Controversy, 190
West-End Eisteddfod, 373
Women as Piano Tuners, 8

Digitized by Google

THE MUSICAL STANDARD

A NEWSPAPER FOR MUSICIANS PROFESSIONAL AND AMATEUR

No. 988. VOL. XXV. FOURTH SERIES. SATURDAY, JULY 7, 1883. WEEKLY: PRICE 3D.

THE MUSICAL STANDARD is published every Saturday, price 3*d.*, by post, 3½*d.*; and may be had of any bookseller or newsagent by ordering its regular supply.

SUBSCRIPTION.—The Musical Standard is posted to subscribers at 15*s.* a year; half a year, 7*s.* 6*d.*, payable in advance.

The rate is the same to France, Belgium, Germany, Italy, United States, and Canada.

Post Office Orders to be made payable to the Publisher, William Reeves, 185, Fleet Street, London, or to the West-end Agents, Messrs. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W.

ADVERTISEMENTS.—The charge for ordinary advertisements in The Musical Standard is 2*s.* 6*d.* for three lines or less; and 6*d.* for each line (10 words) in addition. "Organist wanted," 3*s.* 6*d.* for 3 lines or less. A reduction is made for a series.

FRONT PAGE.—Concert and auction advertisements, &c., are inserted in the front page of The Musical Standard, and charged one-third in addition to the ordinary rates. Other advertisements will be inserted on the front page, or in the leader page, if desired, at the same terms.

YORK ORGAN FACTORY,

BLENHEIM PLACE, MONKGATE.

SPECIFICATION of NEW ORGAN, built by the late ROBT. POSTILL, in Pitch Pine Case, Stained and Varnished, with Spotted Metal Speaking Pipes in Front.

GREAT ORGAN, EIGHT STOPS. SWELL ORGAN, EIGHT STOPS.

PEDAL ORGAN.

Bourdon (large scale).... 16 feet. ..... 30 Notes.

COUPLERS.

Swell to Great. Swell to Pedals.

Great to Pedals.

Three Composition Pedals for Changing the Stops.
Two Octaves and a third of German Pedals for the Feet.

Front of Organ..... 10 feet 3 inches.
Front to Back ..... 9 „ 6 „
Height ..... 16 „ 6 „

The above Instrument is for SALE, and may be seen and heard by applying at the Works, or Mrs. J. POSTILL'S, 25, Monkgate.

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

TUESDAY and WEDNESDAY, July 10th and 11th, Examination for Associateship.—THURSDAY, July 12th, Examination for Fellowship.—TUESDAY, July 17th, at 8, Annual General Meeting.

The above Meetings will be held at the NEUMEYER HALL, Hart Street, Bloomsbury.

E. H. TURPIN,
Hon. Secretary.

95, Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury, W.C.

THE ORGANIST of the PARISH CHURCH, TIVERTON, DEVON, offers his HOUSE to anyone who would take his duties during the month of August; or would exchange with organist at seaside, or deputise.—Address, T. RUSSE, Tiverton, Devon.

WANTED, a VIOLIN ASSISTANT, who must be a really good performer. Salary about £120 a year, which might largely be increased.—Apply, T. RUSSE, Tiverton, Devon.

TO CONNOISSEURS.—A splendid CHAMBER ORGAN, built recently by one of the first London firms. Contains TWENTY STOPS (including two on the pedal organ) and TWO COMPLETE MANUALS. Pedal board radiating and concave according to the revised scale (Coll. Organists). The METAL throughout is of the very best quality. Blown by one of Duncan's patent hydraulic engines. This instrument, having been specially designed regardless of expense, is, for completeness of workmanship and quality of tone, one very seldom to be met with, and commends itself to the notice of those who may desire to possess a really fine and complete instrument.—Address for full particulars, price, &c., 73, Park Road South, Birkenhead.

MR. HUMPHREY J. STARK begs to announce his REMOVAL to 12, Norwood Road, Herne Hill, S.E.

MAKERS AND REPAIRERS.

GEORGE WITHERS & CO.

(Late of Coventry Street),

WHOLESALE IMPORTERS OF

MUSICAL STRINGS,

From Rome, Padua, and Naples.

A FINE COLLECTION OF ITALIAN INSTRUMENTS.

Bows, Cases, Music Stands, &c. See Price Lists.

51, ST. MARTIN'S LANE, LONDON.

LEEDS TRIENNIAL MUSICAL FESTIVAL, October 10th, 11th, 12th, and 13th, 1883.

Conductor—SIR ARTHUR SULLIVAN.

OUTLINE PROGRAMMES may now be had on application, All communications to be addressed "FRED. R. SPARK, ESQ., Hon. Sec. Musical Festival, Leeds."

MISS NORAH HAYES, CONTRALTO VOCALIST of the Albert Hall and St. James's Hall Concerts, is open to engagements for Concerts, Soirées, and At Homes. Good Press opinions. Services given free for Charities.—Address, 95, Edgware Road.

VIOLIN.—HERR POLONASKI (Violinist), open to ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts, Musical At Homes, and Violin or Accompaniment Lessons.—For Terms, please Address, HERR POLONASKI, 16, Wharfdale-street, South Kensington, S.W.

FISHERIES EXHIBITON, SOUTH KENSINGTON.—Mr. FRANK BRADLEY, Professor of the Organ, Trinity College, London, &c. (concert organist), will give RECITALS on MONDAYS and WEDNESDAYS, on the Organs of Messrs. Lewis, and Henry Jones & Sons, during the Exhibition.—Programmes gratuitously given in the Building.

For Concerts and Recitals, address Beaconsfield, Gunnersbury, W.

INTERNATIONAL FISHERIES EXHIBITION.—ORGAN RECITALS daily, upon the fine-toned Organ, in West Gallery. Supplied to the Executive Committee by HENRY JONES & SONS, 136, Fulham Road, South Kensington.

MR. E. DAVIDSON PALMER, Mus.Bac., Oxon., author of "What is Falsetto?" "Pronunciation in Singing," etc., gives LESSONS in VOICE TRAINING and SOLO SINGING, at his residence, 10, Gladesmore-road, Stamford Hill, N.

THE ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER of Cirencester Abbey desires RE-ENGAGEMENT. 14 years' Cathedral experience.—Address as above.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER.—Newington United Presbyterian Church, Edinburgh. Salary, £70 per annum.—Applications, with testimonials, to be lodged, on or before the 1st August next, with JAMES PATERSON, 16, Dick Place, Edinburgh, from whom copies of the conditions of engagement may be obtained.

JUST PUBLISHED, "MORNING and EVENING SERVICE," set to music for the especial use of Parish Choirs, by FREDK. HUNNIBELL, F.C.O. Price, 1s.; or separately, 8d. and 6d.

London: NOVELLO, EWER & CO.

Post 8vo., boards, 2s. 6d., post free.

TECHNICS OF VIOLIN PLAYING, by KARL COURVOISIER. Edited and translated by H. E. Krehbiel. Numerous illustrations.

Joachim says: "It is my opinion that this book will offer material aid to all violin players.

W. REEVES, 185, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged, cloth, 3s. 6d.

BEETHOVEN'S PIANOFORTE SONATAS, explained by ERNST von ELTERLEIN, translated by E. Hill. Preface by E. Pauer.

W. REEVES, 185, FLEET STREET, LONDON.

Digitized by Google

Foreign Musical Intelligence.

Massenet's new opera is to be given in Paris next winter.

M. Louis Deffès is the new director of the Conservatoire in Toulouse.

Signori Ferrari and Faccio are appointed respectively manager and conductor of La Scala, Milan.

Herr Paulli, the "kapellmeister" of Copenhagen, has lately retired, after a service of over fifty years, at the Royal Theatre.

The municipal council of Paris have contributed the sum of 200 francs to the fund for erecting a memorial to Hector Berlioz.

M. Felix Clement has lately brought out the second edition of his valuable work of reference the "Dictionnaire des Opéras."

"Isona di Provenza" is the title of a new opera by Signor Mancinelli, composed as a commission from the well-known house of Ricordi.

A Dresden manufacturer has invented an instrument of the harmonium species, to which he has given the singular name of "Cantus transcendentalis."

Amongst Raff's papers were found two operas, "Benedetto Marcello," and a comic opera, "Die Eifersuchtigen," of which last he had himself written the libretto.

Wilhem Krüger died at Stuttgart on June 20th. The funeral was one of an imposing character, and the departed composer and pianist was held in high esteem in Germany.

An English composition was given at a recent state concert, Mr. M'Guckin and Mdme. Valleria singing the love-duet from the fourth act of Mr. Mackenzie's "Colomba."

It is announced that at two concerts recently given by Rubenstein at St. Petersburg, 16,207 roubles were realised, 5,000 of which he has devoted to a fund for the erection of a monument to Michael Glinka, the father of Russian opera.

From Brussels comes the story of the discovery of an autograph MS. concerto by Mozart for pianoforte and violin with orchestra. The work is dated 1778, is said to have been composed at Mannheim, and the MS. occupies some fifteen pages only.

Before the close of the season two new works were produced at the Paris Opéra Comique. "Matthias Corvin," a comic opera in one act, the music by M. de Bertha, is described as the writing of a promising composer. The other novelty, a two act comic opera called "Le Portrait," is the work of M. de Lajarte, whose music is light and pleasing.

The French papers give the following list of the chief provincial Conservatoires of France, with the dates of foundation attached:—Aix, 1850; Angers, 1857; Besançon, 1861; Bordeaux, 1852; Boulogne, 1829; Caen, 1835; Cambrai, 1821; Douai, 1799; Dunkirk, 1863; Lille, 1801; Marseilles, 1820; Nantes, 1844; Nimes, 1864; Toulon, 1866; Toulouse, 1830; Valenciennes, 1836.

The Festival of the Girls' Friendly Society was held in St. Paul's Cathedral on Thursday the 14th inst., in the presence of a large congregation. The service opened with the singing of the Te Deum (Smart in F). The celebration of the Holy Communion was then proceeded with, the music selected being Stainer's fine service in A. The anthem, "Blessed be the God and Father" (Wesley) was sung during the offertory, and the "Veni Creator" was also given. The choir was composed of the boys of St. Peter's Church, Eaton Square, and gentlemen from St. Paul's, Westminster Abbey, the Chapel Royal, St. Peter's, Eaton Square, &c., and the service was rendered in a most satisfactory manner. Mr. W. de M. Sergison, of St. Peter's, Eaton Square, presided at the organ, as he has done at these Festivals on previous occasions.

Organ News.

LIVERPOOL.

Mr. W. T. Best gave an organ recital in the St. George's Hall, on Thursday evening, June 28th. The following is the programme:—

Toccata for the Organ (F sharp minor)	Hatton.
Romance in G major (Violin and Orchestra, Op. 40.)	Beethoven.
Fantasia in the Style of Handel (F minor)	Mozart.
Prelude and Fugue (B flat major)	Bach.
Duet, "Quis est homo" ("Stabat Mater")	Rossini.
Festal March	Best.

On Saturday afternooon, June 30th:—

Overture "Le Médecin Malgré Lui"	Gounod.
Adagio from the Third Symphony	Mendelssohn.
Sicilienne and Fugue (G minor)	Bach.
Trio, "Sott' altro ciel" ("Guglielmo Tell"	Rossini.
March (A minor. Theme in the Pedal-Bass)	W. T. Best.

NORWICH.

The last of the afternoon organ recitals of the season was given by Dr. Bunnett, on Saturday afternoon, 30th of June, at the St. Andrew's Hall. The following was the programme:—

Overture, "Samson"	Handel.
Marche Religieuse	Chauvet.
An der Wiege (Cradle Song)	Lange.
Barcarole (from Fourth Concerto)	Bennett.
Aria, "Verdi Prati"	Handel.
March to Calvary, "Redemption"	Gounod.
Andante and Allegretto	Bunnett.
Air, "My heart ever faithful" and The Giant Fugue	Bach.
Andante in E flat	Mozart.
Andante and Allegretto	Mendelssohn.
From Organ Sonata.
Jubilee Overture	Weber.

This recital made the thirty-second since November last. Nearly 300 pieces have been performed, which have been selected from 100 composers, representing 39 English, 25 German, 24 French, and 13 Italian, many pieces being quite new, while many of a standard classical character have not been forgotten. The organ works of Bach, Handel, and Mendelsohn have been well represented.

PRESTON.

The following is the programme of the organ recital given by Mr. James Tomlinson, in the new Public Hall, on Saturday evening, June 30th.

Concerto in F major	Handel.
Adagio—Allegro—(Cuckoo and Nightingale movement)—Allegretto—Fuga.
Romance (Violin and Orchestra)	Beethoven.
Andante (Symphony in E flat)	Romberg.
Airs from "Faust"	Gounod.
Sketch in D	Chipp.
Marche Celebre	Lachner.

BRISTOL.

Mr. George Risely gave an organ recital at the Colston Hall, on June 23rd. The following was the programme:—

Marche Heroique	Schubert.
Andante from the First Symphony	Mozart.
Grand Sonata, No. 1. Allegro—Adagio—Andante—Allegro	Mendelssohn.
Andante in F sharp minor	S. S. Wesley.
Postlude in E flat	Wély.
Sarabande et Gavotte, "Olivia"	Roeckel.
Overture "Don Pasquale"	Donizetti.

BOLTON.

An organ recital was given in the Albert Hall, by Mr. Wm. Mullineux, F.C.O., on June 23rd. The following was the programme:—

Wedding March	Best.
Operatic Selection "Ernani"	Verdi.
Mélodie in A flat	Guilmant.
Organ Concerto "The Nightingale and Cuckoo"	Handel.
Gavotte in G	Smith.
Song, "Eve's Lamentation"	King.
Chorus, "Zadok the Priest" (Coronation Authem).	Handel.

HINDLEY, WIGAN.

The following is the programme of the tenth monthly organ recital given by Mr. Chas. D. Mortimer, in St. Peter's Church, on Sunday, July 1st.

"Funeral March" and "Hymn of Seraphs"	Guilmant.
Fantasia on a Theme by Weber	E. H. Turpin.
"Pilgrim's Song of Hope"	Batiste.
Andante in E minor and major	Batiste.
Festive March in D	H. Smart.
Preludium in G	J. S. Bach.

Digitized by Google

FISHERIES EXHIBITION.

Mr. James Loaring, F.C.O., gave two organ recitals on Thursday, June 28th. The following pieces were included in the programmes :—

Overture, "Fra Diavolo"	Auber.
March from the "Ruins of Athens"	Beethoven.
Organ Concerto (No. 5)	Handel.
Andante from "Surprise Symphony"	Haydn.
Festive March in B flat	Loaring.
Overture "Semiramide"	Rossini.
Adagio from 7th Symphony	Haydn.
Rigaudon from "Arlodante"	Handel.
Coronation March	Meyerbeer.
Tema for the Organ in G	Loaring.
Chorus, "We never will bow down"	Handel.
Festive March in D	Smart.
March from the "Ruins of Athens"	Beethoven.
Organ Concerto (No. 5)	Handel.
Prelude and Fugue	Loaring.
Andante from "Surprise Symphony"	Haydn.
Festive March in B flat	Loaring.

And on Friday June 29th, Mr. James Loaring gave the following programme :—

Overture ("Semiramide")	Rossini.
Adagio from 7th Symphony	Haydn.
Rigaudon	Handel.
Tema for the Organ in G	Loaring.
Festive March in D	Smart.

The following is the programme of a recital given on Friday afternoon, June 29th, by Mr. Wm. Sewell, A.R.A.M., organist of Christ Church, Clapham :—

Fugue in D minor	Bach.
March in G	Smart.
Adagio	Mozart.
Fanfare	Lemmens.
Marche Militaire	Gounod.
Andante in G	Smart.
Postlude in E flat	Batiste.

Mr. Frank Bradley gave an organ recital on Saturday June 30th. The programme conisisted of the following selections from Handel, arranged by Mr. W. T. Best :—

Concerto in F, for Strings, etc., Largo—Siciliana—Fuga.
Andante in F, from Oboe Concerto
Tambourino, "Alcina" in G
Minuet, from Grand Concerto in D major
Fuga in B flat, from 2nd Oboe Concerto
Allegro from "Water Music" in F
Gavotte from "Lotario," in D
Passacaille in G minor, from 7th Suite for Harpsichord
Fantasia in C major, for Harpsichord.
Sonata in D, "Il Trionfo-del-Tempo."

Recitals were also given in the course of the day by Mr. Roger Askham. The following is the programme :—

Pastorale-Sonata (Op. 88) Pastorale—Intermezzo—Fugue.	Rheinberger.
Andante Piacevole	E. J. Hopkins.
Funeral March from Sonata (Op. 35)	Chopin.
March in C	R. Askham.
Andante in G	Smart.
Fugue in G minor	Bach.
Allegretto in B minor (Op. 19)	Guilmant.
Grand Chorus (Op. 18)	Guilmant.
Gavotte in A	Hollins.
Coronation Anthem, "Zadok the Priest" (Arranged by Dr. E. J. Hopkins).	Handel.

And Mr. Edward J. K. Toms also gave a recital. The following was the programme :—

March in D	Smart.
Andante Pastorale	C. E. Stephens.
Bourrée	Handel.
Barcarolle	S. Bennett.
Chilian National Hymn	F. Beyer.
Prelude and Fugue	Bach.
Gavotte	Tours.
Danse	S. Smith.
March ("Eli")	Costa.

Mr. Frank Bradley gave recitals on each day of the past week. Want of space prevents the insertion of the programmes, which were of the usual interesting character.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.

The fine organ at Trinity Church built by Messrs. J. W. Walker and Sons, and the gift of a munificent donor, was opened on June 27th. In the afternoon Mr. E. H. Turpin gave a recital before a very large number of listeners. In the evening an impressive service was held. The music included Tours' Service in F, an Anthem by Goss, and Handel's "Hallelujah Chorus." These were admirably rendered by a choir of 70 or 80 voices (ladies and gentlemen). The music was conducted by Mr. N. Elvey Irons, the much esteemed organist of the church, with so much quiet firmness, tact, and success, as clearly showed the presence of a very capable musical chief. A very large congregation listened to this really impressive service, which was pointed and garnished by a thoughtful sermon on church music by the greatly valued vicar, the Rev. Canon Hoare. Several Voluntaries were played during and after the service by Mr. E. H. Turpin, which served to display the various beauties of the singularly fine instrument ; such an organ indeed as was to be expected from the hands of so distinguished and painstaking a firm as that of Messrs. J. W. Walker and Sons. The diapason work proved to be deliciously full, round and smooth. The characteristic solo stops were found to be delicate and effective in tone. In general tone-balance and as regards the presence of some fine reeds, the organ is also a most satisfactory instrument, while very high finish characterises the mechanical movements. The Great organ has 11 stops, the Swell 12, the choir 6, the pedal 4, and there are 5 couplers, 6 composition pedals, Tremulant to Swell, pneumatic lever to Great organ and couplers. The stops number 38 and the pipes 1956. The people of Tunbridge Wells are to be congratulated upon the possession of another ecclesiastical and musical advantage in their town.

NEW KENT ROAD, S.E.

Dr. G. C. Martin gave an organ recital at St. Andrew's Church, on Wednesday evening, July 4th, on the occasion of the opening of the new organ. The following is the programme :—

Overture, "Athaliah"	Handel.
Andante from "Septuor"	Beethoven.
Introduction to "Passion"	Haydn.
Romanza in E flat	Haydn.
Minuet in B flat	Handel.
Fantasia and Fugue in D minor	Bach.

MORNIGDSIDE, EDINBURGH.

An organ recital was given in the United Presbyterian Church, on Saturday afternoon, June 30th, by Mr. Wm. Blakeley. The following was the programme :—

Organ Concerto in F major (No. 5) Larghetto, Allegro, Alla Siciliana, Presto.	Handel.
Andante Cantabile (from Trio No. 13)	Haydn.
Concert Fugue in G major	Krebs.
Fantasia, "Vesper Hymn"	E. H. Turpin.
Andante, "First Symphony"	Beethoven.
"Ave Maria"	Cherubini.
Fantasia upon Two English Melodies	Guilmant.

BRADFORD.

Specification of three-manual pedal reed organ, built for C. H. Barker, Esq., organist, by E. W. Snell, of Camden Town :—

GREAT ORGAN. CC TO C. 61 NOTES

1. Diapason	8 ft.	4. Flute	4 ft.
2. Principal	4 „	5. Vox Humana (mechanical)
3. Oboe	8 „

SWELL ORGAN. CC TO C. 61 NOTES.

6. Gemshorn	8 ft.	8. Euphone	8 ft.
7. Lieblich Bourdon	16 „

CHOIR ORGAN. CC TO C. 61 NOTES.

9. Dulciana	8 ft.	11. Tremulant
10. Voix Celestes	8 „

PEDAL ORGAN. CCC TO F. 30 NOTES.

12. Bourdon	16 ft.	13. Violoncello	8 ft.

COUPLERS.

14. Swell to Great. | 15. Great to Pedal.

ACCESSORY PEDALS.

Full organ, crescendo (Venetian swell), front and side blowers, beat keys, overhanging fronts, ivory draw-knobs, placed right and left of player, straight pedals, radiated sharps.

All scales, positions, and measures, strictly in accordance with the resolutions of the council of the College of Organists.

The numerous readers and contributors to Notes and Queries and many musical friends will regret to learn the very sudden death of the editor of the journal just named, Mr. Henry Frederic Turle, on Thursday last, of heart disease. A son of the well-known musical composer, the late organist of Westminster Abbey, Henry Turle was himself an "old Westminster," and ever retained the warmest affection for his former home. His devotion to the work which he had carried on since Dr. Doran's death will be patent to all who are familiar with Notes and Queries.

Digitized by Google

THE TONIC SOL-FA MOVEMENT.

In the course of his advocacy of the Tonic Sol-Fa movement, Mr. Sedley said in a lecture, given in Manchester, and now printed in pamphlet form :—

"No one travelling by railway at night can have failed to notice how the nearer and remoter lights visible from the line seem to be thrown into independent motion of their own, and to be executing about each other some complicated and bewildering kind of dance. A very simple real movement executed uniformly in a straight line by a spectator is thus shown to be capable of producing a complex-looking, unreal, but nevertheless seeming or apparent set of movements on the part of the objects at which he looks. If our traveller were not aware that his train was in motion, he would confidently assert on the direct evidence of his own senses that the objects which he observed really moved in the manner in which they appeared to move. Let us next replace this simple case by one somewhat more complex. Suppose that an observer is stationed at night on the deck of a steamer traversing a crowded waterway, and that he watches the lights of other vessels within sight. The observed motions of these objects will clearly be made up of two different elements, the real movements actually executed by the other ships, and the apparent movements which they seem to execute in consequence of the observer's station being itself in motion. The observer, if he is not aware of his own state of motion, will necessarily take the composite apparent movements thus produced for the real movements of the vessels in his field of view.

In these obvious considerations lies the reason why the proper motion of the planets formed an insoluble problem from the dawn of Astronomical Science down to the middle of the sixteenth century. During all this period the problem was studied on the assumption, which then appeared self-evident, that the earth was immovably fixed. The old observers were, therefore, exactly in the position of our supposed unconsciously moving steam-boat passenger.

At last came the great step which created modern Astromomy. Copernicus, who was a canon of a cathedral, in an outlying corner of what is now called North-Eastern Prussia, originated, or as he modestly preferred to put it, derived from a vague hint in some ancient writer, the idea that the earth was not fixed, but in motion, and that the apparent movements of the planets were essentially affected by that fact. By a simple application of geometrical principles to the problem before him Copernicus deduced from the apparent motions of the planets what must be their real motions on the assumption that the earth described a circle about the centre.

It was thus by substituting the conception of a movable for that of a fixed earth that planetary Astronomy was brought out of confusion and obscurity into order and light. A change no less salutary is wrought on vocal music when the conception of "movable doh" displaces that of "fixed doh."

Now what is the principle which lies at the root of the distinction embodied in these technical terms? Take the simplest form of a melody, such as the notes of our National Anthem. When we hear them we at once recognise the tune, whether it be sung in the shrill notes of a child's voice, or in the deep tones of a manly bass. In short, the tune remains the same on whatever part of the scale we "pitch" it, i.e., on whatever note we lead it off. Whether that note be in itself shrill or grave no more affects the tune than the scale on which a portrait is painted or drawn affects its likeness to the person whom it represents. Thus, in order that a melody may remain unchanged, fixed relations of pitch must connect the sounds of which it is made up, but the whereabouts of these sounds in the general scale—their absolute pitch as it is called—may be altered without altering the identity of the melody heard.

Let us see to what a tangle of difficulty and confusion the adoption of the opposite, or "fixed doh" system, as embodied in the ordinary staff notation, necessarily leads.

That notation begins by singling out a sound of assigned pitch and arbitrarily erecting the group of which that sound is the tonic into the "standard" key of C. All other keys, though inherently no whit less well entitled than it to an independent existence, are henceforth to be represented as merely altered forms of that one privileged key, the variations on its notes being indicated by a smaller or larger group of sharps or flats, forming what is technically called the "signature" of the altered key. How immediately this perverse arrangement acts, to the singer's detriment, may be seen by a moment's consideration. Suppose that a simple air, comprising the seven notes of the gamut has been written down in the key of C, and that the vocalist wishes to pitch the air half a note higher—nothing less than an array of seven sharps, or five flats, will suffice to direct such performance. If the pitch is to be lowered by half a note, the services of five sharps must in a like manner be called in. Thus, what to ninety-nine trained ears out of a hundred would be recognised as practically one and the same tune, is to be indicated on paper in three or four totally distinct ways, all but one of them involving very considerable complexity.

When a modulation affects a key already garnished with several accidentals, it is often necessary to neutralize these by the action of a fresh symbol, called a "natural," the remarkable feature about which is that it may indicate either a rise or a fall of the semitone, and that you can only ascertain by reference to the key-signature, or it may be to preceding notes, which of these two diametrically opposite processes is intended. It will be readily understood that these arbitrary and most un-scientific devices may, and often do, pile up such a heap of gratuitous complication, that a reader of the staff has no small difficulty in making out what note it is that he is directed to sing. When this obstacle is surmounted an even more serious one presents itself. The established notation, while communicating much irrelevant information as to the relation borne by the constituent sounds of a melody to one fixed and probably quite insignificant note (C), vouchsafes no direct information as to the relation in which those sounds stand to their own tonic for the time being. It is, however, only by knowing or feeling beforehand precisely what this relation is to be, that accurate sight-singing is possible. Accordingly a notation, for vocal purposes, must be pronounced bad on the face of it if it fails to indicate tonic relationship in a direct and rapidly recognisable fashion. The ordinary staff is at once condemned on an appeal to this principle. Its tonic character is exceedingly inferential, and can be but precariously made out from a single voice-part, even by a singer who is helped by a knowledge of harmony. Its notation indicates directly only absolute pitch. Inasmuch, however, as the great bulk of musically endowed persons do not possess the faculty of reproducing absolute pitch, a notation which indicates nothing but absolute pitch leaves the vocalist without instruction how to hit the note which he is directed to sing. Such instruction can only be efficiently supplied by a system of notation which enables the performer to recognise by simple inspection the relative pitch of the sounds he is to produce, i.e., their respective positions in the group of notes constituting the key in which the passage to be executed is for the moment moving.

As regards a time-notation, Tonic Sol-fa appealing directly to the eye, and getting rid at one stroke of "semibreves," "minims," "crotchets," "quavers," and so forth, the corresponding array of "rests" which appear on the staff, are rendered needless by the very simple expedient of instructing the performer to hold his tongue wherever nothing is set down for him to sing. But, though the simplification thus effected is of the utmost importance to the beginner, it appears to me an open question whether, when applied to rhythms of great complexity, this "graphic" time notation is or is not an improvement on that in ordinary use. But in its notation for pitch, the Tonic Sol-fa system, by practically embodying and keeping constantly in view the identity of every key in the gamut, as to internal constitution, necessarily possesses for the singer an overwhelming superiority over the established notation."

The Brisbane Courier tells of a pleasant and informal meeting on May 14th, at the office of Mr. W. H. Wilson, the object of which was to welcome Mr. Walter G. Wilmore back again and to present to him a handsome diamond ring and an address of cordial welcome after his visit to England. Mr. Wilmore (who belongs to the College of Organists) has many admiring and appreciative friends in England, and Mr. Wilson is also known here as an earnest lover and cultivator of good music.

Digitized by Google

GOUNOD'S "REDEMPTION."

BY AN ENGLISH MUSICIAN.

SUFFICIENT time has now elapsed to enable the musical world to assess the merits of Gounod's chief essay, 'The Redemption,' which, it may be at once said, is a stagey imitation of Bach's sublime Passions Musik from a Roman Catholic point of view. The composer himself disarms us by saying that we are not to glance at it from an old-fashioned oratorio standard. He describes it as a 'Trilogy.' It is even more than a triangular arrangement, having a Prologue, and starts with that misty foundation of matter, 'Chaos,' which is tortuously begotten of ascending and descending chromatic gamuts played together, making us all regret the archaic picture at the commencement of the 'Creation' by that departed master, Haydn. Gounod is his own Laureate, and tells us he wrote the words when lodged in Rome at the Academy of France, situate on that favourite promenade of the modern Romans, the Pincian Hill.

What the text may be like in the original, cannot be hazarded, —what it is through the medium of an uncouth and unmusical translation we certainly do know; such doggerel has rarely met the eye in works of a sacred character. The entire concoction bears remarkable likeness to the Biblical "dramas," in which the younger members of our Sunday Schools take a demure delight. With a proviso. Well known hymns of the Latin Church are cunningly interlarded and sung to the dreary strains of the Roman Plain-Chant, as the "Vexilla Regis" and "Stabat Mater," the latter, with a noteworthy reading, which may be commended to Anglican clergymen who contemplate improving their congregations by a performance of the work. Gounod's attempts at choral writing are of the most humble description, resembling brief "part songs" and without the slightest address in the march of the inner parts. Out of a series of more than twenty short choruses, almost all are in simple counterpoint, note against note, syllable to syllable, as in operatic music; and on such ignoble pabulum as this, our trained bodies of singers are invited to exist! Are then the wonderful pages of Bach's Passions Musik, as well as the choral splendours in the oratorios of Handel and Mendelssohn mere sound and fury, signifying nothing? It may be that the composer devoutly wishes to contribute in winning this country back to the "Roman Obedience" by his pious hymns, sung to a nursing organ accompaniment. They have not, it is true, the cloying fervour of the Hymn tunes by Dykes among our native harpers, but it is doubtful whether M. Gounod will bring many lambs into the Roman fold from the ranks of our choristers, who insist on being well cared for when making up their minds for a scientific shout in any large sacred work, and are hardly to be appeased by copious doses of ordinary psalmody.

It would be unfair to dismiss the clerical translator without a sample of his wares; the Disciples here reply to the holy women—

> "Though we fain would have believed you,
> Some form surely has deceived you,
> Some phantom seen in the night.
> From trusting what you have told us
> Lack of witness must withhold us:
> We rely on hearing and sight."

It can hardly be said that these words fall grandly on the ear, and they are average specimens of the prevailing bathos. Another quotation has a strong favour of H.M.S. Pinafore—the allusion is to our common progenitor, the primeval Adam—

> "And he, placed in a land of abundance and beauty, > Lived a pure happy life, under guidance of duty."

Surely such a subject demands grave and noble diction. In the art of marrying words to music, a new revelation is made as to the word "possession," usually accented on the second syllable; but in the first short chorus the translator regales himself by placing the accent, with hideous musical effect, on the last, and that to a note on the strongest musical accent known, viz., the first note in any time-bar. This offence against the quantities is carefully repeated a little further on; subsequently, the same word is set as we always hope to find it; therefore both ways cannot be correct even from a "precenting" point of view. To return to the music.

The impression, after listening to Gounod's ouvrage de ma vie, must be faithfully chronicled—it is one of dull monotony, nor does a second hearing dispel the uncomfortable feeling; the air-form of composition has almost been tabooed, while extreme and irritating weariness is caused by the endless sing-song of those bores, the narrators, who cling with dreadful pertinacity to the two or three notes doled out to them by the composer, who frequently surrounds their utterances with humorous figures on accompanying violins, when not busy with his sour and diminished discords. It was to be expected that such an expert in the art of instrumentation as Gounod would leave a powerful impress upon the orchestral details of his score; and this is undoubtedly the case; in fact it may be predicted that a performance of the "Redemption," without a fully equipped band, is out of the question, and would hardly be undertaken or tolerated anywhere. From this cause, and the fragmentary character of the choral music, it cannot obtain vogue at those numerous singing-meetings where social groups of either sex, duly fortified with friendly but chest-contracting "octavos," stand to their work round a well-thumped piano, and make night hideous in neighbouring areas. The influence of Wagner in Gounod's work is paramount, so we are all prepared for that baleful and pantomimic nostrum, a leit-motif, which accompanies all allusions to the Saviour, and here consists of a passage for the orchestra repeated rosalia fashion, i.e., a note higher each time, with a final cadence. The device of repeating short phrases in this manner is an infallible sign of creative decay, and is profusely employed; many chromatic orchestra passages with ugly diminished harmonies, rise upon the ear "high and ever higher," but exactly the reverse as to the artistic value of the procedure, which has long ago been condemned by the school-men. The orchestral figure before alluded to—a dominant point of a few bars—has since been diverted from its purpose to do publishers duty as a song! the translator supplying words under the rather absurd title of "Power and Love;" more recently a well-known singer attempts to accommodate this leit-motif to devout Latin words. It is much to be regretted, that at the very outset the Saviour is introduced as one of the dramatis personæ, having many solo entrances assigned throughout. As a matter of notoriety, Beethoven's "Mount of Olives," and Spohr's "Calvary" were remodelled in this respect before a performance in England was permitted, and it is a curious aspect of the times to find responsible Anglican clergymen sanctioning a performance of the "Redemption" in well-known edifices without having this unseemly feature eliminated, not to mention others which plainly stamp the work as being more suitable to congregations who frankly own the Roman obedience. Owing to the undue prominence given to the orchestra by M. Gounod, a want of elevation of style is generally apparent; for instance, the passage given to the mocking Jewish priests, "Can he not save himself," is dangerously similar to the profane Habanera in "Carmen." Again, the composer can hardly expect us to accept the theatrical and tawdry strains of his march to Calvary as "typical" of the dead march of the ancient Romans. The portentous darkness during the Crucifixion affords excuse for a very sinuous orchestral movement, described by the analytical commentator as a "study in dissonances," and must have cost the composer a deal of midnight oil; in comparison with this "study," contrast the sublime effect of a few master-strokes in "He sent a thick darkness," from Handel's "Israel in Egypt!" The separation of groups of trumpet players at opposite wings of the orchestra, first practised by Berlioz and continued by Verdi with splendid effect in his "Requiem," has been followed by Gounod in the chorus, "Saviour of men," where the only two notes played easily lend themselves to changing harmonies. The opening passages of this movement for the horns are very suggestive of Weber's overture to "Der Freyschütz," where the cadences for the instruments are much alike. In the symphony to the solo with chorus, "Ye mountains, ye perpetual hills," in E major, Gounod takes without compunction Mendelssohn's melodious theme from "St. Paul," "Be thou faithful unto death," for tenor, with violoncello obbligato, but hesitates to give the audacious crib to the singer; so it is relegated to the violins before the vocal entry.

It will be seen from this notice that a high place is not accorded to Gounod's sacred work. The composer, it is unquestionable, has done conspicuous service to musical art in its operatic and secular branches, but in essaying the highest form has not been successful. In conclusion it may be said that although the "Redemption" will keep a place during a special season in certain quarters, it is destined to fall into the disuetude which so rapidly overtook the composer's unfortunate Wedding Marches, produced to royal order; and the grounds for this estimate may thus be summarised:—(1) Absence of sustained melodic interest; (2) Insignificant and trivial character of the choral music; (3) Negation of the air or song-form, superseded by tedious sing-song in a declamatory style, and destitute of melodious grace; (4) Undue prominence given to the orchestra throughout, surely contributing to a want of elevation in the music. It remains to be seen whether the work will be accepted and utilised by the Roman Catholic Church abroad, a matter very problematical, as it is known that "orchestras" in sacred buildings are out of favour and generally discouraged in the chief cities of the continent—a remarkable sign of the times.—St. Cecilia's Magazine.

Mr. and Mrs. F. Sewell Southgate gave an interesting concert of a miscellaneous kind at the Cavendish Rooms on the evening of June 20th. Moscheles' duet for two pianos, "Hommage à Handel," was brilliantly played by Mr. and Mrs. Sewell Southgate, and the former contributed a solo, Chopin's "Ballade" in A. Miss Kate Chaplin's violin solos were also a welcome addition. Some excellent singing of ballads, duets, and quartets was given by the Misses Ellis Walton, Eleanor Faulkner, Fusselle, Marian McKenzie, Jeanie Rosse, and Henden Warde, Mr. John Probert, Mr. Kirwen Jones, Mr. Franklin Clive, Mr. Quatremayne, and Messrs. Cecil and Ernest Traherne. Mr. E. Morton, Mr. Walenn, and Miss Nellie Chaplin assisted as accompanists.

Digitized by Google

WOMEN AS PIANO-TUNERS.

Every piano has one inherent weakness, which has to be repaired once or twice every year. Under the stress of time, use, and the weather, it loses tone. To restore the instrument to its proper condition is the art of the tuner. In the smaller cities and in the country, it often happens that the tuner is also obliged to be a repairer of the action of pianos.

The business of piano-tuning is another of the employments to which women are beginning to aspire. There is in Boston a school where, for some time, tuning has been regularly taught to both men and women. The objection that women have not the requisite fineness of ear is met by the fact that of the applicants for admission to this school only a small proportion fail to enter by reason of any aural defect. The sense of tune or harmony appears to exist in greater or less degree in the majority of civilized people, and, if there is but a germ, it can be educated into something practically useful, be the pupil man or woman. The objection that women have not the strength required in the art is nonsense, for, with the proper tools, a child can break a piano-string with ease. The time required by a young woman to perfect herself in the art of tuning the piano, the pipe or reed organ, is about one year. The course of study begins with a systematic training of the ear in pure unison. For this purpose the pupil is provided with a piano from which the action has been removed. The three strings for each note are plucked with the fingers, and alternately tightened or loosened with the proper lever or key, till the pupil's ear clearly apprehends the difference between unison and discord. No attention is paid to pitch, as the sole aim is to train the ear to a true unison of tones. If the pupil fails in this stage of the work, it is hopeless to go on. She is simply "harmony-blind," precisely as one may be colour-blind.

The next step is the training of the ear in pure harmony. For this work a piano is used having a worm and gear in place of the usual friction-pin for tightening the strings, so that the work of tuning is very light, the slightest movement of the hand controlling the instrument perfectly. The pupil now learns the relations of tones in a true major third. Then thirds are added together till the (tempered) octave is reached. Here the pupil discovers that the pure harmony does not bring the unison she had expected (from her previous studies) in the octave. In this manner the pupil discovers for herself the science of temperament. She soon hears the growl of the "wolf," and learns to catch the wailing "beats" of the interfering sounds. Then the science of tuning must be explained, and this leads to the study of acoustics in their relation to keyed instruments. Lectures and demonstrations in harmony and music are a part of the course. Having made some progress in tuning pianos, the pupil then takes up the tuning of the reed and pipe organ, with daily practice upon both instruments. During the entire course there is also drill in the gymnasium, with proper appliances for strengthening the hands and wrists. A good tuner also should know how to repair a piano. To equip the young woman for this work, there is regular practice upon models of all kinds of piano and organ actions. These are taken to pieces and put together with the usual tools till the mechanism is clearly understood. The action of a piano is easily taken out for repairs, and, as all the parts are interchangeable (for the same style and manufacture), it is not difficult to purchase the various parts and put them in their place when necessary. It is true the action is heavy, but there is always some one near who will lend a hand in lifting it out of the instrument. Piano-tuning is both a healthful and a profitable occupation, and a study of tuning trains the ear to good music.

At a soirée musicale at Mr. Klein's, Belsize Park, on Tuesday, Mr. Aptommas gave two solo performances on the harp. Alvard's fantasie on themes from "I Montechi e Capuletti" and his own Welsh melodies, and in conjunction with Mr. Harold E. Stidolph played two duets for piano and harp, "O dolce concento" (Henz), and "Tarentella" (Aptommas). Miss Mary Davies sang "Thou'rt like unto a flower" (Rubinstein), "Dedication" by Franz, and other songs, and M. Stidolph played Raff's "Rigandon." Mr. Corney Grain also gave two or three of his amusing and clever sketches.

MUSIC STRINGS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF ALL KINDS OF STRINGS FOR VIOLIN, VIOLA, VIOLONCELLO, DOUBLE BASS
HARP, ZITHER, GUITAR, BANJO, &C., &C.,

Have always in Stock the Largest Assortment of Music Strings of any House in the World.

39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

All Kinds of Strings covered in a superior manner by powerful machines, made on the best principle with all modern improvements.

PRINOIPAL CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

MUSICAL INTELLIGENCE:—Richter Concerts—Mdlle. Gabrielle Vaillant's Matinee Musicale—Mdlle. Helene Arnim's Concert—Royal Academy of Music—Royal Italian Opera—Miss Beata Francis's Concert—Various Concerts.

FOREIGN MUSICAL INTELLIGENCE.

ORGAN NEWS:—Liverpool—Norwich—Preston—Bristol—Bolton—Hindley, Wigan—Fisheries Exhibition—Tunbridge Wells—New Kent Road—Morningside, Edinburgh—Bradford.

THE TONIC SOL-FA MOVEMENT.

GOUNOD'S "REDEMPTION."

EDITORIAL:—What will they do with it?—The Present Season.

REVIEWS OF BOOKS AND MUSIC.

ACADEMICAL INTELLIGENCE:—Trinity College, London—College of Organists.

ORCHESTRAL CONDUCTING.

CORRESPONDENCE:—Suggestions to Singers—America and the Copyright Law.

PASSING EVENTS. Service Lists, &c.

THE MUSICAL STANDARD

LONDON: SATURDAY, JULY 7, 1883.

WHAT WILL THEY DO WITH IT?

WHEN it was publicly announced that the "Sacred Harmonic Society" had determined on committing suicide, the question as to what was to become of their valuable Library excited much interest in the musical world. A comprehensive view, and examination of all the circumstances in connection with the dissolution of the Society has yet to be made. There is no intention to enter on the task here; but it may be pointed out, that the plea put forth to the effect that it had completely accomplished the work for which it was founded, its mission thus coming to a natural end, probably deceived no one. Briefly admitting that the institution during its fifty years' life has undoubtedly helped to advance the music-art in this country, it must yet be remembered that art is progressive, and that it is always presenting new worlds to conquer. The repertoire of the defunct Society was but a limited one. The authorities relied chiefly on the ordinary stock works, varied occasionally by an experiment from the pen of their own conductor; they touched but the fringe of the vast field of sacred music. The moribund condition into which the Society fell, was but the natural sequence of biological laws, and the "happy despatch" with which it terminated its existence, a weak act significant of the effeteness of mind that usually characterizes suicide.

Digitized by Google

All are pretty well agreed that the Sacred Harmonic Society has benefitted music generally, aided charity, assisted in raising a higher standard of taste in our land, and had a useful educating influence. On the question, as to why was it dissolved? there is not a consensus of opinion. The response to this question is probably tinctured by the particular bias of each one who answers it. But among the replies that have been given, a strange one found occasional utterance, viz., that the Society was broken up, so that its members might realize for their individual benefit the value of the property that from time to time had been accumulated. There must of course be a motive in every human action; though one may smile at the flimsy pretext, officially put forth, of "mission accomplished"; yet we cannot accept as a solution so mean and greedy a motive as this particular one would seem to imply, despite the fact that avarice not infrequently comes with old age, and is a weed that will grow in a barren-soil. In this case, such a selfish reason is certainly not correct in the aggregate, however true the implication may be in some individual cases. An old writer says:—"Avarice is one of the "most stupid and senseless passions, and the surest "symptom of a sordid and sickly mind."—Surely such a spirit as this could not obtain among the members of so respected a body as the old Sacred Harmonic Society! One of its early rules runs thus:—"No persons to be permitted to join the Society but "such as are strictly moral characters."—What was the precise standard of the morality necessary to acquire membership is an unrevealed mystery, and little concerns the public. It is sufficient to note that the Society made a certain parade of its goodness. To suggest then, that (like many of the mushroom Companies of the day) professional wreckers were to be found on its list, is really to charge the Society with being rotten to its foundation, and corrupt to the core. Such selfishness as this could hardly exist in a Society that carried its morality so far as to carefully eschew the term "Mass," adopting in its place the Protestant title of a "Service;" and further, to sternly prohibit applause at its concerts. The Society can fairly claim to be judged by its works, just as a tree is by its fruit. It will not be unfair then to apply this test, and see what has happened over the disposal of its noble Library.

The history of this unique collection is pretty widely known, so that it is only necessary for our purpose here briefly to mention a few particulars culled from the Catalogue, prepared by the librarian, Mr. W. H. Husk. In felicitous language he describes some of its treasures, showing that proud appreciation of them characteristic of an enthusiastic custodian and cultured man of letters. The catalogue is a portly volume of four hundred pages, and gives an account of upwards of four thousand works. These are classified under the heads of Printed Music, MSS., and Musical Literature, the divisions being further subdivided for convenience into thirty-one sections. The wealth of these is indeed great. The madrigal and glee collection is a perfect one. Here are to be found all the productions of the golden age of our own great madrigal writers, as well as a large number of works of this type from the pens of the distinguished Flemish and Italian composers of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. Ecclesiastical music is well represented; there are here early editions of Palestrina's Motets, Willaert's Psalms, published at Venice in 1565; early English Masses; and eight volumes of that scarce work, Rev. John Barnard's selection of "Church Musick," printed in 1641. Probably every oratorio that has been written is on the shelves. Of English Operas there are as many as four hundred catalogued, besides a multitude of pieces of all kinds by our native composers. When a complete history of the English school of music comes to be written, this invaluable collection of national music will be the mine of stored up materials that will be chiefly worked. Among other interesting MSS. there are some Missals, the score of Haydn's unheard opera "Armida," the copy of "Elijah" that Mendelssohn made for its first performance at Birmingham in 1846, besides many compositions and autograph letters of the great composers from an early period down to modern times. Perhaps, however, it is in the division entitled "Musical Literature," that the library is the richest. Nearly every work that has been issued on the History, Theory, and Practice, Biographies of its Professors, as well as on the drama, and other miscellaneous works treating on the art and science of music, are to be found in this superb collection. Space does not permit to name a tithe of these treasures, but the comprehensive nature of the gathering may be imagined by the statement that, from the very rare work of Gaforius, published at Naples in 1480, Holborne's "Cittarn Schoole," 1597, and an early "Modulorum Hortus," down to works issued from the presses of to-day, hardly any lacunæ exist. In the department of pure music, there is a goodly number of orchestral scores; and the sections containing poetry, word-books, and miscellaneous pamphlets, are large and most useful for historical purposes.

One can now form a rough idea of the great value of this fine library to the musical world; a few words will not be out of place as to the way in which it has been gathered together. The commencement was a modest purchase of fifty standard works out of the profits of the season of 1836, the year the youthful Society boldly ventured on giving concerts in the large room at Exeter Hall. It must be noted that the library has grown up, and been formed from three distinct sources of supply: 1st. The general funds of the association; 2nd. The gifts of individual members; 3rd. Donations from outside musicians and the general public. In the examination of this question, it is of some importance to ascertain from which of the three sources the major part of the works has come. Taking the Catalogue as a guide, it would seem that the library has been chiefly enriched from the 3rd source, viz., that of benevolent friends. In any case it may be safely assumed, that the various donors gave to an institution which appeared to be a permanent one, and that the books were given for the use of all members, whether present or to come. The committee took a liberal view of their trust duties, and frequently conceded the privilege of research and reading to students, who were not members of the association. A consideration of these circumstances can but lead one to see that the collection partook of the nature of a common library, rather than as belonging to a few privileged individuals. Though these persons were undoubtedly its legal owners, they were owners chiefly in the sense of trustees, not in that of sole bénéficiaires.

Digitized by Google

When it was decided that the Society was to be dissolved, the question as to the disposal of its accumulated property came to the front. According to the rules, the existing members were entitled to participate in certain proportions in any division of the property; and in taking the steps they eventually did, it may be admitted that they were within their legal rights. But the question has a moral, as well as a legal bearing. This aspect of the case seems to have been overlooked, and thus the action of the members is calculated to cause a serious scandal in connection with the art they profess to love and serve. It is a common thing for private persons to bequeath their libraries to public institutions, and there are not wanting precedents as to the disposal of public music libraries. On the dissolution of the Bach Society, founded by Sir Sterndale Bennett, its library was presented to the Royal Academy of Music; that of the defunct Musical Union was given by Mr. J. Ella, its founder, to the authorities at South Kensington. It is said that at one period the Sacred Harmonic Committee offered their collection free to the Corporation of London for the Guildhall Library, but for some inscrutable reason it was declined. The president, committee, and officials of the Society are credited with having all along taken the view that the library should be handed over to some analogous institution, instead of adopting the mercenary plan of selling it and dividing the proceeds. But good intentions alone are not sufficient: some of the members objected to this arrangement; they cared more for their pockets than for the good of music. As the Scotch proverb runs:—"It is hard for a greedy eye to hae' a leal heart." Besides, the question became complicated by deaths, and the duties of executors, so a purchaser was sought for. The British Museum declined to treat; the Royal Academy had no funds to spare; Trinity College made no sign, and the Universities slumbered. On an appeal being made in the newspapers to the authorities of the Royal College of Music to purchase the library in its entirety, and not allow it to be dispersed by auction, or go abroad, Sir George (then Mr.) Grove formally stated that the new school "had no funds available to such a "purpose." How such an accomplished litterateur, and one who knows full well the desirability of pupils becoming acquainted with the history and progress of the art, and the necessity of studying the works of the great masters, can have put forth such a statement astonishes one! As well might he have declared that no portion of the hundred thousand pounds subscribed to the institution was to be devoted to the purchase of musical instruments, lesson and exercise books, or school furniture. (It may just be mentioned that the library of the Paris Conservatoire de Musique contains 15,000 volumes.) Besides technical skill, Sir George thoroughly appreciates the advantage of wide culture: it seems therefore likely that his statement was ingeniously designed to attain the very object in view, viz., the acquisition of the coveted library by the Royal College—only, at the expense of friends of the institution, instead of out of its own funds. A certain amount of mystery has been maintained as to where the money came from for the purchase. Dr. J. Stainer and Mr. W. H. Cummings were commissioned to examine and value the library on behalf of the Royal College, and the matter was negotiated through Sir Philip Cunliffe Owen, who is generally looked upon as a prominent representative of the new College. However, the purchase was completed, the books removed to Kensington Gore, and an agreed sum of upwards of £3,000 paid into the treasury of the Sacred Harmonic Society. This amount (together with the proceeds of other realized property) has just been distributed to the members.

Now comes the question, set out at the head of this article—"What will they do with it?" There can be very little difficulty in deciding what they ought not to do with it, viz., to retain it in their own pockets. According to "Cherubino" in the Figaro, some old members have received as much as £200, the junior ones proportionately less; he goes on to say that, such an appropriation of funds is an artistic scandal. And such it undoubtedly would be, were they to persist in such a disingenuous proceeding. It is impossible to believe that a body of educated English people can reap, and deliberately retain for their own benefit, the proceeds of a harvest they have not sown. If so, they will earn the contempt bestowed on Trustees who realize property formally committed to them for their enjoyment and care, but likewise, unquestionably intended to be for the benefit of all in perpetuity. In whatever light the matter is looked at, it is certain that the donors to the library of a Society, established for art purposes only, never intended that those who chanced to be members at a particular period, should obtain a pecuniary advantage through their gifts. That there is right feeling among some of the members, is evidenced by the fact, that a few cheques have been sent to the Royal Society of Musicians, and to the new Sacred Harmonic Society. But the great bulk of the members have as yet given no signs that they understand the responsibility cast upon them to give up what seems almost public money that they happen to have received privately. Surely, it is the duty of the officials of the old Society at once to call a meeting of the members at which schemes for founding scholarships, or giving handsome donations to some of our established musical institutions can be discussed and settled. Before the cry of shame is further raised, time must be given for reflection, and the members be recommended to do privately, but unitedly, that which they were legally unable to do in their corporate capacity. Until such an opportunity has been afforded them, it is better to refrain from further comments.

The President of the Association in his brochure on the history of the Society, gracefully speaks of "the power of music to raise and refine the moral "tone." Let us wait and see, what is the outcome of its practical effect on the members of his Society, who have so long been under the sway of this valuable power. What will they do with the money which accident has brought to them? T. L. SOUTHGATE.

Digitized by Google

THE PRESENT SEASON.

UNDER the surface of the artistic and fashionable turmoil we speak of as the "London Season," there are doubtless many lessons to be learnt. The musician, although he can attach no importance to much that is proceeding during the brief annual metropolitan fever, finds nevertheless some yearly indications regarding the progress or decadence of different departments of his art, which are not to be disregarded. The present season has shown the growth of what may be called free trade in concert giving, and the corresponding decadence of the long continued protectionist policy, by which only a few reputations were possible and by which a few interested agents, concert givers, and business men contrived very largely to govern the concert-room platform. Still the prospect, though improved and improving, is not without its anxieties. Every year multiplies the long lists of vocal and instrumental executants; and it must be feared that we are in danger of having more artists than we can properly support. This seems especially to be the case as regards singers and pianists; the latter class of performers having largely increased lately and the old pianoforte playing monopolies being nearly at an end. One lesson to be gathered from the present state of affairs seems to be that of warning anxious young people of talent not to enter rashly or hurriedly a profession daily becoming more and more overcrowded. A truly gratifying feature of the season's work has been the clear indication that in spite of much competition and feverish experiments intended to establish alien conductors during the past few years, the sound love of orchestral music is steadily gaining ground. That once absolutely essential feature of the London season, Italian Opera, has been again a not unimportant characteristic of the season; though its glory, in spite of the presence of a fair number of stars, is evidently much diminished, if not on the wane. The Handel Festival has been naturally a prominent event of the season, even remembering that performances on so gigantic a scale and under such conditions are to be looked upon rather as musical sensations than as artistic expositions. On the whole, while the past season has produced little to chronicle, it has satisfactorily shown that music is growing steadily in many directions which denote a gratifying and healthy advance in public taste.

E. H. TURPIN.

The London Literary and Artistic Society, which "provides a centre where men of letters and of science, also artists and others not engaged in these professions, but having literary, scientific, musical, and artistic tastes, meet for social intercourse," held a conversazione recently at the studios of the Mediæval and Industrial Art Society, New Bond Street. In the course of about three hours the studios, which were decorated with beautiful specimens of "painted tapestry"—tentures artistiques—were visited by five or six hundred ladies and gentlemen. A programme of music was well rendered, Herr Immanuel Liebich eliciting much admiration, while Signor di Giambattista, a celebrated pianist from the Neapolitan Academy, created astonishment by his left-hand performance on the piano. It is proposed that the premises in which the conversazione was held should be secured as the permanent home of the society, for new premises have become necessary owing to the large increase in the number of the members.

Reviews.

The Musician: a Guide for Pianoforte Students.—By Ridley Prentice. Grades I and II. (W. Swan, Sonnenschein & Co.)—This work is comprised in six grades. Its design, as stated in the preface, is to "help pianoforte students to become musicians, by acquiring, through careful study and analysis of well known pianoforte works, some insight into musical forms." By a simple, but unique system, the author contrives to present, in a pleasing manner, information regarding harmony and form. Brief biographical notes, entertaining anecdotes of famous musicians, and interesting, if somewhat fanciful, interpretations of some of the pieces will doubtless serve to fix the students' attention. It may be questioned whether Mr. Prentice, in his zeal to make the public intelligent, has not crowded too much into his two grades. Be that as it may, if the success of the work is equal to its merits, its success will be great.

The Mechanism of the Human Voice. Second edition. By Emil Behnke. (J. Curwen & Sons, Plaistow, E.)—Herr Behnke has, with others, succeeded in revolutionising the art of teaching singing in our midst. His popular work now being noticed has but one weak point, a tendency to treat upon other people's methods by way of defending his own, when indeed his own book requires no defence at all. Herr Behnke's observations upon breathing, and upon the different registers are deeply interesting, and very conclusive. The earnestness and clearness of his style, and the evidently remarkable pains he has taken with a truly difficult subject, are everywhere manifest. All interested in that important subject, the voice, should read this book, which in its second edition, has been enlarged and improved upon. Its subject matter has an important bearing upon the art, and the spread of knowledge, as to the construction and treatment of the vocal instrument, will bear good fruit in many ways.

Academical Intelligence.

TRINITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

The following new Regulation for the Local Examination in Instrumental and Vocal Music has just been issued, and will come into operation after the long vacation:—

A satisfactory performance of the selected solo—vocal or instrumental, is absolutely essential. Candidates must therefore obtain 50 per cent. of the maximum marks in this section (performance of selected solo) in order to qualify for a pass certificate, or 75 per cent. for a certificate of honour. The gross total of marks (i.e. upon the whole examination) required to gain a pass certificate, is 50 per cent., and for a certificate of honour 75 per cent.; but a high per centage of marks in other sections will not be allowed to compensate for failure in the performance of the selected solo. No candidate above the age of 16 is eligible for a certificate of honour in any Junior Division, with the exception of singing, the limit of age in this instance being 18 years.

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

The lecture of July 3rd was indeed one of rare interest. Mr. H. J. Sawyer, who has already contributed so much to our knowledge of organ music and organ players, found in "Mozart's organ works" a congenial subject, and he was in his happiest mood. His excellent discriminating and deeply interesting lecture was listened to with marked pleasure. The specimens performed were No. 9, in F (most probably not heard since it was played by its great composer, in Salzburg Cathedral in 1780); No. 10 in D, 13 in C, 14 and 15. All these were capitally played by Mr. Sawyer himself (on a small chamber organ of excellent tone, by Mr. A. Kirkland of Wakefield, and lent through Mr. Kirkland's London agents, Messrs. Weekes and Co.); Mr. J. M. Gray, first violin; Mr. Parkes, second violin; and Mr. Crapps, F.C.O., violoncello. Though secular and lively in character, these works are thoroughly Mozartian and contain beautiful ideas, and points of masterly workmanship. Mr. C. E. Stephens occupied the chair with his accustomed tact and ability; and with Messrs. Crapps, Stokoe, C. W. Pearce, and E. H. Turpin, addressed the attentive and enthusiastic listeners. This meeting was announced as the last of the session, the College Examinations taking place on July 10th, 11th, and 12th, and the Annual General Meeting on July 17th, closing the season. And during no year of the college's existence, has a more brilliant and valuable series of lectures been brought before the members and their friends. Mr. Sawyer's lecture will appear in our columns at a future date.

Digitized by Google

ORCHESTRAL CONDUCTING.

A correspondent has sent the following extract translated from a pamphlet by Wagner :—

"Robert Schumann once complained to me in Dresden, that at the Leipzig concerts Mendelssohn had deprived him of all enjoyment in the ninth symphony, by taking the first movement at a too hasty tempo. I myself was once present in Berlin at a rehearsal of Beethoven's eighth symphony (F major) under Mendelssohn's direction. I observed that he, as if according to humour, here and there seized upon a detail and laboured with a certain amount of obstinacy to obtain a clearness of execution, and that this detail was then so excellently rendered, that I did not quite understand why the same amount of attention was not granted to other portions. Altogether, this incomparably bright symphony was performed in an uncommonly smooth and entertaining manner. He on several occasions gave me to understand, with respect to direction, that a too slow tempo was the most detrimental, and that he himself would rather recommend a too hasty performance. Mendelssohn's scholars must have heard him make further and more precise remarks upon the subject, for this could not have been a casual view, imparted to me alone, for I had further opportunities of learning the results and lastly the grounds of that maxim.

I observed a striking exemplification of the former in the performance of the orchestra of the London Philharmonic Society. Mendelssohn had directed it for some considerable time, and it appeared that the tradition of Mendelssohn's style of performance had been firmly adhered to, this, on the other hand, had so accommodated itself to the usages and peculiarities of the concerts of this society, that the conjecture that Mendelssohn's manner of directing may have been suggested to him through this means, is not without a certain amount of probability. As in these concerts an unusual quantity of instrumental music is performed and only one rehearsal bestowed upon it, I myself was often obliged to allow the orchestra to follow its traditions, and by that means I became acquainted with a style of performance which much reminded me of the remarks which I had heard from Mendelssohn. It flowed like water from a town pump, an attempt to check it was not even to be thought of, and every allegro concluded as an undeniable presto. The trouble of struggling against this was painful enough, for it was really when a correct and modified tempo was secured that the further faults in the execution, hidden until then, beneath the general waterfall, discovered themselves. The orchestra never played otherwise than 'mezzoforte,' it neither attained to a real forte nor to a real piano. So far as it was practicable, I took care in the important cases to adhere to that manner of execution which seemed to me to be correct, and at the same time to be the suitable tempo. The able musicians had no objection, in fact were sincerely pleased at it; the public also appeared to be perfectly satisfied. The critics alone became furious over it, and intimidated the directors of the society to that extent, that I on one occasion was really requested by them to allow the second movement of the E flat symphony of Mozart to be played again in that hasty manner in which they were accustomed to hear it, and as indeed Mendelssohn himself had allowed it to be played.

But at last the fatal maxim presented itself quite literally in a request made to me by a very friendly disposed old contrapuntist, Mr. Potter (if I mistake not), whose symphony I had to direct, and who heartily entreated me to take the andante at a good speed, as he was greatly afraid that it might otherwise become tedious. I demonstrated to him that his andante, however short a time it might last could not be otherwise than tedious if it were played without expression and insipidly, whereas, on the other hand, it might be attractive if the pretty naïve themes were performed by the orchestra, for instance after this manner, as I then sang to him, for he doubtless had meant it so. Mr. Potter was evidently moved, owned that I was right and excused himself with the remark that he was no longer accustomed to take into consideration this style of orchestral performance. In the evening, immediately after this andante, he joyfully squeezed my hand."

Mr. H. Weston Eve, M.A., Head Master of University College School, has been appointed Dean of the College of Preceptors, in place of Mr. A. K. Isbister, deceased.

Correspondence.

SUGGESTIONS TO SINGERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "MUSICAL STANDARD."

SIR,—I take the liberty of pointing out to you that the extract from the Musical Herald, U.S., in last Saturday's Musical Standard entitled "Suggestions to Singers," is simply copied from "Advice to Singers" by a singer, published by Messrs. Warne & Co. (pages 16—18).

I am Sir,
Your obedient servant,
MAURICE PUCKLE.

[Though sorry that the too common habit of printing extracts without an acknowledgment led me to unconsciously quote from an English work without proper recognition, I am glad to be able to point out that, judging from the extract given in this paper, "Advice to Singers" must be a useful work.—ED. Musical Standard.]

AMERICA AND THE COPYRIGHT LAW.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "MUSICAL STANDARD."

SIR,—You quote the Musical Herald, U.S., in your last issue, and from such quotation I learn that that excellent periodical has been doing me the very empty honour of appropriating my little work "Advice to Singers," the first edition of which was published by Mr. Reeves, the enlarged and extended book being now one of Warne's series of "Useful Handbooks." To musical houses, publishing firms, writers, and others here, who wish to appropriate my writings, I say do so to your heart's content; but as regards America a larger question is involved. For years past there has been an endeavour on this side, and to some extent on that side, to bring about a copyright law, which, however, still is not. I am one of those who think that the American nation is specially interested in frustrating the progress of such a law—for the reason that my friends on that side can buy the latest book or piece of music issued here and reprinted there, at a much lesser rate than I can obtain it here, with all the advantages of "25 off," and other facilities open to me. Three of my larger musical books have been published in serial form, and subsequently in volume shape by separate American publishers, and for these I have received no, or very scanty, acknowledgment. Nor can I, under the existing fitness of things, demand anything, not even a copy of such pirated editions. So, then, you may imagine that when I read in your journal certain extracts from my book, while you, with just zeal, credit the Musical Herald, U.S., with the same, I am not particularly overjoyed. On the contrary, I feel that America is sufficiently indebted to me in having appropriated my volumes without a standard journal on this side going out of its way to credit my shrewd cousins with ideas which originally emanated from this side, and which belong none the less to me because they happen to be issued under an anonymous, or perhaps no title. Such a slip needs, I feel, correction. I only trouble you with this to show how very important a subject this "Copyright" question between England and America really is, and how important it is that we on this side should stir ourselves and do something that will bring about some protection to authors and musicians from the gross injustice which we are suffering at the hands of the American book and newspaper publishers.

I am Sir,
Your obedient servant,
FREDERICK T. CROWEST.

Among the foreign visitors to London this season are three violoncellists of repute, viz.—Hollmann, from Holland; Fischer, from Paris; and De Munck, from Brussels, the latter with his wife, Carlotta Patti, sister of Adelina, prima donna of the Italian Opera.

Among the latest arrivals of artists of distinction and renown from the Continent is M. Blumer, a pianist favourably noticed during the past musical season in Paris, where he is already re-engaged to appear at the concerts of Cologne. M. Bulmer, a native of Zurich, after completing his education at Leipsig, visited Rome, and enjoyed the friendship of Liszt, and useful instruction from the illustrious master. Since his arrival in London, he has had the honour of playing before Royalty and at private parties of the musical aristocracy. He is a thorough artist of sensibility and intelligence, and of his executive powers nulli secundum. It is to be regretted that such an exceptional pianist arrived too late to be heard at the orchestral concerts of the present London season.

Digitized by Google

Passing Events.

Dr. John Hullah is spending a few months at Nice.

Signorina Luisa Cognetti recently gave a pianoforte recital at the Prince's Hall, with a programme of interest.

It is gratifying to know that the Philharmonic Society has this season a balance on the right side.

The death of Mr. S. N. Barber of Denmark Hill, removes an earnest lover of organs and organ music and an esteemed friend of many artists.

Mr. Barnby's new Service and Dr. Stainer's "Daughter of Jairus" were to be sung at St. Peter's, Eaton Square, yesterday, at the evening Service.

It is announced that a new opera by Herr Ignaz Brüll, "Königin Mariette," was lately produced with success at Munich.

At the last concert of the season given by Mr. Henry Leslie's choir, a manuscript motet for two choirs by M. Gounod (written in 1851) was sung. The choir propose next season to sing Spohr's neglected "Vocal Mass."

Mdlle. Clotilde Kleeberg recently gave a second pianoforte recital at the Prince's Hall. She played a number of pieces with much grace and finish, but was judged to be least successful in Beethoven's Sonata in E flat, Op. 31, and Schumann's "Carnaval."

Carl G. P. Grädener, who was a composer and theorist of solid reputation, died at Hamburg on June 10th, at the age of seventy-one. He will be succeeded as professor in the Conservatorium of that city by Dr. Hugo Riemann.

On June 11th, St. Barnabas' day, at St. Barnabas' Church, Bell Street, Marylebone, Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" was sung by the choir of the church, assisted by that of All Saints', Margaret Street, under the direction of Mr. W. S. Hoyte. Mr. Hoyte presided at the organ, and Dr. J. F. Bridge conducted.

Readers will receive with much regret the news that Mr. W. Lemare of Brixton is suffering from an "overstrained nervous condition," and after twenty-five years of hard and useful professional work, will most probably have to go away into the country and sever his connection with South London.

Mr. W. S. Hoyte gave an afternoon pianoforte recital at Collard's rooms on June 27th, and was assisted by Mr. Charlton Speer, Mr. J. Marsh, and Miss Kate Bompas as pianists, and the following vocalists: Madame Edith Wynne, Miss Clara Samuell, and Mr. Harper Kearton. Mr. Hoyte played admirably a number of solos, as also a sonata by Rubinstein for piano and violin, Op. 13, in con junction with M. Victor Buziau.

Says Figaro: Mr. A. C. Mackenzie is in a fortunate, and in one sense in an enviable, position. The musical critics of both the Times and the Daily Telegraph are, I hear, writing librettos for him. The Times libretto will be an opera for the Carl Rosa company. The Daily Telegraph libretto will be an oratorio for next year's Norwich Festival. The subject of each work is at present a secret.

It is definitely settled that Paris is to have an Italian opera-house. A new theatre will be built for this purpose, and in the mean time the Théâtre des Nations is to be engaged for the company. It is stated that Signor Faccio will be the conductor. The names of Mesdames de Reszké, Corelli, and Donadio, and of Signori Gayarré Stagno and Maurel are mentioned as likely to be connected with the new enterprise.

Says the Musical Times: The fine organ in Salisbury Cathedral has at last received what it has long needed—namely, a case. This work has just been effected, at a cost of nearly £1,000, from designs prepared by the late Mr. G. E. Street, R.A. To those who sympathise with such a laudable expenditure of money we venture, unasked, to commend an exactly similar want which at present exists in the neighbouring Cathedral of Chichester. The case of the present organ, which only needs a small outlay to make it a very fine instrument, was destroyed by the collapse of the spire twenty years ago, and has never since, owing to lack of diocesan funds, been replaced.

The Derby Choral Union propose to perform Gounod's "The Redemption" next season.

The Tonic Sol-fa Reporter for July, contains a useful article on "Harmonium Playing," by Mr. Reah, junr.

The Irish Presbyterian Church, following the Scotch example, concede the introduction of organs to the judgment of the different congregations.

The late William Spottiswoode, was, as is well known, a learned supporter of the art of music, especially from the more scientific aspect. His death is, therefore, a distinct loss to the musical world.

Mr. C. E. Miller will compose the service for the festival of the London Church Choir Association, for which occasion Dr. Stainer has also promised to write an anthem.

The service at Westminster Abbey will be sung on Wednesday afternoons in future by men's voices only, in order to give the boys a holiday, a practice which has prevailed on one week day at St. Paul's for a considerable time now.

The organ at Christ Church, Burton-on-Trent, has been entirely rebuilt and enlarged by Mr. A. Kirkland of Wakefield, and was opened last Sunday, July 1st, by Mr. Graham, the organist of the church. The organ has two manuals and pedals, with 17 sounding stops, 3 couplers, and 3 composition pedals.

Rignold's panorama of the Arctic regions will be exhibited at the Royal Victoria Hall during July. This panorama was painted by the late Clarkson Stanfield, R.A., and has the reputation of being the finest marine painting extant.

Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein assisted on June 30th at two grand concerts given in aid of the Royal College of Music at the Albert Institute, Windsor, the hall of which was tastefully decorated for the occasion with bunting, evergreens, and flowers.

It is satisfactory to note the general belief in the critical world that, in the event of another Handel Festival, some of the ill-judged additions and alterations made to the scores by Sir M. Costa will be either modified or swept away by Mr. Manns, in accordance with his reputation as a conductor duly respecting scores and historical traditions.

On Sunday week Mr. Dudeney, the newly appointed organist at St. James's, Taunton, conducted the musical portion of the service. Mrs. Chapman presented herself, but was told that her services were not required. The Bishop and the Archdeacon have been appealed to, and it is likely that an investigation into the whole circumstances of the case will be made.

A military musical fête was given in the grounds of the Royal Hospital, Chelsea, on June 29th. The combined bands of the foot-guards played, under the direction of the bandmasters, Messrs. D. Godfrey, C. Thomas, and J. P. Clarke. The object of the fête was that of aiding the funds of the Royal Army Coffee Tavern Association. The music given was for the most part of a popular type.

Miss Adelaide Thomas gave her second recital on Saturday last at the Marlborough Rooms. This lady does great credit to her instructor, Herr Pauer, and plays the works of the great masters with rare intelligence, and promises to rank among the best female pianists of this country. If not misinformed the writer understands that Miss A. Thomas obtained a scholarship, and completed her education at the late Training Schoo for Music at Kensington.

At the Students' (Orchestral) Concert, held on Tuesday, July 3rd, the following formed the programme:—Symphony in B minor, unfinished (Schubert); song, "My beloved spake," Miss Maud Vernon (Gounod); violoncello obbligato, Mr. J. H. Callcott; movements from Concerto in D for, pianoforte and orchestra (Mendelssohn)—pianoforte, Miss Bessie Walker; movements from "The Lay of the Last Minstrel" (J. F. Barnett); song, "O Fatima," from "Der Freischutz," Miss Grosvenor Gooch (Weber); concertstück for pianoforte and orchestra (Weber)—pianoforte, Mr. Arthur L'Estrange; overture, "Rosamunde" (Schubert). The pianoforte accompaniments to the songs were played by Mr. R. Frederick Tyler, A.Mus., T.C.L., and the whole was under the direction of the conductor, Mr. George Mount, who is to be congratulated on the growing efficiency of the students' orchestra under his most efficient training.

Digitized by Google

The Tonic Sol-fa breakfast to the Cologne Choir gave the utmost satisfaction and pleasure to the guests. Excellent speeches in German were given by Mr. J. Curwen, Mr. A. Ellis, and Herr Behnke; and equally effective speeches in English were delivered by Dr. Max Pensqueens, Herr Putz, and Herr Heimann. Such friendly meetings, in the interest of pure, cosmopolitan art, do an immense amount of good.

The "Annuaire Général de la Musique de France," for 1883, is a large 8vo volume, of nearly 600 pages, filled with an immense amount of information relating to music and musicians in France, including a list of all the Choral Societies of the land, with extracts from competent judgments on their singing at public competitions. There are also lists of the music trade and profession, of new music, &c. The editor of this useful compilation is H. A. Symon.

An afternoon concert was given by Mr. John Thomas at St. James's Hall on June 23rd. A band of harps, chiefly lady performers, played several arrangements in good style; and Mr. John Thomas gave several harp solos of his own composition which were much appreciated, and also two duets in conjunction with Signor Lebano and Mr. T. H. Wright. Mr. Santley was at his best in Gounod's "Maid of Athens," with the harp accompaniment of Mr. John Thomas. The other vocalists were Mesdames Edith Wynne, Enriquez, Rose Hersee, and Hope Glenn; and Mr. W. H. Cummings.

It is told that the proceeds of the Nilsson Concert, given by Messrs. Austin & Watts at the Albert Hall came to 1500. The expenses were £800, and the concert givers cleared £700. A comparison between this performance, musical and commercial, and the work being done by our leading societies and the poor results obtained, would be instructive. In connection with this star concert, it is said that Mdme. Nilsson received 200 guineas, Mr. Sims Reeves 100 guineas, our most favoured baritone 50 guineas, our most popular contralto 25 guineas, and our most favoured tenor after Mr. Reeves has been mentioned 25 guineas.

The balance sheet of Trinity College, as audited by A. E. Drinkwater, Esq., and Messrs. Ward and Wilding (public accountants) is a very satisfactory document, showing as it does the steady growth of the institution and its consequent advance financially to a position of assured strength and usefulness. It is most gratifying to see our public institutions devoted to musical education, standing so well as do the Royal Academy of Music, the College of Organists, Trinity College, and the Guildhall School of Music. Presently, it may be hoped, the first report of the Royal College will also swell the list of successful institutions.

A large educational tourist party of Americans, above one hundred in number, organized by Dr. Eben Tourjee, of the Conservatory of Music in Boston, and travelling under the arrangements of Messrs. Caygill and Co., arrived at the Midland Grand Hotel on June 30th, and on Sunday morning, under the conductorship of Mr. John Ripley, who has accompanied them from America, they went to the Metropolitan Tabernacle to hear Mr. C. H. Spurgeon. On Monday the party visited the exhibition of pictures at the Albert Hall, and they were photographed in a group on the steps of the Albert Memorial. On Tuesday evening two sections of them started for the Continent—one via Paris and the other via Belgium and the Rhine, to be followed by the remainder in a few days, visiting Rome, Naples, Venice, Vienna, Amsterdam, &c., after which they return in September to America.

ORPHAN SCHOOL FOR DAUGHTERS OF MUSICIANS.—Miss Helen Kenway has taken a house in London, and hopes to open her orphan school in September. There are five orphans to be provided for, but boarders and day-pupils will also be received, to whom a good general education, with special opportunities for the study of music, are offered on moderate terms. All fees to be used for the benefit of the Charity. Subscriptions and applications must still be addressed to Miss Helen Kenway, South Hill House, Bath, until Aug. 11th, after which date the address will be, 8, Lupton St., Kentish Town, N.W. Two definite promises of money, and several small presents, such as a tea service, a bedstead, two teapots, two quilts, and a blanket have been received, and kind volunteers are making the linen. Further gifts of furniture, standard books, and music, will be gratefully received.

The Querist.

QUERY.

INFORMATION WANTED.—Publishers, sizes, and prices of the following pictures on musical subjects:—Thos. Webster's "Village Orchestra and Choir" (Oleograph); Frank Dicksee's "Harmony" (Etching and Photograph); Quartet of Amateurs (Litho).—J. MATTHEWS, 35, Henrietta Street, Swansea.

Service Lists.

SEVENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

JULY 8th.

London.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Selby in B flat; Introit, Holy, holy, holy; Holy Communion, Calkin in B flat. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Calkin in B flat; Anthems, How great, O Lord, is Thy goodness, and, The Lord be a lamp (Bennett).

WESTMINSTER ABBEY. — Morn.: Service, Tours in F (throughout); Cooke in G; Anthems, Happy is the man (Bridge), and Blest are the departed (Spohr). Even.: Service, Walmisley in D minor; Anthem, O how amiable (Wesley).

TEMPLE CHURCH.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum Laudamus, and Jubilate Deo, Boyce in C; Apostles' Creed, Harmonised Monotone; Anthem, Teach me, O Lord (Boyce). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Goss in E; Apostles' Creed, Harmonized Monotone; Anthem, O where shall wisdom be found (Boyce).

LINCOLN'S INN CHAPEL.—Morn.: Service, Steggall in A; Kyrie, Clarke-Whitfield; Anthem, Sing unto God, O ye kingdoms (Croft). Even: Service, Goss in A; Anthem, Blessed is the man (Goss).

ALL SAINTS, MARGARET STREET.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum (Smith); Benedictus, Cobb in G; Holy Communion, Schubert in B flat; Offertory Anthem, God is a Spirit (Bennett). Even.: Service, King in D; Anthems, All ye that cried, and, I waited on the Lord (Mendelssohn).

FOUNDLING CHAPEL. — Morn.: Service, Dykes in F; Jubilate, Attwood in F; Anthem, O come, let us worship (Mendelssohn). Aft.: Service, Chants and Hymns.

CHRIST CHURCH, CLAPHAM.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Plain-song; Kyrie and Credo, Smart in F; Offertory Anthem, Not unto us, O Lord (Walmisley); Sanctus (Smart); Benedictus, and Agnus Dei, Eyre in A flat; Communion, Hail, Thou living bread (Foster); Gloria in excelsis, (Smart). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Martin in A; Anthem, O clap your hands (Stainer).

HOLY TRINITY, TULSE HILL. — Morn.: Chant Service. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Agutter in D; Anthem, Hear my prayer (Mendelssohn).

ST AUGUSTINE AND ST. FAITH, WATLING STREET.—Morn.: Service, Tours in F; Offertory, Barnby. Even.: Service, Garrett in F; Anthem, I will mention (Sullivan).

ST. BARNABAS MARYLEBONE.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Aldrich in G; Anthem, Lord, who shall dwell (Rogers); Kyrie and Creed, Aldrich. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis (Aldrich); Anthem, If with all your heart, Cast thy burden (Mendelssohn).

ST. PAUL'S, AVENUE ROAD, SOUTH HAMPSTEAD.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Calkin in B flat; Benedictus, Garrett; Kyrie, Nares in F. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Calkin in B flat; Anthem, He watching over Israel "Elijah" (Mendelssohn).

ST. PAUL'S, BOW COMMON, E.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Hopkins in F. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Hopkins in F; Anthem, Hear my prayer (Mendelssohn).

ST. PETER'S (EATON SQUARE).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Dykes in F; Holy Communion, Stainer in A. Even.: Service, Stainer in A; Anthem (Stainer).

ST. JAMES'S PRIVATE EPISCOPAL CHAPEL, SOUTHWARK.—Morn.: Service, Introit, Lord have mercy (Gounod); Communion Service, "Missa Iste Confessor" (Palestrina). Even.: Service, Arnold in A; Anthem, In exitu Israel (Wesley).

ST. MARY ABCHURCH, E.C.—Morn.: Service, Garrett in D; Communion, Armes in A.

Digitized by Google

ST. MARY BOLTONS, WEST BROMPTON, S.W.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Smart in F; Benedictus, Chants; Holy Communion, Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus; Offertory and Gloria in excelsis, Stainer in E flat; Benedictus and Agnus Dei, Going in F. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Smart in F; Anthem, Great is the Lord (Hayes).

ST. MICHAEL'S, CORNHILL. — Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Sullivan in D; Anthem, O God, Thou art my God (Purcell); Kyrie, and Creed, Stainer in E flat. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Hoyte in B flat; Anthem, Rejoice in the Lord (Purcell).

ST. MAGNUS, LONDON BRIDGE.—Morn.: Service, Opening Anthem, to the Lord our God (Calkin); Te Deum and Jubilate, (Whitefield) Kyrie, (Armes). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, (Whitfield); Anthem, How dear are Thy counsels (Crotch).

ST. SAVIOUR'S, HOXTON.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Hopkins in G; Holy Communion; Kyrie, Credo, Sursum Corda, Sanctus, and Gloria in excelsis, Smart in G. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis (Best); Anthem, Lord of all power (Mason).

ST. SEPULCHRE'S, HOLBORN.—Morn: Service, Nares in F; Anthem, Lord of all power (Mason). Even.: Service, Nares in F; Anthem, Thy word is a lantern (Purcell).

Country.

ST. ASAPH CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Roberts in D; Anthem, The Lord is great in Zion (Best). Even.: Service, Roberts in D; Anthem, The Glory of the Lord (Goss).

ASHBURNE CHURCH, DERBYSHIRE. — Morn.: Service, Smart in F (throughout); Even.: Service, Hopkins in F; Anthem, Withdraw not Thou Thy mercy (Attwood).

BEDDINGTON CHURCH, SURREY.—Morn.: Service, Tours in F; Introit, O what the glory; Communion Service, Tours in F. Even.: Service, Bunnett in F; Anthem, O taste and see (Goss).

BIRMINGHAM (S. ALBAN THE MARTYR).—Morn.: Service, Plain-song; Holy Communion; Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Gloria, Garrett in D; Benedictus and Agnus Dei, Redman in D. Evensong: Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Tours in F.

BIRMINGHAM (ST. CYPRIAN'S, HAY MILLS).—Morn.: Service, Field in D; Anthem, In that day (Elvey). Even.: Service, Clarke-Whitfeld in E; Anthem, God is our hope and strength (Greene).

BIRMINGHAM (S. PHILIP'S CHURCH). — Morn.: Service, Barnby in E; Authem, I will arise (Creighton). Evensong Service, Barnby in E; Anthem, Stand up and bless (Goss).

CANTERBURY CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, and Jubilate, Dykes in F; Anthem, God so loved the world (Tuckerman); Communion, Dykes in F. Even.: Service, Dykes in F; Anthem, I praise Thee, O God (Mendelssohn).

CARLISLE CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Sullivan in D; Introit, We wait for (Armes); Kyrie, and Nicene Creed, Best in G. Even.: Service, Attwood in F; Anthem, Praise the Lord (Goss).

CHESTER (ST. MARY'S CHURCH).—Morn.: Service, Cooke in G; Communion Service, Tearne in G. Even.: Service, Turle in D; Anthem, Lift up your head (Hopkins).

DONCASTER (PARISH CHURCH).—Morn.: Service, Calkin in B flat. Even.: Service, Stainer in E flat; Anthem, Blow ye the trumpet (Taylor).

EXETER CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Rogers in F; Communion, Best in B flat. Even.: Service, Gilbert in E; Anthem, I will love Thee (Clarke).

GLOUCESTER CATHEDRAL. — Morn.: Service. Te Deum and Jubilate, Turle in D; Kyrie and Creed, Turle in D; Anthem, Blest are they (Spohr). Aft.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Turle in D; Blessed be the God (Wesley).

HARROGATE (ST. PETER'S CHURCH). — Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Chants; Anthem, Teach me, O Lord (Attwood). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Ebdon in C; Anthem, Abide with me (Bennett).

LEEDS PARISH CHURCH.—Morn.: Service, Garrett in F; Anthem, O give thanks (Elvey); Kyrie and Creed, Walmisley in F. Even.: Service, Garrett in F; Anthem, The Lord is righteous (Handel).

LEEDS, ST. MARTIN'S CHURCH (POTTERNEWTON). — Te Deum, Wesley in F; Benedictus, Chant; Anthem, Holy, holy, holy (Spohr). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Garrett in F; Anthem, Lead me, Lord, in Thy righteousness (Wesley).

LLANDAFF CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Hopkins in F. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis Hopkins in F; Anthem, awake, awake, put on thy strength, O Zion (Stainer).

LIVERPOOL CATHEDRAL.—Aft.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Garrett in D; Anthem, Wherewithal shall a young man (Elvey).

MANCHESTER CATHEDRAL. — Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Jubilate, Kyrie, Creed, Sanctus and Gloria, Garrett in D; Anthem, For He shall give His angels (Mendelssohn). Aft.: Service, Garrett in D; Anthem, I beheld, and lo! (Blow).

MUSSELBURGH (LORETTO SCHOOL).—Morn.: Service, Introit, O praise God in his holiness (Weldon); Communion Service, Garrett in F; Anthem, Blessed be the God and Father (Wesley). Even.: Service, Anthem, hear my prayer (Stainer).

ROCHESTER CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Nares in F; Anthem, O most merciful (Hullah). Even.: Service, Heathcote in B flat; Anthem, O where shall wisdom (Boyce).

SHEFFIELD PARISH CHURCH. — Morn.: Service, Kyrie, Sullivan in D; Even.: Service, Bunnett in F; Anthem, the glory of the Lord (Goss).

SOUTHAMPTON (ST. MARY'S CHURCH).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Custard in F; Holy Communion; Introit, O how amiable (Macfarren); Service, Custard in E flat; Offertory, "Whatsoever" (Barnby); Paternoster, (Hoyte). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, King in F; Apostles' Creed, Harmonised Monotone (Hopkins).

SOUTHWELL MINSTER, NOTTS.—Morn.: Service, Attwood in F; Kyrie, Mendelssohn in G; Creed, Calkin in B flat. Even.: Service, Attwood in F; Anthem, Blessing, glory (Bach).

WELLS CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Hudson in E flat; Introit, Remember me (Macfarren); Kyrie, Weber in E flat. Even.: Service, Turle in D; Anthem, The heavens declare (Boyce).

WORCESTER CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Smart in F; Anthem, Let all men praise (Mendelssohn). Even.: Service, Mann in E; Anthem, Lead kindly light (Stainer).

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

W. S.—The next Examination for Associatieship at the College of Organists, takes place on Tuesday and Wednesday next; see advertisement.

The "Logic of Counterpoint," and other articles, etc., are crowded out this week.

 Post-cards must be sent to the Editor, 6, Argyle Square, W.C., by Wednesday. Lists are frequently omitted in consequence of not being received in time.

NEWSPAPERS sent should have distinct marks opposite to the matter to which attention is required.

NOTICE.—All communications intended for the Editor are to be sent to his private address. Business communications to be addressed to 185, Fleet Street, E.C.

HENRY SPEECHLY,
CAMDEN ORGAN STEAM FACTORY,
KING'S ROAD, ST. PANCRAS, LONDON, N.W.
ESTABLISHED 1860.

Specifications and Estimates for Organs of any Magnitude, also for Reconstructions, Repairs, and Re-voicing.

Tunings contracted for, and Tuners sent to all parts of the Country at regular intervals or when required.

ORGANS ON HIRE WITH OPTION OF PURCHASE.

 Church, Chamber, and Chancel Organs for Sale or Hire; One or Two Manuals. Ready for immediate use. Easy Terms if required.

All Pipes and other Parts manufactured on the Premises.

BEETHOVEN'S SYMPHONIES CRITICALLY DISCUSSED. By A. T. THETGEN. 3s. 6d.

FREDERIC CHOPIN; His Life, Letters, and Works. By M. KARASOWSKI. Translated by E. HILL. 2 vols., 12s. 6d.

ELEMENTARY MUSIC. By Dr. WESTBROOK. 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

TO ORGANISTS and CHOIRMASTERS.—VOCAL EXERCISES for CHOIRS and SCHOOLS, by Dr. WESTBROOK, in neat cover, 2d.

WOMAN AS A MUSICIAN, an Art Historical Study. By F. RAYMOND RITTER. Price One Shilling.

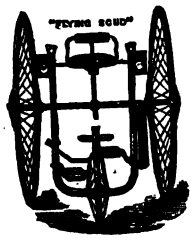
TO PIANOFORTE TEACHERS.—Plaidy's (professor at Leipzig Conservatory) PIANOFORTE TEACHER'S GUIDE can be had in boards, price 1s.

FACTS about FIDDLES.—Violins Old and New, by JOHN BROADHOUSE. Price 6d.; by post, 6½d.

W. REEVES Fleet Street, London.

Digitized by Google

BICYCLES AND TRICYCLES.
NEW AND SECOND-HAND.



"FLYING SCUD" and "ECLECTIC" TRICYCLES, are the Machines for 1883. Spoken of by the Daily News of January 30th as "Splendid machines." "NANCY LEE," Weldless Steel," and "NONSUCH" Steel Bicycles, from £5 5s. Any machine at maker's price for twelve or less equal monthly payments, or for £5 down and 20s. per month, or large discount and carriage paid for cash. Can be seen and tried before purchasing in our school (60 by 40, concrete floor, tuition free), adjoining Show-rooms, the largest in London, with over 400 new and second-hand on View. Machines bought, sold, cleaned, repaired (estimates given), warehoused, advanced upon and exchanged.

Illustrated Lists post free. Hours 9 till 7; Saturdays till 4.

Repairs of all kinds neatly, cheaply, and promptly executed. Cheapest house in the trade for fittings. Parts and sundries of all descriptions kept n stock.

Machines Let on Hire with Option of Purchase.

SOUTH LONDON MACHINISTS' COMPANY.
STEAM WORKS: Suffolk Works, Suffolk Grove, Great Suffolk Street, S.E. Show Rooms and Offices: 28 and 29, Suffolk Grove. Bicycle and Tricycle School: 18, Suffolk Grove. City Depot, Show Rooms, and School: Tower Chambers, Moorgate Street, E.C. (Nearly opposite Moorgate Street Station.) PERAMBULATORS and all Domestic Machines at lowest prices for cash, or on easy terms without extra charge. Lists free. State kind required.

ESTABLISHED 1872.

When writing please say where you saw this advertisement.

T. R. WILLIS,
Organ Builder, Metal & Wood Pipe Maker and Voicer,
TOWER ORGAN WORKS, 29, MINORIES, LONDON.

AN ORGAN KEPT FOR PRACTICE.
REBUILDING, TUNING, AND REPAIRING.

E & W. SNELL,
Manufacturers of Harmoniums, and Reed Pedal Organs,
KING STREET NORTH, CAMDEN TOWN, LONDON, N.W.

NOTE.—These are the only Instruments at which an Organist can really find himself "at home," as all Scales, Positions, and Measurements are adopted strictly in accordance with the Resolutions of the Council of the College of Organists. Estimates free.

MALEY, YOUNG & OLDKNOW,
ORGAN BUILDERS,
KING'S ROAD, ST. PANCRAS, LONDON, N.W.

Specifications, Estimates, and Designs for Church, Chamber, Concert, and all Descriptions of Organs.
Materials, Workmanship, and Tone guaranteed to be First Class.
Organs rebuilt to stit any position, enlarged, and Revoiced at very moderate charges.
Tunings in all parts of the Kingdom.

PROSPECTUS FREE ON APPLICATION.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts, excepting under exceptional circumstances.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit, at Three per cent. interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables, the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons, and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares, and Annuities.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

The Birkbeck Building Society's Annual Receipts exceed Five Millions.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with immediate Possession, and no Rent to Pay.—Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate Possession, either for Building or Gardening purposes.—Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

WITH 25 PER CENT DISCOUNT FOR CASH,
OR 15/- PER MONTH,
(SECONDHAND) (10 Per Month)
ON THE 3 YEARS' SYSTEM.
BORD'S PIANOS
PIANOS EXCHANGED.
LISTS FREE OF
C. STILES & Co. 42 SOUTHAMPTON ROW, W.C.

CONSTANT LAURENT, HARMONIUM and ANGLO-ORGAN MANUFACTURER, Established in 1859 at 85, HIGH STREET, MARYLEBONE, LONDON, W.—Repairing and Tuning Executed Promptly. Price List on Application.—Intending Purchasers are respectfully solicited to inspect my Instruments and Factory.

EUSTACE INGRAM, Organ Builder,
Combines excellence of Tone and Workmanship with Economy.
INSPECTION INVITED.
WORKS:—Burnard Place, Eden Grove, Holloway, London, N.

"HARMONY SIMPLIFIED."
A Concise Treatise on Harmony, Thorough Bass, and Modulation, for the Use of Students. By FARLEY NEWMAN. In paper cover, 1s. 6d. net; bound in cloth, 2s. 6d. net.

"THE ORGAN OLIO."
Edited by ARTHUR HENRY BROWN. A Collection of Short Pieces or the Organ or Harmonium, by various Composers. 2s. net.

London: B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster-row, E.C.

MUSIC SENT ON SALE OR RETURN on highly advantageous terms by
B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster-row, London.

MUSIC of EVERY PUBLISHER supplied to Dealers, Teachers, and Schools. Having the largest varied Stock Europe. The terms, which are highly advantageous, sent on application
London: B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster-row.

B. WILLIAMS, PATERNOSTER ROW.—Having purchased the lease and goodwill of the above old-established business, together with the very extensive trade stock, I beg to announce that. with the old staff of assistants which I have specially retained, I shall endeavour to carry on the concern with as much satisfaction as heretofore. The publishing department (of which I have had the sole management since the death of Mr. B. Williams) will receive every attention.

LUCY J. MULLEN.
(Daughter of the late Mr. B. Williams).

SYDNEY SMITH'S
FOUR NEW PIANOFORTE PIECES.

LA FEE DES ONDES.	Morceau brilliant ...	4 0
LE DOMINO NOIR.	Fantaisie brillante sur l'opéra d'Auber	4 0
MARGUERITE.	Chanson d'une fileuse	4 0
STYRIENNE	... ...	4 0

SYDNEY SMITH'S
FOUR NEW PIANOFORTE DUETS.

GAVOTTE ET MUSETTE	... ...	5 0
I PIFFERARI.	Musette moderne	5 0
LOHENGRIN.	Grande Fantaisie sur l'opéra de R. Wagner	6 0
NONCHALANCE.	Caprice de Concert	5 0

LONDON:

EDWIN ASHDOWN, Hanover-square.

Printed for the Proprietor by BOWDEN, HUDSON & Co., at 23, Red Lion Street, Holborn, London, W.C.; and Published by WILLIAM REEVES, at the Office, 185, Fleet Street, E.C. West End Agents:—WEEKES & CO., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W. Subscriptions and Advertisements are received either by the Publisher or West End Agents.—Communications for the EDITOR are to be forwarded to his private address, 6, Argyle Square, W.C

SATURDAY, JULY 7, 1883.—Entered at the General Post Office as a Newspaper.

Digitized by Google

THE MUSICAL STANDARD

A NEWSPAPER FOR MUSICIANS PROFESSIONAL AND AMATEUR

No. 989. VOL. XXV. FOURTH SERIES. SATURDAY, JULY 14, 1883. WEEKLY: PRICE 3D.

THE MUSICAL STANDARD is published every Saturday, price 3*d.*, by post, 3½*d.*; and may be had of any bookseller or newsagent by ordering its regular supply.

SUBSCRIPTION.—The Musical Standard is posted to subscribers at 15*s.* a year; half a year, 7*s.* 6*d.*, payable in advance.

The rate is the same to France, Belgium, Germany, Italy, United States, and Canada.

Post Office Orders to be made payable to the Publisher, William Reeves, 185, Fleet Street, London, or to the West-end Agents, Messrs. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W.

ADVERTISEMENTS.—The charge for ordinary advertisements in The Musical Standard is 2*s.* 6*d.* for three lines or less; and 6*d.* for each line (10 words) in addition. "Organist wanted," 3*s.* 6*d.* for 3 lines or less. A reduction is made for a series.

FRONT PAGE.—Concert and auction advertisements, &c., are inserted in the front page of The Musical Standard, and charged one-third in addition to the ordinary rates. Other advertisements will be inserted on the front page, or in the leader page, if desired, at the same terms.

YORK ORGAN FACTORY,

BLENHEIM PLACE, MONKGATE.

SPECIFICATION of NEW ORGAN, built by the late ROBT. POSTILL, in Pitch Pine Case, Stained and Varnished, with Spotted Metal Speaking Pipes in Front.

GREAT ORGAN, EIGHT STOPS. SWELL ORGAN, EIGHT STOPS.

PEDAL ORGAN.

Bourdon (large scale).... 16 feet. ..... 30 Notes.

COUPLERS.

Swell to Great. Swell to Pedals.
Great to Pedals.

Three Composition Pedals for Changing the Stops.
Two Octaves and a third of German Pedals for the Feet.

Front of Organ..... 10 feet 3 inches.
Front to Back ..... 9 „ 6 „
Height ..... 19 „ 6 „

The above Instrument is for SALE, and may be seen and heard by applying at the Works, or Mrs. J. POSTILL'S, 25, Monkgate.

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

TUESDAY, July 17th, at 8, Annual General Meeting.
The above Meeting will be held at the NEUMEYER HALL, Hart Street, Bloomsbury.

E. H. TURPIN,
Hon. Secretary.

95, Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury, W.C.

MR. HUMPHREY J. STARK begs to announce his REMOVAL to 12, Norwood Road, Herne Hill, S.E.

NEW ORGAN PIECE, by M. GUILMANT.—SPOHR'S 24th PSALM (English words), 9d. and 2s. Ditto arranged for Organ Solo by M. GUILMANT, 1s. 6d.
London: NOVELLO, EWER & CO.

HANDEL'S FIRST ORGAN CONCERTO, with Orchestral Accompaniment, as performed at the Handel Festival, Crystal Palace, edited, arranged, and supplemented with a Cadenza by W. T. BEST. Organ Score, 1s. 6d.; Orchestra Parts, 2s.; complete, 2s. 6d. nett.—AUGENER & CO., 86, Newgate Street, Foubert's Place, and 81, Regent Street, London.

MISS NORAH HAYES, CONTRALTO VOCALIST of the Albert Hall and St. James's Hall Concerts, is open to engagements for Concerts, Soirées, and At Homes. Good Press opinions. Services given free for Charities.—Address, 95, Edgware Road.

VIOLIN.—HERR POLONASKI (Violinist), open to ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts, Musical At Homes, and Violin or Accompaniment Lessons.—For Terms, please Address, HERR POLONASKI, 16, Wharfdale-street, South Kensington, S.W.

MAKERS AND REPAIRERS.

GEORGE WITHERS & CO.

(Late of Coventry Street),

WHOLESALE IMPORTERS OF

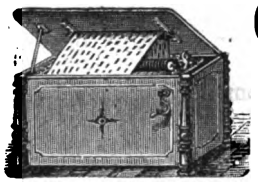
MUSICAL STRINGS,

From Rome, Padua, and Naples.

A FINE COLLECTION OF ITALIAN INSTRUMENTS.

Bows, Cases, Music Stands, &c. See Price Lists.

51, ST. MARTIN'S LANE, LONDON.



ORCHESTRIONETTES,

Ehrlich's Patent.

Are the greatest invention of modern times in the sphere of mechanical Music Works! It is only necessary to put in a note, made of fine pasteboard, in order to play a new piece. The smaller instruments suffice as accompaniment to dance music. The larger ones can be used IN PLACE OF AN ORGAN.

Preparatory knowledge not necessary; therefore the instruments can be sent to any part of the world. Large number of Notes, suitable for all countries, always on hand. Extra Notes made to order, after supplied originals, at any time. Please send orders to any dealer in musical instruments.

Commission allowed to Dealers.

FABRIK LEIPZIGER MUSIKWERKE VORM. PAUL EHRLICH & CO., ZU GOHLIS BEI LEIPZIG (GERMANY).

PRIZE TUNES and CHANTS.—THREE PRIZES for the BEST TUNES in the order of merit. See the "ORCHESTRA, CHOIR, AND MUSICAL EDUCATION," for April, May, June, and July, price 3d.

W. REEVES, 185, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

TO MUSIC PUBLISHERS and OTHERS.—A GENTLEMAN, a Mus. Doc. (Oxon.) of some years' standing, and holding an appointment as Organist and Choirmaster at an important church in the country, being desirous of moving to the neighbourhood of London, would be glad to enter into NEGOTIATIONS with a well-established MUSIC PUBLISHING FIRM, or to act as GENERAL MANAGER or SECRETARY to a MUSICAL ASSOCIATION, at a fixed salary. A few hundred pounds could be invested in a safe concern.—Apply, in the first instance (by letter), to A. B., 8, Averne Road, Grantham.

INTERNATIONAL FISHERIES EXHIBITION.—ORGAN RECITALS daily, upon the fine-toned Organ, in West Gallery. Supplied to the Executive Committee by HENRY JONES & SONS, 136, Fulham Road, South Kensington.

THE ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER of Cirencester Abbey desires RE-ENGAGEMENT. 14 years' Cathedral experience.—Address as above.

JUST PUBLISHED, "MORNING and EVENING SERVICE," set to music for the especial use of Parish Choirs, by FREDK. HUNNIBELL, F.C.O. Price, 1s.; or separately, 8d. and 6d.
London: NOVELLO, EWER & CO.

Post 8vo., boards, 2s. 6d., post free.

TECHNICS OF VIOLIN PLAYING, by KARL COURVOISIER. Edited and translated by H. E. Krehbiel. Numerous illustrations.

Joachim says: "It is my opinion that this book will offer material aid to all violin players.

W. REEVES, 185, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

THE VOICE

MUSICALLY AND MEDICALLY CONSIDERED.

BY

ARMAND SEMPLE, B.A., M.B., Cantab., M.R.C.P., Lond.,

Physician to the Royal Society of Musicians.

(Continued from page 366.)

THE MEZZO-SOPRANO VOICE.

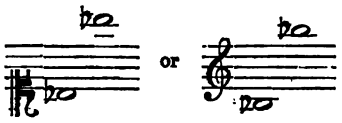
Quality.—This voice is usually of a full and round quality, and is capable of being rendered very flexible.

It may sometimes be mistaken for a soprano on account of the ease with which it can take the upper notes; but, since its muscular construction is strong, if at first it is exercised too much upon the upper notes, true intonation, and the power of expansion in the middle part of the voice, will be destroyed.

This voice is of stronger and clearer quality than any other from Do (C) to Sol (G)

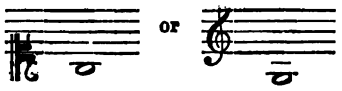
It is, however, difficult to make it full and equal.

Extent.—This is generally from Si flat (B♭) to Si flat (B♭).



The acute sounds, nevertheless, in some Mezzi-Soprani appear natural to a much greater extent.

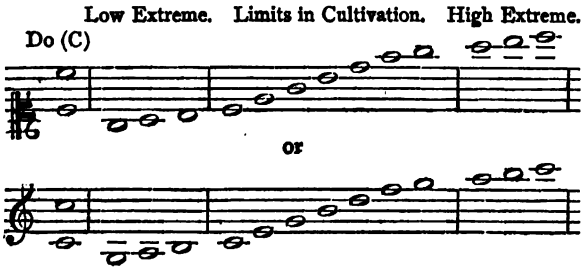
In the lower sounds this voice may even sometimes produce the Sol (G)



Cultivation.—The Mezzo-Soprano voice should at first be limited from Do (C) to Sol (G)

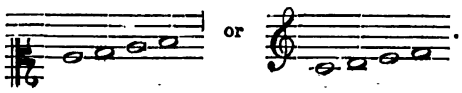
When it has acquired sufficient firmness, flexibility, and vibratory power within this compass, it may be extended with a fair amount of ease to the extreme sounds.

The following table shows the compass of the Mezzo-Soprano voice :—

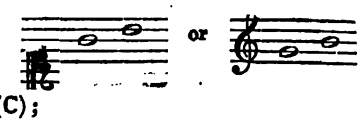


THE SOPRANO VOICE.

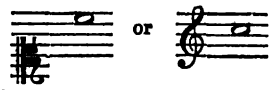
Quality.—The voice of the soprano is thin and light throughout, and in its lower part limited. It is not possessed of muscular strength, and consequently not capable of sustaining sounds with effect, or giving much declamatory power, but when carefully developed it is exceedingly brilliant. Its organisation is very delicate. The vocal organ is situated high in the throat, and therefore is incapable of vibration in the lower sounds. It can scarcely produce a distinct sound on Do (C), Re (D), Mi (E), and Fa (F).



It is weak even from Sol (G) to Si (B),

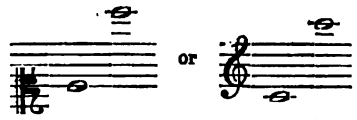


from Do (C);



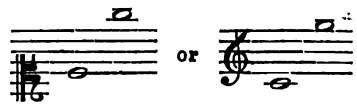
and as far as it can be extended its tone is firm, clear, and silvery.

Extent.—In some cases the compass is limited from Do (C) to Do (C).



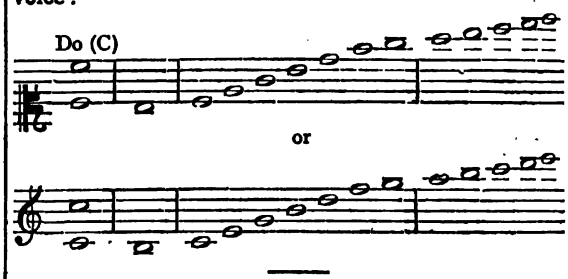
In others, however, it may be extended from Do (C) to Mi (E).

Cultivation.—The soprano at first should be exercised only from Do (C) to Sol (G).



The extension must be made very gradually and carefully, for otherwise the voice will become shrill, weak, and tremulous instead of acquiring power.

The following tables show the compass of the soprano voice :—



The following table shows the full extent of the female voices :—

(To be continued.)

An exceedingly good concert was given at the Walworth Lecture Hall on Monday, July 2nd, under the direction of Mrs. Yell, for the benefit of the St. Paul's Girls' Friendly Society, when the following distinguished amateurs gave their services :—Lord Brabazon, Princess Ghika, Lady Colin Campbell, assisted by Mesdames Gwynne, Green, Wheelwright, and Messrs. Barrington, Foote, Thomas, Smith, and Owen. Mr. Smith accompanied.

A morning concert was given at the Steinway Hall by the pupils, past and present, of Madame Sainton Dolby's Vocal Academy on July 5th. Reinecke's new cantata for female voices, "The Enchanted Swans," was excellently given under the bâton of M. Sainton. This was announced as the first time of performance in England. The soli parts were well sung by Misses Hilda Coward, Mary Willis, Amy Carter, and Madame Henrietta Whyte. Mr. Leipold was, as before, the able accompanist.

Digitized by Google

THE LATE REV. SCOTSON CLARKE.

The lamented and rather sudden death on July 5th of the Rev. Scotson Clarke at a comparatively early age, has removed a somewhat prominent figure from the musical world. The Rev. Scotson Clarke was a man of varied talents and attainments without being, perhaps, a musician of great profundity. As a composer, he belonged to the school who ever do injustice to their own gifts by writing down to the level of popular requirements. He wrote facile, tuneful music, which bore its impressions on the surface. He was a performer of much skill and possessed to a considerable extent the power of playing pleasant and ready extemporaneous organ pieces. He took much interest in the proceedings of the recent Organ Conference and offered as one of the invited attendants at the meetings, a goodly number of suggestions which showed earnest thought upon the questions at issue. The Rev. Scotson Clarke founded a school for the study of the organ in London. His death will be regretted by a pretty wide circle of friends and pupils, who duly recognised his exceptional gifts and acquirements.

Musical Intelligence.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

It is supposed that Mdme. Adelina Patti induced the directors to revive Rossini's very old opera "La Gazza Ladra," for the display of herself. At all events, the public were pleased to patronize the performance on July 5th, for the theatre was full, and the audience unusually inclined to exact encores. The overture, full of sparkling melody, and in spite of many faults an effective if sensational piece of orchestral writing, was repeated; also the caballetta of "Di piacer," and the duet "Ebben la tua memoria," sung by Mdme. Patti and Mdme. Skalchi (as Povero Pippo). Mdme. Patti greatly excelled both as a vocalist and actress in the trial scene, and the "Prayer" ejaculated in prison. The famous trio, a "canon on the octave," "O nume benefico," made less impression than other numbers of the opera; the theme is in nowise striking, but the piece has generally caught the popular ear. How inferior, in every respect, to that other canon (a quartet) in Beethoven's "Fidelio," which now hardly raises a hand in money-grubbing London. The cast of the opera was completed by M. Gailhard, who made a passable Podesta, Signor Frapolli, and Signor Cotogni. M. Bevignani conducted. "Aïda" was played for the last time on Friday (July 6th), and "La Gioconda" repeated for the penultimate time on Monday. On Tuesday the directors chose to revive Wagner's most interesting opera, the "Flying Dutchman," with Mdme. Albani as Senta, but such a work naturally finds more congenial interpreters among the Germans. Mr. Carl Rosa with an English company and Mdme. Valleria as Senta has made the opera a thing of note at Her Majesty's Opera, and elsewhere. "Il Vascello Fantasma"—to adopt the Italian title—was first heard in England at Drury Lane Theatre, under Mr. G. Wood's management in 1870, with Mr. Santley in the title part, and Mdme. Ilma di Murska as Senta. Mr. Carl Rosa afterwards mounted the opera, and splendidly, at the Lyceum, and at the large theatre in the Haymarket. He was also able to "ring the changes" upon it in 1880 and 1881. Last spring, at Drury Lane Theatre, German opera was suspended in favour of old and new works by English composers. The "Flying Dutchman" was mounted at the Royal Italian Opera some six or seven years ago, and then withdrawn. The season will soon be over. A. M.

THE SOUTH KENSINGTON SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

After a very long interval, Mr. Richard Dressel held his 17th recital at the "school" in Thistle Grove, Kensington, on July 5th. Several of the pupils were allowed to display their progress in the art, and played pieces which no doubt delighted their friends, and did not fail to interest lovers of the art. A certain limit, however, should be imposed on the performance of young persons, here and elsewhere, for the public at large complain, and their complaints must be listened to, if not echoed by the press. Mr. Dressel played in excellent style, and most unobtrusively, solos by Heller, Le Couppey, H. Scholtz, Jensen, and Chopin (the Valse in E minor). An original composition, "Rocked by the waves," has been published by Stanley, Lucas, Weber, & Co., and is well worth its "exchange value" in money. Mrs. Dressel sang "lieder" of Schubert and Taubert with taste and expression. Herr Bonawitz, a "lion" of the day, took his audience by storm in three pieces of Chopin and Beethoven's Sonata in E, Op. 90. Mdlle. C. Brousil played two violin solos (one a valse of Herr Bonawitz), and took part with her friend in a sonata of Beethoven.

MR. CHARLES HALLE'S CHAMBER CONCERTS.

These excellent and instructive concerts came to an end on Friday July 6th, when the scheme included "Papa" Haydn's string quartet in E flat, Op. 71, and Brahms's pianoforte quartet in A, Op. 26. Mr. Charles Hallé's solo was Beethoven's sonata in E major, Op. 109 (the "air with variations.") Mdme. Norman-Néruda played two violin pieces of Spohr.

M. HOLLMAN'S ANNUAL MORNING CONCERT.

M. Hollman's annual morning concert, which took place, by the kind permission of the Earl and Countess of Denbigh, at 2, Cromwell Houses, South Kensington, on Thursday, the 5th inst., gave this celebrated violoncellist ample opportunity of exhibiting his remarkable execution, and what is worth infinitely more than that, his artistic expression. M. Hollman performed a varied programme of J. Sebastian Bach, Moscheles, Schubert, Rubinstein, Saint-Saëns, and the seemingly unavoidable Popper. Is it that the public are to be judged by their liking of such Fanfaronade? There must be a great dearth of 'cello music, as most of the performers on that instrument have recourse to arrangement of pianoforte works to which certainly objection may be taken. There is, however, no denying that Schubert's "Serenade," as performed by M. Hollman and Signor Lebano, was as striking as it was charming. In Signor Lebano one welcomes one of the best harpists I have heard for a long time. Mdlle. Scharwenka was the vocalist, and Herr Blumer the pianist.

FERDINAND PRAEGER.

Mdlle. Jeanne Douste, a juvenile pupil of Mdlle. Gayrard-Pacini, aged only 14, was introduced by her accomplished mistress on July 4th at Mrs. Reuben Sasson's, No. 1, Belgrave Square. Mdlle. Douste played Bach's "Italian" Concerto, pieces of Handel, Mendelssohn (the "Spinnlied" in C), and the last movement of Weber's Sonata in C major. Her poetry of style and exquisite sensibility were greatly extolled in the artists' room by competent judges. Mdlle. Douste and Mdlle. Gayrard-Pacini played together an "Impromptu," arranged for two pianofortes, on a theme from Schumann's "Manfred," and a duet (for one pianoforte) entitled "Reveil des Oiseaux" by a composer named Tresvaux de la Roselaye. Mdme. Rose Hersee was one of the successful vocalists. She chose Gounod's Barcarolle, "Ou voulez vous aller," to which the gallant response might naturally have been, "Avec toi"; also "La Mandolinata," which the reporter cannot accept even as ordinary "concert" music. Mdlle. Gayrard-Pacini gracefully withdrew her own name from the programme-head in favour of her pupil, Mdlle. Douste, but she will suffer no loss from this worthy sacrifice of self.

Mdlle. Avigliana's matinée on July 2nd was a success. She sang the air "From mighty kings," and Sullivan's song, "My dearest heart," by request; also Bach's air, "My heart ever faithful," and "Comin' thro' the rye." Signor Tito Mattei played pianoforte solos. Rossini's trumpery trio, "Pappataci" was one of the most loudly applauded numbers!

LIVERPOOL.

(From our own Correspondent.)

JULY 11TH.

Mr. Hallé's appointment as conductor to the Liverpool Philharmonic Society was confirmed at the last meeting of the proprietors. This being the case, the Liverpool Philharmonic Society, as a separate and Liverpool Musical Society, is dead; it will for the future be simply a branch of Mr. Charles Hallé's Manchester concerts. Mr. Hallé is to receive double the salary paid to Sir Julius Benedict when he was the conductor, or double the income for which Mr. Randegger or Mr. Cowen would have accepted the position. On dit, that all the Liverpool contingent of the late Philharmonic orchestra have received notice of dismissal, and their places are to be supplied by Mr. Charles Hallé's Manchester band, which said performers are to appear every other week as rivals to themselves! In other words, Mr. Hallé has stipulated that he continue his own concerts, given alternately with the Liverpool Philharmonic Society's concerts! One Tuesday evening Mr. Hallé will appear as the conductor of the Liverpool Philharmonic Society, and the same night week as a rival to the same!

Digitized by Google

More than rumour says that the local chorus is to be replaced by Mr. Hallé's choir, and, in fact, a meeting of the male members of the local chorus was held last night at which the members agreed to resign in a body, owing to the fact that the several advantages which have been granted to them since the foundation of the Liverpool Philharmonic Society are under the new management to be abolished.

It is a lamentable affair altogether, and Liverpool musicians may now bow their heads with shame and sorrow. I believe that the committee also treated with Mr. Hecht, and wished to engage him as the chorus-master, but this has fallen through, and the only local man engaged by the wise (?) directorate is Mr. Branscombe as chorus-master, who, it is stated, has had no previous knowledge of chorus training.

Altogether the whole affair is a great muddle, and another blow at English musical art and English musicians.

It is whispered that Mr. Best may resign the organistship of the Society; but this waits confirmation.

In my last letter, by a printer's error, Liverpool Harmonic Society appeared instead of Liverpool Philharmonic Society.

J. J. M.

MUSIC IN CORK.

(From our Own Correspondent.)

It is a long time since such a display, musical and otherwise, has been witnessed by the people of this city as was presented to them on Tuesday (July 4th), the opening day of the Cork Industrial Exhibition. Previous to describing the purely musical portion of the festival, a few words as to the opening itself may not be out of place. At a quarter before one o'clock, a procession was formed, consisting of the members of the Executive and Ladies' Committees, the two Hon. Secretaries, the Architect and the Builder, the Mayor, and the Earl of Bandon (president of the Exhibition). On the entrance of the procession into the main hall it was greeted by a fanfare from the orchestra, which continued until all the members of it (the procession) had taken their places.

Part I. consisted of selections from "The Hymn of Praise" (Mendelssohn), and from Haydn's "Creation"; and Part II. of a miscellaneous selection, including "The March of the Priests" ("Athalie") (Mendelssohn).

The entire strength of the orchestra was as follows: principals 6, soprani 86, contralti 53, tenori 46, bassi 58, and band 52, making the respectable total of 301 persons engaged in the musical portion of the opening.

Too much praise can not be given to the chorus for the manner of their singing throughout, but in particular I must mention the rendering of the opening chorus from the "Lobgesang," "All men, all things," which was simply perfect. Though the tenori were a trifle weak, and the soprani a little too strong in point of numbers, yet they seemed to be thoroughly aware of their shortcomings in that respect and managed so that it was hardly noticeable. I am sorry I cannot speak so highly of some of the principals. Miss Annie Williams was all that could be desired, and her part was a very hard one, having to appear in eight of the principal items, but she sang very well and judging from the way in which she was received, the audience was of the same opinion. Miss Helen D'Alton was also very successful in the two items she was down for, and narrowly escaped an encore for her singing of "The Lost Chord" with organ obbligato by Herr Swertz. Mrs. Langfield, an amateur, sang her part of the duet for two sopranos very well, her voice, though not very powerful, being of a sweet quality and in perfect tune; she appeared to be a little nervous in the morning, but in the evening she sustained her part right well. Mr. Bernard Lane had either a cold, or had not recovered from the fatigue of travelling, for he was very husky all through, and Mr. Griffin sang several times out of tune; with the exception of his singing of one piece, which was really very good, and Mr. Lane's singing of "In splendour bright," which was also very fair, I cannot conscientiously praise either of them. What I have said above with regard to the singing of the chorus applies equally well to the playing of the band, which was excellent. The overture to "William Tell," went admirably, as did also the march from "Athalie." The same programme was repeated at the evening concert, which I think was a great mistake, as it had the effect of keeping away a great many of those who were present in the morning. The only difference was that the encores were many, and were nearly all responded to, and that Miss Helen D'Alton sang in addition "Creation's Hymn" by Beethoven.

To sum up. Cork has reason to be proud of being able to bring together such a body of musical amateurs as sang and played on that day, for nearly two-thirds of the performers were localists. Herr Swertz is to be congratulated on the success of his labours in bringing the mass of voices under such perfect control; and Mr. Robinson is to be congratulated for the admirable manner in which he conducted the whole performance, to the chagrin, no doubt, of many who were opposed in the first instance to his being brought down. Herr Swertz presided at the organ during the morning and evening concerts.

"H.M.S. Pinafore" is at the theatre, but on Tuesday, on account of the instrumentalists being required at the Exhibition, they were obliged to perform with only the aid of a piano. They have a very good caste.

The excellent organ, built by Mr. Magahy, of Cork, has 3 manuals and pedals, 34 stops, with the usual proportion of couplers and composition movements.

F. S. JOHN LACY.

EASTBOURNE.—The musical season under the direction of the popular conductor and pianist, Mr. Julian Adams, commenced with a capital concert, at which the orchestral features were the overtures "Ruy Blas" and "Tännhauser" and Schubert's Symphony in C. A concert has been given in aid of the Royal College of Music. The orchestra is again in excellent form, and one can but wish that every pleasure resort possessed the still rare musical advantages enjoyed by Eastbourne.

THE MUSIC TEACHERS' NATIONAL ASSOCIATION, U.S.—The seventh annual session of the organization was held at Providence, R. I., July 4th, 5th, and 6th. The programme consisted as usual of essays, discussions, vocal and instrumental concerts, &c. Distinguished musicians from all parts of the country were present and took part in the exercises. The call was issued and signed by the President, E. M. Bowman, of St. Louis; W. F. Neath, Secretary, Ft. Wayne, Ind.; and the Exe-cutive Committee, Robert Bomner, Providence, R. I.; H. E. Holt, Lexington, Mass.; Albert A. Stanley, Providence, R. I.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC LOCAL EXAMINATIONS, MANCHESTER CENTRE.—The annual distribution of certificates to successful candidates at the Local Examinations held during the year, in connection with the Royal Academy of Music, was made on July 5th, in the large rooms of the Town Hall, Manchester. Alderman Bunnett was in the chair. A selection of classical music, performed by some of the candidates, gave great satisfaction to a large audience. Miss E. H. M. Hochstetter (one of the junior candidates), a rising young pianist, played Weber's Polonaise, Op. 72, with so much brilliancy as to secure an encore, and in response played Handel's Fantasia in C. Miss Biddolph, one of the senior Honours candidates, also received a well-merited encore for her artistic performance of Chopin's Nocturne, Op. 27, No. 2.

GWENNAP, CORNWALL.—A new organ was opened last week at Gwennap Church, by Mr. J. Hele, junr., organist of St. Peter's, Plymouth. It consists of Great organ with open diapson, gamba, dulciana, fluto traverso, principal harmonic, piccolo; swell organ, with open diapason, salicional, gedact, gemshorn, and oboe; pedal, bourdon 30 notes, couplers, swell to great, swell to pedals, great to pedals. The organ has spotted metal front pipes, and all stops are through. Mr. Hele played with his usual excellence. Following is the programme:—Sonata No. 4—Allegro con Brio, Andante religioso, Allegretto, Allegro Maestoso (Mendelssohn); Pastorale in G (Merkel); Solo, No 9 (Corelli); Occasional overture (Handel); "Qui est homo" ("Stabat Mater"), (Rossini); Grand Chœur (Guilmant); Romanza in G (Beethoven); Offertoire in D (Batiste); March in E flat (Wely).

CITY OF LONDON COLLEGE.—On the occasion of the inauguration of the City of London College, last Saturday, by the Prince of Wales, some of the students from the Guildhall School of Music rendered a selection of vocal music

Digitized by Google

The artists were Miss Clara Dowle, Miss Newman, Miss Armstrong, Miss Umpleby, Misses Nellie and Annie Sheldon; and Messrs. Boulcott-Newth, Sackville Evans, and Caston. Miss Clara Dowle's rendering of "Softly Sighs" (Weber), was much admired, and she was loudly applauded. Miss Helen Armstrong sang "The last dream" (Cowen); Miss Newman "Since then" (Roeckel); Misses Sheldon Pinsuti's duet, "Cantiam l'Amore," and Messrs. Boulcott-Newth and Evans the duet "Love and war" (Cooke). Mr. J. H. Leipold accompanied.

SOUTHEND.—Madame Maleska's matinée musicale took place at her residence, on July 7th. Madame Morini, though announced, was absent; but in her place Miss Howard sang a couple of songs with great expression, though showing a want of vocal strength. Miss Bath played and accompanied, but her touch was heavy, and somewhat wanting in variety. Miss Maria Schumann's violin solos gave golden hope of the future, and those that heard her on this occasion must wish to hear her again. Messrs. Lewis and Dunn sang with ability, but Mr. Russell sang "Honour and Arms," rather stiffly; however, in his second solo he quite redeemed himself, and shewed dramatic qualities of no mean order, linked to a voice that is pleasing and strong. Madame Maleska and Mdlle. Spontini sang with taste and were well received. The performance concluded with the famous quartet from "Rigoletto," which certainly would have gone better had some rehearsal taken place.

NOTTINGHAM.—A recital of chamber music was given on Tuesday evening, in the Albert Hall, by Mr. John Farmer and others, to a numerous audience, at which the following programme was performed:—Quartet in E flat, Op. 47, for violin, tenor, violoncello and pianoforte (Schuman), Miss M. Farmer, MM. Gibson, Cave, and Albert; Rondo in B minor, for violin and pianoforte, Miss Bateman and Mr. Gibsone; Quartet in G minor, Op. 25, for pianoforte, violin, tenor and violoncello, Miss M. Farmer, MM. Gibson, Cave, and Albert; Etude in C minor (Chopin); "Abends" (Schumann), and Etude in G flat (Chopin), Miss M. Farmer; Etude in F major (Henselt), selections from Schumann's "Carnival,' &c., Miss Bateman; and Septet, No. 2, for two violins, tenor, violoncello, double-bass and flute (John Farmer), Mr. John Farmer and the instrumentalists already named. The performance gave perfect satisfaction, especially Mr. John Farmer's "Septet," which was well received; but not more favourably, says The Nottingham Guardian, than its merits demanded.

KENDAL.—The Church of St. George has been restored. Foremost among the many eminently satisfactory features in the alterations is the substitution of a new organ for the old instrument, which in its day had done good service, but which can no longer be retained in its accustomed site to mar the full effect of the greatly improved appearance of the interior of the church. For some time past it has been known that the concealment of many blemishes and shortcomings in the part it substained in the services was entirely due to the judicious handling of Mr. Smallwood. Messrs. Wilkinson and Son, of this town, who have now a wide reputation for exceptional excellence in this branch, undertook to supply the want, and they have succeeded in doing so in a manner which has brought the new instrument forward as a real acquisition to the town. In external appearance the work is altogether of a sumptuous character, no pains having been spared to make it artistically complete, and certainly nothing could be added that would in any way enhance the beauty of its design, while it is needless to say that nothing has been gained in point of show at the expense of the more important internal properties. In the latter respect nothing is wanting. As the reader will remember, a conference upon organ building was held under the auspices of the College of Organists, at which resolutions and recommendations were adopted, and these have been studiously observed in the matter of the relative positions of the manuals, pedals, composition pedals, &c., the organ in every detail giving ample evidence that the aim of the builders has been to ensure as high a degree of perfection as is possible. While Messrs. Wilkinson are to be complimented upon their work, they may also be congratulated that it is in the hands of a gentleman who will not allow any of its beauties to go undemonstrated. The organ is admirably balanced and contains many excellent effects. It has 3 manuals, and pedal organ, 37 stops, and 2026 pipes. The church was re-opened by an impressive thanksgiving service on July 5th.

Says the Daily News: In conversation with a French correspondent M. Gounod stated that the works upon which he is busily engaged for the Birmingham Festival of 1885 will be entitled "Death and Life," and will be in two parts. The first part, "Death," will be a species of Requiem. The second, "Life," will be a description of the New Jerusalem, taken from the Revelations, and in it the motifs used in the first section will be repeated, but developed "in such a way as to express the joy of the souls of the saved in the heavenly Jerusalem of Saints. M. Gounod added that he intended to write no more for the operatic stage.

Foreign Musical Intelligence.

The health of Hans von Bülow has greatly improved. He is now staying in Switzerland.

An international musical competition will be held at Amsterdam early next September.

The death is announced of Wilhelm Krüger, court pianist, of Stuttgart.

M. Gregoir, of Brussels, has published a biography of the composer Grétry.

Pauline Lucca has gone to Ischl for the benefit of her little daughter's health.

Spohr's "Jessonda" is to be revived on the re-opening of the Dresden Theatre.

Max Zenger's oratorio, "Kain," was given last month at Innspruck.

M. Gounod is re-arranging "Sapho" for the Paris Opera.

"Venetianische Nächte," the new buffo-opera, by Johann Strauss, will be produced first at Hamburgh.

At the Brussels Monnaie Theatre, Litolf's opera, "Die Templer," will shortly be produced, to be followed later by Reyer's "Sigurd."

Rubinstein's "Verlorenes Paradies" will be heard next winter in Berlin, under the direction of Herr Alexis Holländer.

An opera, by Hector Berlioz, "Benvenuto Cellini," is to be produced at the Leipsic Theatre at the end of this month for the first time.

The orchestra of the Wagner Theatre has been disbanded after giving several concerts, under the direction of Herr Anton Seide, the pecuniary result of which was far from satisfactory.

Having returned from America, Max Bruch has attended the Coblentz Musical Festival, and thence proceeds to Breslau, where he has been chosen to succeed Bernhard Scholz.

The Italian opera company at St. Petersburgh will begin their performances on October 1st, with a one act opera, by Salvayre, called "Richard III." and Rubinstein's "Demon."

A FURTHER DEVELOPMENT OF PROGRAMME MUSIC.—A Missouri composer has written a symphony entitled "The Mule." It is an admirable piece of descriptive music. It opens with an easy, moderate movement, intended to represent the animal jogging contentedly along the road. A few grace notes indicate his reaching to one side to nab a thistle as he passes. The road grows harder, and the movement slower. Then the driver encourages the mule. The cluck and the crack of the whip is heard. But the movement doesn't increase in rapidity. It stops short; and then, the middle brasses take up one note and hold it through the rest of the symphony, to indicate that the mule has balked and won't move. Meanwhile, the strings give expression to the efforts of the driver to beat the obstinacy out of the beast with the whip, a few sharp taps of the bones soon coming in to indicate the breaking of the whipstock. Dull blows upon the kettle drum tell that the driver has taken up the cushion of the waggon-seat, and is whacking the mule round the tail with it. However, the mule remains firm; and the cushion is thrown aside, and the driver goes to a fence to get a board. The tearing of his clothes in the wayside bushes and his ripping the board from the fence are clearly defined by the trombones and lower strings. He returns and belabours the mule with the board; and this is one of the most lively and pleasing movements of the work, and is continued until the mule begins to kick. Then, the melody becomes somewhat obscured, but the force and speed of the movement are greatly accelerated. The waggon begins to break. First, the dash-board goes, then the seat, then the wiffle-tree,—a sharp clang of the triangle denoting the breaking of the ironwork. So it goes, till the mule has freed itself from the waggon. Then, it kicks the man over the fence; and he falls in a hog-wallow. Then comes the finale—the triumphant bray of the mule. This is a wondrous bit of composition, so natural and true to life that a listener with his eyes closed would think himself in close proximity to the living animal. The roar is something tremendous, and can only be produced by an orchestra of ninety-two pieces; while the conductor has to be strapped down to obviate his throwing himself off his feet.—Boston Post.

Digitized by Google

Organ News.

BOLTON.

An organ recital was given in the Albert Hall, by Mr. Wm. Mullineux, F.C.O., on July 7th. The following was the programme :—

Dead March ("Saul")	Handel.
Introduction (Extempore) } Fugue in E Flat (St. Ann's) }	Bach.
Motet, "O Salutaris Hostia"	Gounod.
Overture, "Die Zauberflöte"	Mozart.
Air, "If with all your hearts"	Mendelssohn.
Chorus, "Blest be the man" (Joseph)	Handel.
Marche Funebre et Chant Seraphique (by desire)	Guilmant.
Festival March	Dunster.

BRISTOL.

Mr. George Riseley gave the last organ recital for the season at the Colston Hall, on Saturday, June 30th. The following was the programme :—

Air, varied, "Partant pour la Syrie"	Haynes.
Andante, (Symphony No. 4)	Mendelssohn.
Fantasia, et Fuga in G minor	J. S. Bach.
Pastorale	Wely.
Sonata, No. 9, in A	Corelli.
Romance	Hime.
Overture, "Les Huguenots"	Meyerbeer.

COVENTRY.

The new organ erected by Porritt, of Leicester, in the Church of All Saints, Coventry, was opened by Dr. Charles Joseph Frost, on Wednesday evening, July 4th. The following was the programme :—

Toccata in A flat	Hesse.
Introduction and Fugue	Raff.
Marche Religieuse	Chauvet.
Fantasia Sonata in A flat (Grave—Allegro—Adagio expressivo—Fuga).	Rheinberg.
Grand Marche	Merkel.
Allegretto Villereccio	Fumagalli.
Maestoso in C, and Allegretto in D	Frost.
Marcia Religiosa	Perelli.
Allegretto Vivace in A minor	Morandi.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

Mr. A. J. Eyre's programme on Saturday, July 7th, included the following :—

Overture, "Henry VIII."	Hatton.
Adagio from a Symphony	Haydn.
Air, "My heart ever faithful"	Bach.
Grand Prelude in D minor	Mendelssohn.
Fugue in D major	Bach.
Romance, "Rose, softly blooming"	Spohr.
Postlude in C	Battley.
Finale from an Orchestral Suite	Schumann.

EXETER.

Mr. Claude R. Fowles gave an organ recital at the Victoria Hall, on Saturday evening, June 30th. The following was the programme :—

Introduction and Allegro in D	F. E. Bache.
Romance for Violin, Op. 40	Beethoven.
Fugue in D minor	J. S. Bach.
Andante Tranquillamente	Hy. Smart.
Sicilians	E. J. Hopkins.
Chorus, "The Heavens are telling"	Haydn.
Meditation (on 1st Prelude, J. S. Bach)	Gounod.
March, "Cornelius"	Mendelssohn.
Cantilene Pastorale	A. Guilmant.
Impromptu
Overture, "Peter Schmoll"	Weber.

FISHERIES EXHIBITION.

The following is the programme of a recital given on Tuesday, July 3rd, by Mr. James Halle, on Henry Jones and Sons' organ.

Marche, "Cornelius"	Mendelssohn.
Overture, "Tancredi"	Rossini.
Offertoire in G	Batiste.
Organ Concerto, No. 4	Handel.
Pilgrim's Song	Batiste.
Airs Impromptu
Marche from "Le Prophète"	Meyerbeer.

Mr. James Loaring, F.C.O., gave his twelfth organ recital on Thursday, July 5th. The programme included :—

Overture, "Artaxerxes"	Dr. Arne.
Organ Concerto, No. 2	Handel.
Overture, "Les deux Aveugles"	Méhul.
Prelude and Fugue in D minor	Bach.
The Bride's March	Loaring.

EALING.

An organ recital was given on Monday, the 9th inst., at Christ Church, by Mr. Harold E. Stidolph, and was largely attended. The programme was as follows :—

March from Joshua } March from "Ode to St. Cecilia" }	Handel.
Romance Affetuoso	Cramer.
Concerto (No. 5)	Handel.
"I waited for the Lord" ("Lobegesang")	Mendelssohn.
Storm Fantasia	Lemmens.
Andantino, from Quartet	Pleyel.
Wedding March	Mendelssohn.

HIGH WYCOMBE.

On Monday evening the 2nd inst., a recital was given on the organ in the Parish Church, by Mr. J. G. Wrigley, F.C.O., Mus.Bac., Oxon. The following formed the programme :—

Sonata (No. 2) Op. 65 (Grave—Adagio—Allegro maestoso e vivace—Fuga).	Mendelssohn.
"Carillons de Dunkerque"	Carter.
"Air du Dauphin"	Roeckel.
Overture	Flotow.
Grand Fantasia, "The Storm," in E minor	Lemmens.

PRESTON.

The following is the programme of the organ recita given by Mr. James Tomlinson, in the new Public Hall on Saturday evening, July 7th.

Sixth Symphony (Adagio—Allegro—Andante—Minuetto—Vivace).	Haydn.
Adagio (Quartet in E flat)	Mendelssohn.
Overture to "The Crown Diamonds"	Auber.
Chorus and Air, "Idomeneo"	Mozart.
Military Overture	Mendelssohn.

CHILDREN'S VOICES.

The Century Magazine has a paper dealing with the question of training children's voices from the pen of Mr. William L. Tomlins, a well-known worker in the cause in America, and preceded by a few observations from Mr. Theodore Thomas.

Mr. Tomlins debates the question whether in truth the method commonly adopted in these seminaries is not harmful to the voice and destructive to artistic singing in the future. "Briefly mentioned," he says, "The faults of current instruction are these: Everything is sacrificed to a knowledge of musical notation. The voice is developed only in respect to power, and this, unfortunately, in a way which must be entirely undone whenever the study of artistic singing is begun. Instead of soft, pleasant, expressive voices, one hears in school almost universally a hard, shouty tone, unsympathetic and inexpressive." "All of these shortcomings," he tells us, "finally reduce themselves to two—namely, ignorance of, or indifference to, the physiological relation between singing and the vocal organs; and, second, apathy with regard to all kinds of musical relations beyond the simplest and most obvious. This state of things, which prevails for the most part throughout the country, is to be accounted for, or at least has been influenced by, two or three circumstances. The music-teachers are chosen mainly for their knowledge of notation and the sight-reading of music. They are generally earnest, practical teachers, with perhaps a turn for music, but with no systematised training in the physiology of the vocal organs, and without practical acquaintance with the technic of vocal culture." He mentions the Sunday school singing-books and the Moody and Sankey hymns as being written down for the class-singing market; but works of this kind are perhaps more supplied to school children in America than in England. Some good observations are made, too, upon the habit of coupling physical exertion with singing; and the author very truly says "The panting of the breath directs the blood to the throat and lungs, and involves an action of the extrinsic muscles of the throat which directly antagonises the proper act of singing." Mr. Tomlins observes that the only way of altering the received method of teaching children singing at large schools is by the dissemination of proper knowledge of vocal culture amongst the teachers themselves; for if the attention of young people is solely directed to notation and sight-singing, he who can shout the correct interval the loudest is certain to be considered the best singer. Mr. Theodore Thomas was present during an exhibition of some 200 or 300 children singing at Chicago. "The singing of the children," he says, "as I heard it on that occasion, demonstrated the soundness of Mr. Tomlins's theories and his rare abilities as a teacher. They showed ease, spontaneity, warmth, expression, accuracy of pitch, precision—in fact, came so near to perfection that I assured them I had never before heard such beautiful singing."

Digitized by Google

THE HARP.

The following extracts are from an article by a "Foreign Professor" in St. Cecilia Magazine.

Some imagine that the harp had its origin in the bow of an antediluvian Nimrod, who, finding the string emitted a note, added others. The new instrument thus formed must have pleased "the giants in those days" of dim and dawning history, for by degrees the frame was broadened and hollowed out (sometimes above, sometimes below) to give the infant harp a deeper, stronger resonance. The learned and enterprising Scotch traveller, Bruce, found at Thebes, among the sculptured records of that splendid Egyptian civilisation, which was the cradle of the Hebrew and Greek, paintings apparently as old as the 13th century before the Christian era, in which harps of surprising size and beauty figure among the favorite instruments used by the Imperial Egyptian. The harp of the mystic Chaldean, though it had the sound-board or resonance-box above instead of below, resembled the Egyptian harp in the absence of the pole or pillar, which in the Gothic harp forms the third arm of the triangle. By this important addition to the frame of the harp, the Goths, and other Scythic emigrants from Asia,—whose incursions into Western and Northern Europe carried the harp even as far as "Caledonia, stern and wild,"—not only completed the beauty and symmetry of its outward form, but gave the frame of the instrument sufficient strength to bear the tension of those thicker, longer, more tightly drawn strings, whether of sinew or metal, from which the harp derived a power of tone suited to the wild vigorous genius of its new masters, the Goth, Teuton, Celt, and Saxon. As the traveller who crosses a broad stream at twilight, steps from one fragment of rock to another, so here and there a vague allusion, a scanty hint, a rude monument, aids us in tracing the uncertain path of the harp's progress over the dim mediæval period of history. High and clear, at a very early stage of this dark road, rises the majestic figure of the Celtic Druid of Britain, and his disciple the Druid of Gaul. The brief hierarchy of these gifted men—divines, philosophers, judges, physicians, poets, seers, and harpists,—seems not to have extended to Caledonia, where their hardly less versatile successors, the Bards, were represented by Merlin and others. About this period we find the Irish Bard rising into such eminence that Galileo, the astronomer's father, and Dante, acknowleged them as the instructors of tuneful Italy itself on the harp, and speak in high terms of the size and beauty of that instrument, which even now is the national emblem of the country where the mediæval harp rose to its summit of beauty and power in the "Regina Cithararum,"—the "Galway" harp of 1621. Nor must I pass over in silence the gifted bard of the rich-voiced telyn or Welsh harp.

The harpist's art, that once formed so picturesque a feature in the story of Royal Saxon Alfred, was again cultivated by a Royal student, James I. of Scotland, and it appears to have even enjoyed high favour both in the Highlands and Lowlands of Scotland until the French cornemuse (bagpipe) players in the train of Mary Queen of Scots succeeded in introducing into this country the latter instrument. No wonder, that having received this impetus, the shrill and warlike bagpipe should speedily have gained favour with the savage chieftains, who, then and long after, formed the nobility of Scotland. But in our milder age, when war is regarded rather as an evil than as a favourite pastime, we might hope to hear again much oftener the gentle voice of the harp. And if the French brought in the semi-barbaric bagpipes, to them also we owe the latest and most perfect form of the harp. The mediæval harp, whose simple diatonic scale was unfit for modern instrumental music, was first improved by an ingenious Tyrolese, who inserted little crooks into the neck, so as to shorten the strings and add other semitones to the scale. Hochbrucker in 1720, gave the harp the power of modulation by connecting these crooks with pedals, thus leaving the hands free. Then the Frenchman Cousineau contrived to produce semitones without the jarring, inconvenient crooks (which pulled the string out of its level) and, by adding another row of pedals, constructed, in the year 1782, the first double-action harp. A few years afterwards, the great Sebastian Erard invented that beautiful contrivance, the fork mechanism, which has raised the harp to its present state of perfection, and superseded all the cumbrous and jarring machinery of which the harpists of his day had so long complained. Since Erard invented the double-action harp, (1810), a new world has been opened up to the harpist. The instantaneous and perfect production of all the chromatic semitones places within the performer's reach those beautiful enharmonic effects, the "synonyms," obtained by throwing the whole scale into one chord, which the hand of the performer sweeps, now loudly, now softly, as the sigh of the Æolian harp. These and other peculiar effects, such as the bell-like harmonics, the "etouffees," drum-notes, the distant rumble of the skilfully swept bass notes (imitating the "thunder stop" of the organ, the bray of trumpet-like "mordente" produced presso la tavola), all these, and many more, are enhanced in brilliancy and facility by the exquisitely perfect construction of the sound-board and other adjuncts equally due to the inventive genius of the great Alsatian. The manufacture of harp-strings, now much improved, has removed another obstacle to the general adoption of the harp for solo performances and concert and chamber music. A few chords, a simple melody, played in that style which Italy teaches to instrumentalists as well as vocalists, is immediately felt by all to be something—non so che—quite unique in its charm. The harp has been found a beautiful adjunct to Church music on the continent of Europe, and lately on that of America, where, as in southern Europe, the feelings of religious devotion seek a more varied, picturesque expression than would please those men would condemn us to a psalmody graphically described by Sir Jasper Cranbourne, in "Peveril of the Peak." Meyerbeer, has employed the harp in his orchestral effects with an art which consoles the harpist for the uncouth orchestral tricks of Berlioz and Wagner.

POPULAR SONGS.

(Extracted from an American Paper.)

"Auld Lang Syne" is popularly supposed to be the composition of Burns, but, in fact, he wrote only the second and third verses of the ballad as commonly sung, retouching the others from an older and less familiar song. "The Old Oaken Bucket" was written by Woodworth in New York City during the hot summer of 1817. He came into the house and drank a glass of water, and then said: "How much more refreshing it would be to take a good long drink from the old oaken bucket that used to hang in my father's well." His wife suggested that it was a happy thought for a poem. He sat down and wrote the song as we have it. "Woodman, spare that tree," was the result of an incident that happened to George P. Morris. A friend's mother had owned a little place in the country which she was obliged, from poverty, to sell. On the property grew a large oak which had been planted by his grandfather. The purchaser of the house and land proposed to cut down the tree, and Morris's friend paid him ten dollars for a bond that the oak should be spared. Morris heard the story, saw the tree, and wrote the song. "The Light of Other Days" was written to be introduced into Balfe's opera, "The Maid of Artois."

Payne wrote "Home, Sweet Home" to help to fill up an opera he was preparing, and at first it had four stanzas. The author never received anything for it, but though the opera was a failure when played in the Covent Garden Theatre the song took, and over one hundred thousand copies were sold the first year. In two years the publishers cleared over two thousand pounds by the publication. Payne was afterwards appointed American consul in Tunis, where he died, and whence his remains the other day were sent to America. Some of his miseries may be guessed from his own words: "How often have I been in the heart of Paris, Berlin, London, or some other city, and have heard persons singing or hand-organs playing 'Home, sweet home,' without having a shilling to buy myself the next meal, or a place to lay my head." "Rock me to sleep," was written by Mrs. Allen, of Maine. She was paid five dollars for it, and Russell and Co., of Boston, who had in three years gained four thousand dollars by its sale, offered her five dollars apiece for any songs she might write. Some years after, and when a poor widow and in need of money, she sent them a song, which was promptly rejected. "A Life on the ocean wave," by Epes Sargent, was pronounced a failure by his friends. The copyright of the song became very valuable, though Sargent never got anything from it himself. "What are the wild waves saying?" was suggested to Dr. Carpenter by a scene from Dickens's novel, "Dombey and Son," and the music was by Charles Glover. "Poor Jack," was from the pen of Charles Dibdin, the author of "The Lamplighter." "Poor Jack" netted £5,000 for its publishers and almost nothing for the author. "Love's young dream" was one of Moore's best, but the tune to which it is commonly sung is from an Irish ballad called "The Old Woman." Moore sang his own songs so well that both the auditors and himself were often moved to tears. "Kathleen Mavourneen" was sold by Crouch, the author, for £5, and brought the publishers as many thousands. Crouch was hopelessly improvident, and now in his latter days is in poverty. When Madame Tietjens was in America a few years ago she sang "Kathleen Mavourneen" in New York, when a wretched-looking individual introduced himself as Crouch, was recognized, and thanked her for singing the song so well.

There is a story afloat that when Lord Wolseley visited Dublin lately, it was thought he would go to hear Service at St. Patrick's Cathedral. As a delicate compliment to the successful general and his colleagues, the anthem (so runs the story) was chosen from Handel's "Israel in Egypt," the words being "Egypt was glad when they departed."

Mr. Musgrove Tufnail, a pupil of Mr. Frederick Walker, has succeeded in winning the Parepa-Rosa gold medal at the Royal Academy of Music. The judges were Mr. R. Hilton, and Signori Arditi and Bevignani. Mr. Tufnail has also won the Evill prize at the same institution, and was the prize winner for baritone singers at the Carmarthen Eisteddfod.

Digitized by Google

PUBLIC SINGING.

The following words are taken from an article by Madame Nilsson, in the North American Review :—

To the public singer, more perhaps than to any other artist, sympathetic appreciation quickly and naturally manifested by the audience is everything. The painter and the poet, if they have the courage that comes from a complete consciousness of their peculiar gifts, may work on in the solitude of their studies, confident that what one generation refuses to consider another may give a rightful place among the immortal achievements of human genius and skill.

The composer may be misunderstood, misinterpreted, neglected; but his score survives him, and may yet be rendered to an admiring world by some musician who had not begun the first music of the cradle when its author became silent in the grave. Even the actor, though his success depends largely upon sympathy in his audience, is not under so great obligations to it as the singer, by as much as the dramatist and the scene-painter play a more important and observable part than the composer.

Words may express an idea, however clumsily or coldly spoken; but the expression of the more delicate and fleeting emotions and suggestions of songs must be created almost entirely by the singer, who is all the while conscious that unless they fall upon sensitive and sympathetic ears, they pass for ever out of existence with their own brief echoes. The audience that exhibits the most sympathetic appreciation gets the best music. There is no power in mechanical singing, and the hearers will always feel its lifelessness, whether they understand its cause or not. Singing may be said to find its level. It cannot stir the nature of the hearer to any deeper depth, or exalt his enthusaism to any higher height, than the depth and height of the singer's own heart and soul.

From the nature of the case, there must be a certain amount of tediousness or weariness in singing the same piece many times over. Yet a song which gives fitting expression to any genuine emotion of the human heart, which in any way arrives at that touch of nature that makes the whole world akin, is one of the most durable of all things in art or literature. And it must be remembered that each public rendering is an experience more or less peculiar to itself.

International Copyright.—The following, from the American point of view, is of interest. "It is a well-known fact among those interested in this subject—and one that we have taken pains to substantiate while contemplating the publication of this article—that our leading book-publishers and authors are strongly in favour of the passage of an international copyright law. There is no doubt that the music-publishers and composers are also anxious to secure such an obvious protection for their publications. It is understood that the opposition to the passage of an international copyright law comes from England, and for this reason: English publishers insist upon retaining the publication at home, thus securing to their own printers, binders, paper-makers, etc., the manufacture, to the great injury of American industries. In this lies the true cause of the delay. English authors and composers are very prolific in brain-work, and it seems strange that they should not unite to protect their interests in this country, and secure additional income from their works. In conversation with a Boston manager who has within a few days returned from London, he said: "I heard several new operas which I very much wished to bring out in Boston, but knowing that there is no international copyright law to protect me, I declined to purchase them. Any unprincipled manager could have them 'memorized,' and produce them here in advance of my authorized presentation of them. This, of course, keeps a good many dollars out of the pockets of English writers, and deprives our public of the pleasure of hearing the new English operas presented as they should be. This opinion is corroborated by the various other responsible managers, who would all be glad to assist in the bringing about of a law that shall protect them in their ventures, and shall give the public the benefit of throughly first-class representations. It is to be hoped that the authors, composers, and publishers will make a renewed and combined effort to secure the making of the law. It is difficult to imagine a reason why English authors and composers do not memorialize Parliament to pass an international copyright law. So obvious a benefit to all, would, it is believed, have but to be presented in its proper shape, in order to secure their prompt and emphatic approval. The present agitation must, it seems to us, result in the framing of a new law, that shall, by just provisions, guarantee the brain-workers of either country a reward for their labour."—Musical Record.

Miss Alice Sydney Burvett (the Australian pianist) will give a concert at the Princes' Hall, Piccadilly, on July 18th. The vocalists, from Paris, are Madame Georges Clément and Monsieur Georges Clément; violin, Mr. Carrodus.

MUSIC STRINGS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF ALL KINDS OF

STRINGS FOR VIOLIN, VIOLA, VIOLONCELLO, DOUBLE BASS HARP, ZITHER, GUITAR, BANJO, &c., &c.,

Have always in Stock the Largest Assortment of Music Strings of any House in the World.

39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

All Kinds of Strings covered in a superior manner by powerful machines, made on the best principle with all modern improvements.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

The Voice.
Musical Intelligence:—Royal Italian Opera—The South Kensington School of Music—Mr. Charles Hallé's Chamber Concerts—M. Hollman's Annual Morning Concert—Various Concerts—Liverpool—Music in Cork.
Foreign Musical Intelligence.
Organ News:—Bolton—Bristol—Coventry—Crystal Palace—Exeter—Fisheries Exhibition—Ealing—High Wycombe—Preston.
Children's Voices.
The Harp.
Popular Songs.
Public Singing.
Editorial:—Orchestral Effects and Keyboard Mannerisms—The Logic of Counterpoint—The Present Position of the Composer.
"Counterpoint."
The Æsthetic Effect of Altered Key.
Correspondence:—The Sacred Harmonic Society and the Library Money.
Passing Events. Service Lists, &c.

LONDON: SATURDAY, JULY 14, 1883.

ORCHESTRAL EFFECTS AND KEY-BOARD MANNERISMS.

VIII.

THE direct, or more or less direct, to speak more accurately, orchestral representations of the tone colour of the organ have, as has been shown, considerable sympathy with sundry orchestral functions. And without detracting in any way from the self-possessed grandeur and calmness of the organ, such varied tone-colour representations are of high value in the list of the organist's ample resources. Such effects are not to be found on the key-board of the pianoforte, but in orchestral representation the last-named instrument becomes, by reason of its wonderfully susceptible touch and extraordinary powers of executive facility, no mean reproducer of orchestral idioms. Now, in the absence of direct tone-colour faculties, the pianoforte touch is exalted into a rare and precious gift. If the pianoforte lacks the power of giving the more positive tone qualities, it certainly possesses to a larger extent than the organ the faculty of readily producing varied light and shade, such as are constantly present in the phrasing of the orchestral masses. The reader need not here be reminded of the comparison that the orchestra produces a picture and the pianoforte an engraving, but the comparison may be emphasized by adding that though the engraving reproduces no colour it may be made by the skilful engraver to represent nearly all the lights and shades of the original picture. This is exactly the position of the pianoforte as a reproducer of orchestral effects; for though it is incapable of suggesting any of the decided tone colours of the orchestra, its delicate and ready sense of touch enables the skilful pianist to typify many of the expressive phrasings of the orchestra. The one art most required in such work is the faculty of "singing" or tone sustaining. Those who knew MENDELSSOHN have remarked upon his extraordinary power of "singing" on the pianoforte key-board, whereby he succeeded in suggesting some of the effects produced by the sustained soft notes of the orchestral wind instruments as well as the legato bowing of the strings. This artistic power over the fading tones of the pianoforte must be sought for with care and taste. Its production may be generally indicated by telling the student to attack the keys softly, but to press them with extreme firmness. The attack should be made in piano sentences from the soft part of the fingers, a mode of attack best secured by stretching the fingers slightly forward, and by lowering the wrist. The three methods of approaching the pianoforte keys should be carefully studied not only by the performer anxious to typify orchestral effects, but by the soloist pure and simple, for the best pianoforte music, as BEETHOVEN'S Sonatas, are full of the purest orchestral idioms. The methods alluded to are these, the legato and "singing" style, expressed by firm, soft pressure from the slightly extended fingers with the wrist held down so as not to interfere in any way with the free subtle movement of the fingers. The staccato or semi-staccato, produced by the decided yet free employment of the wrist, with the hand slightly raised, so as to enable the wrist to lift the fingers lightly and promptly from the keys. Then at times, in heavy chords, sforzando figures and broad massive effects, some strength may be borrowed from the front part of the arm just beyond the wrist. The wrist, too, it should be remembered plays a delicate but important function in the art of phrasing. A more enlightened view of the relationship of "Orchestral Effects and "Key-board Mannerisms" has of late, shown the wisdom of key-board performers bestowing some attention upon both the typical instruments with keys. Thus the study of the organ has been found to lend to the pianist considerable power in the attainment of a perfect legato touch; and on the other hand, the practice of the pianoforte assists the organist in obtaining a prompt, clean, bright action of the fingers. The large intermixture in modern music of orchestral idioms in the literature of both organ and pianoforte certainly claims from the key-board performer of either kind a careful study of the varied methods of expression and phrasing which are chiefly the heritage of the orchestra, duly remembering that this is to be done without in any way sacrificing the special characteristics and individualities of the distinct key-board instruments. E. H. TURPIN.

Digitized by Google

Madame Antoinette Sterling, Messrs. Sims Reeves and Santley, sang at the public dinner given in honour of Mr. Henry Irving on July 4th.

Mr. J. Stedman, the much esteemed concert agent, is conducting the business arrangements in connection with the orchestral concerts to be given at the forthcoming Cardiff Eisteddfod.

THE LOGIC OF COUNTERPOINT.

THIRD SERIES.

X.

THE fourth species in four parts seems specially to favour the employment of brief pedal passages, by reason of the natural grace secured by a chain of suspended harmonies being dropped step by step, over a stationary sound. CHERUBINI reminds the student of the rule which he first applies to three part counterpoint of the fourth species and which formulates the principle, that a succession of discords and concords with discords sometimes prepared and followed by other discords, when forming links of the same conjunct descending chains of suspensions and their resolutions, may be placed over or under a sustained pedal note, providing the first discord be prepared by a concord and the last discord be resolved by a concord, that is, that the external points of the chain be consonant harmonies. He continues, similar harmonic formations may be produced in four part counterpoint of the species under consideration. The theorist quotes examples from PALESTRINA, in which the discord of the fourth is boldly taken without preparation in order that it may become as it were its own preparation, thus :— the unprepared fourth being shown in the second beat of the first measure. This progression was indeed in the sixteenth century an established cadence formation; and most probably the progression was already a trite one in PALESTRINA'S day, having been in use some years before his time it may be fairly assumed. Similarly the tritone was, at a little later period than the just quoted progression, allowed to appear in conjunct movement thus :—

The theorist proceeds to show that the conduct of the fourth species counterpoint in four parts may be characterised by much greater freedom than would be the formation of the same contrapuntal genus in three parts, as in two and three parts minims could not be employed save in the part carrying the syncopations. "This practice may be employed" continues our author, "for dissonant as "well as for consonant syncopations; therefore, by "the help of such permissible devices, it is possible "to introduce discords whenever they may occur with "difficulty and easily secure the means of escape from "embarrassing passages." The judiciously added words are not to be unheeded, "These means should "however be employed with reserve and without "abuse of the permission." For it is clear that a too abundant use of such exceptionally allowed figures would tend to detract from the clear design and outline of the counterpoint, and to impart harmonic complexities and sometimes laboured progressions to the stream of even contrapuntal action. E. H. TURPIN.

Digitized by Google

THE PRESENT POSITION OF THE COMPOSER.

VI.

IT is sometimes questioned whether the present age is or is not one of great productive power in art. Certainly these high-pressure days present many difficulties in the career of the productive artist, who requires time for thought, and to whom the irritating turmoil and trying, monotonous routine of modern life are by no means conducive to health and mental freshness. If the great masters of the past could be called upon to lead the feverish, overstrained lives which seem now to be the inevitable lot of our London and Parisian artists of reputation, it may almost be questioned whether they would have succeeded in pouring forth masterpiece after masterpiece. Again, it may be that in the balance of the seemingly conflicting and varied events and developments which make up the life of this world, one age is called upon to produce, and another to employ and use what has already been produced. It seems any way to be true that the various arts have their cycles, and it is possible that music has attained its highest productive power. However, it is not for the artist "having put his hand to the plough" to stop in his course to enquire as to the nature of the age in which he lives, but it is his task to work on hopefully, and to remember that there is always room for good, honestly done work. It seems, indeed, not out of place to point out the importance to the composer of carefully steadying and guiding his mind through all the multiform causes of irritation and prostrating pressure which the actively engaged artist must encounter. The temperament of the composer's mind should be one of a great abiding calmness; heshould learn so to fight the battle of life that he can step aside out of the conflict at almost any time, with an unimpaired serenity and with a sweetened patience. One of the chief difficulties in his way, is the large call teaching makes upon his time and mind. Most musicians must teach, undoubtedly, though it is greatly to be deplored that our composers are so little encouraged for the most part, as to be unable to rest from labours so exacting as are those of the teacher of music. One remedy is the persistent determination never to teach a note of badly-written music; a resolution happily more possible in these days of advanced education than it was some years ago. Such a determination saves the musician from much that is trying to his mind and temper. A kindred good resolution is that of determinedly declining to teach unsympathetic and incapable pupils. It is possible by a thoughtful and well-planned method of employing the mental faculties in teaching, to preserve them, nay, possibly to develope and strengthen them. Perhaps the subject will call for more thought and consideration presently.

E. H. TURPIN.

Mr. Bright, M.P., has consented to deliver the annual address and present the prizes at the annual prize festival of the Royal Normal College and Academy of Music for the Blind, on July 18th. The chair will be taken by the Duke of Westminster.

"COUNTERPOINT."

By H. J. STARK, MUS.BAC.

A Paper read before the College of Organists, on May 1st, 1883.

THE progress of the art of music in this country during the past fifteen or twenty years has been marked by many features of interest, but amongst these it is hardly possible to select for consideration a more gratifying circumstance than the increased attention which has been given to the theory, as distinguished from the practice, of the art. The fact that students now feel it incumbent upon them to undergo a proper training, not only in the elementary principles of music, but also in its higher and more abstruse theories, may be accepted as a sure proof that the present revival of music in England has taken firm root; indeed, it may be said that already we are beginning to reap the fruit of so much earnest and devoted study.

The theoretical training of the English musician may be generally described under the following heads:—(i.) Harmony, (ii.) Counterpoint, (iii.) Form, (iv.) Instrumentation. These subjects are usually studied in the order just given, although not unfrequently Harmony and Counterpoint are taught simultaneously, a plan which I venture to think preferable to any other. A little consideration will show that, with respect to Harmony, very much has been done by means of improved text-books to bring theory as far as possible on a level with the requirements of modern practice. It is even possible that in this respect theorists have to some extent overshot the mark, especially by attaching undue importance to arguments based upon mathematical ratios, which can have little or no bearing on our existing scale system; so that, like the dog in the fable, we may run the risk of losing the substance whilst grasping at the shadow. If any danger of this kind really exists, we may safely trust to the stern logic of time and facts to correct such irregularities, and our feelings of gratitude need be in no way lessened towards those who have striven to throw the light of truth upon the dark and obscure corners of our art.

Whilst, however, the study of Harmony has developed to an extent which could hardly have been predicted a quarter of a century ago, we find that Counterpoint, the sister branch of study, remains very much where it was. There is, it is true, an intense desire on the part of students to thoroughly master the subject, and a very large amount of valuable time is expended upon it; but the result achieved is, I venture to think, altogether out of proportion to the attention which it receives.

The truth is that, whilst all other branches of study have progressed side by side with the art itself, Counterpoint alone has been allowed to lag behind.

The old restrictions, many of them unnecessary or inapplicable to modern tonality, are still in full force; and students seem doomed to an endless repetition of vain and unprofitable exercises, invariably based upon themes of inconceivable dulness, and having little or no pretension to melodic form. In the hope of directing attention to the shortcomings of the existing method, and thereby preparing the way for such changes and modifications as will enable the student to obtain real and lasting benefit from a course of Contrapuntal study, I have selected this subject as the theme of my paper this evening. Let me ask you to bear in mind that it is a matter which peculiarly concerns us as organists and Church musicians, since the music to which our attention is so frequently directed is mainly contrapuntal in its construction. I do not mean that the rules of Counterpoint are to any great extent observed in the actual composition of organ or Church music, for this indeed would be impossible. Still, what may be called the spirit of Counterpoint appears to pervade all well-written works of this class, and my object is to call attention to the discrepancies which are admitted to exist between Contrapuntal theory and practice, so that, as far as possible, the path of the student may be cleared of all unnecessary complications. Some of my conclusions may appear, at first sight, strange, and even revolutionary in their character, but I would bespeak for them a calm and impartial consideration, believing that in the end they will not be found so remote from the truth as might at first sight appear.

Digitized by Google

As I am addressing an audience composed for the most part of professional musicians, it will be unnecessary to say much concerning the early history of Counterpoint. I may, however, remind you that it is generally assumed to have taken its rise from the ancient Diaphony, or Descant, which consisted of fifths and octaves added to the plain-song melodies of the Church. Diaphony was thus a first rude attempt at harmony, and previous to its invention we have no certain trace of anything but unison singing. A distinction is drawn by some writers between Diaphony and Descant, the latter being considered as a later development of the art, if such it can be called. There can be little doubt, however, that the principle of adding fifths and octaves to a given theme was common to both methods, and they appear to have existed without much modification to about the end of the twelfth century. A curious use of this ancient system in our own day will be found in the final "Celestial Chorus" of Gounod's "Faust," but in this case the chords are made complete by the addition of the third.

The history of the gradual growth and development of harmonized music from the ancient Descant will be familiar to most of my hearers, and I shall therefore at once proceed to a consideration of the present contrapuntal system.

In the first place, it will be instructive to examine the usual definitions of the term Counterpoint.

Originally derived from the Latin, punctum, contrapunctum—point against point, or, in modern parlance, note against note—it is now generally considered as implying the combination of melodies in two or more parts. Exception has, however, been taken to this view by at least one writer, in terms which I venture to quote. "The common definition of Counterpoint as the 'art of combining melodies' is not strictly logical, unless the word 'melody' has a definition not generally accepted; because distinct melodies are never given to the student to combine unless they have been previously proved capable of combination; and if a composer should attempt to combine two distinct melodies in accordance with the laws of strict Counterpoint he will probably find it necessary to eliminate so much of one or both of his subjects that little real musical melody is left. The contrapuntist's notion of a melody is—a succession of sounds which does not infringe certain theoretical laws." This is, I conceive, a strictly logical view of the case, and appears to demand more attention than it has hitherto received.

Counterpoint exercises are usually constructed upon the following plan:—A certain theme or subject, generally called the canto fermo, is given to the student, who composes upon it an additional melody or melodies, according to the number of parts required. Until quite recently, two-part Counterpart may be said to have been written with little or no regard for the harmonic combinations which must inevitably be suggested by the simultaneous sounding of any two notes. A Counterpoint exercise written on this system can never be more than a dry combination of intervals, and it is probable that the majority of students are in the habit of constructing two-part Counterpoint without the least thought of any higher artistic purpose. If this is the case, and I appeal for confirmation to experience of every teacher and student, it may be easily perceived that such a course of study is in the highest degree damaging, since, by ignoring every natural aspiration far harmonic completeness, it tends to blunt and deaden the very feeling which it should be the aim of all sound teaching to encourage and develope.

In dealing with Counterpoint in more than two parts, the law-givers have been compelled to recognise the fact that musical sounds cannot be combined without having regard to the chords which are, either actually or by implication, conveyed to the mind of the auditor. It is characteristic of the system, however, that from first to last we are strictly limited to one chord, the triad; and even this combination is only permitted in two of its three available positions.* I am quite prepared to admit that in early exercises some restriction of this kind is highly desirable, but it is only reasonable to expect that when the student is able to deal satisfactorily with the simplest combinations, he should be gradually instructed in the application of contrapuntal principles to all chords in general use. With the triad, however, the system begins and ends, so that one who has practised the art for years, and has acquired a full knowledge of its details, is allowed no more freedom than the student of a few weeks' standing.

Let me not be understood as throwing contempt upon the use of simple chord formations. The triad is, and must ever remain, the best and most satisfactory harmonic combination. It is not only perfect in itself, but it is also the essential, firm, and solid basis of every existing fundamental chord. Its treatment should be the subject of special study, particularly at the outset of a student's career. Let us give it all the respect and attention which it deserves, but at the same time remember that a complete and satisfactory theory must deal with all the materials at command, and not merely with one combination, however important it may be.

The usual plan of writing Counterpoint in five distinct "orders" or "species" has much to recommend it. These orders, as I may remind you, are as follows:—(i.) Note against note, (ii.) Two notes to one, (iii.) Four notes to one, (iv.) Syncopation, (v.) Florid counterpoint. The amalgamation of the second and fourth "orders" has been strongly advocated, but this, in my opinion, can only be ventured upon with advantage after both have been practised independently.

Good examples of the first, third, and fifth "orders" of Counterpoint will be found in Mendelssohn's sixth organ sonata; there is a fine specimen of the second order in Bach's "Passion" (St. John), at the chorale "O Mighty King." I have been unable to find an instance of Counterpoint in the fourth order, except when used by amalgamation with others, and this seems to confirm the argument that it really has no separate existence. A very near approach to the continuous use of the fourth "order" will be found in the middle movement of Beethoven's Pianoforte Sonata in G, Op. 14, No. 2. It is to be regretted that so little attention is given to Counterpoint in triple time—three notes to one—since this form is undoubtedly one of great strength.

Familiar examples may be found in Mendelssohn's chorus, "But our God abideth in Heaven," from "St.

* The term "position" in not here used as implying the various methods of arranging the upper notes of a chord; it refers to the three harmonic positions of the triad $\frac{5}{3}$, $\frac{6}{3}$, $\frac{6}{4}$.

Digitized by Google

Paul," and in the same composer's chorus "Dogma datus Christianis," from the Church cantata, "Lauda Sion."

Reference has already been made to the dry and uninteresting character of the so-called "melodies" which are furnished to the student as the basis of his exercises. This peculiarity may be traced to three distinct causes :—(i.) the invariable use of notes of uniform length, (ii.) the neglect of all recognised principles of melodic form, (iii.) the fact that many of the ancient themes are constructed on scales which have long since been discarded. The student on being informed that all Counterpoint must be regarded from a melodic rather than from a harmonic standpoint, naturally turns to the themes supplied to him, expecting to find fulfilled in them all the conditions of a good and satisfactory melody. Am I overstating the case by asserting that in no single instance is this expectation realized? If any doubt exists on this point let reference be made to any Counterpoint text-book, and a slight study of the Canti Fermi thereon given, will probably convince the most sceptical. No wonder, indeed, that Counterpoint is voted "dull," and that little or no life can be infused into the dry bones of an art which, if judged by text-book theories, must be pronounced as extinct as the dodo!

I have refrained from noticing in detail the usual text-books on the subject of Counterpoint, because they will be found, on examination, to be merely reproductions of the well-known work of Cherubini. There is one exception, however, which is worthy of more than passing notice—I refer to Professor Macfarren's treatise, published in 1879. This work is generally supposed to represent a very decided advance upon the school of Cherubini, and it has been adopted as a teaching work by very many professors. A careful perusal will show, however, that the author had no intention of extending the study of Counterpoint beyond the limits previously assigned to it; indeed, at the outset he expresses a hope that the work may be found to contain "nothing new in fact."

On two points, however, we may notice a distinct advance. First as regards the rule for figuring two-part Counterpoint with the object of indicating the complete harmony; and, secondly, by providing rules for the proper treatment of the minor key. With these exceptions the work is a disappointing re-enactment of the old restrictions, and, like all previous text-books, fails to carry the student beyond the mere mechanical combination of intervals.

The matter contained in Chapter 17 (Counterpoint in the modern free style) is by far the most important part of the work, but even here we find many pedantic and wholly unnecessary restrictions. Further reference will presently be made to this work.

(To be continued).

At the annual general meeting of the Philharmonic Society held at Trinity College on Saturday, June 16th ult., the following gentlemen were elected honorary directors for the ensuing season :—Sir Julius Benedict, Mr. Francesco Berger, Mr. W. H. Cummings, Mr. Charles Gardner, Mr. George Mount, Mr. Charles E. Stephens and Mr. John Thomas. Honorary membership was bestowed upon Madame Sophie Menter and Senor Sarasate.

The love of rare fiddles seems not to languish. At the sale of violins of the late Joseph S. Hulse by Messrs. Puttick and Simpson on Monday week, the following lots realized high prices :—Lot 5, a violin by Joseph Guarnerius, 1738, £290; lot 7, a violin by Antonius Stradiuarius, 1687, known as the "Spanish Stradiuarius," £500; lot 13, a violin by Carlo Bergonzi, £90; lot 41, a violin by Joseph Guarnerius, 1739, £245; lot 104, a violin by Francesco Rugerius, stated to have been formerly the property of George IV., £330.

THE ÆSTHETIC EFFECT OF ALTERED KEY.

Some time ago I wrote with reference to the key of A minor as being curiously vigorous and brilliant, a favourite key; but here we have the great and fresh keys of E and A major coming in as auxiliaries. D minor I should describe rather as pathetic; with the power that belongs to simple pathos.*

With regard to B flat, which has E flat and F for auxiliaries, the casting vote is on my side. (Some time ago your Crystal Palace critic described Beethoven's B flat Symphony as perhaps the most Spring-like of all music :—toto coelo our votes would be together also as regards A minor. Another writer also considers B flat as "mellow and brilliant" (meaning, of course, in comparison with C, whatever the pitch of C may be.) With regard to Beethoven's colossal "Waldstein" (the first movement—that is Beethoven; and the too-brief Intermezzo) 'tis true it starts in the key of C—but how long does it keep in it? how soon does it not dash (or thunder) off into D minor, C minor, and other keys, some remote, ad lib.! The phrase "in the key," as applied to a movement, is often a slovenly conventionality—a great piece is in many keys—like some equatorial Alp shoring up and "bearing all the zones on its flanks." Au reste, I think we all agree rather than differ. Practically, pitch is key: va sans dire that so long as the pitch fluctuates there can be no fixing the absolute character of key. To quote from the same article (Mangi muss Gewisse Dinge wiederholen, says Goethe) "of course the effect is relative, and more apparent by comparison." Again: "On the other hand, on Beethoven's piano the key of D corresponded perhaps to that of our C; this proves that the effect is not absolute, nevertheless" (and here is the point) "it remained D to him as to us, perchance produced the same relative impression; his key of C being bald to him as it is to us, and D flat noble," &c. If our C were raised to C sharp, nevertheless the C sharp to that C, and the the keys of E and A, &c., would be relatively more brilliant, as now, on account of the pitch. Yes; but it may still be doubted whether the idea that there is something idiosyncratic in key itself is not rather a scientific (and therefore poetic) suspicion (Ahnung) than mere musician's fancy. A Helmholz alone can answer whether the timbre or idiomorphism (form of the air-wave) of each key differs as well as the pitch. Again, such a fact as this may "give us pause." The chord of C sounded in the key of G is nothing like so noble as in the key of A flat. Again, the so-termed "equal temperament" is (representatively) a compromise. It is not equal. A recent correspondent pointed out that the (slight) difference in the vibrating ratios would account for the difference in key-character.

One writer surely goes too far when he says the emotional effects (key affects our mood) are "not in any way caused by the key used as the medium." Let us take a test. If a bright and vigorous thought (I almost want a new word to express what a musical idea is—it is thought and feeling—and often picture—in one) "came into his head," as the little ones say, would the same writer employ natural selection in his key, or not? Would he write it in C minor, or C or D? Would he not write it in E or A, for example. Why did Ernst choose C minor for his feeling "Elégie"? Is the unapproachable "Dead March" in "Saul" grander in D or C?—in which key I have seen it sold. Mendelssohn's "Wedding March" actually begins (less the trumpet notes) not in C, but with that grand crash in B. Nevertheless, once more we agree rather than differ, "The time being the same, a noble or pathetic melody will remain so in whatever key, almost in whatever octave. The music is, of course, infinitely more important than the key," (as it is than the fiddlesticks) "difference in key is not of vital, but æsthetic importance." It may be compared, perhaps, like Rhyme, to style and manners; it is something like what Style is to Thought (the suaviter in modo fortius in re) Manners to Character.

* It would, however, be easy enough to write vigorous music in D minor. Scarlatti's Fugue in D minor is an instance that the musical world will not willingly let die. Beethoven's first movement in his "Tempest" Sonata Op. 31) is an essence of path etic power.

Digitized by Google

It must be reflected, that when a key is termed brilliant, vigorous, expressive, &c., it is meant by comparison, especially with C; not "in itself," for "the great globe itself" is but an island, the home of a family, and in it all beings and things are related. Nothing is, in, or by itself; nothing would have meaning so, for the same reason—that of infinite consanguinity—the intentions and phrases of poetic perception which apprehends allusion and seizes relation in all things, not least in colour, fragrance, and tone, are not lightly to be nicknamed "fudge" (by the Philistine it might be related—it is a hazardous thing to call names). It is certain that many would likewise select their key according to their music; though, undoubtedly, nobody ever dreamt of the contrary; the brilliance, pathos, power, beauty, &c., belong infinitely more to the music than to the key. The key only enhances, delicately contributes—powerfully contributes, if we are to call the minor mode the minor key. The Coryphæus of modern orchestration gives an elaborate list of the keys according to their character. Alloyed as Berlioz's inspiration was by insanity, he was nevertheless a judge on this point. But half the positions are already conceded, by the opponents of the chromatic or picturesque terminology. They grant that "in the orchestra" one thinks of Hamlet with Hamlet left out; keys are bright and vigorous according to the open strings (they might add, and the favourite keys of the wind and wood-wind); and they allow that the practical tuning of the household orchestra, the pianoforte, occasions slight (quite enough) difference in key character. They also grant that pitch affects character—Ecco! This is all that is demanded; and Mendelssohn will eternally be allowed to have shown an exquisite instinct in having selected the key of E for his "Midsummer Night's Dream" Overture; Beethoven an inspired one in selecting C minor for his Fifth and A for his Seventh Symphonies—those colossal revelations of the soul and heart of man.

Correspondence.

THE SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY AND THE LIBRARY MONEY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "MUSICAL STANDARD."

SIR,—One is glad to see that the question as to the disposal of the money the members of the Sacred Harmonic Society have received for the sale of their splendid library, has now been formally brought before the public. It is indeed no private affair, but one of general interest, the donors of the books having practically given them for the use of all musical students, and not for an exclusive few to turn into money and retain for their own benefit. The writer of your article on the subject last week comments severely on the questionable morality of the proceeding, and asks the pertinent question, as to what is proposed to be done with the money so received. It should be known that this matter has already been considerably discussed among the members themselves, and it is believed that few of them wish to retain the money which has thus accidentally come into their possession. On the contrary, it is generally felt that it should be devoted to some scheme that will benefit the art, and aid in the cause of spreading a love of good music among the people. Hitherto, such talk has been desultory and purposeless, chiefly for the reason that no recognised leader has placed himself at the head of the movement to formulate a definite scheme, and also because the members have not been formally called together to consider the matter. Give them time and opportunity, and the public will find that they are not all greedy of gain and selfish. They are quite ready to recognise the responsibility that has been cast upon them, and doubtless will do their duty in accordance with the fair fame and healthy traditions of the old society. It has been suggested that a thousand pounds should be given to the new Royal College of Music, and a similar sum to the Royal Academy; at both these institutions scholarships could thus be founded in remembrance of the Sacred Harmonic Society. If sufficient funds were returned, the claims of the Royal Society of Musicians, the College of Organists, and sundry other kindred associations would not be overlooked. Mr. D. Hill, the President of the Society, should lose no time in calling his members together, and I have little doubt but that a hearty response would be given to any scheme that a committee, appointed by the members, would put forth. The public should know that at the dissolution, there were certain liabilities that had to be provided for. As to the dissatisfaction which was rife in some quarters respecting the large amount of £500 voted to one officer, the thing has been done, and it is useless to comment further on it. And the same may be said as to the threat of an application for a mandamus by some old members who had left the society before the division took place. They contend, perhaps with some justice, that as some of the books were purchased out of the profits of concerts at which they formerly sung, that therefore they should share in the division. Legally the rules are against them, but no doubt they have a sort of moral claim. The question as to what is to be done with the Benevolent Fund, amounting to upwards of £4,000, and who are going to take this, will probably prove a troublesome one to settle satisfactorily.

Yours truly,
S. M. EAGLETON.

Passing Events.

Herr Hans Richter has left London for Vienna.

The Musical Examinations in connection with the College of Preceptors were this Midsummer conducted as before by Dr. Westbrook and Mr. E. H. Turpin.

Students' concerts of an interesting character were on the list of Royal Academy of Music engagements, and the prize distribution takes place on July 28th.

"Silver Rock," a musical comedy, written by Sam. V. Steele, of Chicago, Ill., for Miss St. Quinten, was produced for the first time on any stage at the Pickwick Garden, St. Louis, U.S.A., June 11.

The College of Organists' examination took place on July 10, 11 and 12. A large number of candidates presented themselves. A list of passed candidates will be given next week.

The examinations at Trinity College have been numerously attended, and have occupied several days during the past week. A list of successful candidates will be duly presented to our readers.

The Prince of Wales caused to be conveyed to Mr. Julian Adams's his appreciation of the music provided by Mr. Adams' orchestra on the occasion of the recent Royal visit to Eastbourne.

The number of competitors entered for the National Eisteddfod at Cardiff number no less than 3,000 for musical prizes, &c., and some 500 for the literature and art prizes.

The new Westminster Town Hall will be opened on the 19th by the Duke of Buccleuch, K.G. The room will doubtless be of great use for musical purposes. London is greatly in need of convenient and sufficiently spacious concert-rooms.

A window to the memory of the late Mr. James Turle has just been placed in the musicians' corner, close to the grave of Croft, at Westminster Abbey. It is by Clayton and Bell, and is the gift of the late organist's son, Mr. J. R. Turle. A portrait of Mr. Turle is inserted.

Herr Schalkenbach is now giving the visitors to the Crystal Palace an opportunity of seeing to what a variety of purposes electricity may be applied. The agent he employs—his own invention—is designated "The Orchestre Militaire, or Electro-Moteur," and by means of it almost all the most modern developments of electricity are applied to musical science and to much less euphonious uses. The invention, which about twenty years ago was shown in its original crude form to the Emperor Louis Napoleon, and appears to have been receiving improvements ever since, is a combination of the organ, the harmonium, and the piano, and various percussion instruments employed to produce military and other effects are so placed under the hands of the performer that he can easily use them without any interruption to his playing. Thus at intervals round the front of the theatre gallery different kinds of apparatus produced under the influence of keys or pedals the playing of musical bells, the blowing of a row of trumpets, the grating sound of a mitrailleuse in battle, the firing of pistols and guns, the rotation of an electric railway, the lunar lighting up of clouds, and other phenomena. It would be difficult to decide whether the military or the orchestral effects are most surprising.

Digitized by Google

Mason and Hamlin have sent Liszt a cabinet organ for the use of the music school at Weimar.

The Council of the Scottish Musical Society have postponed the opening of the new Academy of Music till next year. A sum of about £4,000 will be required to meet the liabilities of the first four years, and nearly two-thirds of this has been already subscribed.

Dr. Walmisley, M.A., of Cambridge, it is said upon the best authority, possessed an autograph MS. copy of Mendelssohn's three Preludes and Fugues. It so happened that the great composer of "Elijah" lost his own copy and re-wrote the whole work from memory. Wonderful to tell, the new copy corresponded almost note for note with the original as possessed by Dr. Walmisley, save that in the C minor Fugue the new copy had a bar less towards the end than had the first version.

The Tonic Sol-fa Reporter says that it has been decided to repeat the Stratford Musical Festival next spring. No details are fixed, but the advisability has been discussed of adding to the scheme prizes for choirs from elementary schools, and for adult elementary singing classes, the award in these classes to depend equally upon sight-singing and upon good performance. A special pianoforte class for married ladies has been proposed, as it is considered that they are handicapped in the race with girls whose whole time is devoted to study.

Miss Mabel Bourne's matinée musicale took place on Tuesday, 10th July, at the Glendover Mansions, South Kensington, before a crowded and fashionable audience. The well arranged programme was carried out to the letter. The clever young pianist played Bach's Prelude and Fugue à la Tarantelle in A minor, Chopin's Valse in F, Nocturne in E flat and Etude in C sharp minor, and from her own pen "Three Sketches" previously already favourably noticed. She was assisted in Rubinstein's Trio in B flat, Op. 52 for piano, violin and violoncello by Messrs. Polonaski and Whitehouse, the latter two artists playing each a solo by Vieuxtemps and Popper respectively. The trio, a very intricate composition, was a masterpiece of ensemble playing and secured the greatest attention and general applause. The vocalists were Miss Agnese Thorndike, Mdme. Polonaski, and Mr. Jos. Tapley, whose artistic merits are already well known. Miss Thorndike had a special success in a new song, "Springtide," by Mdme. Polonaski, a very poetical and well written composition, and Mr. Tapley sang with great effect Miss Mabel Bourne's previously well criticised song "My Lady Queen."

The thousandth anniversary of the foundation of the Parish Church at Chester-le-Street, near Durham, will be commemorated by a series of festival services on Wednesday, July 18th, and four following days. The anthems, to be performed by a choir of about fifty voices, will be Sir F. Ouseley's "It came even to pass," Dr. Boyce's "I have surely built thee an house," Mendelssohn's 95th Psalm, "Come, let us sing," and a new anthem, "O God, thou hast cast us out," which has been composed for the occasion by Mr. Arthur Prendergast (whose Te Deum obtained last year the prize offered by the London Church Choir Association), and will be sung on the first and fourth days of the Festival; the words having been chosen by the Rector, the Rev. W. O. Blunt, Honorary Canon of Durham, with special reference to the history of this Church, which was founded A.D. 883, by the Monks of Lindisfarne, who, cast out of their establishment by the Danes, wandered about for some years and eventually re-settled themselves at Chester-le-Street, whither they brought the body of S. Cuthbert, and where the Cathedral of the North was established for 113 years. Another feature of the festival will be an organ recital, to be given by Dr. Armes, of Durham, at the service of Friday evening, the 21st inst.

The Querist.

QUERY.

ANALYSIS.—Is there any work specially dealing with analysis? I want one to help trace the chords and progressions of classical works, as well as their form.—SLOW AND SURE.

Service Lists.

EIGHTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

JULY 15th.

London.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Selby in A; Introit, Three in One, and One in Three; Holy Communion, Alwyn in C. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Selby in A; Anthems, Remember Lord, and, L ord before Thy footstool bending (Spohr).

WESTMINSTER ABBEY. — Morn.: Service, Smart in F; Even.: Service, Smart in F; Anthem, The wilderness (Wesley).

FOUNDLING CHAPEL. — Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Smart in F; Anthem, Hear my crying (Hummel). Aft.: Service, Chants and Hymns.

TEMPLE CHURCH.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum Laudamus, and Benedictus, Hopkins in F; Apostles' Creed, Harmonised Monotone; Anthem, Hear my prayer (Mendelssohn). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Stainer in A; Apostles' Creed, Harmonized Monotone; Anthem, Blessed be the God and Father (Wesley).

LINCOLN'S INN CHAPEL.—Morn.: Service, Boyce in A; Kyrie, Distin; Anthem, O give thanks unto the Lord (Greene). Even: Service, Arnold in A; Anthem, His salvation is nigh them that fear Him (Bennett).

CHRIST CHURCH, CLAPHAM.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Plain-song; Kyrie and Credo, Mozart in B flat; Offertory Anthem, I will magnify Thee, O God (Goss); Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei, and Gloria in excelsis (Mozart). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Tours in F; Anthem, Lead kindly light (Stainer).

HOLY TRINITY, TULSE HILL. — Morn.: Chant Service. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Stainer in A; Anthem, The heavens declare (Boyce).

ST. BARNABAS, MARYLEBONE.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Hopkins in F; Anthem, If we believe that Jesus died (Goss); Kyrie and Creed (Merbecke). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Hopkins in F; Anthem, Rejoice in the Lord (Purcell).

ST. MAGNUS, LONDON BRIDGE.—Morn.: Service, Opening Anthem, to the Lord our God (Calkin); Te Deum and Jubilate, Whitefield in F; Kyrie, (Armes). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Whitfield in F; Anthem, O taste and see (Goss).

ST. MARGARET PATTENS, ROOD LANE, FENCHURCH STREET.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Smart in F; Benedictus, Dykes in F; Communion Service: Offertory Anthem, Cast thy Burden (Mendelssohn); Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, and Agnus Dei Mozart in B flat; Gloria, Schubert in F. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Tuckermann in F; Anthem, Praise the Lord, O my soul (Goss).

ST. MARY BOLTONS, WEST BROMPTON, S.W.—Morn.: Service, Hopkins in G; Holy Communion, Kyrie, Credo, Offertory, Sanctus, and Gloria in excelsis, Stainer in E flat; Benedictus and Agnus Dei, Going in F. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Hopkins in F; Anthem, Stand up and bless the Lord (Goss).

ST. PAUL'S, AVENUE ROAD, SOUTH HAMPSTEAD.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Sullivan in D; Benedictus, Goss; Kyrie, Tours in F; Offertory, Barnby; Credo, Sanctus, and Gloria in excelsis, Tours in F. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Arnold in A; Anthem, God is a Spirit, "Woman of Samaria" (Bennett).

ST. PAUL'S, BOW COMMON, E.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Chants; Holy Communion, Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, and Gloria in excelsis, Smart in F; Benedictus and Agnus Dei, Veulham in F; Offertory (Calkin). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Parry in D; Anthem, O where shall wisdom be found (Boyce).

ST. PETER'S (EATON SQUARE).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Sergison in A. Even.: Service, Tours in F; Anthem, As pants the hart (Spohr).

ST. PETER'S, LEIGHAM COURT ROAD, STREATHAM, S.W.—Morn.: Service, Holy Eucharist, Purge me with hyssop (Chantwise); Introit, We wait (Chantwise); Mass, E. A. Sutton in F; Gradual, Be Thou (Chantwise); Offertory, Charge them (Barnby); Communion and Post Communion. Even.: Service, Magnificat, Agutter in D; Anthem, Lead, kindly light (Stainer).

ST. PETER'S, VERE STREET, W.—Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Wood in F; Anthem, The Lord is with thee (Osborne)

Digitized by Google

ST. JAMES'S PRIVATE EPISCOPAL CHAPEL, SOUTHWARK.—Morn.: Service, Introit, God my King (Bach); Communion Service, Nares and Garrett in F. Even.: Service, Stanford in B flat; Anthem, O Lamb of God (Mozart).

ST. MICHAEL'S, CORNHILL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Boyce in A; Anthem, I will wash my hands in innocency (Hopkins); Kyrie, and Creed, Thorne in E flat. Even. Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Thorne in E flat; Anthems, Thou will keep him in perfect peace (Wesley).

ST. SEPULCHRE'S, HOLBORN.—Morn: Service, Sullivan in D; Credo, Lott in F; Anthem, I will sing (Greene). Even.: Service, Gibbons in F; Anthem, Then shall the righteous (Mendelssohn).

Country.

ST. ASAPH CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Colbrne in C; Anthem, Thou wilt keep him (Calkin). Even.: Service, The Litany; Anthem, O come let us worship (Mendelssohn).

ASHBURNE CHURCH, DERBYSHIRE.—Morn.: Service, Field in D; Kyrie, Credo and Gloria, Garrett in D. Even.: Service, Field in D; Anthem, The Lord is exalted (West).

BEDDINGTON CHURCH, SURREY.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Boyce in A; Benedictus, Tuckermann in F; Communion Service, Smee in E. Even.: Service, Ebdon in C; Anthem, Praise the Lord, O my soul (Buny).

BIRMINGHAM (S. ALBAN THE MARTYR).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Dykes in F; Holy Communion; Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Gloria, Garrett in D; Benedictus and Agnus Dei, Redman in D. Evensong: Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Tours in F.

BIRMINGHAM (ST. CYPRIAN'S, HAY MILLS).—Morn.: Service, Field in D; Anthem, Sing, O heavens (Kent). Even.: Service, Cobb in D; Anthem, Plead Thou my cause (Mozart).

BIRMINGHAM (S. PHILIP'S CHURCH).—Morn.: Service, (Best); Chant Service; Holy Communion, Barnby in E; Evensong Service (Best); Chant Service; Anthem, O give thanks (Rea).

BRISTOL CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Attwood in D; Even.: Service, Attwood in D; Anthem, O God, when Thou appearest (Mozart).

CANTERBURY CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Calkin in B flat; Anthem, Behold now praise the Lord (Rogers); Communion, Calkin in B flat. Even.: Service, Calkin in B flat; Anthem, Behold the Lamb of God (Handel).

CARLISLE CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Selby in A; Introit, Blessed is the man (Stainer); Kyrie, Selby in A; Nicene Creed, Harmonised Monotone. Even.: Service, Selby in A; Anthem, O give thanks (Purcell).

DUBLIN, ST. PATRICK'S (NATIONAL) CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Stanford in B flat; Holy Communion, Kyrie, Creed, and Sanctus, Stanford in B flat; Anthem, Hear my prayer (Mendelssohn). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Stanford in B flat; Anthems, Above him stood the Seraphim (Mendelssohn), and, I have surely built Thee an house (Boyce).

ELY CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Walmisley in F; Kyrie and Credo, Walmisley in F; Gloria, Cambridge in C; Anthem, Teach me, O Lord (Atwood). Even.: Service, Attwood in F; Anthem, Wherewithal (Elvey).

HARROGATE (ST. PETER'S CHURCH).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, (Helmore); Benedictus, Chants; Anthem, The Lord is my strength (Monk); Kyrie and Credo, Tours in F. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Turle in D; Anthem, The Lord shall preserve, and, Blessed is the man "Mount Moriah" (Bridge).

LICHFIELD CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Boyce in C; Anthem, Rejoice in the Lord (Purcell). Even: Service, Walmisley in D minor; Anthem, O Where shall wisdom (Boyce).

LLANDAFF CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Prout in F; Introit, Ponder my words (Gadsby); Holy Communion, Prout in F. Even.: Service, The Litany; Anthem, Blessed is the man (Goss).

LIVERPOOL CATHEDRAL.—Aft.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Burstall in D; Anthem, Ascribe unto the Lord (Travers).

MANCHESTER CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, King in F; Kyrie, Creed, Sanctus and Gloria, Ross in G; Anthem, Come unto me (Smith). Aft.: Service, King in F; Anthem, Send out Thy light (Gounod).

MANCHESTER (ST. BENEDICT'S).—Morn.: Service, Kyrie; Credo, and Gloria in excelsis, Stainer in A; Sanctus, Benedictus, and Agnus Dei, Guilmant in E flat. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Bunnett in F.

MANCHESTER (ST. JOHN BAPTIST, HULME).—Morn.: Service, Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus and Gloria in excelsis, Steggall in G; Benedictus and Agnus Dei, Eyre in E flat. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, (Gregorian).

MUSSELBURGH (LORETTO SCHOOL).—Morn.: Service, Introit, Incline Thine ear (Himmell); Communion Service, Stainer in E flat; Anthem, Plead Thou my cause (Mozart). Even.: Service, Anthem, The Heavens are telling "Creation" (Haydn).

ROCHESTER CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Cooke in G; Chant and Jubilate in C; Anthem, O Lord, my God. Even.: Service, Cooke in G; Anthem, Praise the Lord (Hayes).

SHEFFIELD PARISH CHURCH.—Morn.: Service, Kyrie, Trimnell in F; Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Chants; Anthem, They that go down to the Sea (Attwood).

SHERBORNE ABBEY.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Chants; Kyrie, Mendelssohn in E flat; Offertories (Barnby). Even.: Service, Anthem, Blessed be Thou (Kent).

SOUTHAMPTON (ST. MARY'S CHURCH).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Woodward in D; Holy Communion; Introit, Jesus said (Stainer); Service, Stainer in E flat; Offertory, Not every one, and, While we have time (Stainer); Benedictus and Agnus Dei, Agutter in B flat; Paternoster, (Hoyte). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Spark in D; Apostles' Creed, Harmonized Monotone; Anthem, The radiant morn hath passed away (Woodward).

SOUTHWELL MINSTER, NOTTS.—Morn.: Service, Gates in F; Kyrie, Mendelssohn in D; Creed, Goss in D; Sanctus and Gloria, Elvey in F. Even.: Service, Arnold in F; Anthem, Let the righteous be glad (Arnold).

WELLS CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Garrett in D; Introit, Blessed is the man (Stainer). Even.: Service, Garrett in D; Anthem, Praise the Lord (Croft).

WORCESTER CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Hatton in E; Kyrie, Creed and Sanctus, Wesley in E; Anthem, All glory to the Lamb (Spohr). Even.: Service, Hatton in E; Anthem, Why rage fiercely the heathen (Mendelssohn).

APPOINTMENT.

Mr. GEORGE FLETCHER (pupil of Mr. Arthur Marriott, Organist of Southwell Minster), has been appointed Organist of All Saints Church, Stamford.

ERRATUM.—Line two, page six, read Mr. Sedley Taylor.

 Post-cards must be sent to the Editor, 6, Argyle Square, W.C., by Wednesday. Lists are frequently omitted in consequence of not being received in time.

NEWSPAPERS sent should have distinct marks opposite to the matter to which attention is required.

NOTICE.—All communications intended for the Editor are to be sent to his private address. Business communications to be addressed to 185, Fleet Street, E.C.

HENRY SPEECHLY,
CAMDEN ORGAN STEAM FACTORY,
KING'S ROAD, ST. PANCRAS, LONDON, N.W.
ESTABLISHED 1860.

Specifications and Estimates for Organs of any Magnitude, also for Reconstructions, Repairs, and Re-voicing.

Tunings contracted for, and Tuners sent to all parts of the Country at regular intervals or when required.

ORGANS ON HIRE WITH OPTION OF PURCHASE.

 Church, Chamber, and Chancel Organs for Sale or Hire; One or Two Manuals. Ready for immediate use. Easy Terms if required.

☞ All Pipes and other Parts manufactured on the Premises.

BEETHOVEN'S SYMPHONIES CRITICALLY DISCUSSED. By A. T. TEETGEN. 3s. 6d.

FREDERIC CHOPIN; His Life, Letters, and Works. By M. KARASOWSKI. Translated by E. HILL. 2 vols., 12s. 6d.

ELEMENTARY MUSIC. By Dr. WESTBROOK. 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

TO ORGANISTS and CHOIRMASTERS.—VOCAL EXERCISES for CHOIRS and SCHOOLS, by Dr. WESTBROOK, in neat cover, 2d.

WOMAN AS A MUSICIAN, an Art Historical Study. By F. RAYMOND RITTER. Price One Shilling.

TO PIANOFORTE TEACHERS.—Plaidy's (professor at Leipzig Conservatory) PIANOFORTE TEACHER'S GUIDE can be had in boards, price 1s.

FACTS about FIDDLES.—Violins Old and New, by JOHN BROADHOUSE. Price 6d.; by post, 6½d.

W. REEVES Fleet Street, London.

Digitized by Google

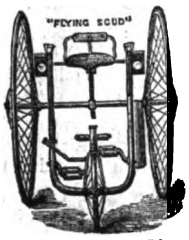
BICYCLES AND TRICYCLES.
NEW AND SECOND-HAND.



"FLYING SCUD" and "ECLECTIC" TRICYCLES, are the Machines for 1883. Spoken of by the Daily News of January 30th as "Splendid machines." "NANCY LEE," Weldless Steel," and "NONSUCH" Steel Bicycles, from £5 5s. Any machine at maker's price for twelve or less equal monthly payments, or for £5 down and 20s. per month, or large discount and carriage paid for cash. Can be seen and tried before purchasing in our school (60 by 40, concrete floor, tuition free), adjoining Show-rooms, the largest in London, with over 400 new and second-hand on View. Machines bought, sold, cleaned, repaired (estimates given), warehoused, advanced upon and exchanged.

Illustrated Lists post free. Hours 9 till 7; Saturdays till 4.

Repairs of all kinds neatly, cheaply, and promptly executed. Cheapest house in the trade for fittings. Parts and sundries of all descriptions kept in stock.

Machines Let on Hire with Option of Purchase.

SOUTH LONDON MACHINISTS' COMPANY.

STEAM WORKS: Suffolk Works, Suffolk Grove, Great Suffolk Street, S.E. Show Rooms and Offices: 28 and 29, Suffolk Grove. Bicycle and Tricycle School: 18, Suffolk Grove. City Depot, Show Rooms, and School: Tower Chambers, Moorgate Street, E.C. (Nearly opposite Moorgate Street Station.) PERAMBULATORS and all Domestic Machines at lowest prices for cash, or on easy terms without extra charge. Lists free. State kind required.

ESTABLISHED 1872.

When writing please say where you saw this advertisement.

T. R. WILLIS,

Organ Builder, Metal & Wood Pipe Maker and Voicer,

TOWER ORGAN WORKS, 29, MINORIES, LONDON.

AN ORGAN KEPT FOR PRACTICE.

REBUILDING, TUNING, AND REPAIRING.

E & W. SNELL,

Manufacturers of Harmoniums, and Reed Pedal Organs,

KING STREET NORTH, CAMDEN TOWN, LONDON, N.W.

NOTE.—These are the only Instruments at which an Organist can really find himself "at home," as all Scales, Positions, and Measurements are adopted strictly in accordance with the Resolutions of the Council of the College of Organists. Estimates free.

MALEY, YOUNG & OLDKNOW,
ORGAN BUILDERS,

KING'S ROAD, ST. PANCRAS, LONDON, N.W.

Specifications, Estimates, and Designs for Church, Chamber, Concert, and all Descriptions of Organs.
Materials, Workmanship, and Tone guaranteed to be First Class.
Organs rebuilt to suit any position, enlarged, and Revoiced at very moderate charges.
Tunings in all parts of the Kingdom.

PROSPECTUS FREE ON APPLICATION.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts, excepting under exceptional circumstances.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit, at Three per cent. interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables, the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons, and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares, and Annuities.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

The Birkbeck Building Society's Annual Receipts exceed Five Millions.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with immediate Possession, and no Rent to Pay.—Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate Possession, either for Building or Gardening purposes.—Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

WITH 25 PER CENT DISCOUNT FOR CASH
OR 15/- PER MONTH.
SECOND HAND 10/6 Per Month
ON THE 3 YEARS' SYSTEM
BORD'S PIANOS
PIANOS EXCHANGED
LISTS FREE OF
C. STILES & Co. 42 SOUTHAMPTON ROW W.C.

CONSTANT LAURENT, HARMONIUM and ANGLO-ORGAN MANUFACTURER, Established in 1859 at 85, HIGH STREET, MARYLEBONE, LONDON, W.—Repairing and Tuning Executed Promptly. Price List on Application.—Intending Purchasers are respectfully solicited to inspect my Instruments and Factory.

EUSTACE INGRAM, Organ Builder,

Combines excellence of Tone and Workmanship with Economy.

INSPECTION INVITED.

WORKS:—Burnard Place, Eden Grove, Holloway, London, N.

"HARMONY SIMPLIFIED."

A Concise Treatise on Harmony, Thorough Bass, and Modulation, for the Use of Students. By FARLEY NEWMAN. In paper cover, 1s. 6d. net; bound in cloth, 2s. 6d. net.

"THE ORGAN OLIO."

Edited by ARTHUR HENRY BROWN. A Collection of Short Pieces for the Organ or Harmonium, by various Composers. 2s. net.

London: B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster-row, E.C.

MUSIC SENT ON SALE OR RETURN on highly advantageous terms by

B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster-row, London.

MUSIC of EVERY PUBLISHER supplied to Dealers, Teachers, and Schools. Having the largest varied Stock Europe. The terms, which are highly advantageous, sent on application

London: B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster-row.

ALL WHO POSSESS A PIANOFORTE and canot play it, may now play at once, without any previous knowledge of Music, by ROYLANCE'S NUMERICAL SYSTEM, which contains a FIGURED DIAGRAM to fit on the Keyboard of any Pianoforte (or Harmonium, and a choice selection of forty SACRED and SECULAR MELODIES, composed for the use of those who have no time to study Music. Thousands are now able to play who did not believe such a thing possible. The diagram alone will be found most useful to Professors for teaching purposes. 6d. nett.—Price 2s. 6d. nett; post free 33 stamps.—C. ROYLANCE, 184, Tottenham Court-road; and all Music Sellers.

SYDNEY SMITH'S
FOUR NEW PIANOFORTE PIECES.

LA FEE DES ONDES.	Morceau brilliant ...	4 0
LE DOMINO NOIR.	Fantaisie brillante sur l'opéra d'Auber	4 0
MARGUERITE.	Chanson d'une fileuse	4 0
STYRIENNE	... ...	4 0

SYDNEY SMITH'S
FOUR NEW PIANOFORTE DUETS.

GAVOTTE ET MUSETTE	... ...	5 0
I PIFFERARI.	Musette moderne	5 0
LOHENGRIN.	Grande Fantaisie sur l'opéra de R. Wagner	6 0
NONCHALANCE.	Caprice de Concert	5 0

LONDON:

EDWIN ASHDOWN, Hanover-square.

Printed for the Proprietor by BOWDEN, HUDSON & Co., at 23, Red Lion Street, Holborn, London, W.C.; and Published by WILLIAM REEVES, at the Office, 185, Fleet Street, E.C. West End Agents:—WEEKES & CO., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W. Subscriptions and Advertisements are received either by the Publisher or West End Agents.—Communications for the EDITOR are to be forwarded to his private address, 6, Argyle Square, W.C

SATURDAY, JULY 21, 1883.—Entered at the General Post Office as a Newspaper.

Digitized by Google

THE MUSICAL STANDARD

A NEWSPAPER FOR MUSICIANS PROFESSIONAL AND AMATEUR

No. 991. Vol. XXV. FOURTH SERIES. SATURDAY, JULY 28, 1883. WEEKLY: PRICE 3D.

MUSICAL INTERNATIONAL COLLEGE, LONDON.

Founded for Examining purposes only.

Principal—EDWIN M. LOTT.

PRACTICAL EXAMINATIONS in INSTRUMENTAL and VOCAL MUSIC throughout the kingdom, conducted personally by the Principal. Next LOCAL, THEORETICAL EXAMINATION, DECEMBER, 1883.

For particulars, address SECRETARY, Musical International College, 270, Cornwall Road, Notting Hill, W.

TO THE PROFESSION.—By the advice of his physicians MR. WILLIAM LEMARE is compelled to seek absolute rest, and in consequence wishes to DISPOSE of his long-established PRACTICE at BRIXTON, together with his ORCHESTRAL and CHORAL SOCIETIES. This being one of the most flourishing suburbs, it will be an admirable opportunity for any gentlemen wishing to be near London. To this is added the Surrey County School of Music, which is rapidly growing. The School is held in the Gresham Hall, and this Hall, which is the property of Mr. Lemare, can also be purchased.—For full particulars apply to MR. STEDMAN, Musical Agency, 12, Berners Street, London, W.

ORGAN APPOINTMENT and TEACHING PRACTICE for DISPOSAL (Country).—A gentleman giving up his present situation and practice is desirous of meeting with a competent professor to succeed him immediately (not later than the 18th August next). Church salary, £100 a year; teaching about £200, which could be increased. Three manual organ; Cathedral services; surpliced choir. Duties light. Two services on Sundays, and one weekly practice. Lowest price, cash down, £100.—Address, in first instance, R. A. M., care of Mr. T. Holmes, 10, Linden Grove, Peckham, London.

WANTED, a VIOLIN ASSISTANT, must be a good performer. Salary from £120.—Address T. RUSSE, Tiverton, Devon.

THE ORGANIST of the PARISH CHURCH, TIVERTON, DEVON, offers his HOUSE to anyone who will take his duties during August. Magnificent organ. Beautiful scenery.—Address, T. RUSSE, Tiverton, Devon.

ASSISTANT REQUIRED by a PROFESSIONAL GENTLEMAN in Devonshire. Must be able to PLAY and TEACH VIOLIN well, and thoroughly competent in other branches. £100 per annum assured, with opportunities of adding to income.—For further particulars apply to MR. STEDMAN, Musical Agency, 12, Berners Street, London, W.

LLANDAFF CATHEDRAL.—TENOR WANTED, £40 a year. Duties include Service at 5 p.m. on week-days.—Write at first, with references, to THE SUCCENTOR, Minor Canonries, Llandaff.

NEW ORGAN PIECE, by M. GUILMANT.—SPOHR'S 24th PSALM (English words), 9d. and 2s. Ditto arranged for Organ Solo by M. GUILMANT, 1s. 6d.

London: NOVELLO, EWER & CO.

NOW READY.

HARMONIES OF TONES AND COLOURS DEVELOPED BY EVOLUTION.

BY F. J. HUGHES,

With fifteen comprehensive diagrams printed in colours, cloth, blocked in gold and colours, bevelled edges, folio size.

PRICE 25s.

MARCUS WARD & CO., 67 and 68, Chandos Street, W.C.; and at Belfast and New York.

FACTS about FIDDLES.—Violins Old and New, by JOHN BROADHOUSE. Price 6d.; by post, 6½d.

ART of MODULATION: Handbook, showing at a glance the Modulations from one Key to any other in the Octave, for Orgaists and Musical Directors. 2s. 6d., paper; 4s., cloth.

ART IN EARNEST; or, Wagner and no End. An Essay on the "Meistersinger," and the "Nibelungen Ring." By B. F. WYATT-SMITH. Price 6d.

W. REEVES, 185, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

MAKERS AND REPAIRERS.

GEORGE WITHERS & CO.

(Late of Coventry Street),

WHOLESALE IMPORTERS OF

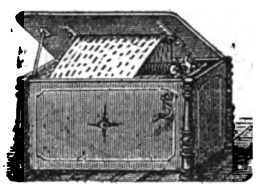
MUSICAL STRINGS,

From Rome, Padua, and Naples.

A FINE COLLECTION OF ITALIAN INSTRUMENTS.

Bows, Cases, Music Stands, &c. See Price Lists.

51, ST. MARTIN'S LANE, LONDON.



ORCHESTRIONETTES,

Ehrlich's Patent.

Are the greatest invention of modern times in the sphere of mechanical Music Works! It is only necessary to put in a note, made of fine pasteboard, in order to play a new piece. The smaller instruments suffice as accompaniment to dance music. The larger ones can be used IN PLACE OF AN ORGAN.

Preparatory knowledge not necessary; therefore the instruments can be sent to any part of the world. Large number of Notes, suitable for all countries, always on hand. Extra Notes made to order, after supplied originals, at any time. Please send orders to any dealer in musical instruments.

Commission allowed to Dealers.

FABRIK LEIPZIGER MUSIKWERKE VORM. PAUL EHRLICH & CO., ZU GOHLIS BEI LEIPZIG (GERMANY).

THE STUDENT'S HELMHOLTZ.

MUSICAL ACOUSTICS,

OR

THE PHENOMENA OF SOUND AS CONNECTED WITH MUSIC,

With Examination Questions and over 100 Illustrations,

BY JOHN BROADHOUSE.

Price 7s. 6d. net.

London: WILLIAM REEVES, 185, Fleet-street.

HANDEL'S FIRST ORGAN CONCERTO, with Orchestral Accompaniment, as performed at the Handel Festival, Crystal Palace, edited, arranged, and supplemented with a Cadenza by W. T. BEST. Organ Score, 1s. 6d.; Orchestra Parts, 2s.; complete, 2s. 6d. nett.—AUGENER & CO., 86, Newgate Street, Foubert's Place, and 81, Regent Street, London.

PRIZE TUNES and CHANTS.—THREE PRIZES for the BEST TUNES in the order of merit. See the "ORCHESTRA, CHOIR, AND MUSICAL EDUCATION," for April, May, June, and July, price 3d.

W. REEVES, 185, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

INTERNATIONAL FISHERIES EXHIBITION.—ORGAN RECITALS daily, upon the fine-toned Organ, in West Gallery. Supplied to the Executive Committee by HENRY JONES & SONS, 136, Fulham Road, South Kensington.

THE ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER of Cirencester Abbey desires RE-ENGAGEMENT. 14 years' Cathedral experience.—Address as above.

Digitized by Google

"COUNTERPOINT."

BY H. J. STARK, MUS.BAC.

A Paper read before the College of Organists, on May 1st, 1883.

(Continued from page 28.)

Having ventured to challenge the expediency of many contrapuntal rules, I must expect to be called upon for some tangible proof of their inaccuracy. This can be easily supplied, but in order to make my position perfectly clear I must ask your indulgence whilst I set before you a few necessarily dry, but I hope not uninteresting, technical details.

Cherubini's rules for the construction of Counterpoint in two parts may here be examined with advantage.

Rule I. provides that the commencement and close must be in perfect concord. Whilst admitting the more satisfactory effect of a termination upon the tonic, there is absolutely no justification for disallowing a commencement upon the third of the key-note chord. Instances of good and satisfactory melodies beginning in this way are so common that it is unnecessary to quote an illustration.

Rule II.:—"The parts should progress always by concords." Now, bearing in mind that in Counterpoint the term "concord" merely includes the thirds and sixths—major and minor—together with the octave and perfect fifth, we are reduced by this rule to the wearisome reiteration of four intervals, the whole of the remainder being put aside as useless! This rule strikes at the root of all that is good and effective in two-part writing, and it is a simple fact that the great composers, from Bach downwards, have systematically disregarded it.

Rule III., which admits the occasional crossing of the parts, is, of course, unobjectionable.

Rule IV. states the well-known prohibition against consecutive fifths and octaves. There can be little doubt that octaves should be disallowed on the ground of weakness of effect, the interval being, as Cherubini says, "well nigh void of harmony."

In moving Counterpoint, however, it will be found that they can be avoided by the use of an intermediate note.

The consecutives between the alto and bass of the example, I here quote from Bach, would be condemned by every text-book, but probably I shall not stand altogether alone in preferring the authority of Bach to all others. It may be urged that the quotation is in four parts, whilst the rule refers only to two-part writing, but the rules of four-part Counterpoint most clearly prohibit progressions of octaves with only one intervening note, so that the force of the illustration is in no way lessened.

Consecutive fifths require more attention. That they are frequently used with good effect is an undeniable fact, so that their absolute prohibition cannot reasonably be maintained. Theoretical writers have apparently failed to discriminate between good and bad fifths, and have taken refuge in a rule entirely forbidding their employment. In spite of all that has been written on the subject, no perfectly satisfactory explanation of the harsh effect of bad consecutive fifths has yet been given. Cherubini argues that fifths are bad "because the upper part progresses in one key at the same time that the lower part progresses in another. For example, if in the key of C an upper part be added, which gives a perfect fifth in each bar, it follows that one part would be in C while the other would be in G. It is from this concurrence of two keys that the discordance arises."

This explanation cannot be accepted as satisfactory, for the rule forbids the employment of any two successive fifths, and not merely that of scale passages in fifths. It is only when we arrive at the penultimate bar of Cherubini's example that we have an indication of the scale of G, all the other notes belonging strictly to the scale of C.

For further information we must consult the works of classical composers.

The above examples, I have shown to you, may be held to prove that consecutive fifths may be used (i.) for the purpose of satisfactorily resolving a discord (ii.) when one of the notes employed is a "passing" note. One Example is particularly interesting, as it shows the direct resolution of the so-called "German sixth" to the dominant chord, a progression which must inevitably result in consecutive fifths. Progressions of fifths are invariably bad between chords having little or no harmonic relationship to each other, and this would seem to indicate that it is not after all the mere interval which is in fault, but rather that the harsh effect is due to the absence of any proper or agreeable connection between the chords employed. In any case we shall act wisely by refraining from an indiscriminate condemnation of progressions involving consecutives merely because a rule exists which forbids them. I conclude this portion of my paper by referring you to an example of four-part florid Counterpoint, by Sir John Goss, which appears on page 67 of Dr. Bridge's treatise on Counterpoint. In almost every part we find violations of the rule forbidding consecutives, yet it is good Counterpoint, and will probably outlive the law which it transgresses.

Cherubini's fifth rule forbids the employment of "hidden" fifths and octaves. This rule is so persistently disregarded in actual composition that I refrain from giving examples—the student will find ample illustration of its uselessness (as it now exists) without further assistance.

Rule VI. forbids the employment of any intervals of melody except the following:—Major and minor 2nds and 3rds, perfect 4ths, 5ths, and 8ths, and minor 6ths. In more recent works we find the major 6th and imperfect 5th are also allowed, but even with these the list of available intervals of melody is very inadequate. The characteristic intervals of the minor key, the augmented 2nd and its inversion, the diminished 7th, are entirely overlooked, with the result that exercises ostensibly in the minor key are in reality in the so-called "relative" major, except at the commencement and conclusion. The proper treatment of the minor key is fully dealt with in Professor Macfarren's work, but for an illustration of allowable intervals of melody I refer you again to Example 2.

This sixth rule also forbids the employment of more than three 3rds or 6ths (harmonically) in succession. Professor Macfarren (sec. 80) adopts this view, but in the very first example which he gives we find this progression:—

Rule VII. deals with the false relation of the octave, and also that of the tritone. With regard to the former, so many exceptions must be allowed that anything like a strict observance of the rule seems well-nigh impossible. An instance of the use of this false relation as an interval of melody will be found in Example 2, but similar passages exist in abundance in nearly all classical compositions. The false relation of the tritone, and its treatment, has ever been a source of trouble to the student of Counterpoint. It is unquestionably bad under certain conditions:—

Digitized by Google

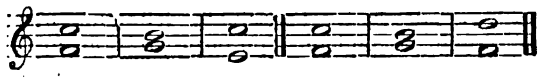
Other tritones, usually condemned as bad, will be found perfectly harmless:—

At a and b the bad effect entirely disappears when the harmony is completed as follows:—

Whilst that at c is good even in two parts if treated as follows:—



Cherubini's assertion, that "all successions of chords of which one contains an F and the other a B, and vice versa, indisputably bring about the false relation of the tritone," is, of course, literally accurate, but to condemn all such progressions as bad is far too sweeping. In the very first example of Cherubini, which he expressly tells us is "in conformity with the rules of strict Counterpoint," we find the following:—

Instances of the melodic use of the tritone are so abundant that it is unnecessary to quote them.

(To be continued.)

PIANOS AND NOVELS.—Says an American paper: The modern novel, particularly the "novel of society," is full of piano playing. No parlour is complete without the piano, and it assists materially in love-making scenes. A travesty of one of Disraeli's novels, "Coningsby," burlesques the gorgeousness with which Beaconsfield fits up all his interiors by making a young lady play to her lover on a piano cased in ivory, with mother-of-pearl keys and pedals of pure gold. And all the surroundings are similarly sumptuous, and so, of course, the youth declares his intentions at once. Columns might be filled with excerpts from popular novels to show how largely the piano is made a factor in bringing about the right understanding between young couples. But this only shows that it is so in the actual life which the stories attempt to portray. But while the piano has been the means of drawing many a young man into a declaration, the elder Weller conceived that it might be the instrument of getting old Pickwick out of the difficulties resulting from the breach of promise suit of Mrs. Bardell. The immediate difficulty to be got out of was the Fleet Prison, which could be done, as Mr. Weller conceived, if Mr. Pickwick was willing, by a "piany-forty as von't play, and vith no vorks in it; but as vill hold him easy, vith his hat and shoes on, and breathe through the legs, vich is holler." Thus did Mr. Weller "dewise" with a cabinet-maker. It was Mehamet who believed that piano playing might be taught by proxy, but when the late Felicien David was in Cairo, and was engaged by his highness to give music lessons to the ladies of the harem, he found five fat negro eunuchs, the chief of whom told him to begin his lessons at once to them, and they in turn would teach them to the ladies. We need no more than note the important part which the piano now literally plays on the stage. The modern melodramas and the best comedies are much assisted by this instrument. The piano is nowhere so truly pathetic as it is in the last scene where consumptive Camille sits down to it for the last time; it is very effective in "Ours," just before the to-be heroes go to the Crimea. Between these two extremes, through the long list of the plays of our day, the piano is as common as it is in what Thalberg calls "the cultivated classes of society."

Musical Intelligence.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The short season of 1883 ended last Saturday night (July 21st.), with "Il Barbiere di Siviglia," and Mdme. Patti as the Rosina. The only novelty this year has been "La Gioconda" of Signor Ponchielli, repeated several times with uniform success. The work has already been fully discussed in these columns, and no more remains to be said. Auber's charming opera "Le Domino Noir" had been promised, but was not produced. Why Mozart's early and very pretty opera "Il Seraglio" (revived in 1882) has not been repeated this season, deponent cannot say, but "more's the pity." A tribute has been paid to Wagner by the revival—for one night only—of "The Flying Dutchman." "Italicè," "Il Voscello Fantasma," and "Lohengrin" were performed twice or three times. The Italian company, however, are not "at home" with Richard Wagner's texts and never will be. Rossini's opera "La Gazza Ladra," full of sparkling tunes that are now utterly worn out and used up, was twice performed for the pleasure of Mdme. Patti. Böito's "Mefistofele" and Bizet's "Carmen" were notable operas, and worthily represent what is called the "modern element." The mainstays of the Royal Italian Opera have been Mdme. Patti, Mdme. Albani, and M. Gailhard. Mdme. Durand in "La Gioconda" excelled, notwithstanding an over-worn voice. The new tenor, Signor Marconi, cannot be reckoned a great gain to the establishment. The chorus, as a rule, have sung much more precisely this season, except in the German operas. It is evident that the old "star" system of the Italian Opera is at last to collapse, and the present artificial monopoly cannot be thought conducive to the interests of high art. The following caustic remarks of the acute and discerning critic who writes for the Times, an orthodox disciple of Wagner, but yet of cosmopolitan taste, deserves to be read with attention. Says The Times of Monday:—

"To tell the truth, the system to which the original rise and subsequent decline of this theatre (the Royal Italian Opera) have been due has not in any perceptible degree been modified. Stars continue to be the main centres of attraction. They monopolise the attention of the public, and to their share a vast proportion of the available resources must, of necessity, be allotted. Knowing that they are indispensable, they make their terms accordingly, and those terms have, in the course of time, grown to be exorbitant, and promise to be still more ruinous since the competition of the American market has begun to assume gigantic proportions. It does not require the gift of prophecy to predict that such a system cannot last much longer;* that, indeed it will collapse on the day when Mdme Patti retires from the stage or loses her voice—for the latter does not necessarily imply the former. That famous prima donna has for years been the mainstay of an establishment which without her could scarcely be imagined. Even if an equally great vocalist and much greater actress were to arise, it may be well doubted whether she would rouse and retain public favour to a similar degree and for a similar period. The absolute reign of the singer on the operatic stage is a thing of the past, as far at least as the intelligent portion of the musical public is concerned. We shall still require great artists, much greater and more universally gifted artists, indeed, than in times gone by, but they will no longer be allowed to make individual display their sole aim and purpose. The works to be interpreted will, in fine, be regarded at least as much as the interpreters. With this fact plainly discernible to those who can read the signs of the times, even the managers of the Royal Italian Opera in England will have to reckon. Fortunately, there is reason to hope that Italian art will not fail to supply the stage with operas well worthy of the most careful study that can be bestowed upon them. Italy can boast in Signor Boïto of one of the most interesting composers of modern times, and in Signor Faccio of a conductor second to Herr Richter alone. Perhaps at some future time, the 'land of song' will once again produce singers worthy of the traditions of Farinelli and Grisi, and of Mario."

The italics are marked by the writer. A. M.

* The committee of the forthcoming Leeds Festival, it is known, have declined the services of Mdme. Albani on account of the extravagant sum demanded.—ED., M.S.

Digitized by Google

MR. MORI'S NEW OPERETTA.

Mr. N. Mori's operetta, "The Shipwright's Love," was repeated at his residence on the 18th inst., and confirms my previous opinion of its merits. It is full of melodies, which would not fail to become popular. Mr. Henry Quirke, who read the dialogue, also recited Longfellow's "King Robert of Sicily," in a most impressive and admirable manner, and cannot fail to make his mark.

FERDINAND PRAEGER.

MR. VON ZASTROW'S DRAWING ROOM RECITAL.

At the concert held at the Gledstower Mansions, South Kensington, on Thursday, July 19th, Miss Mabel Bonne played "Le Carnaval" of Schumann and several pieces by Chopin and J. F. Barnett. On a previous occasion Miss Ellen Norton, a Gold Medallist of the London Academy of Music, played some classical texts, inclusive of Chopin, with great taste. Mr. De Wolfe, often referred to in eulogistic terms, sang a new song of Mr. Cowen, and Fesca's "Spring Song." Miss Lucy Francis, a youthful authoress of classical proclivities, recited Tennyson's "Revenge" and the trial scene from Shakespeare's "Henry VIII." This recital was thought to be so excellent a performance that it is exceptionally reported in these columns. Mdme. Polonaski sang several German and English songs with her usual taste and finish.

VARIOUS CONCERTS.

Mrs. Fairfax Ball, the eminent professor of elocution, held a reception at her house in Holland Road, Kensington, on Friday evening, July 20th. Mr. Carl Hause and Mdlle. Gayrard-Pacini played pieces on the pianoforte—below concert-pitch, by the way—with great brilliancy. Mr. J. A. Brousil executed two violoncello solos with his wonted ability. Miss Zimeri and M. F. Quatremayne sang several times in admirable style. The soirée was protracted to a late hour. The fair hostess gave two splendid recitations—one of these turned upon the false worship of earthly kings, the second was a notable extract from Thackeray's "Vanity Fair."

Signor Villa held a matinée at the Collard Rooms, Grosvenor Street, on July 18th, in conjunction with Mr. Churchill Sibley. He sang Gounod's Canzone in E, "Flo masso nuove corde," "The Belle of St. Paul's," and Salamen's Arab song "Zahra" which was accompanied by the composer and encored by acclamation. Mdme. Roselli excelled in Mr. C. Sibley's ballad "With thee," Miss Helen Mearson, in spite of a cold, sang Mr. W. Carter's air "Loved for ever," with great taste. Miss L. Rivers and Miss Berta Francis also appeared with honour. Signor Tito Mattei played two pieces from his own pen, and M. Poznanski a Fantasia of Vieuxtemps on "I Lombardi" of Verdi. The concert proved a complete success.

A grand concert was held on Saturday afternoon, July 21st, at the Prince's Hall, in aid of the sufferers from the late dreadful disasters at Sunderland and on the river Clyde. The projector, Mrs. Florence Grant, an amateur of great taste and a generous patroness of art and artists, sang Robandi's air "Alla stella confidente" in exquisite style; she also sustained the second parts of Mozart's duet "Sull' aria" (with Miss Samuell), and the duet from Mefistofele "La luna immobile." Lady Colin Campbell was unable to sing as announced. Mr. Bernard Lane and Mr. J. Robertson won much applause for their songs. Miss Clara Samuell sang Rossini's "Non piu mesta" (from "La Cenerentola") in the key of E flat instead of E major—the range is from low G to high B, and Alboni, years ago, made a great effect by dropping a double octave. Signor Monari Rocca won a bis for a rollicking French song of Herr Schuberth, and Mdlle. G. Ameris sang the "Santo Spirito" of Marius. Herr Schuberth played part of Goltermann's second concerto for violoncello, and the Earl of Mar an "Elegy" for violin by Del Nero. Mr. Kuhe played two pieces, his own "Etude du Concert" and a Notturne of Chopin. Mrs. Florence Grant allowed the children of the St. Marylebone Charity Schools to attend the concert, and provided a basketful of buns for their refreshment.

"The Three Beggars" is the title of a new comic opera by V. Dunn and E. Belleville, to be given as a "costume piece" at the Royal Academy of Music to-night.

BERMONDSEY.

On Monday evening, the 23rd inst., the Bermondsey branch of the "People's Entertainment Society," Metropolitan Choral Union, gave its first soirée in St. Mary Magdalene Schools. Mr. W. H. Leslie is the enterprising conductor of this scheme, and he deserves great congratulation in bringing a body of singers together in such a neighbourhood to perform part-singing so very satisfactorily. Mr. Leslie during the evening contributed two violin solos, which were warmly received, as they well deserved to be. Mr. John Jefferys gave two pianoforte solos, which were equally welcomed; but the great attraction was the artistic and sympathetic singing of Viscountess Folkestone. She received quite an ovation, everyone being equally delighted with her simple yet careful rendering of the four songs she so kindly gave. Lady Folkestone also took part in Leslie's popular trio, "Memory," with Messrs. Geo. F. Grover and R. J. Pitt. The audience were most enthusiastic, and a recall was speedily demanded and given. Mr. Arthur Reynolds, the well-known baritone, sang two songs in his usual artistic style, while Miss Rosa Kissel's singing was very much appreciated. Messrs. J. Jefferys, Geo. F. Grover, and R. J. Pitt, acted as accompanists.

LEEDS MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

On Friday and Saturday of the last week, Sir Arthur Sullivan, who has been appointed conductor of the above festival, visited Leeds, and attended two full chorus rehearsals. There were 305 members of the chorus present, out of a total of 314. Sir Arthur was received with prolonged applause, the whole chorus rising and cheering for some time. He was accompanied by the Mayor (Councillor Woodhouse), Mr. Thomas Marshall (chairman of the Executive), and Mr. Fred. R. Spark (hon. sec.). The Mayor having introduced the conductor to the chorus, Sir Arthur Sullivan spoke a few words. He remarked that the echoes of the last festival seemed scarcely to have died away, when they were called upon once more to make preparations for the next. Those echoes were still ringing in his ears, bearing with them memories of the happiest associations of his life. He was reminded that there were displayed on that occasion work, discipline, enthusiasm, and—he could hardly call it talent, he—could only call it with reference to the choral singing genius, which marked one of the proudest times of his musical history. This was scarcely the time for speech-making, but he could not begin his work without thanking them sincerely and heartily for the extraordinarily kind way in which they had received him. He still bore in mind their kindness on the last occasion, and he could not help thinking this new example of it was not only personal to him, but an expression of confidence that he would do his best to lead them to victory. To say that no efforts would be wanting on his part was unnecessary, because any one placed in that proud position must, of course, do his best. He only hoped to find the same attention, discipline, and extraordinary power and brilliance of work, coupled with the same remarkable results, if not greater, than were seen at the last festival. He congratulated them on again having the powerful and experienced aid of Mr. James Broughton, their chorus-master. There was a good deal of work in the world for which those who did it did not always get the pay and glory and reputation. They who were working within knew exactly the worth of Mr. Broughton's work, and that without his patient care and very great intelligence it would be impossible, even with that splendid material in the way of chorus, to obtain the results they did. These remarks were frequently cheered. The rehearsal was then proceeded with. The choruses in Joachim Raff's oratorio, "The World's End; Judgment; and the New World," were taken, under the direction of Mr. Broughton; and afterwards, with Sir Arthur conducting, the important chorus with which Bach's cantata, "Thou Guide of Israel," commences, and the lovely chorale with which it concludes, were gone through. Beethoven's Grand Mass in D was taken on Saturday afternoon, the enormous difficulties of which seemed to be well overcome by the Yorkshire choralists.

Covent Garden Theatre is again given over to the carpenters, Mr. A. Gwyllim Crowe having determined to give a promenade concert season there, commencing early next month.

Digitized by Google

LIVERPOOL.

(From our own Correspondent.)

JULY 24th.

The position of the Liverpool Philharmonic Society (now so miscalled) is in the same chaotic state as described in the two last numbers of the Musical Standard. The only difference, if any, is that the estrangement between the "amateur members of the orchestra" and the newly elected committee, is complete. It appears from a long letter which has been addressed to the local press, by the "Hon. Secretary, Philharmonic Chorus," that the chorus were in existence as the Philharmonic Society before the Philharmonic Hall was built, and before any arrangement was entered into with them by the proprietors.

The letter goes on to state that:—"This is clearly evidenced by the following extracts from the rules governing the 'amateur members of the orchestra.'" The preamble reads as follows:—

"The following rules for the regulation of the amateur members of the orchestra have been adopted by the committee, to take effect from the 26th of May, 1856, and all the gentlemen who are now members of the orchestra, or who may hereafter join, will be furnished with a copy hereof:—

RULE I.

"* * * Subscribing members shall pay to the funds of the general society an entrance fee of 10s. 6d., and two-fifths of the subscription paid by proprietors and annual subscribers to the extent of a double subscription; a corresponding deduction to be made in the price of tickets for all extra concerts to be given by the society.

RULE XX.

"The general committee shall have power either to frame new laws or alter any of those existing. But previous notice of any proposed alteration or addition shall be posted on the notice board on two consecutive rehearsal nights, and the next succeeding rehearsal night the practical members may hold a meeting and determine by vote whether any suggestions or objections respecting them shall be made on their part to the general committee. Any proposed alteration or addition which is objected to by a majority of the practical members shall be withdrawn.

"It is therefore clear that, whatever the legal rights of the question may be, the intention of the arrangement, at the time that the same was entered into with the members of the Philharmonic Society was that they should exist as the chorus of the Society under the rules which were then adopted, and that these rules should not be abolished or amended without the mutual consent of the parties affected thereby.

"Notwithstanding this, however, the general committee have decided to do away with these rules in order that they may establish the society on entirely new lines and principles.

"Matters having reached this stage, the representatives of the chorus on the general committee took the first opportunity of pointing out the difficulty which existed in the way of any amendment or abolition of the rules upon which the society has been established, in view of the stipulation in Rule XX., above quoted, that this cannot be done without the assent of a majority of the practical members; and the committee, in order to get over this difficulty, accordingly passed the following resolution:—That any arrangement which may have been entered into between the Liverpool Philharmonic Society and the vocal members of the orchestra be rescinded. The representatives of the chorus on the general committee, appreciating the position of affairs in consequence of the passing of the above resolution, and in view of the fact that the general committee had themselves declined to convene a meeting of the chorus, then decided that the general body of the practical members should be acquainted with the facts, and accordingly summoned a meeting to consider what action should be taken."

The result of the meeting here referred to I have already given in a former letter.

A local contemporary, in a leading article upon the affair, sums up as follows:—

"Supposing, however, the action of the committee to be good, the society is at this moment in the happy position of a body of proprietors of a concert-room. Having neither band nor chorus, they have no longer any pretensions to the standing of the leading musical society in Liverpool. They ought, therefore, to abdicate the high-sounding title they have hitherto held, and to adopt the more modest designation of the Hope Street Music Hall Company (Limited). One hoped for a decided improvement upon the unsatisfactory state of things that existed prior to the recent alterations in the personnel of the committee, and the only explanation to account for the conduct of the new committee, is that their success in ousting their predecessors has had the effect of slightly turning their heads. If so, their case is but another illustration of the old proverb, Quem deus vult perdere, prius dementat."

It is rumoured that the chorus intend starting a fresh society under the title of the present society, which they claim to be theirs.

This would be hazardous, but plucky certainly, and it is questionable whether it would pay its way, but still there are plenty of people who just now would assuredly support warmly such a scheme. On the other hand, if the funds were forthcoming for the establishment of a new society, where would the concerts be given? There is no other concert hall suitable for the carrying out the intended programme, except the Philharmonic itself!

It is an extraordinary affair altogether, and a disgrace to the city of Liverpool.

Mr. Hallé's salary as conductor to the new régime is £600! Sir Julius Benedict got £300. It is expected to make the difference up by the doing away with the privileges hitherto accorded to the late chorus.

J. J. M.

SOUTH NORWOOD.

The study of music in ladies' colleges has ceased to be of the old routine character, when mere "piece-work" was the rule of the master, taught by rote. Mr. Robert Beringer, brother of Mr. Oscar Beringer, whose annual classical pianoforte recitals in London are renowned, has rendered good service as a professor at South Norwood, where on Tuesday evening, in the South Norwood Hall, he held a concert, mainly supported, as regards the performance, by the young lady pupils of the Chagford College in that suburb, directed by the Misses Green. Mr. R. Beringer himself conducted the overture to "Der Freischütz," arranged as a quartet for two pianofortes, and he also played, with Miss Mabel Green, Lizsberg's duet in "Don Juan." Weber's overture was most effectively rendered by Misses Stotter, Ross, and Coles, their master keeping them well "up to time" and effectively emphasizing the text. Miss Mabel Green excelled in Chopin's Berceuse, Op. 57, and Miss Bastard, a very young lady, achieved a fair success in Mr. Alfred Cellier's "Danse Pompouse." Misses M. and A. Aste played some of Brahms's "Hungarian Dances" with great spirit and aplomb. A pianoforte trio (a march of Goblaerts), found apt exponents in Misses Letts, E. Ross, and G. Stainer, and M. Bartholomew's piano sextet "Les Six Amies" was executed in dashing style by Misses Parsons, Foster, Hatcher, Kershaw, M. Ross, and L. Woodhead. Mdlle. Claudia Nicolle and Miss Williams sang airs of Gounod and Goglielmo. Miss Westacott, to be commended for her reading of Schumann's lied "Ein Traum," should be advised to avoid the illegitimate practice, not even allowable as a musical license, of pronouncing "ich" as if it were spelt "i-sch"—a too common fault. Mr. W. P. Mills, an amateur, from London, sang a tenor song, "O maiden mine," which was encored, and played a flute solo of Reichert with fine taste. A recitation of S. H. Cowan's "Becalm'd" was de trop, and the reporter avoided it. In Part II., Franz Abt's pretty cantata for ladies' voices "Rübezahl," Op. 593 was performed; the English words are from the pen of Mr. W. Grist of the Crystal Palace. Miss Aste sustained the soprano solos; the other vocalists were Misses Williams, Nicolle, and Howarth. Miss Howarth was reader (of the explanatory text), and Mrs. Worthington, a highly accomplished amateur pianist, accompanied the voices. Mr. R. Beringer conducted the cantata. It includes eight numbers, solos and choruses in C minor and major, A, D minor, G and E major. The concert lasted over two hours. Mr. Beringer may well be proud of his pupils.

A new opéra bouffe, "Virginia and Paul," by Messrs. Stephens and Soloman was brought out at the Gaiety Theatre on Monday week, not altogether successfully. The libretto is a satire on one of the follies of the day, and to this Mr. Solomon has written music which if not original is in parts decidedly pretty. Although the adverse verdict of the audience was not wholly undeserved, many much worse pieces have been more favourably received.

Digitized by Google

Foreign Musical Intelligence.

A Philharmonic Society has been formed in Seville.

Sarasate has been named honorary professor of the National Music School, Madrid.

Boïto's "Mefistofele" is to be given at the Teatro Colon, Buenos Ayres.

Yet another biography of Franz Liszt is being written, this time by Augusto Trinchieri.

Donizetti's "Linda di Chamounix" was found attractive lately at the Teatro del Principe Alfonso, Madrid.

Sarasate, the eminent Spanish violinist, has returned to Pampeluna. A large crowd welcomed him at the railway station, and he was afterwards serenaded.

The Réunion Chorale of Schaarbeck carried off the first prize at the recent Orpheonic competition held at Amsterdam.

M. Kowalski has written a new opera, "Vercingétorix," which the authorities at the Château d'Eau Theatre, Paris, have accepted.

At Meszkirch, a monument has been erected to the memory of Konradin Kreutzer. Like Rembrandt, he was the son of a miller, and was born in his father's mill near Meszkirch in 1780.

At Würzburg, a committee has been formed to raise funds throughout Germany to defray the expenses of a monument which is to be erected to the Minnesinger Walther von der Vogelweide.

The editor of Die Neue Zeitschrift für Musik, Professor Dr. Hermann Zopff, died at Glogau at the age of fifty-seven. He was an excellent musician, and a most conscientious critic.

M. Peter Benoit's "Lucifer" is to be produced at La Scala, Milan, in October next. A committee has been formed with a view to presenting the Duke of Campo Felice with the composer's bust in bronze as a mark of gratitude for the interest he has always taken in all Belgian artists, and in Benoit particularly.

An interesting little work by Signor Pasolini Zanelli, called "G. Sarti, musicista del secolo XVIII," has just been published. Sarti was one of the most remarkable dramatic composers of the eighteenth century, and to his personal renown added that of being the master of Cherubini, who was warmly attached to him.

It is stated that the first of this year's performances of Wagner's last work, "Parsifal," which took place at Bayreuth, created comparatively small interest, about 900 persons only attending. Many foreign dilettanti were present, as were press representatives from most of the European cities. The audience, which included Siegfried Wagner, made little demonstration, and, indeed, the atmosphere of the theatre could not have been more sombre had "Parsifal" been "In Memoriam." Many visitors made a pilgrimage to Wagner's grave after hearing his work.

CHURCH SUNDAY-SCHOOLS' CHOIR.—The fifth annual festival of this choir was held at the Crystal Palace on July 21st. About 100 schools within the metropolitan area belong to the organization, which is connected with the Church of England Sunday-School Institute. Its chief object is to spread a knowledge of vocal music—especially sacred music; but its secondary object is to promote unity and good-feeling among Sunday-School workers by means of innocent and wholesome recreation. Nearly 20,000 persons were present at the festival. The chief event of the day was a concert by 5,000 children, who quite filled the Handel orchestra, and presented an attractive and almost impressive spectacle. With Mr. W. Roston Bourke as conductor, and Mr. R. Stokoe, as organist, the concert was a success; the children sang well together, showing an improvement upon their performance at some previous festivals. The sopranos, it is true, rather overpowered the other voices, but that was inevitable. Besides the attractions provided by the Palace Company themselves, there were athletic sports (with 250 entries and 30 prizes), and music by the bands of St. Phillip's, Kensington, and St. Dunstan's, Stepney. In the evening a meeting was held in the Concert Theatre, where the prizes were distributed to the winners in the athletic sports, and a picked choir of adults gave a selection of music.

Reviews.

How to Learn the Pianoforte. By Emanuel Aguilar. (Groombridge & Sons, 1883.)—A new edition of this excellent little manual has been called for. Its utility is recognized by a host of our contemporaries in London and the provinces, and their favourable opinion can be endorsed without scruple. The author speaks direct to the point, and expresses his views with great lucidity. The book comprises five chapters, with daily exercises and manual illustrations. The illustrations are both "mechanical" and "mental. M. Aguilar is a very original writer, but he modestly quotes rules and remarks from the works of Bach, Mozart, Clementi, Cramer, and other great authorities.

Researches into the Early History of the Violin Family. By Carl Engel. (Novello, Ewer & Co., Berners Street.)—This valuable and able work has a melancholy interest, as appearing much in the light of a posthumous work, as the author, to quote Mr. Hipkins's preface, "has gone to his rest before the last revision of it." The same friendly pen calls "attention especially to the interesting chain of reasoning which derives the Mediæval Rotte from the old Greek Lyre." The book, as Mr. Hipkins adds, contains other features of discerning and judicious investigation. The author leads the way and strikes the key-note of his arguments by first dealing with the story of that true distinctive feature of the violin genus, "The Fiddle-Bow." In this chapter he very clearly traces the development, from the plectrum to the bow of that little but powerful engine of musical emotion. Next the Crwth is dealt with in a very interesting chapter. Step by step, through the crowd, the rotte, the rebec, etc., to the viol, the author advances to his final chapter, a clever "Retrospect," in which he briefly states the main features of the development of the true "king of instruments" to its present perfection of simplicity and expressive power. Mr. Gladstone has told us that as much thought has been bestowed upon the perfecting of the violin as has been devoted to the development of the locomotive engine. This remark embodies a profound truism. Some one has shown that a musical instrument is perfected truly as it advances towards a condition of absolute simplicity. The machine which regularly performs the business and obeys the will of man is widely distinguished from the instrument which is called upon to express his very thoughts and emotions. Thus, the violin has passed through its varied career to arrive at the simplest instrumental form we know of; but a form which, by reason of its very simplicity, is the one which comes most nearly to the man's own heart-strings. The Italians say that the violin has a soul; anyway, it furnishes the readiest exposition yet found for the soul of the instrumental performer. Hence the value of the lamented Carl Engel's "Violin Family" cannot well be overrated as a concise, clear, thoughtful, logical guide to one of the most remarkable and noteworthy developments the art has known. The book, it is needless to add, is admirably printed and got up, and it is adorned by sundry curious and instructive illustrations.

Life of Handel. By W. Rockstro. (Macmillan & Co.)—Though it may be said that when a man sits down to write a biography, he is already in love with his subject, or he would not elect to undertake it, it is only fair to recognize the fact, that without pre-existent enthusiasm an author would find it very difficult to arouse and sustain the reader's interest in his work. Now, Mr. Rockstro has this necessary enthusiasm, but it is tempered by much sound judgment. One can hardly pay him a higher compliment than by saying that he accompanies his Saxon hero in his daily life with something of the affectionate observation of a Boswell, whilst he examines his artistic work with much of the critical discrimination of a Macaulay. The book opens with a graceful and appreciative notice from the pen of no less an authority than Sir George Grove. Then the author, after a brief preface, plunges into his subject with so much skill that the reader almost seems to live in the musical world of the dawn and first half of the eighteenth century. In matters of doubt and controversy, Mr. Rockstro at times almost disappoints one in not pronouncing a decided opinion, when he might fairly claim to do so, but this feeling passes away when it is discovered how carefully he balances the evidence, and how modestly he declines to assume the position of a judge whenever the sifted evidence is too nearly balanced to permit of a dictatorial opinion being given, at least by a discreet writer. It is in this spirit that Mr. Rockstro deals with the famous Harmonious Blacksmith legend. At other times Mr. Rockstro gives us details which are not to be considered perhaps as established truths, because he honestly desires to present every side of the composer's character and career before us. In the artistic analysis of the master's works, Mr. Rockstro, displays a rare and practised power of inspection, and his criticisms have a charm and clearness quite refreshing. In dealing with the comparative merits of Bach and Handel, Mr. Rockstro, perhaps, leans too much towards the latter. The questions involved in such a discussion extend beyond the artistic attainments of the two giants, and involve a full consideration of their respective characters. From such a point of sight Bach shines more brightly than Handel, for the latter composer obviously intended to push his way in the world and to bend his splendid talents to the practical purpose of getting a quick return for his labours; hence he studied to write for the masses with forcible, strong, clear idioms, whilst his great compeer quietly pursued his nobler artistic career with little or no thought of fame or gain. With all deference and respect for the genius of both men, it is impossible not to see the influence of personal character in their different methods of workmanship. People do not suppose that "H.M.S. Pinafore" is written from the same point of sight as Gounod's "Faust;" and we know, too, that Handel meant to get on, and to make money, and this is said with all respect for his gifts, and that Bach was comparatively indifferent to the possession of this world's good things. Mr. Rockstro's comparative definition of the two men's contrapuntal methods is thoughtful. The following sentences embody the gist of his opinion, which, however, deserves to be read very carefully at full length. He says:—"Bach's fugal subjects are remarkable for their ductility. They go where he will make them to go. Handel's subjects are different. Though their subjection to the recognised laws of art is so great, that they avoid many collisions which Bach treated as lawful, and therefore, by his authority made lawful, the last thing one thinks about is their artistic perfection. They savour, not of the studio, but of nature." Of course the advocate of Bach could triumphantly point to instances of his fugal work which are not to be excelled in naturalness, even if equalled. Mr. Rockstro's work contains an immense amount of information, table of compositions, with dates, etc., etc; and its details have been clearly collected with a surprising amount of painstaking care. The volume is one, in truth, of real value, and admirably sustained interest; and as such, will, it may be fairly expected, meet with an appreciative reception from the public, both musical and general.

Digitized by Google

THE SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.

The musical critic of the Figaro, writes:—

The discussion as to the division of the funds of the defunct Sacred Harmonic Society has been taken up by the musical papers. The members have, it seems, pocketed the money, and, although a majority are willing to devote the whole sum to some art purpose, the minority appear to consider that charity begineth at home. Still, there is no doubt the whole transaction savours of lawful dishonesty. The library was largely contributed by friends of art, who assuredly had no idea that at a certain period the members would sell it for what it would fetch, and appropriate the cash. £500 has, it is understood, been voted to one officer of the society, and the public would be glad to learn what is to be done for the subordinate officers who have served the society so faithfully and for so many years. Surely the members do not intend to pocket the "swag," and turn their old officers out into the street.

That the dissolution of the old Sacred Harmonic Society was brought about owing to inactivity and mismanagement after Bowley's death, has often been stated and as often denied. For many years before the dissolution the season was an annual loss. In Bowley's time it was different. I have before me the balance sheet for 1859. The total receipts were £10,000 odd, and out of the profits the society invested £3,000 in Consols, £1,000 in New Three Per Cents., and carried forward a cash balance of £1,534, which with the estimated value of library, etc., £3,500, and other things, gave the society in 1859 a total property of about £8,500. Bowley's successors lost a good deal of these savings, and the present generation of members have pocketed the balance.

WAGNER'S "PARSIFAL."

Says the Daily News: The report that it is intended to perform Wagner's last opera "Parsifal" as a sacred cantata at the Royal Albert Hall next winter, is received in Berlin with absolute incredulity. Although the intention may exist in London, it is considered altogether unlikely that the late composer's representatives will accord their permission for a performance so entirely opposed to Wagner's intentions and theories. The possibility of performing the work will depend on their permission, even in the absence of legal protection in England, for the reason that the Mayence publishers of the "music-drama" are not allowed to sell the score—the orchestral and solo parts—without the consent of Wagner's heirs. It is therefore pretty certain that Englishmen who may desire to hear and see "Parsifal" will still have to make the pilgrimage to Bayreuth.

"MUSIC HATH CHARMS";

OR, SWEET ARE THE USES OF ADVERTISEMENT.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC,

UNDER EXALTED PATRONAGE,

THE LORD MAYOR, assisted and supported by

THE ENTIRE CORPORATION OF THE CITY OF LONDON, will give

A GRAND MEDLEY ENTERTAINMENT, introducing clog-dancing, double back somersault throwing, daring feats on the inverted trapeze, ditch-dredging, the African high jump, deep-sea diving, and other miscellaneous feats of skill and strength, the whole concluding with a midnight steeple-chase in Epping Forest, for the purpose of raising a fund to provide

A PERMANENT UMBRELLA-STAND for the use of Students frequenting

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC. Tickets, seven Guineas, five Guineas, and a few places still vacant on the Mansion House roof at £1 15s. 6d.

THE MUSICAL OMNIBUS COMPANY Limited.

THE MUSICAL OMNIBUS COMPANY. Extract from abridged Prospectus:—This Company, formed for the purpose of supplying suitable means of communication between the outlying suburbs and the Royal College of Music, has entered into a contract with a well-known firm of mechanical piano-makers, for the construction of twenty of their new recreative vehicles. As they will all at each revolution of the wheel rapidly repeat an elegant and original melody arranged for not less than three strings, and as a distinguished European Conductor will accompany each journey, it is confidently believed a recourse to their use will materially stimulate the musical taste of both inside and outside passengers. N.B.—The attention of investors is specially directed to the fact that as the hind wheels of the Company's Omnibuses have, with the view to the practical illustration of an occasional perfect cadence and inversion at intervals, been left purposely loose, there is every reason to believe that when the scheme is in full operation, the annual turn-over will be considerable. For further particulars apply to the Secretary."

SINGING IN THE EARS.—Persons desirous of contracting this elegant and melodious malady in a perfectly incurable shape can communicate with A.B., College Flats, facing the College, where a few vacant sets of apartments may still be had on early application.

TO THE MEDIÆVAL AND ECCENTRIC.

A GENUINE MINSTREL, who has for seventy consecutive years taken the First Prize in the Annual Harp Competition at the Royal College of Music, desires an engagement in a quiet and romantic family, where the services of an aged but accomplished Bard would be considered an adequate return for board, lodging, carriage exercise, and the use, if required, of a coffin. As the Advertiser, who has a long flowing beard, and is of effective appearance, will be ninety-seven on his next birthday, a speedy answer is solicited. N.B.—Would be glad to hear from the Proprietor of the "Welsh Harp" at Hendon.

THE ORPHEUS HAIR BRUSH.

THE ORPHEUS HAIR-BRUSH has been specially designed for the use of bald students attending

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

THE ORPHEUS HAIR-BRUSH is composed of the finest selected Sebastian Bach Hairs.

THE ORPHEUS HAIR-BRUSH should be used at normal intervals con fuoco.

THE ORPHEUS HAIR-BRUSH gives tone to the head.

Digitized by Google

SIR GEORGE GROVE says, "I like the look of it. Send one to MACFARREN."

SIR GEORGE MACFARREN writes, "The Handel is quite a Creation. Send one to GROVE."

SIR ARTHUR SULLIVAN has already received several anonymously in registered envelopes.

THE ORPHEUS HAIR-BRUSH.—Keep ordering of your Musical Publisher until you get it.

WASHING WANTED.—A Graduate, who has taken high honours in Harmony at the Royal College of Music, having, owing to the unexpected return of an Oratorio, several suspended chords in his back-garden for which he has no further use, will be happy to make arrangements with families for taking in their washing.—Address, B. PIPER, Mus. Doc., Nightingale Lane, E.

TO THE INFIRM AND AGED.—A powerful and accomplished kettle-drum player (Savage-Club Student, Chinese-Gong Medalist, First-class Prizeman in Stepnitibus Inhumanioribus, Mus. B. and S. of Oxford and Cambridge) is desirous of meeting with an aged couple a little hard of hearing, to whose declining years his constant performance on two full-sized Bavarian kettle-drums might prove an agreeable and stimulating solace. Can do Thunder-salvos, double-side tattoo, the Styrian surprise, flog-beating, and give a capital imitation of the Storming of Rangoon. Open to any offer. Would not object to taking turns with a fog-signal on a Channel steamer.—By letter, X., Post Office, Deafenham.

ZOOLOGICAL AND URGENT.—An Indian Rajah, anxious, in response to the appeal of a distinguished personage, to assist the Royal College of Music, has, through a mistaken translation of the list of wind instruments, presented it with a large consignment of full-grown Cobras. As the Secretary is greatly hampered by the presence of these fine but deadly creatures, who are now loose in the dormitory, and greatly excited by the practice of the Violoncello Class, he will be happy to part with them on easy terms for the purpose of founding a Scholarship on the proceeds.

MUSICAL PITCH.—A large Surplus Stock of this useful commodity now on hand, and to be disposed of at less than cost-price. As the pitch is in very fine condition, Amateur Yachtsmen who have been hitherto unable to go to C comfortably, should order without delay. Apply, enclosing remittance, to the Secretary, as above.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC ALE.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC ALE is a fine diuretic beverage.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC ALE is much stronger than Treble X.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC ALE is far superior to Double Bass.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC ALE is more sparkling than Monday Pop.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC ALE can be had in barrel organs.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC ALE may be ordered in octaves.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC ALE is supplied in reputed counterpints.

THE LANCET says, "We have tested the Royal College of Music Ale, and, for dancing purposes, consider it equal to Hop Bitters."

SIR JULIUS BENEDICT writes, "I prefer it to Meyer-beer."

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

GRADUATES IN DIFFICULTIES from having been unable to dispose of their own musical compositions, can by applying to Mr. F. Sharp, be assisted in effecting one on easy and harmonious terms with their creditors, as above.—Ledger Line Row, E.C.

WHY NOT HAVE A MUSICAL FUNERAL? Anyone sending three postage stamps to "Maestoso, care of the Secretary, Royal College," will receive by return a book-shaped pamphlet satisfactorily answering this trite and cheerful little question.

CAUTION TO TRAVELLING FELLOWS. The Peninsular and Oriental, Orient, White Star, and National Ocean Steamer Companies, give notice that on and after the first of next month they decline to carry in any part of their vessels, under any pretence whatever, holders of Travelling Fellowships of the Royal College of Music, without receiving a written undertaking that they bring with them no ophicleide, bassoon, double bass, piccolo, triangle, cymbals, side-drum, trombone, or other dangerous instrument, and are willing, if desirous of practising their scales at sea, to be let down into the hold, with sealed hatchways.

A RURAL DEAN in a large and populous neighbourhood, to whom it has been intimated that an exalted Royal personage would be gratified by his making some special effort to raise funds for the Royal College of Music, will, on the termination of the Evening Service on Wednesday next, endeavour to stand on his head in his own pulpit. As it is his first essay at any feat of the kind, it is confidently hoped that the attendance will be proportionately large, and that his parishioners will contribute to the Offertory on the occasion, which will be devoted solely to the establishment of a Triangle Scholarship, tenable for life. Further particulars will be announced shortly.

A BROKEN-DOWN QUEEN'S COUNSEL, requiring immediately a few Bars' rest, will be glad to hear from the Secretary, 94A, Lower Serjeants' Inn. PUNCH.

MUSIC STRINGS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF ALL KINDS OF STRINGS FOR VIOLIN, VIOLA, VIOLONCELLO, DOUBLE BASS HARP, ZITHER, GUITAR, BANJO, &c., &c.

Have always in Stock the Largest Assortment of Music Strings of any House in the World.

39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

All Kinds of Strings covered in a superior manner by powerful machines, made on the best principle with all modern improvements.

JUST PUBLISHED, "MORNING and EVENING SERVICE," set to music for the especial use of Parish Choirs, by FREDK. HUNNIBELL, F.C.O. Price 1s.; or separately, 8d. and 6d. London: NOVELLO, EWER & CO.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

"COUNTERPOINT." By H. J. Stark, Mus. Bac.
MUSICAL INTELLIGENCE:—Royal Italian Opera—Mr. Mori's New Operetta—Mr. Von Zastrow's Drawing-room Recital—Various Concerts—Bermondsey—Leeds Musical Festival—Liverpool—South Norwood.
FOREIGN MUSICAL INTELLIGENCE.
REVIEWS.
THE SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.
WAGNER'S "PARSIFAL."
EDITORIAL:—Foreign Musical Produce—The Logic of Counterpoint—Where the Old Pianos Go!
ORGAN NEWS:—Liverpool—Fisheries Exhibition—Crystal Palace—Chatteris, Cambridgeshire—Preston—Ware—Wick—Cork.
THE VOICE, MUSICALLY AND MEDICALLY CONSIDERED. By Arnand Semple, B.A., M.B., Cantab., M.R.C.P., Lond.
A REMINISCENCE OF HEINE. By Freidrich Kuecken.
MUSIC IN LADIES' SCHOOLS.
CORRESPONDENCE:—Orphan School for Daughters of Musicians—The Sacred Harmonic Library Question.
ACADEMICAL INTELLIGENCE:—Trinity College, London.
PASSING EVENTS, Service Lists, &c.

LONDON: SATURDAY, JULY 28, 1883.

FOREIGN MUSICAL PRODUCE.

A MEMBER of Parliament, dating from the House of Commons, puts forth the following plea for British musicians:—

"Many persons interested in the progress and "development of native musical talent have viewed "with dissatisfaction and apprehension the exten- "sive and exclusive patronage which so-called "'London Society' has given to foreign musicians during "the current season, and for my own part I must express my "surprise that the chief promoters of the Royal College of Music "should have failed to practise the doctrines which they have "so loudly preached, and have gone to sleep while the bread was "being taken out of the mouths of their own countrymen by the "strong force of Hungarian and other foreign competition. A "case in point occurred on Wednesday night, at the entertain- "ment given at the Fisheries Exhibition. Two foreign bands "and two English bands were engaged for the occasion. Fair "play would have given to each band an equal chance; but, as a "matter of fact, while the 'posts of honour' in the conservatory "and main building were respectively assigned to the foreigners, "the English were relegated to obscure positions in the garden "grounds, where their presence was not realized until late in "the evening. Comparisons, no doubt, are odious, but no "impartial musical expert would venture to attribute inferiority "to English bands, and unless the managers of the entertainment "can urge extenuating circumstances, they must stand convicted "of having acted with manifest injustice towards a deserving "class of artists whose interests it was their special duty to "protect."

The neglect with which our native musicians are frequently treated has often been commented upon in these columns. But little further need be said over the patent case to which an M.P. has drawn attention.

Digitized by Google

It represents but one of the many injustices that the baneful patronage of "fashion" exercises on music in England. While it may be admitted that a good Hungarian band can naturally play Hungarian music—but a mere provincialism in art—better than performers of any other nationality, it can yet be fearlessly and truthfully maintained, that our English regimental bands are altogether better than those of foreign countries. Their rich ensemble and artistic finish affords a marked contrast to the slovenly out-of-tune tone of the German Kapellen, the brassy thinness of the French, the weak volume of the Austrian, and the rough brujant quality of the Belgian military bands. Unfortunately, but few of the units which go to make up "London Society" are capable judges in this matter. Their whirl of, more or less inane, amusements leaves them little time to study what is eclectic in art. With most of them, the term "music," is too frequently synonymous with weak opera tunes, and the fioriture of some petted prima donna. Such people as these are mainly responsible for the indifference and negligence with which much good English music is treated. The ignorance they exhibit of what their country has done, and, day by day, can still better accomplish in music, is somewhat amusing to cultured people. But one of its sycophants is, to encourage foreigners, chiefly the pretentious, and sometimes the incompetent section, to presume on our supposed backwardness, and to foist themselves, their [illegible] their productions, into a prominence over here, to which their precise merits by no means entitle them. It is for the delectation of listeners of this class that the programmes of our State Concerts,—programmes that are the ridicule of the musical world—are chiefly drawn up. Happily, there is some hope of general improvement looming in the future. The long continued teachings of Professor Hullah have leavened the mass. The study, slight though it be, of music in all our normal schools, and especially the serious attention now devoted to it at Eton, Harrow, Marlborough and other great public schools of the country, must eventually work a great change in public taste. Then, perhaps, English music and English musicians will have fair play. More than this we should not desire, for no one country has ever had the exclusive monopoly of art; genius, whether in its creative or executive phases, will ever compel appreciation and command support. Those who possess such qualities may be sure of always finding a welcome on these shores, be their nationality what it may.

It was mainly on account of the absurd depreciation of the Royal Academy, its staff, and its system, and the extravagant laudation of foreign institutions, that the new Royal College of Music has been regarded among thinking people with coldness, and hardly concealed jealousy. The ridiculous fables as to the condition of English musical matters, with which gaping provincial audiences have been sedulously fed, may have been successful from a pecuniary point of view, but the self-depreciation indulged in showed much ignorance, co-mingled with motives palpably interested.

In connection with "London Society" patronage of music, attention may be called to the concert recently given at the Guildhall in aid of the funds for the new College. The programme was little above that of the "penny-reading" type, the artists were chiefly Italian soloists, and so thoroughly did our foreign residents consider that the whole of the arrangements ought to be undertaken by them, that one, HERR LOUIS ENGEL, the critic of the World, has printed a lengthy invective against the PRINCE OF WALES and others, because, he states, His Royal Highness sent his secretary to desire PATTI to sing some insignificant song, in place of a royalty ballad, (originally put down) from the pen of the modest HERR ENGEL himself! On glancing over the programme of this concert, the thought crosses one's mind as to whether our merchant princes have ever heard of, or know, the value of the orchestral symphonies of the great masters. Probably not, or else they lack the power to appreciate them. It was hardly so in former times. Their forefathers imported from the Italian republics and the Low Countries madrigals and instrumental ricercàri, as well as other produce from abroad:—by the way, sending in exchange the remarkable Fancies and sonatas of our own prolific JOHN JENKINS, who seems to have supplied the best part of the civilized world of that day with music for viols and other stringed instruments. That works of this character, whether brought from abroad, or written at home by the composers of our own Third Period, were performed and enjoyed by our London merchants, is clear from the Diary of gossiping old PEPYS. And even fifty years ago, there were excellent concerts given in the City under the patronage of the DUKE OF SUSSEX and the city magnates; at these, good music all round was given, instead of Italian, hackneyed, and shop royalty ditties.

It probably never occurred to the mind of the civic authorities that in MR. WEIST HILL, the principal of their Guildhall Music School, they possessed a thoroughly able conductor, or they would hardly have engaged two Italian conductors for the very difficult duties of this remarkable official concert. However, we read that "a large assembly of fashionable people" came to meet the Royalties assembled, and, as a thousand pounds were netted for the scheme, the promoters, performers, and audience, were probably delighted with the result. But the question has yet to be answered, as to how much art in this country has been advanced by such an exhibition.

T. L. SOUTHGATE.

THE LOGIC OF COUNTERPOINT.

THIRD SERIES.

XI.

CHERUBINI quotes from the much quoted FUCHS some examples of the employment of fourth species counterpoint in four parts, observing that "two "minims are rarely substituted for a semibreve" in any of the parts not engaged in enunciating the syncopated counterpoint, "and this reserve in the "use of such license must be observed," continues the theorist, "in order to become accustomed to the "control of the difficulties to be encountered in "having semibreves only in the parts not occupied in "conducting the syncopations." Next, CHERUBINI remarks, that "these examples present some unisons

Digitized by Google

"upon the unaccented beat of the bar in the synco-"pated, and between the two middle parts"; adding, "these unisons are, in some sort of way, tolerated in "this order, owing to the restraint which arises from "the obligation to have all the syncopations in the "same part. At the same time I would advise the "exercise of much discretion in the use of such "unisons, which should only be introduced when all "means of avoiding them have been fruitlessly tried." It is true that such coincident unisons should be sparsely employed. Still, the theorist would seem to display an excessive anxiety in this matter. For, though there are just objections against the disappearance for the moment of a given part, especially when that particular voice is carrying an important and characteristic counterpoint, it is reasonable to allow that an occasional thinning of the harmony is rather a gain than a loss in actual effect. Again, four-part harmony is sufficiently solid to fairly tax most listeners' attention when set contrapuntally, consequently an occasional reduction for a moment of so solid and contrapuntal a structure as a wall of four-part counterpoint presents, may be not only a convenient lapsus, but a welcome and well-advised rest for the ear. All the same, be it remembered, the theorist is right in restricting such practice to that of an exceptional use, but he seems hardly logical in displaying too much anxiety as regards the employment of a license which may now and then not only release the writer's hands, but also furnish the listener with a pleasant sense of relief from the weight of a harmony which may possibly be too fully sustained. E. H. TURPIN.

WHERE THE OLD PIANOS GO!

HAVING been applied to for a number of second-hand pianos for school-practice, I went to a large firm and inspected their second-hand stock, sent a descriptive list of their quality and price to the applicants—it was a pure work of charity, or else I would have refused the mission—and waited for their decision. The answer was long in coming, and begged of me to close the bargain. But imagine my surprise when I found that all the pianos had been sold to one buyer. To save me time and trouble, the firm advised me to offer the buyer of these pianos an inducement to part with them. Thither I went and found at least one answer to the heading of these lines. The pianos in question were to have new life infused into them by means of new barrels. The purchaser of them was an Italian,—evidently well-to-do,—who was a lively, chatty little man, and glibly entered into a dissertation on music, of which art he called himself a professor. "I am "going to have a grand piano arranged for myself, "and intend to give concerts." Till then he had not given me an opportunity to edge in a word, nor had I any wish to enter into so unpalatable a subject as that of concerts must ever be to a critic. But when from shere politeness I offered some remarks, I discovered that my pseudo-professor of the piano based his professorship on his skill in turning the handle of the intended automaton grand piano. My face must have expressed what I refrained from saying, for the son of the sunny South archly remarked, "I have "been to many concerts and heard many pianists, "and whilst some of them are considerably less "correct in execution than my automatons, they are "not a whit above them in expression, and so I am "going to have BEETHOVEN'S Op. 106, and tutti "quanti barrels prepared for a concert tour." Up to the present moment, I do not know whether the Signor was serious or joking, but the frightful prospect of such an addition to our concerts caused me to make a hasty retreat without even attempting to complete the purpose of my visit.

FERDINAND PRAEGER.

Organ News.

LIVERPOOL.

An organ recital was given on Saturday afternoon, July 21st, at St. George's Hall, by Mr. W. T. Best. The following was the programme:—

March from the Symphony, "The Power of Sound"	Spohr.
Andante (No. 2, A major)	Smart.
Prelude and Fugue (A minor)	Bach.
Overture, "A Midsummer Night's Dream"	Mendelssohn.
Selection from the "Water Music"	Handel.

And on Thursday evening, July 26th:—

Toccata con Fuga (D minor)	Bach.
Romanza, "Lonely though I wander"	Weber.
Overture, "Marco Spada"	Auber.
Prelude and Fugue (G major)	Wesley
Rondo dei Campanelli	Morandi.
Fantasia (No. 1)	Best.

FISHERIES EXHIBITION.

Mr. James Loaring's programmes, on the 16th and 19th inst., included the following:—

Overture, "Il Barbiere"	Rossini.
Introduction and Fugue in E flat	Albrechtsberger.
Chorus, "How excellent" ("Saul")	Handel.
"With Verdure Clad" ("Creation")	Haydn.
March, "Cornelius"	Mendelssohn.

Overture, "Crown Diamonds"	Auber.
Organ Concerto (No. 5)	Handel.
Andante from "1st Symphony"	Beethoven.
Selection from "Le Prophète"	Meyerbeer.
Grand March in C	Loaring.

And on Tuesday, July 17th, by Mr. C. E. Miller:—

Occasional Overture	Handel.
Introduction—Allegro—Adagio—March.
Slow Movement, from Symphony No. 7	Haydn.
Gavotte in D major	Bach.
Ballet Music, from "Rosamunde"	Schubert.
Allegretto from Four Sketches for a Pedal Piano Adantino, "Chansons Orientale"	Schumann.
Prelude and Fugue in D minor	Bach.
Fanfare, Cantabile, and March Triomphale	Lemmens.

And on Friday, July 20th, by Mr. Percy H. Fell:—

Postlude (in the form of a March)	Battley.
Andante	Mendelssohn.
Gavotte	Zimmermann.
"Air du Dauphin"	Roeckel.
"Fix'd in his Everlasting Seat"	Handel.
Offertoire	Hewlett.
Gavotte, "Mignon"	Thomas.
Fantasia, "Alla Marcia"	Wesley.

And on Monday, July 23rd, by Mr. C. E. Miller:—

Overture, "Samson"	Handel.
Romanza, from Symphony, "La Reine de France"	Haydn.
Short Prelude and Fugue in B flat	Bach.
Cantilene	Guilmant.
Gavotte, in D (No. 2)	Bach.
Pastorale (No. 7)	Kullak.
Triumphal March	Calkin.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

Mr. Eyre's programmes on Saturday last included the following:—

March Religieuse	Guilmant.
Allegretto, "Lobgesang"	Mendelssohn.
"Swell the full chorus"	Handel.
Intermezzo	Macbeth.
Fugue on "Wirglauben all' au einen Gott"	Bach.
Gavotte, Moderne	Tours.
Spring Song	Henselt.
Finale from an Orchestral Suite	Schumann.
Andante in D	Smart.
Overture, "Henry VIII."	Hatton.
Grand Chœur	Guilmant.
Selection, "Messiah"	Handel.
Trumpet March	Jude.

Digitized by Google

CHATTERIS, CAMBRIDGESHIRE.

The following is the programme of an organ recital given in the Parish Church, by Mr. John Thomas, on Friday, July 13th :—

Processional March	Clark.
Largo	Handel.
Prelude in G	Mendelssohn.
March Romaine	Gounod.
Andante in G	Wareing.
"March of Flambeaux"	Clark.
Grand Chorus in D	Guilmant.

PRESTON.

The following is the programme of an organ recital given by Mr. James Tomlinson, in the New Public Hall, on Saturday evening, July 21st :—

Sixth Sonata	Mendelssohn.
Choral with Variations—Fuga—Andante.
Fantasia, on the Prayer from "Freischütz"	Lux.
Andante Cantabile (Symphony in C)	Mozart.
Overture to "La Dame Blanche"	Boïeldieu.
Pastorale	Best.
Grand Solemn March	Smart.

WARE.

An organ recital was given on Thursday, July 26th, at the Parish Church, by Mr. Malcolm Heywood, A.R.A.M. The following was the programme :—

Sonata in C minor	Mendelssohn.
Grave—Adagio—Allegro maestoso e vivace—Fuga.
Andante con variazioni	Beethoven.
Andante	Guilmant.
Prelude and Fugue	Krebs.
Barcarolle from 4th Concerto	Bennett.
Marche Religieuse	Guilmant.

And on the same occasion by Mr. J. L. Gregory :—

Andante in F	Wely.
Fugue in E	Bach.
Andante, from the 5th Quintet	Mozart.
March, "Leonidas"	Trembath.

WICK.

An organ recital was given at the Parish Church, on Friday evening, July 13th, by Mr. Arthur H. Collier, Mus.Bac. The following was the programme :—

Sonata (No. 6)	Mendelssohn.
Adagio, "Sonata Pathétique"	Beethoven.
March of Israelites ("Eli")	Costa.
Concerto in B flat	Handel.
Theme with variations, "Septuor"	Beethoven.
Lord God of Abraham, "Elijah"	Mendelssohn.
"Let the Bright Seraphim"	Handel.
"Hallelujah Chorus"	"

CORK.

Programme of recitals given by Mr. T. J. Sullivan, on the organ of the Exhibition, on Monday, 16th inst. :—

Overture, "Cenerentola"	Rossini.
Romanza in G (violin and orchestra)	Beethoven.
March	Spohr.
Allegretto, "Hymn of Praise"	Mendelssohn.
Prelude and Fugue, G major	Bach.
Irish Melodies
Air, with variations	Hesse.
Cavatina	Raff.
Coronation March	Meyerbeer.

And on Tuesday, 17th inst. :—

Overture, "Figaro"	Mozart.
Concertante	Handel.
Fugue, D major	Bach.
Irish Airs
March	Spohr.
Andante (3rd Symphony)	Haydn.
"Ah! che la morte"	Verdi.
Schiller March	Meyerbeer.

The new Westminster Town Hall was opened on the 19th inst. by the Duke of Buccleuch (High Steward of Westminster). An anthem, "Behold, how good and joyful a thing," was sung, prayer was offered by Archdeacon Farrar, and various addresses were made. The building has cost about £30,000. It contains a large room and a good sized board-room, and the structure will doubtless be of great service for musical and artistic purposes as well as for general use. The movement which is supplying London with local town halls may be one of enormous service to the art as furnishing good sized, but not too large, concert-rooms. Architects and committees should be duly impressed with the importance of providing properly arranged orchestral space in view of the musical employment of these useful structures.

THE VOICE

MUSICALLY AND MEDICALLY CONSIDERED.

BY

ARMAND SEMPLE, B.A., M.B., Cantab., M.R.C.P., Lond.,

Physician to the Royal Society of Musicians.

(Continued from page 18).

Extent of Voices.

It must be borne in mind that, no matter what the extent, the absolute and real power of expression resides in the middle quality of every voice; force will not render this middle quality full and round, but the ease and steadiness by which the sounds are produced and sustained will give simultaneously capability of expansion and power of vibration. As soon as the middle quality has become full and firm, the muscles will have gained so great a degree of flexibility that the extreme sounds, both high and low, may be acquired with a fair amount of ease. Nevertheless, the extreme sounds of any voice, even when gained, should be carefully nursed, and employed chiefly for ornament and brilliant effect.

Styles of Music.

The adoption of the style of music best adapted for any individual voice demands the exercise of common sense and experience. The voice should be cultivated for that particular style for which nature formed it. No full or strong voice can give much effect to pieces requiring difficult execution, and on the other hand no thin or light voice can be so effective in the sostenuto style as in more brilliant music.

Again, the selection of songs is a matter of importance. Male singers commit an egregious error in singing songs especially written for females, and the latter a similar mistake in singing those written for males. How ridiculous it is to hear a gentleman singing "I'm a merry, merry Zingara," or "I dreamt that I dwelt in marble halls"; or a lady contributing "My pretty Jane," or "Come into the garden, Maud." Again, how ludicrous is the effect of a ponderous bass singing, "Ever of thee I'm fondly dreaming," like a war song, and a languid dandy with the lightest of tenor voices simpering, "Yes! Let me like a soldier fall."

To attempt the cultivation of a voice for any particular style, either English, Italian, or German, is an absurdity. The language of music is always the same, no matter in what language the words are. The voice is only able to sing to the utmost advantage in the style for which its organisation is suitable, whether for execution, brilliancy, or sostenuto. The music of every nation will resolve itself into one of these styles.

Management of the Breath.

Few singers acquire the easy management of the breath, and thus many vocalists, in their endeavours to express themselves with effect, give utterance to sounds harsh to the ear, and produce contortions unsightly to the eye. Many singers think that a long breath should be taken before commencing a passage of sustained sound or of rapid divisions, thus losing sight of the fact that by such a proceeding they of necessity lose the very power they are in the hope of gaining, for by distending the lungs to such an extent, these organs become oppressed by too great a volume of air, and the natural tendency is to throw out the breath with rapidity and force; thus the singer is unable to guide his voice with ease, but is compelled either to inspire at once with an effort, or by restraining the air on the lungs violently to contort the mouth and stretch the neck, by which actions distinct vibration and equal quality are destroyed, and articulation impeded, and in extreme instances the violence of the effort may even lead to bursting of the smaller veins of the head, throat, or breast.

The breath should invariably be taken without the slightest visible effort. In the pronunciation of the open Italian A (Anglicè, Ah), the mouth by nature assumes a smiling or easy appearance, neither too much closed nor too open, and by this means the lips are prevented from projecting, or from extending too far in a lateral direction, the former action rendering the sound throaty or guttural, the latter giving it a thin character. The tongue lies flat and free in the mouth, touching gently the lower front teeth.

Digitized by Google

Every sound at first should be produced lightly, expanded gradually to its full power, and then diminished gradually.

Two figures are employed to indicate the crescendo and diminuendo, viz., the latter, resembling the form of the eye, appears best to illustrate the action.

The length of time of respiration varies in different individuals, according to the power possessed by the lungs, and according to the period over which the amount of practice has extended. The lungs acquire strength by practice. It is highly important that the breath should never be taken in the middle of a word, and as in reading prose or poetry the various stops indicate the temporary degree of suspension, so in reading music the unaccented parts point out the point of suspension, and in these the breath may be taken with propriety. The reading of musical phrases, however, depends much upon the intelligence and taste of the singer.

(To be continued.)

A REMINISCENCE OF HEINE.

BY FREIDRICH KUECKEN.

The following was given in the New York Courier.

After I had become comfortably settled in Paris, my first duty was to call on Meyerbeer. I counted upon a hearty welcome, for when I made his acquaintance in Berlin, at the house of his mother, he had treated me with great kindness and consideration. To my regret, I found him occupied—rehearsing with some fair vocalist—but he begged me to repeat my visit in the evening at seven o'clock. As a matter of course, I came promptly at the appointed time.

Clouds of thick smoke poured out of the fireplace as I entered the parlour, during stormy weather a common occurrence in Paris, and I found myself, very much annoyed by the smoke, in the presence of eight or ten gentlemen, who had evidently dined with Meyerbeer. He introduced me in his most charming manner as a young song-writer, who had already achieved great popularity in Germany. I then heard him pronounce the names: Scribe, Jules Janin, Alexander Dumas, Berlioz, Pixis and others, which I cannot recall. I knew but one of the gentlemen, Pixis, whose acquaintance I had made at Baden-Baden the previous summer. He approached me, and in order to avoid a general conversation in French, which, owing to a superficial knowledge of the language at that time, would have been very embarrasing, I purposely prolonged our tete-a-tete.

In the meantime I hardly noticed how a not particularly striking personage turned towards us, remained standing at a distance of a few feet, and then abruptly turned upon his heel. In departing, Meyerbeer invited me to listen to a few acts of the "Hugenotten" from his private box at the opera-house, the same evening. We came in time to witness a complete butchery of the second finale. Grieved and frightened that this unfortunate event should have happened in the presence of the master, I glanced toward Meyerbeer, who, however, did not seem to be concerned in the least. He turned around and said, "Do not give yourself any uneasiness. These accidents are liable to happen occasionally when the same opera is repeated so many times. The public does not mind it, however, for it knows that the next performance will run smoothly—after the thorough overhauling it will have received in the meantime." Thus I spent my first evening in society, and at the opera.

Next, it was the desire of my heart to make the acquaintance of Heinrich Heine. His residence happened to be near mine, and the very next morning I knocked at his door at the usual hour for receiving callers. A servant appeared. I gave my name and begged to be announced. To my regret, she returned with the message, "Herr Heine is not at home." The following day I called again; again I was dismissed with "Herr Heine is not at home," and this repeated itself at least a dozen times.

I now allowed several weeks to pass, hoping that chance would throw him into my way before long. Vain hope!

Once more I began making my periodical visits to Heine's door. One day a man answered my wrappings in place of the maid-servant, and just as I was on the point of rapturously greeting him as Heine, he cried out indignantly, "Herr Heine is not at home!" No doubt remained but that Heine himself had slammed the door in my face. Six months passed, when an accident brought us together at last. The well-known—at that time even—celebrated music publisher, Moritz Schlesinger had arranged to publish a French translation of several of my most popular songs. In order that we might talk over the matter at our leisure, he invited me to breakfast one morning. A gentleman appeared, unannounced, whom Schlesinger received with the words, "Good for you, my dear Heine! I am glad you happen in just at this time, for Kücken here is the most unhappy mortal alive—simply because he has not made the acquaintance of his favourite poet." Heine, though he saw how delighted I was, said, stifly, "We know each other already, my dear Kücken"—my surprise was great—"have you forgotten the evening with Meyerbeer, when he introduced you, and then called out the names of all present? Old Pixis captured you at once, but I thought to myself, Go, greet the countryman by all means. I went to you, and although I listened to the twaddle of the débutante's father for some time, you did not think it worth while to notice me. Of course, I turned my back upon you and returned to my Frenchmen. Alexander Dumas did not allow this to escape him, and I want you to understand, Alexander Dumas is a brasen-tongued scoundrel! He said, 'My dear Heine, your popularity in Germany cannot amount to much, for this fellow does not even know you!' You see, my dear Kücken, in Paris we do not submit to these things!" Here, then, was the explanation of the everlasting "Herr Heine is not at home," as well as of the personal slamming to of the door.

I resided in Paris for several years, and after this meeting a relation of true friendship sprang up between us. I might relate many interesting anecdotes of him, but for this time I will close by adding the following little letter which once accompanied a parcel of new poems:

"Dear Kücken—Here are a few eggs for you to hatch. Do not cackle over them too long, and let me hear from you soon.

"Ever your "H. HEINE."

MUSIC IN LADIES' SCHOOLS.

There are doubtless seminaries in which the arts are taught as such, while in others they occupy rather an unfavourable position for their development. A great deal of musical instruction is imparted year after year in these schools and it is desirable that it should be made as perfect and efficient as possible. It is surprising to find among those who preside over educational institutions men and women who have so incorrect appreciation of the nature and influence of art culture. Some regard music merely as an accomplishment designed to entertain and to enable young ladies to appear with credit to themselves in society. In how many schools of this sort is music placed on a par with other studies? It generally passes under the name of an "extra," and as an "extra" it has not the same rights which other branches of learning have. It is, perhaps, unreasonable to expect that ladies' seminaries, which are, as a rule, but poorly endowed, should make music a study free for all, just as Latin or mathematics is free to every student that enters the school, but it is not unreasonable to ask that music should be regarded as a regular study. The art furnishes a good revenue to many schools, and even when viewing the question from this standpoint, one would suppose that it would be placed on a level with all other branches of curriculum.

A teacher of music in a ladies' seminary finds himself at times in an embarrassing position. Indeed, outsiders can not fully appreciate what it means to teach music in such institutions. The department must be made self-supporting and that teacher who is unable to raise it to that position is not the man or woman that is wanted. Teachers in the regular or collegiate department, as a rule, are more independent. They have better control over pupils for the simple reason that the branches which they teach, are not "extras." Young misses may or may not study music. They fully understand, that studying music adds so much "extra" revenue to the income of the school. If a music teacher resorts to discipline, or pursues a course of instruction that is in a measure distasteful to pupils, he is straightway threatened with the prospect of their stopping their lessons. This places the teacher in an embarrassing position. Complaints are made against him to president, parents, and teachers, and these complaints are generally of such a nature that the true facts can scarcely come to light. Would that parents could see their own interests better, and sustain faithful teachers; at any rate, that they would thoroughly investigate the complaints offered by their daughters before they arrive at a decision. If teachers could be assured of the support of parents, if they could follow out, without danger of complaint, that course which is best for pupils, much better work would be done in a number of schools of this kind.

Another impediment to the advancement of genuine art education is the fact that in some seminaries students are so overcrowded with work that very little time or energy can be devoted to the study of music. Students rush through a course as rapidly as possible, and in order to please them and to keep them in the school, their wishes in this particular are often indulged. What can be expected of musical students that are overworked with other studies, that hurry, so to speak, through their education? The study of music requires leisure as well as application. Many of those attending such schools would do better to let music alone, for their money and time is not unfrequently wasted. Unless music can be accorded as much time as other studies, not much good can come out of it. If any study must be neglected it is almost sure to be the study of music. Many pupils take up music as a sort of a side issue, or because it is fashionable, and the position accorded to the art among other studies is calculated to encourage them to do so.

Digitized by Google

Despite these difficulties, much is expected of teachers of music. When a young miss comes home from the boarding-school fond parents do not examine into her knowledge of Latin or mathematics, but they are quick to invite her to the piano where she is expected to give evidence of her musical progress. At parties, her friends expect great results from her educational advantages abroad, and at the earliest opportunity she is asked to step to the instrument to astonish the cousins and the aunts. Observing teachers are aware of this fact, and "prudently" provide for such occasions. Thus many ladies are allowed to spend their time on pieces which they ought to devote to the playing of exercises. Parents are often unreasonable in their expectations of one year's musical instruction, especially when it has to be imparted under such disadvantageous circumstances. No matter how little talent Miss Julia may have, she is expected to come home an accomplished artist; no matter how little she knows when going to boarding-school, she is expected to know all when she comes back.

Music is called an "extra," and is not accorded that position among the regular studies which it deserves, for all it is diligently used as a means to advertise the school, and to bring it before the public.

School libraries are not supplied with musical books, nor are musical journals to be found in the reading-rooms of scarcely any of these institutions. Other points might be mentioned, as for instance the use of inferior instruments for practice and the employment of deficient teachers for beginners, etc. Enough has been said to show that music in ladies' boarding-schools is not in all respects what it ought to be. Nothing is further from the purpose of these words than a fault-finding spirit or a disposition to belittle the noble work many such institutions are doing. The editor of a musical journal, has a right to inquire into the welfare of music, no matter where it is taught or by whom.—Brainard's Musical World.

Correspondence.

THE INTERNATIONAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "MUSICAL STANDARD."

SIR,—In your last number I read a paragraph from "J.J.M.," of Liverpool, which would lead the public to infer that the International College of Music had received payment of fees for a Practical Examination, without such examination having taken place. Now, if "J.J.M.," who lives in Liverpool, had seen all his local newspapers, he would have seen that the examination, postponed more than a month ago through the action of our late local secretary, is to be held on September 5th and following days.

In addition, I must state, in justice to myself, that not one of the fees said to be missing has ever reached the College, and I had actually left my house en route for Liverpool, when a messenger overtook me, with a telegram from our late secretary, requesting me not to leave London that night, the examination being put off, which will account for my non-appearance on the scene.

Of course, no college can be answerable for the actions of its local representatives; all that we can do in this case is as far as possible to atone for the disappointment of the numerous candidates by giving them their examination as if the College had received their fees. My personal loss will naturally be a heavy one, but as I like fair play myself, I always endeavour to give it to others.

Mr. W. Henry Dreaper, of Bold Street, Liverpool, the present admirable local secretary for the Musical International College, will, I am sure, be happy to give "J.J.M." or anyone else any further information.

Yours truly,
EDWIN M. LOTT,
Examiner.

270, Cornwall Road, Notting Hill,
July 23rd, 1883.

ORPHAN SCHOOL FOR DAUGHTERS OF MUSICIANS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "MUSICAL STANDARD."

SIR,—In the notice which appeared in the Musical Standard of July 7th, the address of the Orphan School was given as 8, Lupton Street, Kentish Town, but it was found that that house could not be used for a school.

I have, however, secured another, which I hope will answer the purpose; and after August 15th my address will be 10, Darnley Road, Royal Crescent, Notting Hill, W.

I am, Sir, yours truly,
HELEN KENWAY.

South Hill House, Bath, July 24th.

THE SACRED HARMONIC LIBRARY QUESTION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "MUSICAL STANDARD."

SIR,—As a former member of the Sacred Harmonic Society, I have read with much pain and some shame of the division among the existing members of the money received from the sale of their fine library. The article commenting on the greed and impropriety of this step that has appeared in your journal, and the various comments on the job in that of other musical papers, are too just to be resented. The matter, unfortunately, is not a private affair, to be smoothed over, hole and corner fashion, but it is practically a violation of a public trust, that one could never have thought the members of the old Sacred Harmonic Society would have been guilty of. At the same time, it should be known that it was by no means the generally expressed wish that the library should be sold and the money divided, but it is no secret that there were not half-a-dozen members who demanded this "pound of flesh, according to the bond." The great bulk of them, and notably the executive officers, were opposed to this mean proceeding. Here are the names of the committee from our last published list, and if those of your readers who may happen to know any of those gentlemen will personally urge them to take immediate action in the matter, the reproach brought against us may yet be wiped away. T. Hill, president; Messrs. J. Carmichael, G. Donnison, A. Durlacher, S. Foster, J. Frye, M. Hanhart, N. Hanhart, W. H. Harrison, J. Kitcat, G. T. Maddox, W. Pattrickson, T. Sherrard, G. M. Smith, F. W. Wilcocks, T. Williamson, W. H. Withall, committee; W. H. Husk, hon. librarian, and E. H. Mannering, secretary. If only some one with authority will take the matter up, and consult the old members, it will doubtless be found that there is no desire to retain money they have never earned, and the Royal College of Music, the Royal Academy, and other established musical institutions, will receive a handsome portion of the funds now gone wrong.

To shew that there was far from unanimity over what was done, it may be mentioned that Sir Michael Costa removed his books and arrangements from the Society, and would not allow them to be sold. It may also be said, that the old officers of the Society have been provided for, and not ignored, as the musical critic of Figaro infers; and further, that his particulars of former profits made is over-estimated. Still, his statement, that the dissolving members are putting into their private pockets the value of the books bought out of ancient profits made from the public by old members long since retired, correctly represents what has actually taken place. It is not pleasant to anticipate what the foreign art-world will say of this ugly musical scandal.

Yours, etc.,
AN OLD MEMBER, S. H. S.

Academical Intelligence.

TRINITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

The following is a list of the successful candidates at the Midsummer examinations held by Trinity College for diplomas and other higher musical certificates; the names being placed in order of merit:—

LICENTIATES IN MUSIC.

Richard Frederic Tyler, Trinity College, London; Henry Edgar Hyatt, Trinity College, London; Lucy Elinor Hatchett Jackson, Oxford.

ASSOCIATES IN MUSIC.

Lewis E. Lewis, Meopham Vicarage, Gravesend; Jane T. Bird, Berwick-on-Tweed; Herbert Rolfe, Trinity College, London; John Freeman Dovaston, London; Henry Pickford, (B.A. Cambridge), Trinity College, London; Francis Wilman, Heslington, York; John Matthew Ennis, University of London; Emily Asquith, Barnsley; Robert Reah, South Shields; Joseph Walsh, Trinity College, London; Alfred Frederick Tindall, London; Henry Glasspoole, London; Emily Champion, Trinity College, London; Philip Sharpe, Bishop Stortford.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATIONS FOR ASSOCIATESHIP.

James Stewart Henderson, London; Henry Palmer, Kettering; E. Augusta Walker, Birmingham; Eva Tindall, Barrow-in-Furness.

On behalf of Academical Board,
H. G. BONAVIA HUNT,
Warden.

The solo singers at the Cardiff Eisteddfod concerts of the first week in August include Mdme. Edith Wynne, Miss Anne Marriott, Miss Anna Williams, Miss Spencer Jones, Mr. Barton McGuckin, Signor Foli, Mr. Lucas Williams, Mr. ApHerbert, etc. The conductor will be Mr. E. H. Turpin.

Digitized by Google

Passing Events.

Mr. C. Mackenzie has declined to write for the Birmingham Festival, being already too much occupied.

A pianoforte recital was given by Herr S. Lehmeyer, at 62, Harley Street last week.

Messrs. Brainard, of New York, offer 200 dollars for the best five anthems for a prize anthem book to be published next year.

The new Metropolitan Opera House in New York is to be opened on October 22nd with "Faust." The house seats an audience of 3,200.

"Le Diable à Quatre" is the title of MM. Najac, Toché, and Jonas's new comic opera which is to be produced on the re-opening of the Nouveautés in Paris this autumn.

"The British Patrol," a descriptive allegro, by Mr. George Asch, and a sequel to the popular "Turkish Patrol," has been recently performed at the Crystal Palace and the Fisheries Exhibition with great success. It is understood that at least 4,000 copies of the composition have been already sold.

Miss A. S. Burvett, a talented and skilled pianist from Australia, gave a very successful recital at Prince's Hall the other evening. Her rendering of the "Kreutzer" Sonata, Gottschalk's "Dernier Amours," and a caprice by Raff showed her powers to the best advantage. Miss Burvett has already made for herself a position claiming respect in Belgium and elsewhere.

It is unnecessary to criticise an Italian opera called "La Regina di Scozia," which was produced at the Folies Dramatiques Theatre the other week. The words and music are both by Mrs. M. F. Stuart Stresa, the subject, of course, being Mary Queen of Scots. The work is amateurish in character, and the statement that it was well received at Turin and Milan excites some surprise. A very efficient company interpreted the opera, and the conductor, Signor Furlotti, is evidently a man of talent.

The proceeds of the entertainment given by the Savage Club at the Albert Hall on the 11th inst. did not amount to sufficient for the purpose intended, i.e., the founding of a scholarship in the Royal College of Music, with a preference for sons and daughters of club members. It has been proposed that the deficiency shall be covered by taking a "show" through the larger provincial towns, on the model of that which collected over two thousand pounds for the Cotton Famine Fund some twenty years ago.

The balance sheet of the annual Pilots' Concert, held in Hengler's Circus, in connection with the Liverpool Seamen's Orphanage, on Easter Monday, has been published, from which it appears that after paying expenses, the sum of £358 18s. 11d. has been handed over to the treasurer. When it is added that over £200 was turned away from the doors, some idea may be entertained of the popularity of the institution. Mr. S. Claude Ridley, the well known organist of the institution, was the director of the entertainment.

One of the oldest violins in the United States is in the possession of Mr. W. Y. Macpherson, of Owensboro'. It is known to have been in his family over 100 years. The violin is 266 years old, having been made by Nicolaus Amati, of Cremona, Italy, one of the most celebrated violin makers in the world. He was born in 1587, and was thirty years old when the violin was made, just in his prime. One characteristic of his make was in the varnish used, the art of making it having died with him. It consists in the beautiful shading, which in this particular violin could not be surpassed, and it no doubt is one of his best.

The rector and churchwardens of St. George's, Hanover Square, have recently set a good example, and acknowledged the ability of their organist, Mr. W. Pinney, Mus.B., Oxon., in a complimentary manner. A few Sundays since the Rev. E. Capel Cure, prefaced his sermon by saying that "the offertory in the morning would be for the purpose of supplementing the organist's stipend, in recognition of his great and valued services." The offertory amounted to about £40. For two or three years past this plan has been adopted, following the usual Easter-day offertory for the assistant curate, and it is a plan which deserves general adoption.

The Querist.

REPLY.

M. K.—Gounod's "March Cortège," from "Irene," is published by Augener, of Newgate Street, and arranged by Naumann. —J. S. B.

Service Lists.

TENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

JULY 29th.

London.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Stainer in E flat; Introit, To the name of our salvation; Holy Communion, Stainer in E flat. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Stainer in E flat; Anthem, The wilderness (Goss).

TEMPLE CHURCH.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum Laudamus, and Jubilate Deo, Nares in F; Apostles' Creed, Harmonised Monotone; Anthem, Praise the Lord (Goss). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Arnold in A; Apostles' Creed, Harmonized Monotone; Anthem, The King shall rejoice (Handel).

LINCOLN'S INN CHAPEL.—Morn.: Service, Steggall in G; Kyrie (Steggall); Anthem, Whosoever drinketh of this water (Bennett). Even: Service, Turle in D; Anthem, Wherewithal shall a young man (Elvey).

CHRIST CHURCH, CLAPHAM.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Plain-song; Kyrie and Credo, Schubert in B flat; Offertory Anthem, How goodly are thy tents (Ouseley); Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei, and Gloria in excelsis (Schubert). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Smart in F; Anthems, Come unto Him, and, With Cherubim and Seraphim (Handel).

FOUNDLING CHAPEL.—Morn.: Service, Goss in F; Benedictus, Smart in F; Anthem, Hear my prayer (Mendelssohn). Aft.: Children's Service.

HOLY TRINITY, TULSE HILL.—Morn.: Chant Service. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Hopkins in F; Anthem, I will extol Thee, and Hosanna (Costa).

ST AUGUSTINE AND ST. FAITH, WATLING STREET.—Morn.: Service, Smart in F; Introit, Behold, O God, our defender; Communion Service, Smart in F; Agnus Dei, Monk in C. Even.: Service, Martin in A; Anthem, O clap your hands (Stainer).

ST. BARNABAS, MARYLEBONE.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Clarke-Whitfield in E; Anthem, Woe unto them, and, He that shall endure; Litany. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Hoyte in B flat; Anthem, Stand up and bless (Goss).

ST. JAMES'S PRIVATE EPISCOPAL CHAPEL, SOUTHWARK.—Morn.: Service, Introit, Author of life divine; Communion Service, Mozart's Twelfth Mass. Even.: Service, ; Stainer in E flat; Anthem, How lovely (Spohr).

ST. MAGNUS, LONDON BRIDGE.—Morn.: Service, Opening Anthem, to the Lord our God (Calkin); Te Deum and Jubilate, Boyce in A; Kyrie, (Armes). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Arnold in A; Anthem, Lord, how are they increased (Kent).

ST. MARGARET PATTENS, ROOD LANE, FENCHURCH STREET.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Sullivan in D; Benedictus, Stainer; Communion Service: Offertory Anthem, How beautiful are the feet (Handel); Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei, and Gloria, Mozart in B flat. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Garrett in F; Anthem, To Thee, great Lord (Rossini).

ST. MARY BOLTONS, WEST BROMPTON, S.W.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Armes in G; Benedictus, Chant; Holy Communion, Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, and Gloria in excelsis, Smart in F; Offertory (Barnby); Benedictus and Agnus Dei (Redhead). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Arnold in A. Anthem, I will give thanks (Hopkins).

ST. MICHAEL'S, CORNHILL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Dykes in F; Anthem, Now we are ambassadors (Mendelssohn); Kyrie, and Creed, Thorne in G; Offertory Sentences (Barnby). Even. Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Naylor in C; Anthem, Ascribe unto the Lord (Travers).

Digitized by Google

ST. PAUL'S, AVENUE ROAD, SOUTH HAMPSTEAD.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Tilleard in F; Benedictus, Garrett; Kyrie, Mendelssohn in G. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Bridge in C; Anthem, The Wilderness (Goss).

ST. PAUL'S, BOW COMMON, E.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Chants; Holy Communion; Kyrie, Credo, Offertory, Sanctus and Gloria in excelsis, Stainer in A; Benedictus, Agnus Dei, Eyre in E flat. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, King in D; Anthem, In Thee, O Lord (Weldon).

ST. PETER'S (EATON SQUARE).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Tours in F. Even.: Service, Smart in F; Anthem, Art Thou weary (Lloyd).

ST. PETER'S, LEIGHAM COURT ROAD, STREATHAM, S.W.—Morn.: Service, Holy Eucharist, Purge me with hyssop (Novello); Introit, When I called (Chantwise); Mass, Kyrie Credo, Sanctus and Gloria, Dykes in F; Benedictus and Agnus, Dei, Sutton in F; Gradual, Keep me (Chantwise); Offertory; Communion and Post Communion. Even.: Service, Magnificat, Gadsby in C; Anthem, As pants the hart (Spohr).

ST. PETER'S, VERE STREET, W.—Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Tuckermann in F; Anthem, O taste and see (Goss).

ST. SAVIOUR'S, HOXTON.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Hopkins in G; Holy Communion; Kyrie, Credo, Sursum Corda, Sanctus, and Gloria in excelsis, Smart in G. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis (Best); Anthem, O praise the Lord (Wilton).

ST. SEPULCHRE'S, HOLBORN.—Morn: Service, Sullivan in D; Anthem, Rejoice greatly (Handel); Credo, Lott in F; Offertory Anthem, Let your light (Haydn). Even.: Service, Arnold in A; Anthem, Blessed be Thou (Kent).

Country.

ST. ASAPH CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Calkin in B flat; Anthem, O send out Thy light (Calkin). Even.: Service, The Litany; Anthem, God be merciful (Lloyd).

ASHBURNE CHURCH, DERBYSHIRE. — Morn.: Service, Throughout, Hopkins in C. Even.: Service, Walmisley in D; Anthem, O that men would praise the Lord (Bartholomew).

BEDDINGTON CHURCH, SURREY.—Morn.: Service, Garrett in D; Communion Service, Calkin in D. Even.: Service, Calkin in D; Anthem, O clap your hands together all ye people (Stainer).

BIRMINGHAM (S. ALBAN THE MARTYR).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Dykes in F; Holy Communion; Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Gloria, Garrett in D; Benedictus and Agnus Dei, Redman in D. Evensong: Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Tours in F.

BIRMINGHAM (ST. CYPRIAN'S, HAY MILLS).—Morn.: Service, Field in D; Anthem, Give the King Thy judgments (Boyce). Even.: Service, Cobb in G; Anthem, O Lord, Thou hast searched me out, and God is a Spirit).

BIRMINGHAM (S. PHILIP'S CHURCH). — Morn.: Service, Bamby in E; Anthem, I will give thanks (Palestrinæ). Evensong Service, Chipp in A; Anthem, O be joyful (Smart).

CANTERBURY CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Smart in F; Communion, Smart in F; Anthem, Thou will keep him in perfect peace (Jarrett). Even.: Service, Smart in F; Anthem, This is the day (Oakley).

CARLISLE CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Hopkins in C; Introit, I will love Thee (Macfarren); Kyrie, Hopkins in C; Nicene Creed, Harmonized Monotone. Even.: Service, Macfarren in E flat; Anthem, Lead kindly light (Stainer).

CIRENCESTER (HOLY TRINITY).—Morn.: Service, Smart in F; Even.: Service, King in F; Anthem, How lovely are Thy dwellings (Spohr).

DONCASTER (PARISH CHURCH).—Morn.: Service, Tours in F. Even.: Service, Tours in F; Anthem, Wherewithal (Elvey).

DUBLIN, ST. PATRICK'S (NATIONAL) CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Mendelssohn in A; Holy Communion, Kyrie, Creed, and Sanctus, Rogers in D; Anthem, Judge me, O God (Mendelssohn). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Smith in B flat; Anthems, Father, Son and Spirit guide (Dicinkson), and, Blessing, glory, wisdom (Bach).

ELY CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum Smart in F; Benedictus, Plain Song, Kyrie and Credo, Smart in F; Gloria, (Richardson); Anthem, How lovely (Salaman). Even.: Service, Anthem, Praise the Lord (Mozart).

EXETER CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Boyce in C; Communion, Smart in F. Even.: Service, Cooke in G; Anthem, God is my hope (Greene).

FOLKESTONE (ST MICHAELS).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Tours in F; Anthem, These are They (Dykes). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Stainer in B flat; Anthem, He that sitteth on the throne (Dykes).

HARROGATE (ST. PETER'S CHURCH). — Morn.: Service, Kyrie (Mendelssohn); Credo (Goss); Anthem, O how amiable (Richardson). Even.: Service, Magnificat, and Nunc Dimittis, Best in E; Anthem, The Lord is great in Zion (Best).

LEEDS PARISH CHURCH. — Morn.: Service, Boyce in A; Anthem, Lift Thine eyes (Mendelssohn); Kyrie and Creed, Walmisley in F. Even.: Service, Calkin in B flat; Anthem, O where shall wisdom (Boyce).

LICHFIELD CATHEDRAL. — Morn.: Service, Hopkins in C; Anthem, But the Lord is mindful, and See what love (Mendelssohn). Even. Service, Cantate and Deus Miseueatur, Haynes in E flat; Anthem, The wilderness (Goss).

LIVERPOOL CATHEDRAL.—Aft.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Calkin in B flat; Anthem, Praise the Lord (Elvey).

LIVERPOOL (ST. CUTHBERT'S, EVERTON).—Morn.: Service, Stanford in B flat. Even.: Service, Cantate and Deus, Attwood in D; Anthem, Blessed be the God and Father (Wesley).

LLANDAFF CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Lloyd in E flat; Introit, One thing have I desired (Macfarren); Holy Communion, Stainer in E flat. Even.: Service, The Litany; Anthem, Lead, kindly light (Stainer).

MANCHESTER CATHEDRAL. — Morn.: Service, and Full Communion, Tours in F; Anthem, Incline Thine ear (Himmel). Aft.: Service, Tours in F; Anthem, Draw near, ye people (Mendelssohn).

MANCHESTER (ST. BENEDICT'S). — Morn.: Service, Kyrie; Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus, and Gloria in excelsis, Thorne in G; Agnus Dei, Miné in F. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis (Stainer).

MANCHESTER (ST. JOHN BAPTIST, HULME).—Morn.: Service, Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus and Gloria in excelsis, Monk in C; Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis (Jordan).

PETERBOROUGH CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Boyce in C; Introit, I am the bread of life (Stainer); Communion Service, Stainer in A. Even.: Service, Stainer in E flat; Anthem, Hear my prayer (Mendelssohn).

SALISBURY CATHEDRAL. Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Cooke in G; Kyrie and Credo, Dykes in F; Offertory, (Redhead). Aft. Service, Cooke in G; Anthem, Hear my prayer (Mendelssohn).

SHEFFIELD PARISH CHURCH. — Morn.: Service, Kyrie, (Redhead). Even.: Service, Cantate Domine and Deus Miserentur, Chants; Anthems, Holy, holy! (Handel), and, What are these (Stainer).

SHERBORNE ABBEY. — Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Lyle in D. Even.: Service, Anthem, Sing a song of praise (Stainer).

SOUTHAMPTON (ST. MARY'S CHURCH).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Tours in F; Holy Communion; Introit, Jesus said (Stainer); Service, Tours in F; Offertory, God is not unrighteous, and, To do good (Barnby); Paternoster (Field). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Tours in F; Apostles' Creed, Harmonized Monotone.

WELLS CATHEDRAL. — Morn.: Service, Clarke in E; Introit, O magnify the Lord (Macfarren). Even.: Service, Clarke in E; Anthem, O worship the Lord (Hayes).

WORCESTER CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Hopkins in F; Anthem, Thou visitest the earth (Greene). Even. Service, Hopkins in F; Anthem, They that go down to the sea (Attwood).

APPOINTMENT.

Mr. C. E. MILLER has been appointed Organist to St. Augustine and St. Faith, Watling Street, E.C.

ERRATUM.—In report of College of Organists' examination last week, one name should be that of C. H. H. Sipple, and not C. H. Hayler Tipple as reported.

HENRY SPEECHLY,

CAMDEN ORGAN STEAM FACTORY,

KING'S ROAD, ST. PANCRAS, LONDON, N.W.

ESTABLISHED 1860.

Specifications and Estimates for Organs of any Magnitude, also for Reconstructions, Repairs, and Re-voicing.

Tunings contracted for, and Tuners sent to all parts of the Country at regular intervals or when required.

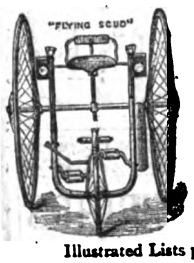
ORGANS ON HIRE WITH OPTION OF PURCHASE.

 Church, Chamber, and Chancel Organs for Sale or Hire; One or Two Manuals. Ready for immediate use. Easy Terms if required.

All Pipes and other Parts manufactured on the Premises.

Digitized by Google

BICYCLES AND TRICYCLES.
NEW AND SECOND-HAND.



"FLYING SCUD" and "ECLECTIC" TRICYCLES, are the Machines for 1883. Spoken of by the Daily News of January 30th as "Splendid machines." "NANCY LEE," Weldless Steel," and "NONSUCH" Steel Bicycles, from £5 5s. Any machine at maker's price for twelve or less equal monthly payments, or for £5 down and 20s. per month, or large discount and carriage paid for cash. Can be seen and tried before purchasing in our school (60 by 40, concrete floor, tuition free), adjoining Show-rooms, the largest in London, with over 400 new and second-hand on View. Machines bought, sold, cleaned, repaired (estimates given), warehoused, advanced upon and exchanged.

Illustrated Lists post free. Hours 9 till 7; Saturdays till 4.

Repairs of all kinds neatly, cheaply, and promptly executed. Cheapest house in the trade for fittings. Parts and sundries of all descriptions kept in stock.

Machines Let on Hire with Option of Purchase.

SOUTH LONDON MACHINISTS' COMPANY.

STEAM WORKS: Suffolk Works, Suffolk Grove, Great Suffolk Street, S.E. Show Rooms and Offices: 28 and 29, Suffolk Grove. Bicycle and Tricycle School: 18, Suffolk Grove. City Depot, Show Rooms, and School: Tower Chambers, Moorgate Street, E.C. (Nearly opposite Moorgate Street Station.) PERAMBULATORS and all Domestic Machines at lowest prices for cash, or on easy terms without extra charge. Lists free. State kind required.

ESTABLISHED 1872.

When writing please say where you saw this advertisement.

T. R. WILLIS,

Organ Builder, Metal & Wood Pipe Maker and Voicer,

TOWER ORGAN WORKS, 29, MINORIES, LONDON.

AN ORGAN KEPT FOR PRACTICE.

REBUILDING, TUNING, AND REPAIRING.

E & W. SNELL,

Manufacturers of Harmoniums, and Reed Pedal Organs,

KING STREET NORTH, CAMDEN TOWN, LONDON, N.W.

NOTE.—These are the only Instruments at which an Organist can really find himself "at home," as all Scales, Positions, and Measurements are adopted strictly in accordance with the Resolutions of the Council of the College of Organists. Estimates free.

MALEY, YOUNG & OLDKNOW,
ORGAN BUILDERS,

KING'S ROAD, ST. PANCRAS, LONDON, N.W.

Specifications, Estimates, and Designs for Church, Chamber, Concert, and all Descriptions of Organs.
Materials, Workmanship, and Tone guaranteed to be First Class.
Organs rebuilt to suit any position, enlarged, and Revoiced at very moderate charges.
Tunings in all parts of the Kingdom.

PROSPECTUS FREE ON APPLICATION.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts, excepting under exceptional circumstances.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit, at Three per cent. interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables, the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons, and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares, and Annuities.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

The Birkbeck Building Society's Annual Receipts exceed Five Millions.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with immediate Possession, and no Rent to Pay.—Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate Possession, either for Building or Gardening purposes.—Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

WITH 25 PER CENT DISCOUNT FOR CASH
OR 15/- PER MONTH,
(SECOND HAND 10/- Per Month)
ON THE 3 YEARS SYSTEM
BORD'S PIANOS
PIANOS EXCHANGED
LISTS FREE OF
C. STILES & Co. 42 SOUTHAMPTON ROW W.C.

CONSTANT LAURENT, HARMONIUM and ANGLO-ORGAN MANUFACTURER, Established in 1789 at 85, HIGH STREET, MARYLEBONE, LONDON, W. Repairing and Tuning Executed Promptly. Price List on Application.—Intending Purchasers are respectfully solicited to inspect my Instruments and Factory.

EUSTACE INGRAM, Organ Builder,

Combines excellence of Tone and Workmanship with Economy.

INSPECTION INVITED.

WORKS:—Burnard Place, Eden Grove, Holloway, London, N.

"HARMONY SIMPLIFIED."

A Concise Treatise on Harmony, Thorough Bass, and Modulation, for the Use of Students. By FARLEY NEWMAN. In paper cover, 1s. 6d. net; bound in cloth, 2s. 6d. net.

"THE ORGAN OLIO."

Edited by ARTHUR HENRY BROWN. A Collection of Short Pieces for the Organ or Harmonium, by various Composers. 2s. net.

London: B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster-row, E.C.

MUSIC SENT ON SALE OR RETURN on highly advantageous terms by

B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster-row, London.

MUSIC of EVERY PUBLISHER supplied to Dealers, Teachers, and Schools. Having the largest varied Stock Europe. The terms, which are highly advantageous, sent on application

London: B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster-row.

ALL WHO POSSESS A PIANOFORTE and canot play it, may now play at once, without any previous knowledge of Music, by ROYLANCE'S NUMERICAL SYSTEM, which contains a FIGURED DIAGRAM to fit on the Keyboard of any Pianoforte (or Harmonium, and a choice selection of forty SACRED and SECULAR MELODIES, composed for the use of those who have no time to study Music. Thousands are now able to play who did not believe such a thing possible. The diagram alone will be found most useful to Professors for teaching purposes. 6d. nett.—Price 2s. 6d. nett; post free 33 stamps.—C. ROYLANCE, 184, Tottenham Court-road; and all Music Sellers.

SYDNEY SMITH'S
FOUR NEW PIANOFORTE PIECES.

LA FEE DES ONDES.	Morceau brilliant ...	4 0
LE DOMINO NOIR.	Fantaisie brillante sur l'opéra d'Auber	4 0
MARGUERITE.	Chanson d'une fileuse	4 0
STYRIENNE	... ...	4 0

SYDNEY SMITH'S
FOUR NEW PIANOFORTE DUETS.

GAVOTTE ET MUSETTE	... ...	5 0
I PIFFERARI.	Musette moderne	5 0
LOHENGRIN.	Grande Fantaisie sur l'opéra de R. Wagner	6 0
NONCHALANCE.	Caprice de Concert	5 0

LONDON:

EDWIN ASHDOWN, Hanover-square.

Printed for the Proprietor by BOWDEN, HUDSON & Co., at 23, Red Lion Street, Holborn, London, W.C.; and Published by WILLIAM REEVES, at the Office, 185, Fleet Street, E.C. West End Agents:—WEEKES & CO., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W. Subscriptions and Advertisements are received either by the Publisher or West End Agents.—Communications for the EDITOR are to be forwarded to his private address, 6, Argyle Square, W.C

SATURDAY, JULY 28, 1883.—Entered at the General Post Office as a Newspaper.

Digitized by Google

THE MUSICAL STANDARD

A NEWSPAPER FOR MUSICIANS PROFESSIONAL AND AMATEUR

No. 992. VOL. XXV. FOURTH SERIES. SATURDAY, AUGUST 4, 1883. WEEKLY: PRICE 3D.

WOLVERHAMPTON TRIENNIAL MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

In aid of the Funds of the Wolverhampton and South Staffordshire General Hospital.

President—EARL DARTMOUTH.

THURSDAY and FRIDAY MORNINGS and EVENINGS, SEPTEMBER 13th and 14th.

MENDELSSOHN'S	"ELIJAH."
BEETHOVEN'S	"MOUNT OF OLIVES."
GOUNOD'S	"MESSE SOLENNELLE."
HUMMEL'S	"ALMA VIRGO."
MACFARREN'S	"LADY OF THE LAKE."
MACKENZIE'S	"JASON."

Miss Anna Williams.	Miss Mary Davies.
Madame Patey.	Miss Emilie Lloyd.
Mr. Edward Lloyd.	Mr. Joseph Maas.
Signor Foli.	Mr. Frederic King.

Band and Chorus of 300 Performers.

Principal Violin ... Mr. Carrodus.
Conductor ... Dr. Swinnerton Heap.

Detailed prospectuses, stating prices, date, and arrangements for ballot, and other information, may be had on application to the Honorary Secretaries, MESSRS. LAWRENCE & PAGE, Darlington Street, Wolverhampton.

GLOUCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL.—Sept. 4th, 5th, 6th, and 7th.

PRINCIPAL SINGERS:—

Miss ANNA WILLIAMS,	Madame PATEY,
	AND
Mdlle. AVIGLIANA,	Miss HILDA WILSON,
AND
Miss MARY DAVIES,	Mr. FREDERIC KING,
Mr. EDWARD LLOYD,	Mr. W. H. BRERETON,
AND
Mr. BOULCOTT H. NEWTH.	Mr. SANTLEY.

Full particulars at Mr. Nest's, Westgate Street, Gloucester.

LEEDS MUSICAL FESTIVAL, Oct. 10th, 11th, 12th, and 13th, 1883.—Outline Programmes now ready. Detailed Programmes will be ready by the end of August. Serial Tickets, £5 5s. each. First Seats—Single Ticket, morning, 4s. 6d.; evening, 7s. Second Seats—Single Ticket, morning, 10s. 6d.; evening, 7s. 6d. These Tickets will not be on sale until the end of August.

All communications to be addressed, "Fred. R. Spark, Esq., Hon. Sec. Musical Festival, Leeds."

MUSICAL INTERNATIONAL COLLEGE, LONDON.

Founded for Examining purposes only.

Principal—EDWIN M. LOTT.

PRACTICAL EXAMINATIONS in INSTRUMENTAL and VOCAL MUSIC throughout the kingdom, conducted personally by the Principal. Next LOCAL THEORETICAL EXAMINATION, DECEMBER, 1883.

For particulars, address SECRETARY, Musical International College, 270, Camden Road, Notting Hill, W.

CHRISTMAS HYMNS AND CAROLS.—New Edition. One Penny each.

"RING OUT, GLAD CHIMES, AT CHRISTMAS TIME."
"CHILDREN'S VOICES."
"CHRIST IS BORN IN BETHLEHEM."
"LULLABY."
"GATHER THE HOLLY BOUGH."
"CHRISTMAS MORNING."
"GLORY TO JESUS."
"HARK! WE HEAR THE CHILDREN SINGING."

Words by Mrs. Gaskell. Music by Edwin Lemare.

WEEKES & CO.: 14, Hanover Street, London, W.

MDME. INEZ MALESKA (Soprano), can Accept Engagements for CONCERTS, ORATORIOS, &c. Town or Country. Would join good Concert Company or tour; services free for charities. Good Press opinions.—Address, Stoneleigh Villa, Southend-on-Sea.

WANTED, an ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER (where there is a Surpliced Choir), who has had experience in training Church Choirs. Must be a Churchman and Communicant, and conversant with Church music and musical services. There are exceptional advantages to a professional man of ability for establishing a good teaching connexion, the population of the town numbering 9,000, with no resident teacher of music.—Address, The Vicar, Renhilton, Sutton, Surrey.

MAKERS AND REPAIRERS.

GEORGE WITHERS & CO.

(Late of Coventry Street),

WHOLESALE IMPORTERS OF

MUSICAL STRINGS,

From Rome, Padua, and Naples.

A FINE COLLECTION OF ITALIAN INSTRUMENTS.

Bows, Cases, Music Stands, &c. See Price Lists.

51, ST. MARTIN'S LANE, LONDON.

ORCHESTRIONETTES,

Ehrlich's Patent.

Are the greatest invention of modern times in the sphere of mechanical Music Works. It is only necessary to put in a note, made of fine pasteboard, in order to play a new piece. The smaller instruments suffice as accompaniment to dance music. The larger ones can be used IN PLACE OF AN ORGAN.

Preparatory knowledge not necessary; therefore the instruments can be sent to any part of the world. Large number of Notes, suitable for all countries, always on hand. Extra Notes made to order, after supplied originals, at any time. Please send orders to any dealer in musical instruments.

Commission allowed to Dealers.

FABRIK LEIPZIGER MUSIKWERKE VORM. PAUL EHRLICH & CO., ZU GOHLIS, BEI LEIPZIG (GERMANY).

NOW READY.

HARMONIES OF TONES AND COLOURS DEVELOPED BY EVOLUTION.

BY F. J. HUGHES,

With fifteen comprehensive diagrams printed in colours, cloth, blocked in gold and colours, bevelled edges, folio size.

PRICE 25s.

MARCUS WARD & CO., 67 and 68, Chandos Street, W.C.; and at Belfast and New York.

ORGANIST WANTED.—Abbey Church, Worksop. Salary £50. Communicant.—Address, Rev. Wm. Nicholson, 5, Park Street, Worksop.

MISS LOUISE ALLAN, Pupil of Mr. W. S. Hoyte and Mr. Fountain Meen, has VACANCIES for Pianoforte Pupils.—Address, by letter, care of Shelley Fisher, Esq., Trinity College, London, W.

THE ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER of Cirencester Abbey desires RE-ENGAGEMENT. 14 years' Cathedral experience.—Address as above.

INTERNATIONAL FISHERIES EXHIBITION.—ORGAN RECITALS daily, upon the fine-toned Organ, in West Gallery. Supplied to the Executive Committee by HENRY JONES & SONS, 136, Fulham Road, South Kensington.

HANDEL'S FIRST ORGAN CONCERTO, with Orchestral Accompaniment, as performed at the Handel Festival, Crystal Palace, edited, arranged, and supplemented with a Cadenza by W. T. BEST. Organ Score, 1s. 6d.; Orchestra Parts, 2s.; complete, 2s. 6d. nett.—AUGENER & CO., 86, Newgate Street, Foubert's Place, and 81, Regent Street, London.

Digitized by Google

"COUNTERPOINT."

By H. J. Stark, Mus.Bac.

A Paper read before the College of Organists, on May 1st, 1883.

(Continued from page 47.)

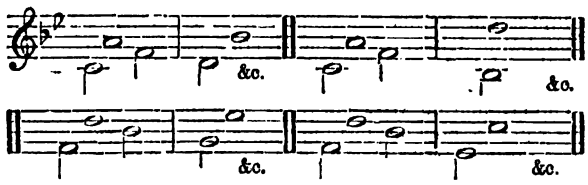
One great feature of the Macfarren system of Counterpoint, the figuring of incomplete chords for the purpose of showing the full harmony, deserves careful attention. If this idea were thoroughly and consistently carried out its value would be self-evident, but, unfortunately, this is not the case. The object sought to be gained is, as Professor Macfarren remarks, "to secure the student's constant sense of the entire harmony, which will often be incompletely represented, and to direct necessary attention to the radical succession of chords." The working out of this idea presents some curious inconsistencies, especially as regards the second inversions of triads, and the second inversions of dominant sevenths, both of which are unquestionably used in the examples, although forbidden in the text. On page 27, for instance, we meet with the following:—

In all fairness, I would ask, how can the fourth chord be considered in any other light than as the second inversion of the tonic triad? To figure it $\frac{8}{6}$ is a simple begging of the whole question, and if the figuring is "to secure the student's constant sense of the entire harmony," the ordinary figuring of a second inversion should be adopted. To first condemn a chord, and afterwards write it in a mutilated form, with a misleading figuring, is in the highest degree illogical and inconsistent.

Again, in Counterpoint of the second order, we find the following:—



These progressions are given as allowable instances of the use of two chords in the same bar, the first interval being considered as representing a chord of the 6th, and the second a triad. In the first two cases the root of the whole bar is unquestionably F, and I am inclined to think that most people would give B flat as the root of the others. Professor Macfarren says:—"Fanciful disputants assume that the second inversion of a concord is implied on the first note of each of these instances, but such fancy outruns reason."

A little further on we find the following examples of cadence:—

On this Professor Macfarren remarks as follows:—"Although at A the leading note precede not the key-note immediately, its effect rests on the memory, and at B the fundamental character of the dominant is equally remembered, and so the single melody gives much of the effect in both instances of the fuller harmony, with both the root and the 3rd in the chord." Now, if the effect of the first minim "rests on the memory" in one instance, why not in the other? In which case the "fanciful disputants" would be right in assuming that the $\frac{6}{4}$ chord is distinctly implied in Example 21. Here is another example, from page 33 of the same work:—

If the third bar does not contain the second inversion of the key-note triad, I confess I am at a loss to account for it in any other manner. In the same way the following—contains in the third bar either the second inversion of the key-note triad, or a chord of the dominant 13th. If the object of the chord-figuring is "to secure the student's constant sense of the entire harmony," it must be admitted that in all these cases it obviously fails in its purpose. Another absurdity is the treatment, in Counterpoint, of the incomplete $\frac{6}{3}$ on the supertonic as the first inversion of a triad. Without doubt, the dominant is the root, for the leading note can bear no harmony of its own; yet, because the interval of a fourth is said to be forbidden in Counterpoint, we find this chord shorn of one of its intervals, and presented in an altogether erroneous light. I am fully aware that this chord is generally used in an incomplete form by Handel and his contemporaries, but in modern times a better knowledge of chords and their roots has led to the employment of this harmony in its complete and more satisfactory aspect. This feeling against second inversions finds no place outside text-books.

Having thus very briefly pointed out a few of the inconsistencies of text-book Counterpoint, I venture to suggest the following modifications as being likely to lead to better results than could be obtained by the existing method. First, let the themes supplied to students be real living melodies, constructed according to the principles of melodic form, and with due regard to the scale-system now in use. Secondly, let nothing be written without full knowledge on the part of the student of the harmonic combinations resulting from the incomplete chords used in 2 and 3 part Counterpoint, so that the chord-figuring becomes a reality instead of a misleading sham. Thirdly, the contrapuntal system should deal satisfactorily with all recognised chord-formations, so that students may become gradually familiar with the application of Counterpoint to all the resources of modern harmony. These suggestions appear to comprise all that is necessary for lifting Counterpoint out of the rut into which it has fallen.

I had originally intended to add to this paper a few examples of Counterpoint constructed according to what I believe to be the true principles of the art. Such examples, however, belong more properly to a treatise on the subject than to a paper, which from its necessarily limited space can touch little beyond the mere outline of the question. The great point to be insisted upon is that the works of classical composers, and especially those of the great John Sebastian Bach, must form the basis of any satisfactory system of

Digitized by Google

Counterpoint. If I have ventured to call the existing rules into question, it is because I find them to be constantly at variance with all that we are taught to accept as good and beautiful in music, and in no single instance have I omitted to quote the highest possible authority for my statements. These illustrations are not to be put aside as exceptional cases, that in no way affect the soundness of the rules which they violate; on the contrary, such infractions of rule form part of the every-day literature of the art. If it is still contended that the text-books are right, we must conclude that Bach and his later followers have written exceedingly bad Counterpoint; if, on the other hand, we prefer to take our stand upon those imperishable treasures which have descended to us as models of contrapuntal excellence, we must perforce abandon a system of teaching with which they are in conflict. From this position we cannot logically and consistently escape.

It has been asserted that the rules of strict Counterpoint are not intended to apply to actual composition, but are merely useful as a mental exercise. If this be so, one is tempted to ask, Cui bono? Surely the object of all teaching should be to impart useful, as distinguished from useless, knowledge, and this is especially true when dealing with the highly technical matters involved in the training of a musician. If the rules are not intended to be observed, they certainly ought not to be taught, and the attempt to train composers upon the existing laws of Counterpoint may be likened to teaching the use of the modern rifle by a course of instruction in the handling of the antiquated cross-bow.

There is an art of Counterpoint, which all must study to attain excellence, but that art is not to be found in the text-books. It exists in the undying creations of the great masters, whose teaching and practice we may with advantage strive to imitate, even though we can never hope to rival the results which their genius has enabled them to achieve.

DISTRIBUTION OF PRIZES AT THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

On the afternoon of July 28th, a large assemblage of the pupils of this institution and their friends attended in the hall of the Academy to receive the prizes gained by the successful pupils during the year. The Principal, Sir G. A. Macfarren, presided, Mrs. Ellicott, the wife of the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, distributing the prizes. After a selection of vocal music had been rendered by the pupils, the Principal opened the proceedings with a brief address to the Professors and the many other musical celebrities present. The standard by which the pupils were judged had been raised year by year, and, according to the report of the examining board, a higher average than ever had been reached this year. The prizes were then distributed. Amongst those who most highly distinguished themselves was Mr. G. J. Bennett, who, after taking every honour that could be awarded, received from the examiners a certificate that he continued to progress in knowledge of harmony, counterpoint, and composition. Among the lady prize-winners was Miss Frances Smith, who gained the Sterndale-Bennett prize of ten guineas for the pianoforte, and a certificate of merit, the highest possible award. A cordial vote of thanks was given to Mrs. Ellicott. Bishop Ellicott, in returning thanks for Mrs. Ellicott, said he "must congratulate all present on the great advance music had made in the last twenty years; and he could not but attribute that great progress to the steady, persistent, work of a central institution like the Academy. He was glad also to observe some very cheering signs that music was making a definite progress nationally. Our Royal family were giving earnest help in this direction, and he was proud to have a connection with a society—the English Ballad Society—which had discovered that in what were called by some people the lower classes there was a growing taste for music of the very highest order."

Musical Intelligence.

LANCASTER HALL.

Recently a successful concert was given by the pupils of Mr. Russell Lochner, who has done so much to elevate musical taste in the neighbourhood, at the above hall, before a full and appreciative audience. The programme opened with Schubert's "Marche Heroïque," a duet for pianoforte and organ, which was played by Miss Arliss and Mr. Sirkett, the latter of whom afterwards gave two organ solos, an Andante in E of Batiste, and a Postlude in C by Smart, of which the former was very well executed. After a tasteful performance of a Pastorale of Smart's, by Master Rideout, on the organ, a march of Hofman's was played as a pianoforte duet by Miss Mabel Tibbs and Miss Laura Vernon with much spirit. This was followed by the "Children's Queen," sung by Mr. Biss, who was succeeded by Miss J. Gill, who gave a very fair rendering of the andante and variations withthe "Marche Funèbre" from Beethoven's Twelfth Sonata. Of the other pianoforte pieces, the most noticeable were a Nocturne by Le Gran, very well played by Miss M. Hunnard; "Speranza" (Jules Cohen), by Master Rideout; and Chopin's Valse in C sharp minor, given with excellent effect, despite extreme nervousness, by Miss Rose. The most popular morceau in the programme was a violin solo—"Fantaisie" by Dancla—played by Master Felix Lochner, a pupil of Mr. R. W. Buttery, which received very great applause. Miss Robinson contributed Wély's "Offertoire in A," which, being charmingly played, met with general approval. The programme concluded with the overture to "Euryanthe" (Weber) for eight hands on two pianos, very accurately rendered by the Misses Pratt, Hunnard, Banke, and Peache. On the whole, Mr. Lochner may be again congratulated on the creditable manner in which his pupils showed the progress made in their musical studies under his careful tuition. L. S. D.

THE WEST LONDON COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Signor E. P. Casano and Captain Evatt Acklom held a joint benefit concert last Monday night, at the College, Colville Gardens, Bayswater. A large audience, with several pertinacious talkers of the "mash" or "masher" species in the lobby, assembled on the occasion. The director, Signor Casano, sang his own melody "Un Voce" accompanied by himself, and made a deep impression by his sonorous voice, expressive style, and emphatic delivery. Mdme. Liebhardt sang three times with éclat, choosing Lotti's "Pur dicesti," G. B. Allen's "In silence and in tears," and a trifle called "No, sir." The fascinating Miss Gertrude de Lille, whose face may be said to be "her fortune" as well as her voice, sang two airs of Mr. F. Cowen, "If love were what the rose is," and "Better far" in B major, also Tosti's "Aprile," a rather trivial effusion, but not the less applauded by the unreflecting; the music alone of course is here referred to, for Miss de Lille's rendering could not fairly be criticized. Mdlle. Blanche Navarre chose "Oh! had I Jubal's lyre," but thought proper to change her second piece, a license always resented, and very properly, by audience, who insist on hearing what is set down in the scheme, and in regular rotation. The title of the second song is purposely suppressed in terrorem against future offenders. Miss Helen Meason scored a point in Mr. Wm. Carter's song "Loved for ever." Signor Ria excited a furore in "Mi credeva in Paradiso," a sentiment doubtless shared by all the young ladies of the assembly. Signor C. Ducci, Mr. A. Brousil, Herr Oberthür, and Mr. Beresford, played solos on their own instruments, the pianoforte, the violoncello, the harp, and the violin. At the fag end of a very long soirée, Misses Gertrude de Lille and H. Meason sang the favourite duet from "Mefistofele," and Signor Casano, a musical veteran, no more fatigued than the Duke of Wellington after the campaign of six years in the Peninsula, sang "Alla Stella confidente," with violoncello accompaniment by Mr. A. Brousil. Captain Acklom gave a recitation but this happily lieth not within the "province" of the musical reporter. The writer left the artists still hard at work, so late as eleven o'clock, with many others of the company, naturally anxious to catch last and if possible fast trains.

Digitized by Google

LIVERPOOL.

(From our own Correspondent.)

July 31st.

Mr. E. M. Lott's letter in last week's issue of the Musical Standard, does not in the least do away with the truth of my remarks anent the International College of Music and the announced local examination. It is absurd for any person to argue that "no college can be answerable for the actions of its local representatives." It is bad law, as well as being against common-sense and honesty.

I notice that the title of this institution is changed to "Musical International College." I have no wish to cross swords with Mr. Lott, but I cannot allow him to impugn my veracity, or to gloss over a glaring fact by asserting his own law, which would not hold water. If the people like to patronise a series of examinations having no legal status, and the Principal of which says he cannot be answerable for the action of local representatives, well and good.

There is nothing fresh respecting the Liverpool Philharmonic Society. The correspondence on the question of the chorus goes on in the local papers, day by day, but nothing seems to come of it. A great many people call the action of the chorus Quixotic, and I think, not without reason. J. J. M.

MR. VON ZASTROW'S DRAWING-ROOM CONCERTS.

Mr. F. Von Zastrow held his benefit concert on Friday July 27th, at the Glendower Mansions, South Kensington. Miss Mabel Bourne and M. Hann began with Mendelssohn's Romance in D for violoncello, which was substituted for a piece of Chopin, announced in the scheme. The burden of the afternoon rested on Miss Mabel Bourne and Mr. Hann. Miss Bourne played for solos her own "Three Sketches," and Chopin's Ballade in G minor. M. Hann, on the violoncello, played a Berceuse and a Tarantelle of Dunkler, and Herr Polonaski Bach's Adagio on the fourth (violin) string, in a masterly style, and a Legende of Wieniwaski, also his own pieces—a "Pensive Fugitive," and the "Chanson du Nord." Mrs. Florence Grant sang "Alla Stella confidente" and "Home, sweet home." Mdme. Polonaski chose her own Reverie "Spring Tide," and Braga's Serenata in G. A good piece de résistance was Rubinstein's beautiful Pianoforte Trio in B flat, with Miss Bourne, Herr Polonaski, and M. Hann as interpreters. This work had been done before at the Glendower Mansions. If the reading was imperfect, partly no doubt, from want of sufficient rehearsals, the audience nevertheless, might fairly appreciate the work. But to those who have heard Rubinstein play the pianoforte part at the Musical Union, comparisons could not fail to be suggested. The audience at this concert was numerous and brilliant.

VARIOUS CONCERTS.

Mr. D'Arcy Ferris held his annual concert in the afternoon of July 36th, at Lord and Lady Spencer Churchill's house in Manchester Square. Mr. D'Arcy Ferris sang with taste R. B. Addison's "Serenade" in D, and Blumenthal's "Across the far blue hills." He also produced and sang the tenor part of a new trio composed by himself "In memoriam," to the memory of the late Duke of Marlborough. More might be said for the music (in A minor and major) than for the stanzas, which are but sorry specimens of versification. Mr. D'Arcy Ferris was aided by Miss Helen Arnim, Miss B. Navarre, Signor Ria, Miss Beata Francis, Mdme. Osborne Williams, and Mdlle. De Vaney, who, with Mr. D'Arcy-Ferris, sang the "Garden Scene" from "Faust." Mr. W. Ganz, Signor Samuelli, Mr. Lindo, and Sir Julius Benedict were the conductors.

The Misses Poole held a final reception (for the season) on Monday, at their residence in St. Paul's Road, Camden Road. Miss Mina Poole sang a pretty Serenade in D flat of Mr. Otto Booth, the violinist, with violin obbligato (played by the composer). The Rev. Mr. Taylor, the Chaplain of Gray's Inn, and a very clever amateur vocalist, greatly amused the company with a setting of a song of Spanish colour and French words. Mdme. Viard-Louis played Litolff's pianoforte piece "La Petite Fileuse" and might have been asked to resume her seat; but some tiresome and most unwelcome "recitations" were held to be more acceptable—a great mistake. The intelligent public, it may be repeated, dislike these recitations exceedingly, unless, indeed, they are delivered by superior elocutionists, such as Mrs. Fairfax Bell. True, that this was only a private "reception."

GLOUCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

The principal artists engaged for the Gloucester festival are Miss Anna Williams, Mdlle. Avigliana, and Miss Mary Davies, Mdme. Patey and Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. Edward Lloyd and Mr. Boulcott Newth, Mr. Frederick King, Mr. W. H. Brereton, and Mr. Santley; organist, Mr. Langdon Colborne, Mus. Bac.; pianoforte (and organ, Wednesday evening), Mr. W. Done; leader and solo violinist, Mr. Carrodus; conductor, Mr. Charles L. Williams, Mus. Bac. Many of our most eminent instrumentalists will appear in the band; the organ will be specially erected by Messrs. Willis, of London.

The following is a list of the works to be performed: on Tuesday morning, Sept. 4th, "Elijah" (Mendelssohn). Wednesday morning, Sept. 5th, "St. Mary Magdalene" (Stainer), composed for this festival, and conducted by the composer; "Bow thine ear" (Bird, 1560), unaccompanied; "Hosanna to the Son of David" (Gibbons, 1604) unaccompanied; "Mass in C" (Beethoven). Wednesday evening, Sept. 5th, "Sennacherib" (Arnold), composed for this festival, conducted by the composer; "Hymn of Praise" (Mendelssohn). Thursday morning, Sept. 6th, "Elegiac Symphony" (G. V. Stanford)—allegro appassionata, lento expressivo, scherzo, adagio, allegro—conducted by the composer; and "Redemption" (Gounod). Friday morning, Sept. 7th, "Messiah" (Handel).

The programme on Tuesday evening includes Symphony in G minor (Mozart), and overture, "Anacreon" (Cherubini). On Thursday evening, overture, "Jessonda" (Spohr), and "The First Walpurgis-Night," or, "The Eve of the First of May" (Mendelssohn). On Friday evening there will be a special nave service, to include organ voluntary; prelude, "Last Judgment" (Spohr); Magnficat; Nunc Dimittis; anthem, "Blessed is the man that considereth the poor and needy" (C. H. Lloyd), and "Hallelujah" (Beethoven).

Convenient railway arrangements have been made for the four days, and every action taken to secure a successful meeting and to obtain due comfort for visitors.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.

The great interest taken in the choral festival in connection with Newcastle Cathedral was remarkably displayed on Thursday, July 26th, when the first festival was held in the Cathedral Church of St. Nicholas. Before the hour announced for the commencement of the service, all the available space was fully occupied, and the scene was one of impressive solemnity as the long line of surpliced choristers wound their way through the crowded audience to their appointed places, to the voluntary played by the cathedral organist, Mr. M. W. J. Ions. Five cathedral choirs were present—Newcastle, Durham, York, Ripon, and Carlisle—and they were assisted by several local choirs in the district, and also by some female choristers and lady amateur singers. Among the clergy present were the Bishop of Newcastle, the Dean of York, Archdeacon Hamilton, and the Vicar of Newcastle (Canon Lloyd). The service consisted of evening prayer, Tallis's Preces being used throughout. Between the lessons the Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis were sung to the music in G, specially composed for the occasion by Mr. Ions. The service contains many beautiful and effective passages, and Mr. Ions has certainly proved his fitness for the office he occupies by this admirable contribution to Church music, and to the beautiful Service of the Church of England.

In the place of an anthem, Dr. Gladstone's new Church oratorio, "Philippi," was sung, the words selected from the Scriptures by the Rev. J. Powell Metcalf, M.A. It opens with a prologue, in which the choirs unaccompanied sing the two well-known verses from Isaiah, "How beautiful upon the mountains." This chorus is an excellent example of four-part writing, full of harmony and sweetness, and was sung by the choirs—as were, in fact, all the choruses—with a power and precision which left nothing to be desired.

Digitized by Google

The cantata is divided into seven parts:—I. The Call to Macedonia; II. The Conversion of Lydia; III. Casting out the Spirit of Divination; IV. The Fury of the People; V. In the Prison; VI. The Keeper of the Prison; VII. Sweet Counsel with the Brethren. These divisions describe the chief incidents in the narrative; and to four of the cathedral choirs were allotted the solo pieces—the Newcastle choir, with Mr. F. Mace, 1st tenor; Mr. T. Thompson, 2nd tenor; Master J. Dewar, soprano; and Mr. E. Perry, bass, had the first and fifth divisions. York, with Mr. MacDonald, tenor; Master Sheffield, soprano; and Mr. McCall, bass, had the second and sixth. Durham, with Mr. Whitehead, tenor; Master J. Walker, contralto; and Mr. Nutton, bass, the third and fourth division, and Ripon the seventh division. The solo members of the Ripon choir deserve great praise for the refined way in which they sang the beautiful quintet (unaccompanied), "Rejoice in the Lord." In fact, both soloists and choristers rendered the music of Dr. Gladstone's new oratorio in a way that evoked the greatest praise from its composer, who conducted his own work. Mr. Ions presided at the organ, and played with great taste and precision the accompaniments.

"Philippi," is an admirable work which will compare favourably with many of similar character which have preceded it. The style is a purely religious one, and notwithstanding some of the recitatives and solos are very finely written, the choruses are decidedly the most interesting and dramatic numbers in the work. Special mention must be made of "Praise the Lord, O my soul," "For of Him and through Him," and perhaps the grandest of them all, "Why do the heathen rage?" preceded by a contralto recitation "And the multitude rose up," which was admirably rendered by Master J. Walker. The chorus was splendidly sung. The festival concluded by the singing of the festival hymn," "Hail, festal day! for ever sanctified," music by Dr. Armes, of Durham.

The success which attended this festival has been so great, that it is to be hoped it will be an annual event—more so considering the beneficial effect it will have upon the manner in which the musical portions of Services are rendered in the various Churches in the district.

Dr. Gladstone has in a letter to our esteemed cathedral organist, Mr. Ions, expressed his delight in seeing the "evident enthusiasm which was thrown into the work by everyone, both in the choruses and in the solos," and Dr. Gladstone further adds:—"I feel deeply grateful to all who so kindly assisted in the first performance of 'Philippi.' My letter would, however, be incomplete if I failed to offer to you personally my warm thanks, not only for the pains which you must have taken in organising the festival, but also for your much valued aid at the organ."

Mr. T. Albion Alderton's amateur choir will perform during the season, 1883—84, the following works, all by English composers:—"The Sun Worshippers," by Goring Thomas; "The Rose Maiden," by Cowen; "The Fairy Ring," by Cummings, and "Jason," by Mackenzie.

The Tyne Theatre will open the season with Messrs. Gilbert and Sullivan's fairy opera, "Iolanthe"; and the Theatre Royal, with "Rob Roy." During the vacation, both the theatres have undergone complete renovation, and many alterations have also been made for the comfort and safety of the audience.

The deepest sensation was created amongst all sections of the temperance party of Newcastle and the religious bodies in the town at the news that Mr. Rowland Lambert had expired suddenly at his residence, Villa de St. George, on July 30th. He was the energetic originator and sole manager of the so-called Blue-Ribbon Concerts, which have been held here every Saturday night, at the Central Hall, during several years, and with the greatest success—the place being invariably crowded to the door by a delighted audience, consisting mainly of working men and their families. In Mr. R. Lambert's death the cause of temperance has sustained a loss that appears irreparable, and the poor a friend whose sympathy and help were always available in their distress.

H. W.

Madame Lind Goldschmidt (Jenny Lind) was one of the artists who gave their services at the grand concert at the Royal Spa Hall, Malvern, for the benefit of the Widows and Orphans of the Great Western Railway Servants on July 23rd. Her fresh and vigorous singing in Mendelssohn's trio "Lift thine eyes," and Rubinstein's "Song of the Birds," completely astonished the audience.

Foreign Musical Intelligence.

Samuel David's opera "Bianca Capello" will be given in Paris next winter.

The "Societa Musicala" of Rome recently performed Schumann's "Paradise and the Peri" very successfully.

The Vienna Court Opera re-opened on the 16th ult. with Meyerbeer's "Huguenots."

Milan is having a summer operatic season, Donizetti's "La Fille du Regiment" being one attraction.

The "Parsifal" performances at Bayreuth appear to be financially a failure. However, the King of Bavaria has undertaken to pay the deficit.

Verdi's "Don Carlos" will be heard next season at La Scala, Milan. The composer hopes by that time to have completed his new opera, "Othello."

It is announced that Dr. Hermann Zopff, well known as a musical critic in Leipzig, died on the 12th of July at the age of fifty-seven.

Dr. Hans von Bülow, who is at present staying at the Lake of Geneva, has, it is said, so far recovered his health that he hopes to be able in the autumn to resume his duties at Meiningen.

The German rights in "The Nibelungs Ring" have been sold by Herr Neumann to the Prussian Intendant-General for £1,000. However Wagner's family intend to dispute the transfer in a court of law.

Here is a promising bit of news for the lovers of Italian opera. Signor Cagnoni, whose opera "Don Bucefalo," it is stated, has been very successful in Italy, has written an opera on the subject of "King Lear," which will be produced at the opening of the new theatre at Novara.

A recent number of the Muskalisches Wochenblatt contains a report from the pen of Herr Richard Pohl of the present performances of "Parsifal" in Bayreuth. The writer pronounces them even more nearly perfect than those which were given last year.

An Italian journal gives the following account of a musical invention by a priest named Bartolomeo Grassi-Landi. It concerns a reform in the present manner of writing music, the invention itself being a chromatic key-board which may be applied to organs, pianos, and harmoniums. The octave is divided into twelve sounds, and with the present system we have seven names, ut, re, mi, fa, sol, la, si, which represent the natural scale. These notes may be raised by the sharp and double sharp, or lowered by the flat and double flat. This makes thirty-five names, which in reality only represent twelve sounds. M. Grassi-Landi abolishes sharps, flats, and naturals, giving to the twelve sounds the following names, Ba, Be, Bi, Bo, Da, De, Di, Do, La, Le, Li, Lo. Each name represents a sound which never varies. In writing M. Grassi-Landi retains the old system, with the modification that the value of the notes is exclusively shown by quavers and semi-quavers, the heads being either white or black, indicating the sound. All the white ones, on or between the lines represent the white keys, the black ones the black keys.

TRINITY COLLEGE, LONDON.—At the recent examinations for Musical Diplomas at Trinity College, London, the following gentlemen acted as examiners:—Sir Julius Benedict (Musical Form and Orchestration), R. W. Crowe, Mus. D., Cantab. (Harmony), A. H. Mann, Mus.D., organist of King's College, Cambridge (Choir Training, &c.), E. H. Turpin (Counterpoint and Fugue), James Keene, F.R.C.S. Eng. (Vocal and Aural Physiology), and W. H. Walshe (Musical Acoustics).

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.—The Prince of Wales presided at a meeting of the Council, held at Marlborough House on Monday, July 30th. There were present: Prince Christian, the Earl Cadogan, Lord Charles Bruce, M.P., Baron Ferdinand Rothschild, Sir John Rose, Sir Henry Thring, Sir Julius Benedict, Sir Arthur Sullivan, Mr. Cusins, Mr. Thomas Chappell, Mr. Otto Goldschmidt, Mr. E. W. Hamilton, C.B., Mr. Charles Morley, Mr. Kellow Pye, and Dr. Stainer. The director, Sir George Grove, was in attendance. The following were unavoidably absent: The Duke of Edinburgh, the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Archbishop of York, the Duke of Westminster, Sir Lyon Playfair, M.P., Sir Thos. Gladstone, Sir Richard Wallace, Sir Thomas Brassey, M.P., and Mr. Charles Hall.

Digitized by Google

Organ News.

PRESTON.

The following is the programme of an organ recital given by Mr. James Tomlinson, in the New Public Hall, on Saturday evening, July 28th :—

Grand Concerto in G minor	Handel.
(Larghetto—Allegro, introducing the Cadenza written by Mr. Best for the recent Handel Festival.—Adagio—Andante.)
Pilgrim's March (Fourth Symphony)	Mendelssohn.
Andante (Quartet in C)	Mozart.
Turkish March from the "Ruins of Athens"	Beethoven.
Liebesfruhling	Unger.
Overture to "Cenerentola"	Rossini.

MANCHESTER.

On Sunday evening, the 29th inst., at the Holy Innocents' Church, Fallowfield, Mr. W. A. Wrigley gave an organ recital after evening service. The programme included :—

Minuet ("Samson")	Handel.
Bénédiction Nuptiale	Saint-Saëns.
Cantilène Pastorale	Guilmant.
Grand Chœur in D	,,

HALSTEAD, ESSEX.

The following is the programme of an organ recital given after the service on Sunday evening, July 29th, by Mr. G. Leake, A.C.O.

The Prophet's March	Meyerbeer.
Adagio from C minor Symphony	Beethoven.
"My hope is in the Everlasting" ("Daughter of Jairus")	Stainer.
Gloria, 12th Mass	Mozart.
Song, "The Better Land"	Cowen.
The Vesper Hymn	Turpin.

FISHERIES EXHIBITION.

Mr. Loaring's programmes, on the 23rd and 26th inst., included the following :—

Overture, "Zampa"	Hérold.
Organ Concerto (No. 6)	Handel.
Offertoire in B flat	Collin.
Concert Fantasia in C minor	Hesse.
March Heroique in D	Schubert.
Overture, "Le Cheval de Bronze"	Auber.
March Funebre	Chopin.
Offertoire in F	S. Clark.
"Hallelujah Chorus"	Handel.
March "Tannhauser"	Wagner.

CORK.

Programme of recitals given by Herr H. C. Swertz, on the organ of the Exhibition, on Saturday, 21st inst :—

*March	Swertz.
Sonata, No. 1.	Mendelssohn.
Adagio from Op. 65	Rheinberger.
*Valse	Swertz.
Overture, "William Tell"	Rossini.
*Fantasia	Swertz.

* These were Improvisations.

And on Tuesday, 24th inst. :—

Prelude in E minor	Mendelssohn.
Overture, "William Tell"	Rossini.
Valses, No. and 3, Op. 34	Chopin.
"Hymn to the Night" (For soprano solo, chorus, and orchestra).	Swertz.
Sonata, No. 1, Op. 2.	Beethoven.
Finale (Improvisation)	Swertz.

BRADFORD.

An organ which has been erected in the Leeds Road Baptist Chapel was formally opened on July 26th. The instrument, which was built by Gray, of London, and afterwards enlarged by Hill and Sons, occupied the Trinity Church, Halifax, for some years. It has two Manuals and Pedal organ, with some 24 stops, including couplers. The Pedal organ, the Swell organ, and three of the soft stops were put in by Messrs. Hill, and two composition pedals for the Swell and three for the Great organ have yet to be added by Mr. F. W. Nicholson, who has re-erected the instrument. The opening recital was given by Mr. J. H. Rooks, who brought out with excellent judgment and taste every available portion of the instrument. Mr. Rooks' masterly rendering of "The Giant" was exceedingly enjoyable. He also gave a fine performance of the fantasie "O Sanctissima" (F. Lux), some parts of which are difficult, and in this and the "La Clemenza" overture (Mozart) he thoroughly displayed the resources of the instrument, bringing out well the good tone of some of the soft stops which were put in by Messrs. Hill. In addition to the organ recital there were vocal selections from Sir M. Costa's "Naaman."

A MUSIC LECTURE OF THE OLDEN TIMES.

In the course of an interesting article under the above title in the Musical Review, Mr. W. Barclay Squire says :—The establishment of the music lecture at Oxford by Dr. Heather, in 1626, is almost the only fact that is known of the routine of university instruction in music, though the position which the art held in the Trivium and Quadrivium—which in those days formed the basis of the whole curriculum of a liberal education—render it tolerably certain that, in Oxford at least, there must have been some regular system of musical education authorised by the university. Dr. Heather's foundation came at almost the close of the period of musical activity which produced the greater musicians who are the chief glory of the English school; nor does the roll of professors who occupied the musical chair at Oxford during the seventeenth century comprise any very distinguished names, and therefore any glimpse, however faint and indefinite, of an earlier state of things, cannot fail to possess a certain amount of interest. Such a passing glimpse is afforded by a letter from that admirable correspondent, Sir Dudley Carleton, to his friend Mr. John Chamberlain, which is preserved in the still almost unexplored mine of historical treasures, the State Papers in the Record Office. The letter, the original of which will be found in the Domestic State Papers, James I., volume xxxv., runs as follows :

Sir,—Though I am preuented by Mr. Gent who hath sent you the Act questions and Oxford newes, yet I can not forbeare my relation likewise, because you may be the better-informed of our Uniuersitie proceedings, wch were cheefly memorable at this time for a deluge of Doctors; there being 22 of all professions, but none almost of note or apparence. I had the goode fortune to meete with Sr John Bennet with whom I spent the small time I was there, wch was monday and tuesday. Sr Will Paddie was no small grace to the towne, who made a solemne entrie in a coach with fower white mares and six men in liuerie, well mounted. The Saturday exercise was not much spoken of, only the musike lecture wch was read in the morning by one Sheapheard sownded long after, who tooke vppon him a Cambridge quarrel, first remembering a ballet that was made there in disgrace of the king's entertainment at Oxford, and then answearing one Cecill the Proctor of Cambridge who in their last commencement inuayed against a booke sett out by the Orator of Oxford touching the exercise that was there performed before the king. And for the first part he sayde it was nether cantus, nor cantio, cantibula, nor cantilena, nor anything in Latin but Anglicè—a Ballet, and those that made it might properly be called Balatrones. The ditie he turned into Latin :—

Istibani oppidani
Qui dicuntur Aldermani, &c., &c.

the tune he putt to it was 'To the Parlament the Q(ueen) is gone,' and because being in a narrow pue he sayde it was not 'locus ad agendu amplissimus,' he came out into the schoole and there playde it uppon a viol. 'But' (sayde he) 'since now Sicelides musae doe paulo maiora canere,' he would deale with Cecill, and reciting all the inuectiues made by Tullie in his oration against Cecilio he sayde they were prophesies of this man, and went on with more than an howers speach all in this mad merrie tune, and had great audience as well of Cambrige men as others. In the monday exercise there were likewise many inuectiues, as the Philosophers in the question 'An terra sit naturae magnticae,' against D: Gilbert and all his sectaries wch they call Gilbertinos, wherein il y va de vostre interest, the Phisitians against the Ciuilians, and the Ciuilians against poore woemen. The diuines descanted one uppon an other, as D: Thornton had his name diuided into Spina and dolia, and it was made a wonder why he should hold that we could not perfacile implere legē when dolia might be so easely both fild and emptied, and many such yong conceits not so well befitting theyr graulties and professions. At supper in Christchurch it was my hap to lite in a mess wth D: White, D: Perin, and Sr Ed: Ratliff, whose witts and fooleries did so well encounter that it made goode amends for our long sitting up wch was fully past midnight before we rose frō the table.

"I am now here againe at goode leisare as by my scribling unto you you may well coniecture, and purpose to spend a month yf not more betwixt this place, the Grange, and Ascott. Sr Michell and my Lady goe on Saturday next to Hampton poyle and I differre my going to them till theyr returne frō thense because I would not so soone part frō thē. Sr Hn: Saville and my La: come about a fortnight hence to Oxford there to stay for a month. My Ld: Norreys was gone to the Bath before I came into this cuntrie and doth there purpose to stay as yet fiue weekes. Sr Michell Dormer doth threaten a Jornie to go see him and I haue halfe past a promise to accompanie him, wch I shall the better performe with my wifes leaue if you come into the cuntrie in good time, that you may moderat matters betweene such disputants as I doubt the woemen will proue at Ascott about theyr little faiths. We perswade our selfs you will hasten yr cuming for our sakes; as I assure you it is for yours that we doe the more linger, in hope to see you before we return and thus wth all kind remembrances to yrself and the two goode societies of Knebworth and Ware parke I comitt you to Gods protection.

Digitized by Google

"frō Huntercomb,
"this 14th day of July 1608
"Yrs most assuredly
"DUDLEY CARLETON.

"To my very louing frend
Mr. John Chamberlain at Wingfield house on St Peters hill give these,
London."

Enclosed in the above letter are some Latin verses in Sir Dudley Carleton's handwriting, headed "Licet marito uxorem verberare," the humour of which is of a description more relished in those days than it would be in our own time.

To the student of the history of English music, the chief interest in the above letter lies in the individuality of "one Sheapheard," as to whom there is some little difficulty in identification. Sir Dudley Carleton was a distinguished diplomatist of the seventeenth century. He was born in 1573, educated at Westminster and Christchurch, where he took his B.A. degree in 1595 and his M.A. in 1600. He was successively secretary to the Embassy to France, to Henry Earl of Northumberland, and sat for St. Mawes in the first Parliament of James I. In 1605 he went to Spain with Lord Norris. He was imprisoned on suspicion of being concerned in the Gunpowder Plot, but was soon afterwards released. He married a niece of Sir Maurice Carey in 1607, and the remainder of his life was principally spent as Ambassador in Holland, from which country his letters to England—which have been edited and published—are a valuable contribution to the history of the period. He was created Viscount Dorchester by Charles I. He died February 15, 1631-2, and is buried in Westminster Abbey. There is a large collection of Carleton's letters preserved in the State Papers, many of which are addressed (like the one we have already given) to his friend John Chamberlain. This John Chamberlain was born in 1552, and educated at Cambridge. He possessed a considerable private fortune, and spent most of his life at his country residence, from which he kept up a constant correspondence with Carleton, Sir Henry Saville, and many other distinguished persons. He died between 1626 and 1631. Sir John Bennet was the grandfather of the Earl of Arlington. He was the second son of Sir Richard Bennet, was educated at Oxford, where he filled the office of Proctor for some time, and received the degree of Doctor of Laws in 1589. He was knighted at the coronation of James I., and was distinguished as a judge, though, like his contemporary Bacon, he fell into the habit of taking bribes, for which he was fined the enormous sum of £20,000. He died in 1627. William Gilbert was born at Colchester in 1540, and educated at Cambridge. He was admitted a Fellow of the College of Physicians in 1573, and achieved considerable scientific reputation from his discoveries with regard to the magnet. He died November 30th, 1603. Sir William Paddie was a celebrated doctor of the day, physician to the King, and President of the College of Physicians. He bequeathed his valuable library to St. John's College, where he also left funds to endow an organist and provide for the performance of choral service. He died in 1634, and is buried in the College Chapel. His portrait may still be seen at St. John's. The "D: White," of Sir Dudley Carleton was probably Dr. Thomas White, a Canon of Christchurch at the beginning of the seventeenth century. "D: Perin" was Dr. John Perin, who was sometime Fellow of St. John's, Regius Professor of Greek in 1597, and installed a Canon of Christchurch in 1604. He died in 1615, and is buried in the Cathedral. "Lord Norreys or Norris," was, as we have seen, an old friend of Carleton's; Sir Michael Dormer came of a city family, and Sir Henry Saville (1549-1621) was Warden of Merton and Provost of Eton. As to the Cambridge Proctor, "One Cecill," he was possibly Thomas Cecill, a Fellow of St. John's, but the Cambridge records of this time are unfortunately not so numerous and accessible as those of the sister university. "The booke sett out by the orator of Oxford" can be identified with tolerable certainty as a quarto volume which appeared in 1607, and ran through some six editions. It is an account of the celebrated visit of James I. and his court to Oxford in 1605, by Isaac Wake of Merton, and is entitled "Rex Platonicus: sive de Potentissimi Principis Jacobi Britanniarum Regis, Ad Illustrissimam Academiam Oxoniensem, Adventu, Aug. 27, Anno MDCV. Narratio ab Isaaco Wake," etc., etc.

With regard to Shepherd, there was an eminent composer of this name living at Oxford about fifty years earlier than the date of Sir Dudley Carleton's letter, and many of his works are preserved in the Music School and Christchurch collections, as well as in the British Museum and other libraries. This John Shepherd—or Sheppard, as it is often spelt—was a Fellow of Magdalen, where he was appointed Instructor of the choristers in 1542. In the following year his place was taken by one Preston, but Shepherd was reinstated in 1545 and held the office until 1547. He was also organist of the College Chapel, which post he seems to have occupied until 1595, when Richard Nicholson was appointed. On April 21, 1554, Shepherd, according to Anthony ā Wood's "Fasti Oxonienses," presented a petition that he might be admitted to the degree of Mus. Doc., stating that he had been a student in music for twenty years, but there is no record that his prayer was granted. On the 2nd June, 1555, it is recorded in the Magdalen registers that Master Shepherd was fined for having kept an unfortunate chorister in chains, "et eundem contra formam statuti ad pernoctandum admiserit," a fact which throws some light upon the manner in which choristers were punished in those days. On the 15th of the same month, Master Shepherd was again accused "quod puerum quendam pauperem vinctum miserè traheret a Maumsberge Oxoniam usque"—a method of obtaining recruits for the choir which was too scandalous even for those days.

At a first glance, the singular behaviour of this Shepherd would seem to tally with the description given of the "one Sheapheard" of Carleton, but (if the facts given by Wood are correct) it is hardly possible that they can be the same person. But there is some evidence that about this time there lived another John Shepherd, who was also a musician, for in the Cheque Book of the Chapel Royal a person of this name was sworn as a "Gentleman Extraordinary" on December 1, 1606, "who, at the takinge of his othe, did voluntarilie binde himselfe thereby not to sue by any meanes direct or indirect, as by friendes or otherwise, to be admitted into an ordinarie place of paye in his Highnes sayd Chappell, untill he shalbe called and approved fitt for the same by the Deane, the Sub-Deane, and the major part of the Gentlemen then beynge." As his name does not occur again in the Cheque Book, it is not improbable that this Shepherd never became an ordinary member of the Chapel, and that it is he whose jests Carleton chronicled for the benefit of his friend. It would be interesting to examine the extant compositions which bear the name of Shepherd, to see whether it may not be possible that some of the compositions of the later musician of that name (none of which are recorded to exist) have not been included in the works of the Magdalen organist mentioned by Wood.

TONIC SOL-FA COLLEGE.

On July 7th the Council of the Tonic Sol-fa College held its half yearly meeting at 186, Aldersgate-street. After some preliminary business the consideration of the proposed staff notation certificates was resumed, the discussion ending in its rejection by a considerable majority. It was then resolved that the possession of the elementary certificate be a preliminary to the staff notation certificates, which the executive were requested to draw up for the consideration of the Council. A motion by Mr. Hardcastle (Liverpool), requiring the examination for the elementary and intermediate certificate to be completed always at one sitting was discussed, and by leave withdrawn. A motion by Mr. Bonner, for holding a choral competition in London in June, 1884, was lost. The Report to be presented to the shareholders was approved, and the Council adjourned.

The annual meeting of shareholders was held in the same building in the evening, when there was a good attendance. After the appointment of scrutineers, Mr. R. Griffiths, secretary, read the annual report and financial statement. The report mentioned the chief events of the year. The new shares issued were 189, to 164 persons, making a total of 2,576 shares issued to more than 1,000 shareholders. The certificates issued were 16,947 against 11,881 last year, an increase of 4,166. The income from examinations was within a few pounds of covering the necessary expenditure, but left no margin for new schemes. Mr. D. S. Allan (Glasgow), moved the adoption of the report and financial statement which had been read. He remarked on the increase in certificates, and said that it was in the power of teachers still further to promote their use. Mr. Adamson (Dundee), in seconding this, bore out what Mr. Allan had said. He believed that the 6d. tax had greatly raised the value of the certificates in Scotland. The resolution was unanimously carried. The election of Mr. Henry Leslie as an honorary member was moved by Mr. A. J. Ellis, F.R.S., who spoke of Mr. Leslie's weight in the musical world, and of the importance of his adhesion to our movement. Mr. Thomas (Manchester) in seconding, recalled the time when it required a sacrifice to be a Solfaist; things were changed now. Before the resolution was put, Mr. McNaught mentioned a phrase in Mr. Leslie's Exeter Hall speech which was likely to be misunderstood. Mr. Leslie had spoken of a Sol-faist having to unlearn the Tonic Sol-fa in order to proceed to the staff. Mr. Leslie had explained to him that all he meant was that a Sol-faist in this position had to set to work to become accustomed to new signs and nomenclature. The resolution was carried amid cheers. The election of Mr. Sedley Taylor of Cambridge, was moved by Mr. Ashcroft, who said he had that week been reading Mr. Taylor's pamphlet, and felt that the College would strengthen itself by closer association with such an authority in scientific circles. Mr. John Bell (Glasgow) seconded, and the resolution was unanimously passed. Thanks to the auditors were moved by Mr. Coventry (Manchester), seconded by Mr. T. Austin (Bedford) and carried. Mr. Venables spoke of the work of his Association. Mr. McNaught addressed the meeting at some length, on the condition of music in schools and Training Colleges. Mr. Ashcroft urged the issue of a circular to Training Colleges which had not adopted Tonic Sol-fa, and moved a resolution to that effect. Mr. J. A. Birch (Chapel Royal) seconded, describing the admirable sight-singing of the children in the London Board Schools. Mr. W. Bond thought it a pity that so few pupil-teachers took the music paper. Some inspectors discouraged it. As to the Training College course, he had come across many teachers who had passed through College and had yet no idea of the practical teaching of singing. After a few words from Mr. Ellis, Mr. Curwen said he doubted the wisdom of addressing the Colleges, as he thought they would very soon spontaneously adopt the Tonic Sol-fa system. The resolution was then modified, asking the executive to consider the advisability of issuing a circular, and unanimously passed. Mr. A. J. Wilson moved, and Rev. C. Livermore, vicar of Norley, seconded, the appointment of Mr. Warner as shareholders' auditor for the year. Thanks to the scrutineers were moved by Mr. G. Merritt, and seconded by Mr. W. D. Oliver (Newcastle). Mr. Proudman moved, and Mr. A. J. Ellis seconded, thanks to the officers, to which Mr. Curwen and Mr. Griffiths briefly responded, and the meeting ended.

Digitized by Google

At a meeting of the Council on the 21st July, the president and treasurers were re-elected, and the following members of Council were chosen by ballot:—Messrs. Bonner, W. C. Harris, Coward (Sheffield), Jenkins (Aberystwyth), Adamson (Dundee), Cowley (Dublin).

Mr. Curwen reported that the summer term had commenced most auspiciously. The students were more numerous than they had been for several years, 33 having entered already. They were, moreover, of high average ability, and of much earnestness.

The following letter from Mr. Henry Leslie was read—

Bryn Tanat, July 20th.

Dear Sir,—I am much flattered and gratified at the honour conferred upon me by being elected an honorary member of your College, and gratefully accept the position. I doubt not I shall have in the future to speak frequently on the happy results of your system, for a movement which has done so much good in the diffusion of elementary choral singing in the past is not in the least likely to retire into the background, but will continue in the front rank of workers, carrying good results wherever it is used. I shall be much obliged if you will convey my best thanks to your Council at the earliest opportunity. I am, Dear Sir, faithfully yours,

Robert Griffiths, Esq. HENRY LESLIE.

—Tonic Sol-Fa Reporter.

MUSIC STRINGS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF ALL KINDS OF STRINGS FOR VIOLIN, VIOLA, VIOLONCELLO, DOUBLE BASS HARP, ZITHER, GUITAR, BANJO, &c., &c.,

Have always in Stock the Largest Assortment of Music Strings of any House in the World.

39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

All Kinds of Strings covered in a superior manner by powerful machines, made on the best principle with all modern improvements.

JUST PUBLISHED, "MORNING and EVENING SERVICE," set to music for the especial use of Parish Choirs, by FREDK. HUNNIBELL, F.C.O. Price, 1s.; or separately, 8d. and 6d.
London: NOVELLO, EWER & CO.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

"COUNTERPOINT." By H. J. Stark, Mus.Bac.
DISTRIBUTION OF PRIZES AT THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.
MUSICAL INTELLIGENCE:—Lancaster Hall—The West London College of Music—Liverpool—Mr. Von Zastrow's Drawing-room Concerts—Various Concerts—Gloucester Musical Festival—Newcastle-on-Tyne.
FOREIGN MUSICAL INTELLIGENCE.
ORGAN NEWS:—Preston—Manchester—Halstead, Essex—Fisheries Exhibition—Cork—Bradford.
A MUSIC LECTURE OF THE OLDEN TIMES.
TONIC SOL-FA COLLEGE.
EDITORIAL:—The Present Position of the Composer—A Good Example.
THE SOCIETY OF ARTS.
THE MUSIC OF THOUGHT.
JOHN FIELD AND HIS HABITS.
THE HISTORY OF THE PIANOFORTE. By A. J. Hipkins.
PASSING EVENTS. Service Lists, &c.

MUSICAL THE STANDARD

LONDON: SATURDAY, AUGUST 4, 1883.

THE PRESENT POSITION OF THE COMPOSER.

VI.

CERTAIN recent incidents have called my attention more forcibly to the want of knowledge of the world and its ways displayed by many of our young composers. Many prevalent disappointments and disasters await the young artist through that ignis fatuus of the art world—the belief that unaided merit will in the end be sure to claim a due public recognition. How many weary years are wasted even by good and sensible artists, in vain efforts to clutch at seemingly hopeful opportunities! How many friendless young composers dream of the possible chances of a commission to write an opera, or the chances of getting the oratorios performed which are to place their happy authors at once on the pinnacle of fame! It may be well that hopes do thus buoy up human hearts and so lead to untold efforts of perseverance and patience. Still, it would surely be better if it were more generally understood that, as a rule, there is no pathway to reputation save that which is hedged in by favourable surrounding circumstances and smoothed by friendly hands. Genius and talent, and the still rarer virtues of patience and clear sighted resolution, are after all common enough, and the "mute inglorious MILTONS" exist in myriads; but the presence of genius in exactly the right mind, and its possession by the person so placed socially as to command the first propulsion on the stream of public favour, presents a picture of comparative rarity. It is ordained that millions of the choicest flowers shall grow year by year, bloom and pass away, never seen by mortal eye. Similarly there are millions of highly artistic minds which never come within the range of cultivation and opportunity. Then, again, alas! there are thousands who persist for years in mistaking the glow of enthusiasm for the rapture of genius, and only find out too late, after perhaps a wasted life-time and through painful disappointments, that the "fond imagination" of hopeful natures and the kindly folly of surrounding friends, are responsible for many a wrecked career to be seen on the shore which separates time from eternity. It is a moot question, indeed, whether even in aristocratic England, where native talent is much too little appreciated, it is not much easier to win a peerage, starting from the clerk's stool of a country lawyer's office, than it is, without the requisite social advantages, to secure a recognised position as a composer whose works will be performed and listened to. At the present time, with an increased encouragement, the annals of the art can show no single instance of a composer of estimation in public opinion who has not had such advantages either in the good station of his parents, or by the timely encouragement of influential friends, or through the fostering shelter of the cathedral or public institution. So the man who is fully conscious of the possession of sound abilities and yet lacks such advantages, should take care to advance step by step from small to great things and above all to assiduously make friends, for without them in modern society no talents or gifts, however great, have any value, inasmuch as they can have no friendly recognition. One prevalent idea now is the notion that the competitive opportunities presented from time to time are calculated to benefit both the art and composers. It is quite true that they do a certain amount of good in the way of encouraging young writers to make definite efforts, but as a general principle these competitions lead to but little result. If it happens that a prize is gained by a well known writer (be it observed, however, that well-known musicians are generally much too busy to enter into competitions), then the usual result of having gained public favour follows the publication of such a work, and a success is a natural result. If, however, the prize has been honourably gained by an unknown hand, then the writer's labour is soon to be lost, and the object of the well-disposed donors is defeated, for the reason that the writer lacking the very "breath of "life" to the artist—a secured friendly recognition, his work excites no stimulated public curiosity and interest, and even if performed or published, or both, and in spite of even remarkable merits, is speedily forgotten. It seems, and it is a trite truism to say, that no short road to success can be devised, and the wise artist plods along, not caring to turn aside to pluck the flowers which are within his grasp, but which will fade within an hour. So success or want of success in the competitive schemes of the day should not give the art producer one moment's solicitude in his onward march to the summit of Mount Parnassus.

Digitized by Google

E. H. TURPIN.

A GOOD EXAMPLE.

THE MUSICAL STANDARD has never yet hesitated to give publicity to any scheme obviously framed for the good of the art and of artists; and no plans for the advancement of the art have a better claim to such publicity than proposals for the popularization of good orchestral music. The orchestra has been not inaptly spoken of as the sun of music, for it is not only the sole source of tone-colour power, but in phrasing, in expression, and supremely as the grandest manifestation of life and combined mental power in music, it is indeed and ever must be the greatest engine of modern art. Therefore, it may be fairly questioned whether any work done for the advancement of the art can exceed in value and importance the development in our midst of sound orchestral music.

So true to the best interests of the art are orchestral manifestations, that it may be safely conceded that there can be no solid progress without their presence. Indeed, our national and musical authorities should regard the encouragement of competent orchestral performances as being quite as essential as is the development of general musical education to the artistic well-being of the nation. Great strides have been lately taken in London for the advancement of this class of music—where skilled performers have been counted by tens, they are now to be found in twenties. And increased travelling facilities have made the large number of our distinguished orchestral artists here, a very useful nucleus for the orchestral permeation of our national musical body. Our great provincial commercial centres are rapidly gaining orchestral power, and have probably also doubled their instrumental resources in the past twenty years. Our University centres, too, are well to the front, as the admirable orchestral concerts of Oxford and Cambridge plainly demonstrate. Now, the people of Wales are advancing on the same pathway by a very decided movement, after long years of patient and intelligent cultivation of the art in both its vocal and instrumental departments. The vigorous town of Cardiff, now the great outlet for the vast mineral wealth of the Principality and the youngest of our University centres, has, as already told, decided upon setting a good example by introducing at the National Eisteddfod of next week a series of orchestral performances of high-class and standard works, by a well-balanced and fully competent body of leading London performers. The beneficent and liberal action of the committee in this matter deserves very high praise, and the introduction of orchestral music upon so efficient a basis is an educational advance of distinct importance, especially remembering the large number of listeners concerned who come from all directions and may be said to represent the whole of Wales. To attempt to point out, again, the features of the eloquent and intellectual power of the best instrumental music, would be an act of supererogation here. Still, one or two brief thoughts are not perhaps out of place. Quite apart from the power and charm of tone-colour, orchestral music has the function of displaying such a concentrated vitality as may alone demonstrate the full force of great musical thoughts. This vitality is intensified by the fact that its expression is conveyed through so many combined mediums. Thus the glories of the composer's art are perhaps only fully realized by the orchestra, seeing that concentration, variety, phrasing power and individual expression, here find their most complete assertion and most effective setting forth by combination and contrast. The duty of encouraging orchestral growth is indeed a paramount obligation which falls upon all interested in the real progress of the art.

Digitized by Google

E. H. Turpin.

THE SOCIETY OF ARTS.

The Society of Arts' Conversazione was held at the International Fisheries Exhibition, South Kensington, by permission of the Executive Committee, on Wednesday evening, the 25th July. The reception was held near the entrance, by Sir William Siemens, the Chairman of the Council, assisted by the following Vice-Presidents and members of the Council:—Lord Alfred S. Churchill, Lord Sudely, Sir Philip Cunliffe-Owen, Sir Frederick Abel, Sir Edward Inglefield, Captain Douglas Galton, Sir John Hawkshaw, Sir Frederick Leighton, Sir John Lubbock, Sir Richard Temple, Mr. B. F. Cobb, Mr. W. H. Perkin, Mr. R. Rawlinson, Dr. Richardson, Mr. Carpmael, Mr. H. Doulton, Mr. T. V. Lister, Mr. J. M. Maclean, Mr. Matthey, Mr. Loftus Perkins, Mr. W. H. Preece, and Mr. Owen Roberts.

Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, President of the Society, and the Princess of Wales, accompanied by H.R.H. Prince Christian, and the Hereditary Princess of Saxe-Meiningen, and attended by Colonel Arthur Ellis, the Hon. Mrs. A. Hardinge, and Fraülein von Cohausen, arrived at half-past ten, and were escorted through the building by Sir William and Lady Siemens, Sir Philip Cunliffe-Owen, and the members of the Council, after which their Royal Highnesses proceeded to the Royal Pavilion.

The Exhibition Buildings, the Conservatory of the Royal Horticultural Society, &c., were lighted up by the electric light, and the gardens were illuminated throughout with coloured lamps, as well as four large Siemens electric lights, put up for the occasion.

The band of the Grenadier Guards, conducted by Mr. Dan Godfrey, performed in the gardens. The band of the Royal Artillery, conducted by Cav. L. Zavertal, the band of the 6th (Thuringian) Regiment of German Infantry (by kind permission of His Imperial Majesty, the Emperor of Germany), and the Hungarian band, performed within the buildings.

A vocal and instrumental concert, consisting of glees, &c., was given by the Royal Criterion Handbell Ringers, under the direction of Mr. Harry Tipper, in the Conservatory, from 9 to 11 p.m.

Refreshments were supplied at buffets arranged at various parts of the building. The number of visitors attending the Conversazione was about 6,500. A large number of scientific, literary, and artistic celebrities were present.

After the Conversazione, Sir William and Lady Siemens entertained the members of the Council and a company of friends at supper.

The novel concert arranged by the Saltaire Park Band Committee, Bradford, for the evening of July 26th, was a decided success. There was a large attendance in the park while the Saltaire band played through their portion of the programme, and when the combined glee unions from Bradford and Shipley afterwards took seats on board the river steamer the river banks were lined with spectators who were sufficiently interested to keep their places until the close of the concert. While the boat steamed up the river the band performed additional selections, the singers giving their glees as she drifted slowly down again. The sound of the voices on the water was very pleasing, and the vocalists were rewarded with hearty applause for their rendering of "Comrades in Arms," and "Wanton Gales." The steamer was decorated with Chinese lanterns. The success of this experiment will, it is hoped, induce the committee to give another similar concert.

THE MUSIC OF THOUGHT.

The Universe may be described as precipitated thought—incarnate, transubstantiated thought, and the history of humanity, of progress, has been the history of thought, of reason—alas, also, and of insanity (it is spoken in all seriousness, with too profound conviction)—if reason far from fully developed, and therefore as much misused, and abused, as used. Man, in short, has done what a brute would do if he could. Hence his cannibalism and fetishism, with all their hideous and miserable manifestations. The history of religion may be described as the history of man's progress towards God, a higher conception of God, and consciousness of himself. His art, above all, his music, goes pari passu, with this. At a time, then, when the Book itself has just been revised (by no means inspiredly), and when the Liturgy is on the imminent brink of revision, of re-formation, it savours of suspicion that the order of the day is urged—"Church music in the style of the middle ages!" But we can no more go back to another in art than in geology, than the chalk period can go back to the carboniferous. Essentially, we can no more alter ourselves to their music than we can step into their shoes, or put on their doublets. Why? Because we do not think like them, and, therefore, do not feel like them (and vice versâ). Let any man read the "Storia d'Italia," for instance, Guicciardini's (an ancestor I presume, of Beethoven's Countess Giulia), in the 15th and 16th centuries, and then see if he can write music, express himself in art like the men of that period—bigotted, bloody, and rotten. Italy possessed its Savonarola, but no Luther, and hung and burnt that poor imitation, that degenerate specimen. Why should we be urged to go back to the art of Savonarola (or his alter ego) and not utter ourselves in the art of Luther, develop'd? For Luther set a glacier going (or stood on the head of one going) which he could by no means stop. Professor Tyndall planted his stakes in the glacier at Chamounix, but he was far too wise to imagine they would stop there; on the contrary, he expected (and proved) they would be carried forward by the icy irresistible current.

Palestrina and his compeers might set the Gospel genealogies to "sublime music," but it was, after all, a foolish proceeding. What would a Beethoven think if you were to demand of him to set the Te Deum, e.g. in that archaic style! For style is thought, as the pious and celebrated Spanish writer says, citing Balzac:

"El estilo nacu de las ideas y non de las palatras.
Le style vient des idées et non des mots."

But further, and more pertinently for us, what would a Beethoven think if you were to demand of him to set, e.g., the Athanasian Creed? The fiery energy of French genius incontinently boils forth in a damnation of Faust, but its revolting sensationalism is only too typical of the period. Real religion would shudder at reproducing it.

Our watchwords are—Poor Humanity and Progress; hence above all in music, our pathos and triumph, these the fountains of our great deep! The consequence of compelling Church music to be written in the style of exploded thought would simply be to shock and disgust the best musical minds from writing it at all. The common chords and counterpoint, grand as they may be, of that period, are not essentially—in a scientific or pyschologic all-umfassened sense—style. Style is belief. Neither art nor the man would be benefited, expressed so. Why should the living tone-poet be prohibited from his idiom, or rather language? Why should he not write rather in the style of the "Missa Solennis" and Schumann's "Pater Profundus" (the religious music of the future according to Brendel) than of Lassus and Hasler? The pure thinker will write pure music, equally as good in its way as Palestrina's, and better in so far as it is more appropriate, the alter ego of truth. Wisdom is better than knowledge, but without knowledge wisdom also is impossible. This is the age of knowledge, and its art as much as its religion must flow from that. The Church is the last place where freedom (that is, truth) should be prohibited. Music—above all, religious music—is philosophic feeling; if it is really to progress it must do so by being this more and more. In the Church or out of the Church, it will strive, above all, to be sincere, and will repose as on a Rock of Ages, in "measureless content"; in this,

"Work well done exempts itself from fear."

Digitized by Google

JOHN FIELD AND HIS HABITS.

The celebrated pianist, John Field, was a man that the public talked much about while he lived, and even after his death. The anecdotes that are attributed to him are very numerous, and a volume could be formed of those that are said to be genuine. As to the others, every journal has invented them to amuse its readers, and thus the number published cannot be counted.

John Field was one of the best pianists and brightest men of his day, as all confessed who knew him. What is not so widely and generally known is that he was also one of the greatest drinkers of champagne in Russia, where he had established himself, and where a greater quantity of champagne is drunk than in all the other European countries put together.

He became intoxicated quite easily with an inferior bottle of this sparkling wine, yet after dinner Field was rather in a state of merriment than drunkenness—at least, in the majority of instances. Every day he indulged his appetite for exhilarating drink, especially, so it seemed, when he had to appear in public the same night. The story goes, that when he had the honour to play at a Paris Conservatory concert, on which occasion he obtained a great success, Liszt and Chopin were forced to take him by the arms after his performance, in order to safely lead him to his hotel. Another time, at a minor German court, he became so thoroughly confused in the middle of a "Concerto" of his own composition that he made a sign for the orchestra to stop, put out the lights that were burning on the piano, and wrought up the public to a pitch of enthusiasim by a remarkable improvization, which, in any other condition, would hardly have been possible. His best work was the result of a partial dulling of the senses.

Field made a good deal of money. He went from house to house giving lessons, followed by two enormous English bull-dogs, which he liked very much. He received twenty-five rubles (or fifteen francs) every lesson. When he returned to his residence in the evening, he threw his receipts into a corner of his room. The pile of francs did not increase, however, for when he died he did not leave a cent.

In spite of his drinking and disorderly habits, John Field worked with an enthusiasm that was never abated, No pianist ever practised on his chosen instrument with so tenacious a perseverance. When he was studying a new piece, he had near him upon a little table at his left hand two hundred counters. Every time he recommenced a passage he took one of the counters and placed it upon another small table at his right hand, until all the counters had been conveyed from the left to the right table. It often happened, when the passage was difficult, that he transferred the counters from one table to the other eight or ten times.

Yet, John Field was an unrivalled pianist among the great pianists that form that remarkable galaxy of performers in which shone with such lustre Thalberg, Liszt, Chopin, Herz, and Prudent.—New York Courier.

Says an American journal:—"The first organ ever brought to this country is still in constant use in St. John's Chapel, Portsmouth, N. H. The Hon. Henry K. Oliver, of Salem, Mass., thus gives its history:—'It is sometimes known as the Brattle organ, having been the property of the Hon. Thomas Brattle, who was born in Boston in 1658, and was treasurer of Harvard College (where he graduated in 1676, one of a class of only three members) from 1693 till 1713, the year of his death (unmarried), in Boston. Brattle Square and Brattle Street, and the now extinct Brattle Street Church, Boston, of which he was the leading founder, giving the land on which it was built, take name from him. The organ (not large) referred to was of English make and imported. Mr. Brattle, in his will, says: "I give, dedicate and devote my organ to the praise and glory of God in the said church [Brattle Street], if they shall accept thereof, and within a year after my decease procure a sober person that can play skilfully thereon with a loud noise; otherwise to the Church of England [King's Chapel] in this town, on the same terms and conditions, and on their non-acceptance or discontinuance to use it as above, unto the college, and on their non-acceptance, to my nephew William Brattle." Brattle Street Church refused the gift, the opposition to organs in dissenting churches being then as it is now in churches in Scotland. But the parish of King's Chapel (Stone Chapel) accepted the gift, complying with the terms and procuring a "sober person," Mr. Edward Enstone, from England, on a salary of £30 per annum. Here it was used till 1756, when it was replaced by a new and larger one from England. It was then sold to St. John's Church, in Portsmouth, though rumour has it that it was for a while in a church in Newburyport. It is now at least 175 years old, and yet in good order. Why, on "its discontinuance," it did not go to Harvard College, according to the terms of the will, is not known.'"

THE HISTORY OF THE PIANOFORTE.

By A. J. HIPKINS.

[A Paper read before the Society of Arts, March 7th, 1883].

As this paper is composed from a technical point of view, some elucidation of facts, forming the basis of it, is desirable before we proceed to the chronological statement of the subject. These facts are the strings, and their strain or tension; the sound-board, which is the resonance factor; and the bridge, connecting it with the strings. The strings, soundboard, and bridge are indispensable, and common to all stringed instruments. The special fact appertaining to keyboard instruments is the mechanical action interposed between the player and the instrument itself. The strings, owing to the slender surface they present to the air, are, however powerfully excited, scarcely audible. To make them sufficiently audible, their pulsations have to be communicated to a wider elastic surface, the soundboard, which, by accumulated energy and broader contact with the air, reinforces the strings' feeble sound. The properties of a string set in periodic vibration are the best known of the phenomena appertaining to acoustics. The molecules composing the string are disturbed in the string's vibrating length by the means used to excite the sound, and run off into sections, the comparative length and number of which depend partly upon the place in the string the excitement starts from; partly upon the force and the form of force that is employed; and partly upon the length, thickness, weight, strain, and elasticity of the string, with some small allowance for gravitation. The vibrating sections are of wavelike contour; the nodes or points of apparent rest being really knots of the greatest pressure from crossing streams of molecules. Where the pressure slackens, the sections rise into loops, the curves of which show the points of least pressure. Now, if the string be struck upon a loop, less energy is communicated to the string, and the carrying power of the sound proportionately fails. If the string be struck upon a node, greater energy ensues, and the carrying power proportionately gains. By this we recognise the importance of the place of contact, or striking-place of the hammer against the string; and the necessity, in order to obtain good fundamental tone, which shall carry, of the note being started from a node.

If the hammer is hard, and impelled with force, the string breaks into shorter sections, and the discordant upper partials of the string, thus brought into prominence, make the tone harsh. If the hammer is soft, and the force employed is moderated, the harmonious partials of the longer sections strike the ear, and the tone is full and round. By the frequency of vibration, that is to say, the number of times a string runs through its complete changes one way and the other, say, for measurement, in a second of time, we determine the pitch, or relative acuteness of the tone as distinguished by the ear.

We know, with less exactness, that the sound-board follows similar laws. The formation of nodes is helped by the barring of the sound-board, a ribbing crosswise to the grain of the wood, which promotes the elasticity, and has been called the "soul" of stringed musical instruments. The sound-board itself is made of most carefully chosen pine in Europe of the Abies excelsa, the spruce fir, which, when well grown, and of light, even grain, is the best of all woods for resonance. The pulsations of the strings are communicated to the sound-board by the bridge, a thick rail of close-grained beech, curved so as to determine their vibrating lengths, and attached to the sound-board by dowels. The bridge is doubly pinned, so as to cut off the vibration at the edge of the bearing the strings exert upon the bridge. The shock of each separate pulsation, in its complex form, is received by the bridge, and communicated to such undamped strings as may, by their lengths, be sensitive to them; thus producing the Æolian tone commonly known as sympathetic, an eminently attractive charm in the tone of a pianoforte.

We have here strings, bridge, and sound-board, or belly, as it is technically called, indispensable for the production of the tone, and indivisible in the general effect. The proportionate weight of stringing has to be met by a proportionate thickness and barring of the sound-board, and a proportionate thickness and elevation of the bridge.

The tension of the strings is met by a framing, which has become more rigid as the drawing-power of the strings has been gradually increased. In the present concert grands of Messrs. Broadwood, that drawing-power may be stated as starting from 150 lb. from each single string in the treble, and gradually increasing to about 300 lb. for each of the single strings in the bass. I will reserve for the historical description of my subject some notice of the different kinds of framing that have been introduced. It will suffice, at this stage, to say that it was at first of wood, and became, by degrees, of wood and iron; in the present day the iron very much preponderating. It will be at once evident that the object of the framing is to keep the ends of the strings apart. The near ends are wound round the wrest-pins, which are inserted in the wooden bed, called the wrest-plank, the strength and efficiency of which are most important for the tone and durability of the instrument. It is composed of layers of wainscot oak and beech, the direction of the grain being alternately longitudinal and lateral. Some makers cover the wrest-plank with a plate of brass; in Broadwood's grands, it is a plate of iron, into which, as well as the wood, the wrest-pins are screwed. The tuner's business is to regulate the tension, by turning the wrest-pins, in which he is chiefly guided by the beats which become audible from differing numbers of vibrations. The wrest-plank is bridged, and has its bearing like the sound-board; but the wrest-plank has no vibrations to transfer, and should, as far as possible, offer perfect insensibility to them.

Digitized by Google

I will close this introductory explanation with two remarks, made by the distinguished musician, mechanician, and inventor, Theobald Boehm, of Munich, whose inventions were not limited to the flute which bears his name, but include the initiation of an important change in the modern pianoforte, as made in America and Germany. Of priority of invention, he says, in a letter to an English friend, "If it were desirable to analyse all the inventions which have been brought forward, we should find that in scarcely any instance were they the offspring of the brain of a single individual, but that all progress is gradual only; each worker follows in the track of his predecessor, and eventually, perhaps, advances a step beyond him." And concerning the relative value of inventions in musical instruments, it appears from an essay of his, which has been recently published, that he considers improvement in acoustical proportions the chief foundation of the higher or lower degree of perfection in all instruments, their mechanism being but of secondary value.

(To be continued.)

The pleasure of hearing Madame Marie Roze in "Carmen" (says a contemporary), is to be afforded the British public, Mr. Carl Rosa having acquired the sole right of representing the opera in English, and almost as a matter of course entered into an engagement with the celebrated prima donna to play the title-rôle. Bizet composed "Carmen" specially for Madame Marie Roze. He had a thorough knowledge of her capabilities and a great admiration for her artistic power, which resulted in the creation of a character moulded on his daily—almost hourly—observation of the development of her powers. In her studies she was constantly assisted by the composer, who in this way obtained a perfect realisation of his intentions, and the success which Marie Roze afterwards achieved in her representation of the heroine was amongst the greatest of her triumphs. Bizet showed his regard for his pupil and friend by preparing a MSS. of the opera carefully and copiously annotated and margined with stage directions and hints to keep his instructions fresh in the memory of the debutanté. This interesting memento is now, no doubt, in the possession of Colonel Mapleson, Mdme. Roze's husband. The libretto of the opera for Mr. Rosa has been written by Mr. H. Hersee and the first representation will take place on Aug. 20th.

The great organ will go, but not out of Boston. An agreement has been concluded between the Music Hall Association and the persons who had applied for an injunction to restrain the association from making any disposition of the instrument, one of the terms of that agreement being the withdrawal of the suit. As has already been announced, the organ will be set up in the new hall at the South End to be built by the New England Conservatory of Music. The work of removal must begin on May 15 of next year, and the organ and all its appurtenances must be out of the hall on or before July 1 succeeding. The Music Hall Association will, however, if it shall be found necessary, provide storage room for portions of the instrument during the summer months. When ready for use in its new home, the organ will have many important and greatly needed additions in the way of registers, especially of the sort known as mixtures, which will probably be furnished by the builders of the organ, Walcker & Co., of Ludwigsburg, Germany. The expression of a hope that no feeling of jealousy, growing out of national pride, will prevent the use of the best system of action known in France is in order, as well as of one that the architecture of the new hall will be more in harmony with the design of the "organ-house," as the Germans call it, than is that of its present abiding place. Mr. William O. Grover is the purchaser of the organ, and the responsible party in the matter of removal. His connection with the matter is purely to save the great organ in the public interest, and those who deplored the threatened loss of the famous instrument from Boston have him to thank for its preservation here as one of our boasts as a musical centre. Mr. Grover is not only an amateur of music, but serves its cause practically as a trustee of the New England Conservatory of Music, which he hopes to see take its place in the highest class of such institutions, and as a director of the Philharmonic Society. —Boston Transcript (U.S.)

Passing Events.

Dr. Hullah is now residing at Nice.

There are more than nine thousand brass bands in the United States.

Mdlle. Marie Litta, the operatic singer, died lately in New York. Her death was attributed to over-work.

The World says that not a note of Sir A. S. Sullivan's new opera has yet been written.

The Duchess of Beaufort has given a new organ to the parish church at Baddington on the ducal estate.

The opera, "Rip van Winkle" has been given more than 250 times at the Comedy Theatre.

The (reduced) orchestra have been re-engaged for the Royal Italian Opera season of 1884.

A comic opera, "The Three Beggars," by Messrs. Sinclair, Dunn, and Belville, was produced at the Royal Academy of Music on July 28th.

Theodore Thomas, with his orchestra, opened the third annual season of summer nights' concerts at the Exposition Building, Chicago, recently.

The Charles Lucas Medal was awarded at the Royal Academy of Music on July 21st to Frederick Hilvington Hattersley.

Mdme. Trebelli sails for New York October 2nd, and Mdme. Valleria October 13th, both to join Mr. Abbey's troupe.

Mr. Theodore Thomas has been giving successful orchestral concerts lately at Chicago, U.S., these forming part of his scheme of a provincial tour.

In 1885 will occur the bicentenary of the births of both Handel and Bach. Surely neither giant will be forthcoming!

Sir R. Stewart has awarded the prize offered by the Hibernian Band of Hope Union for a temperance song to Mr. T. Simpson, of Burnley.

Signor Arditi is now looking out for new artists on the continent, and Lieutenant-Colonel J. H. Mapleson will start on a similar hunting tour in a fortnight.

Herr Franke proposes to give a season of German opera next year in London with the Pollini troupe under Herr Reichter. With this view he is now in Germany making arrangements.

It is said Sir Michael Costa is letting his house in Eccleston Square and proposes to reside at Brighton for three years. He is in excellent general health, though still suffering from paralysis of the tongue.

Félicien David's symphonic ode "Le Désert," first performed at (the old) Her Majesty's in 1845, may probably be revived in the course of the season at the Crystal Palace under Mr. Manns.

Only twenty operas have been given at Covent Garden this season. Four years ago, when Mr. Mapleson competed with Mr. Gye, thirty operas were given during the season at the Royal Italian Opera.

An American writer advises singers to practise breathing while walking, by filling the lungs, and using each inspiration for as long a distance as possible. This will inevitably strengthen the lungs.

Mdme. Patti is to sail for New York to join Mr. Mapleson's company on October 22. Mesdames Gerster, Pappenheim, and Signor Bertini, a clever Viennese tenor, are also engaged in the same company.

ST. PETER'S COLLEGIATE CHURCH, WOLVERHAMPTON.—On Wednesday, 25th July, there was a special full choral Evening Service in the above church, in aid of the additional Curates' Aid Society, in which the choirs of St. John's, All Saint's, and Penn Churches joined, there was a crowded congregation. The choirs, under Mr. J. Roper's, F.C.O. (organist of St. Peter's) careful training, were fully up to the occasion. The service taken was Stainer in A, and the anthem "Send out Thy light" (Gounod). In all that they did the choirs showed the effects of the excellent training they had received. Mr. Roper, who conducted, must be congratulated on the success of the festival. Mr. Halford, F.C.O., organist of St. John's, Wolverhampton, ably presided at the organ.

Digitized by Google

Hand and Heart for August has an account of Mr. James A. Birch with a portrait. Mr. Birch is editor of the Standard Book of Song, and has rendered valuable aid to the cause of temperance as a composer, conductor, and teacher.

The choral works to be done at the Glasgow Orchestral concerts include Berlioz's "Messe de Morts," Félicien David's "Le Désert," Gounod's "Redemption," Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Night," and Handel's "Acis and Galatea" and "Messiah."

An Italian opera season will be given in Berlin from Sept. 16th to Oct. 16th, with Signor Bimboni as conductor. The repertoire is to include Verdi's operas, "Hamlet" by Thomas, and Rossini's "Othello" and "Semiramide."

The Union of Church Choirs in New York has grown in three years to a membership of more than four thousand. At the recent annual concert 3,400 singers took part. The work of the union is certainly doing much to improve congregational singing.

The large American organ, built by Messrs. Estey and Co. for the Festival at Bayreuth has been purchased by Messrs. Haynes & Co., musical instrument merchants, of Cecilia Hall, Malvern, for the Rev. E. Ford's new private chapel at his College, Hillside, West Malvern.

The following advertisement in the Church Times of July 20th deserves to be recorded :—

"A YOUNG MAN, aged 30, who understands waiting at table, &c., is anxious to obtain a situation in a clergyman's family in a country parish. He is competent to instruct a choir, and take the organ, &c."

The Council of the Scottish Musical Society met at Edinburgh and decided to postpone the starting of a musical academy for Scotland, and to cancel and abandon their arrangement with Mr. F. H. Cowen as principal. But arrangements are now in progress to start an academy for Glasgow under the auspices of the Choral Union.

The Covent Garden Promenade Concerts begin to-night under the direction of Mr. Freeman Thomas, Mr. Gwyllym Crowe as before conducting the splendid orchestra. The band will be almost identically the same as that of last year, with Mr. Carrodus for leader. A new Bow Street entrance to the Floral Hall has been made, and the building is lit by fifty arc and a hundred incandescent Jablochkoff lights. The stage is decorated like a Chinese pavilion. The issue of guinea season tickets is another special feature.

A Parochial Choir Festival was held at Chester Cathedral on July 18th. The organist arranged the processional hymns for the local Militia bands, big drum and all. This is taking the wind out of the sails of the "Salvation Army" with a vengeance. Will General Booth meet his defeat with a counterfeit movement and try to start a cathedral choir? Clearly the Church means to leave no advantages to outsiders. The general's bandmaster is thought to be scoring for the next turn-out of the army, "Salvation! Oh, the joyful sound."

The Athenæum says that Verdi has remodelled his "Don Carlos," which is to be given next season at the Théâtre Italien, Paris. He has suppressed the whole of the first act, excepting the romance for the tenor, which has been transferred to the second act. A new introduction has been written for the former third act, which is now the second, and the whole of the dance music in this act has been cut out. The finale of the last act has been re-written and much shortened; and besides several other modifications of more or less importance, the composer has in many places changed the orchestration.

The chief works to be performed at the Leeds Musical Festival are as follows :—Wednesday morning, October 10th, Mendelssohn's "Elijah"; evening cantata, "Gray's Elegy" (A. Cellier; written for this festival), and Beethoven's Symphony in D (No. 2.). Thursday morning, October 11th, Rafi's Symphony-oratorio, "The End of the World" (first time of performance in England). Thursday evening, 97th Psalm (Barnby); third motet (Mozart); Bach's cantata, "O Shepherd of Israel," and Rossini's "Stabat Mater." Friday morning, Macfarren's new oratorio, "King David"; evening, Gade's cantata, "The Crusaders," and a miscellaneous selection. Saturday morning, Beethoven's "Grand Mass in D," and Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" ("Lobgesang").

The Times, says that Mr. William Gilstrap, of Fornham Hall, Bury St. Edmunds, Suffolk, and Newark-on-Trent, Notts, who last year gave £1,000 to the funds of the Royal College of Music, has now added £2,000 to that sum, with the view of founding a scholarship in the College, in his own name, to be awarded (1) to natives of Suffolk, or failing them (2) to natives of Nottinghamshire, or failing them (3) to the country at large. The Prince of Wales has accepted this munificent offer, and it is to be hoped that so excellent an example of public spirit may be followed in other counties.

The Choral Festival of the Aldershot, Farnham, Farnborough, and Crookham Church Choir Association was held in All Saints' Military Church recently. The performers numbered 150, including the string bands of the 1st Scottish Rifles and the 2nd York and Lancaster Regiment. Band-Sergeant Bampton played the organ, Mr. J. Conway Brown, L.Mus., T.C.L., conducted. Sir R. Stewart's Service in G was sung, and the anthem was "The watching over Israel," from "Elijah." The Service was opened by the adagio from Haydn's 7th Symphony, and closed by the march in "Athalie."

The first of the autumn concerts proper will be the Crystal Palace Saturday concerts under Mr. Manns, probably beginning on October 6. Richter's three autumn concerts will take place October 29, November 3 and 10. Herr Joachim will probably again appear before Christmas, and it is anticipated that, in the course of the season, Madame Essipoff and other favourites will be heard. The Albert Hall concerts, November 7 to April 11, have already been announced. The Sacred Harmonic Society will start their next season under Mr. Charles Hallé on November 16, "Messiah" being performed December 19, followed by other concerts.

The funeral of the late Mr. Joseph Williams, the well known and long established music publisher, of Berners Street and Cheapside, took place on Tuesday last, at Marylebone Cemetery, Finchley. The deceased occupied a high position in the esteem of those with whom his extensive business and artistic relations brought him in contact, and the respect which was entertained for him as a man was shown in the large and influential attendance at the mournful ceremony. Many well known professional men and a very general representative of the music trade assembled to pay their last respects to his memory.

The Era says that the National Opera House on the Thames Embankment, after standing idle for so long a period, will be soon put to practical use. It is expected that it will be completed in time for next season, and it is intended to have a three months' season of Italian Opera, three months' German Opera, three months' French Opera, and two months' English, the other month being devoted to promenade concerts. Should Mr. Carl Rosa take part in the scheme, it is anticipated that a longer time will be devoted to English Opera and less to French; but, whatever arrangements may ultimately be made, the theatre will be kept open throughout the year.

The death of Mr. Samuel Pearsall, the senior Vicar Choral of Lichfield Cathedral, is announced with regret. The deceased gentleman, who was advanced in years, was generally well known as an accomplished, though florid, tenor singer. In early life he had the advantage of tuition, and certainly during the days of Mr. Pearsall and Mr. Machin, Lichfield Cathedral boasted of a tenor and bass of very rare excellence. Prior to the rise of Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Pearsall was esteemed as a leading tenor of the day; a reference to programmes of the principal London and provincial concerts and festivals will demonstrate the position he then held in the world of song. A not-to-be-forgotten association was his well known musical lecture, in which he was assisted, season after season, by the various members of the Cathedral Choir.

A grand Mass and Benediction were held at the Roman Catholic Church at Sclerder, Cornwall, on Sunday, the 15th inst., the occasion being the Bishop of Plymouth's visit for the purpose of holding a confirmation. The church, which is dedicated to "Our Lady of Light," is one of the most ancient shrines in England, and people formerly resorted there to seek restoration from blindness. Bordese's fine Mass was splendidly sung. The leading vocalist was Mdlle. Alice Roselli, whose dramatic and artistic singing was well displayed in the solos. The offertory, "Veni, Spiritus Sancte" (Rossi), employed the great compass of her fine voice to advantage. At the Benediction, Mdlle. Roselli again sang admirably in Bordèse's lovely "O Salutaris," and Neukomm's "Tantum Ergo," which she rendered magnificently.

Digitized by Google

Sir Herbert Oakeley writes thus of the Handel Festival:—"It is refreshing to be reminded, at least once in three years, of the supremacy of Handel as a choral writer, and it is good 'to inhale his bracing mountain air. His music beats with the strong pulse of a wholesome humanitarian, universal feeling. No theme too great for him; he moves at home among miracles; he has music fit for Sinai and the passage of the Red Sea! His is music to make us grow strong as we sit and listen.' And in these latter days, during prevalence of some music without form and void, like to—

'Rich windows that exclude the light,
And passages which lead to nothing,'

the grand and broad Handelian strains and his superb counterpoint, now a neglected art, his marvellous power of word-painting, and of producing the greatest effects with the simplest means—in such times as these of 'Musikalische Krankheit' the grand old master's nobility of style and elevation of thought seem to give listeners special and renewed edification."

On July 24th Miss Laura Willock gave a soirée at her own residence, 2, Anson-road, N. The young lady has lately returned, handsomely certificated, from the Leipzig Conservatoire. The pianoforte solos played by Miss Willock evinced not only much talent and care, but very conscientious cultivation and excellent power of expression and phrasing. Her critical friends present displayed their satisfaction and pleasure, called forth by her artistic performances. The programme included:—Song, recit. and aria from "Galatea" (Handel), Miss Johnstone; song, "To Anthea" (Hatton), excellently sung by J. Henry; pianoforte solo, Ballade in A flat (Reinecke), played by Miss Willock with much finish, breadth, excellent tone and touch; song, "At thy casement waiting," sung by Mr. Knight, who has a good tenor voice; vocal duet, "In the dusk of the Twilight" (Offenbach), Miss Carr Shaw and Miss Brown; song, "Sunshine and Rain" (Blumenthal), Mrs. Carr Shaw; pianoforte solo, Etude (F. Walenn), admirably rendered by Mr. F. Walenn; song, "None shall part us" ("Iolanthe") (A. Sullivan), Miss Carr Shaw; pianoforte solo, Ballade in A flat (Chopin), played by Miss Agnes Bartlett with fine delicacy, expressive phrasing, and genuine power; song, "Pur dicesti" (Lotti); admirably sung by Mrs. Carr Shaw; pianoforte solo, "Warum" (Schumann), artistically rendered by Miss Willock; and pianoforte solo, Norwegian Dance (Grieg), played by Mr. F. Walenn.

Correspondence.

THE MAJORITY OF THE "MUSICAL STANDARD."

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—As a "Reader from the first," permit me to offer my congratulations on the occasion of the Musical Standard attaining its majority. The first number, August 2nd, 1862, is now before me, and it would be interesting briefly to survey its progress since. One remark only can I now make. Owing in some measure to the exertions of the Musical Standard, the College of Organists came into existence in 1863; afterwards the tone of the paper altered, and exhibited the greatest hostility to the young institution; now poetical justice has been wrought, and the Hon. Sec. to the College of Organists is Editor of the Musical Standard! With every good wish for its future prosperity,

I am, Sir, yours faithfully,
STEPHEN S. STRATTON.

Birmingham, Aug. 2nd, 1883.

[The kindly words of Mr. Stephen S. Stratton, a much esteemed contributor from time to time, demand my grateful and heartfelt acknowledgment. Such words not only touch all connected with the paper, but serve to supply those engaged upon it with new strength.—ED.]

The Querist.

QUERY.

ORGANO would be glad to hear what is the best edition of J. S. Bach's works for the organ. He wants to purchase them bound neatly in one volume, as complete as possible. Please say name of publisher, and price.

[Peters's edition is perhaps the best complete available copy. Messrs. Bridge and J. Higgs are producing a new English edition, published by Novello & Co.]—ED.

Service Lists.

ELEVENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

AUGUST 5th.

London.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Hopkins in F; Introit, We pray Thee, Heavenly Father; Holy Communion, Barnby in E. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Hopkins in F; Anthem, Walk ye on in love and truth, and, God Thou art great (Spohr).

TEMPLE CHURCH.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum Laudamus, and Jubilate Deo, Barrow in F; Apostles' Creed, Harmonised Monotone; Anthem, O, how amiable (Greene). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Barrow in F; Apostles' Creed, Harmonized Monotone; Anthem, O give thanks (Boyce).

LINCOLN'S INN CHAPEL.—Morn.: Service, Barrow in F; Kyrie (Nares); Anthem, O clap your hands (Greene). Even: Service, Barrow in F; Anthem, Remember now thy creator (Steggall).

ALL SAINTS, MARGARET STREET.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus (Stainer); Holy Communion Service in D (Hoyte); Offertory Anthem, Praise the Lord (Mendelssohn). Even.: Service, King in D; Anthems, Lift thine eyes, and He, watching over Israel (Mendelssohn).

CHRIST CHURCH, CLAPHAM.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Plain-song; Kyrie and Credo, Schubert in F; Offertory, Anthem, Enter not into judgment (Attwood); Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei, and Gloria in excelsis (Schubert). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Goss in A; Anthem, Behold, how good and joyful (Clarke-Whitfield).

FOUNDLING CHAPEL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Nares in F; Anthem, The heavens are telling (Haydn). Aft.: Children's Service.

HOLY TRINITY, GRAY'S INN ROAD.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Hopkins in G; Jubilate, Chant. Even.: Service, Magnificat, Bunnett in F; Nunc Dimittis, Chant; Anthem, The Lord is loving unto every man (Garrett).

HOLY TRINITY, TULSE HILL.—Morn.: Chant Service. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Parry in D; Anthem, Plead Thou my cause (Mozart).

ST AUGUSTINE AND ST. FAITH, WATLING STREET.—Morn.: Service, Hopkins in F; Introit, Be merciful unto me (South); Communion Service, Eyre in E flat (throughout), Even.: Service, Smart in F; Anthem, O come, let us worship (Mendelssohn).

ST. BARNABAS, MARYLEBONE.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Dykes in F; Anthem, Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace (Wesley); Kyrie and Nicene Creed, Dykes in F. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Hoyte in B flat; Anthem, Stand up and bless (Goss).

ST. JAMES'S PRIVATE EPISCOPAL CHAPEL, SOUTHWARK.—Morn.: Service, Introit, I am not worthy, Holy Lord; Communion Service, Stainer in A. Even.: Service, (Mendelssohn); Anthem, Come unto Him (Gounod).

ST. MAGNUS, LONDON BRIDGE.—Morn.: Service, Opening Anthem, If we say (Calkin); Te Deum and Jubilate, Nares in F; Kyrie (Nares). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Nares in F; Anthem, Incline Thine ear (Himmel).

ST. MARGARET PATTENS, ROOD LANE, FENCHURCH STREET.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Sullivan in D; Benedictus, Stainer in A; Communion Service: Offertory Anthem, On Thee each living soul (Hoyte); Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei, and Gloria, Hummel in B flat. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Garrett in F; Anthem, I waited for the Lord (Mendelssohn).

ST. MARY BOLTONS, WEST BROMPTON, S.W.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Armes in G; Benedictus, Dykes in F; Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Arnold in A; Anthem, Give peace in our time (Callcott).

Digitized by Google

St. Michael's, Cornhill. — Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Smart in F; Anthem, How dear are Thy counsels (Crotch); Kyrie, and Creed, (Marbecke). Even. Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Ouseley in B flat; Anthem, Thou, O God (Greene).

St. Paul's, Avenue Road, South Hampstead.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Dykes in F; Benedictus, Barnby; Kyrie, Arnold in A; Offertory (Barnby). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Stainer in A; Anthem, O taste and see (Goss).

St. Paul's, Bow Common, E.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Chants; Holy Communion; Kyrie, Credo, Offertory, Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei, and Gloria in excelsis, Calkin in B flat. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Dykes in F; Anthem, Lift Thine eyes, and He, watching over Israel (Mendelssohn).

St. Peter's, Vere Street, W.—Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Tuckermann in F; Anthem, I waited for the Lord (Mendelssohn).

St. Saviour's, Hoxton. — Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Smart in F; Holy Communion; Kyrie, Credo, Sursum Corda, Sanctus, and Gloria in excelsis, Tours in F. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Stainer in F; Anthem, O give thanks (Tucker).

St. Sepulchre's, Holborn. — Morn: Service, Dykes in F; Anthem, Praise the Lord (Wilton). Even.: Service, Porter in D; Anthem, O taste and see (Goss).

Country.

St. Asaph Cathedral.—Morn.: Service, Goss in F; Anthem, O Lord my God (Wesley). Even.: Service, The Litany; Anthem, O Lord, Thou art my God (Lloyd).

Ashburne Church, Derbyshire. — Morn.: Service, Stanford in B flat; Kyrie and Credo, Wesley in E. Even.: Service, Stanford in B flat; Anthem, Selection from "Elijah" (Mendelssohn).

Beddington Church, Surrey.—Morn.: Service, Garrett in D; Communion Service, Calkin in D. Even.: Service, Ebdon in C; Anthems, God is a Spirit, and Who is the image of the invisible God (Bennett).

Birmingham (S. Alban the Martyr).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Dykes in F; Holy Communion; Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Gloria, Dykes in F; Benedictus and Agnus Dei, Redman in D. Evensong: Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Parry in D.

Birmingham (St. Cyprian's, Hay Mills).—Morn.: Service, Cobbe in G (throughout); Anthem, I was glad (Elvey). Even.: Service, Cobb in G; Anthem, My song shall be of mercy (Kent).

Canterbury Cathedral.—Morn.: Service, Richardson in F; Anthem, He is risen (Gadsby); Communion, Richardson in F. Even.: Service, Richardson in F; Anthem, This is the day (Oakley).

Carlisle Cathedral. — Morn.: Service, Dykes in F; Introit, Remember, O Lord (Macfarren); Kyrie, Dykes in F; Nicene Creed, Harmonized Monotone. Even.: Service, Hopkins in E flat; Anthem, Hear, O Thou Shepherd (Walmisley)

Doncaster (Parish Church).—Morn.: Service, Whitfield in E. Even.: Service, Cantate and Deus Misereatur, Hopkins in B flat; Anthem, I am Alpha and Omega (Stainer).

Dublin, St. Patrick's (National) Cathedral.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Smart in F; Holy Communion, Kyrie, Creed, Sanctus, and Gloria, Smart in F; Anthem, Why rage fiercely the heathen (Mendelssohn). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Smart in F; Anthems, Sleepers wake (Mendelssohn), and I beheld, and lo (Blow).

Ely Cathedral.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Ross in G; Benedictus, Plain Song, Kyrie and Credo, Ross in G; Gloria, Jackman in D; Anthem, I will magnify (Goss). Even.: Service, Anthem, Blessed be Thou (Kent).

Exeter Cathedral.—Morn.: Service, Smart in F; Communion, Wesley in F; Introit, O Lord, we trust (Handel). Even.: Service, Smart in F; Anthem, Wherewithal (Elvey).

Harrogate (St. Peter's Church). — Morn.: Service, Harvey in G; Benedictus, Chant; Anthem, The Lord is my Shepherd (Macfarren); Kyrie and Credo, Tours in F; Sursum Corda, Sanctus, and Gloria in excelsis, Woodward in E flat. Even.: Service, Magnificat, and Nunc Dimittis, Russell in A; Anthem, Blessed be the God and Father (Wesley).

Leeds Parish Church.—Morn.: Service, Prince Consort in A; Anthem, O Lord, how manifold (Handel); Communion Turle in D. Even.: Service, Russell in A; Anthem, Come unto him (Gounod).

Leeds, St. Martin's Church (Potternewton). — Te Deum and Benedictus, Chants; Kyrie (Garrett); Credo (Marbeck); Offertory Sentences (Farebrother). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Chants; Anthem, O rest in the Lord, and Cast thy burden (Mendelssohn).

Lichfield Cathedral. — Morn.: Service, Garrett in D; Communion Service, Garrett in D; Anthem, Blest are the departed (Spohr); Garrett in D; Anthem, I know that my Redeemer (Handel).

Liverpool Cathedral.—Aft.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Turle in D; Anthem (unaccompanied) God is a Spirit (Bennett).

Liverpool (St. Cuthbert's, Everton).—Morn.: Service, and Holy Communion, Calkin in B flat. Even.: Service, Ebdon in C; Anthem, I was glad (Elvey).

Llandaff Cathedral.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Dykes in F; The Litany. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Garrett in F; Anthem, Praise the Lord (Goss).

Manchester Cathedral. — Morn.: Service, and Full Communion, Garrett in D; Anthem, Jesu, word of God (Husband). Aft.: Service, Garrett in D; Anthem, The wilderness (Wesley).

Manchester (St. Benedict's).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Sullivan in D; Kyrie Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus, and Gloria in excelsis, "Messe des Orphéonites" (Gounod). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis (Stainer).

Manchester (St. John Baptist, Hulme).—Morn.: Service, Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, and Gloria in excelsis, Dykes in F; Benedictus, and Agnus Dei, Calkin in B flat. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis (Willing).

Peterborough Cathedral.—Morn.: Service, Barnby in E; Introit, To Father, Son, and Holy Ghost (Bach); Communion Service, Elvey in A, and Goss in D. Even.: Service, Barnby in E; Anthem, Ascribe (Travers).

Rochester Cathedral.—Morn.: Service, Smart in G; Anthem, O living Saviour (Gounod); Holy Communion, Smart in G. Even.: Service, Smart in G; Anthem, Stand up and bless (Goss).

Salisbury Cathedral. Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Hopkins in A; Kyrie and Credo, Walmisley in D; Offertory (Barnby). Even.: Service, Smart in B flat; Anthem, Praise His awful name (Spohr).

Sherborne Abbey. — Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Chants; Kyrie (Howells); Offertories (Barnby). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Hopkins in B flat; Anthem, Sing unto God (Lyle).

Southampton (St. Mary's Church).—Morn.: Service Te Deum and Benedictus, Woodward in E flat; Holy Communion, Introit, O how amiable (Macfarren) Service, Woodward in E flat; Offertory (Barnby); Paternoster (Field). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Woodward in E flat; Apostles' Creed, Harmonized Monotone.

Wells Cathedral.—Morn.: Service, Roberts in D. Even.: Service, Goss in E; Anthem, O give thanks (Purcell).

Worcester Cathedral.—Morn.: Service, Garrett in E; Communion Service, Tours in F; Anthem, Incline thine ear (Himmel). Even. Service, Tours in F; Anthem, In that day (Elvey).

HENRY SPEECHLY,

CAMDEN ORGAN STEAM FACTORY,

KING'S ROAD, ST. PANCRAS, LONDON, N.W.

ESTABLISHED 1860.

Specifications and Estimates for Organs of any Magnitude, also for Reconstructions, Repairs, and Re-voicing.

Tunings contracted for, and Tuners sent to all parts of the Country at regular intervals or when required.

ORGANS ON HIRE WITH OPTION OF PURCHASE.

 Church, Chamber, and Chancel Organs for Sale or Hire; One or Two Manuals. Ready for immediate use. Easy Terms if required.

☞ All Pipes and other Parts manufactured on the Premises.

JUST PUBLISHED.—Full Anthem, "BE NOT DRUNK WITH WINE, WHEREIN IS EXCESS." For Temperance Services, etc., by E. H. TURPIN. Price 4d. net.—Messrs. WEEKES & CO., 14, Hanover-street W

Post 8vo., boards, 2s. 6d., post free.

TECHNICS OF VIOLIN PLAYING, by KARL COURVOISIER. Edited and translated by H. E. Krehbiel. Numerous illustrations.

Joachim says: "It is my opinion that this book will offer material aid to all violin players.

W. REEVES, 185, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

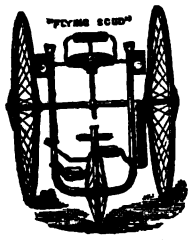
BICYCLES AND TRICYCLES.
NEW AND SECOND-HAND.



"FLYING SCUD" and "ECLECTIC" TRICYCLES, are the Machines for 1883. Spoken of by the Daily News of January 30th as "Splendid machines." "NANCY LEE," Weldless Steel," and "NONSUCH" Steel Bicycles, from £5 5s. Any machine at maker's price for twelve or less equal monthly payments, or for £5 down and 20s. per month, or large discount and carriage paid for cash. Can be seen and tried before purchasing in our school (60 by 40, concrete floor, tuition free), adjoining Show-rooms, the largest in London, with over 400 new and second-hand on View. Machines bought, sold, cleaned, repaired (estimates given), warehoused, advanced upon and exchanged.

Illustrated Lists post free. Hours 9 till 7; Saturdays till 4.

Repairs of all kinds neatly, cheaply, and promptly executed. Cheapest house in the trade for fittings. Parts and sundries of all descriptions kept in stock.

Machines Let on Hire with Option of Purchase.

SOUTH LONDON MACHINISTS' COMPANY.

STEAM WORKS: Suffolk Works, Suffolk Grove, Great Suffolk Street, S.E. Show Rooms and Offices: 28 and 29, Suffolk Grove. Bicycle and Tricycle School: 18, Suffolk Grove. City Depot, Show Rooms, and School: Tower Chambers, Moorgate Street, E.C. (Nearly opposite Moorgate Street Station.) PERAMBULATORS and all Domestic Machines at lowest prices for cash, or on easy terms without extra charge. Lists free. State kind required.

ESTABLISHED 1872.

When writing please say where you saw this advertisement.

T. R. WILLIS,
Organ Builder, Metal & Wood Pipe Maker and Voicer,
TOWER ORGAN WORKS, 29, MINORIES, LONDON.

AN ORGAN KEPT FOR PRACTICE.
REBUILDING, TUNING, AND REPAIRING.

E & W. SNELL,
Manufacturers of Harmoniums, and Reed Pedal Organs,
KING STREET NORTH, CAMDEN TOWN, LONDON, N.W.

NOTE.—These are the only Instruments at which an Organist can really find himself "at home," as all Scales, Positions, and Measurements are adopted strictly in accordance with the Resolutions of the Council of the College of Organists. Estimates free.

MALEY, YOUNG & OLDKNOW,
ORGAN BUILDERS,
KING'S ROAD, ST. PANCRAS, LONDON, N.W.

Specifications, Estimates, and Designs for Church, Chamber, Concert, and all Descriptions of Organs.
Materials, Workmanship, and Tone guaranteed to be First Class.
Organs rebuilt to suit any position, enlarged, and Revoiced at very moderate charges.
Tunings in all parts of the Kingdom.

PROSPECTUS FREE ON APPLICATION.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts, excepting under exceptional circumstances.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit, at Three per cent. interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables, the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons, and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares, and Annuities.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

The Birkbeck Building Society's Annual Receipts exceed Five Millions.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with immediate Possession, and no Rent to Pay.—Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate Possession, either for Building or Gardening purposes.—Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

WITH 25 PER CENT DISCOUNT FOR CASH,
OR 15/- PER MONTH.
(SECOND-HAND 10% Per Month)
ON THE 3 YEARS' SYSTEM.
BORD'S PIANOS
PIANOS EXCHANGED.
LISTS FREE OF
C. STILES & Co. 42 SOUTHAMPTON ROW. W.C.

CONSTANT LAURENT, HARMONIUM and ANGLO-ORGAN MANUFACTURER, Established in 1859 at 85, HIGH STREET, MARYLEBONE, LONDON, W.—Repairing and Tuning Executed Promptly. Price List on Application.—Intending Purchasers are respectfully solicited to inspect my Instruments and Factory.

EUSTACE INGRAM, Organ Builder,
Combines excellence of Tone and Workmanship with Economy.
INSPECTION INVITED.
WORKS:—Burnard Place, Eden Grove, Holloway, London, N.

THE THROAT IN ITS RELATION TO SINGING. By WHITFIELD WARD. Illustrated, post 8vo, boards, 2s. 6d.—Advice to Singers on every point of interest in reference to the Vocal Organs.
W. REEVES: 185, Fleet Street, E.C.

ART of MODULATION: Handbook, showing at a glance the Modulations from one Key to any other in the Octave, or Orgaists and Musical Directors. 2s. 6d., paper; 4s., cloth.
W. REEVES, 185, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

MUSIC SENT ON SALE OR RETURN on highly advantageous terms by
B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster-row, London.

MUSIC of EVERY PUBLISHER supplied to Dealers, Teachers, and Schools. Having the largest varied Stock Europe. The terms, which are highly advantageous, sent on application
London: B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster-row.

ALL WHO POSSESS A PIANOFORTE and canot play it, may now play at once, without any previous knowledge of Music, by ROYLANCE'S NUMERICAL SYSTEM, which contains a FIGURED DIAGRAM to fit on the Keyboard of any Pianoforte (or Harmonium, and a choice selection of forty SACRED and SECULAR MELODIES, composed for the use of those who have no time to study Music. Thousands are now able to play who did not believe such a thing possible. The diagram alone will be found most useful to Professors for teaching purposes. 6d. nett.—Price 2s. 6d. nett; post free 33 stamps.—C. ROYLANCE, 184, Tottenham Court-road; and all Music Sellers.

SYDNEY SMITH'S
FOUR NEW PIANOFORTE PIECES.

LA FEE DES ONDES.	Morceau brilliant ...	4 0
LE DOMINO NOIR.	Fantaisie brillante sur l'opéra d'Auber	4 0
MARGUERITE.	Chanson d'une fileuse	4 0
STYRIENNE		4 0

SYDNEY SMITH'S
FOUR NEW PIANOFORTE DUETS.

GAVOTTE ET MUSETTE		5 0
I PIFFERARI.	Musette moderne	5 0
LOHENGRIN.	Grande Fantaisie sur l'opéra de R. Wagner	6 0
NONCHALANCE.	Caprice de Concert	5 0

LONDON:

EDWIN ASHDOWN, Hanover-square.

Printed for the Proprietor by BOWDEN, HUDSON & Co., at 23, Red Lion Street, Holborn, London, W.C.; and Published by WILLIAM REEVES, at the Office, 185, Fleet Street, E.C. West End Agents:—WEEKES & CO., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W. Subscriptions and Advertisements are received either by the Publisher or West End Agents.—Communications for the EDITOR are to be forwarded to his private address, 6, Argyle Square, W.C.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 4, 1883.—Entered at the General Post Office as a Newspaper.

Digitized by Google

The Musical Standard

A Newspaper for Musicians Professional and Amateur

No. 993. Vol. XXV. Fourth Series. SATURDAY, AUGUST 11, 1883. Weekly: Price 3d.

WOLVERHAMPTON TRIENNIAL MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

In aid of the Funds of the Wolverhampton and South Staffordshire General Hospital.

President—EARL DARTMOUTH.

THURSDAY and FRIDAY MORNINGS and EVENINGS, SEPTEMBER 13th and 14th.

MENDELSSOHN'S	.. ..	"ELIJAH."
BEETHOVEN'S	.. .. ..	"MOUNT OF OLIVES."
GOUNOD'S	.. .. ..	"MESSE SOLENNELLE."
HUMMEL'S	.. .. ..	"ALMA VIRGO."
MACFARREN'S	.. .. ..	"LADY OF THE LAKE."
MACKENZIE'S	.. .. ..	"JASON."

Miss Anna Williams. Miss Mary Davies.
Madame Patey. Miss Emilie Lloyd.
Mr. Edward Lloyd. Mr. Joseph Maas.
Signor Foli. Mr. Frederic King.

Band and Chorus of 300 Performers.

Principal Violin .. Mr. Carrodus.
Conductor .. .. Dr. Swinnerton Heap.

Detailed prospectuses, stating prices, date, and arrangements for ballot, and other information, may be had on application to the Honorary Secretaries, MESSRS. LAWRENCE & PAGE, Darlington Street, Wolverhampton.

MUSICAL INTERNATIONAL COLLEGE, LONDON.

Founded for Examining purposes only.

Principal—EDWIN M. LOTT.

PRACTICAL EXAMINATIONS in INSTRUMENTAL and VOCAL MUSIC throughout the kingdom, conducted personally by the Principal. Next LOCAL THEORETICAL EXAMINATION, DECEMBER, 1883.

For particulars, address SECRETARY, Musical International College, 270, Cornwall Road, Notting Hill, W.

LLANDAFF CATHEDRAL.—TENOR WANTED, £40 a year. Duties include Service at 5 p.m. on week-days.—Write at first, with references, to THE SUCCENTOR, Minor Canonries, Llandaff.

NEW ORGAN PIECE, by M. GUILMANT.—SPOHR'S 24th PSALM (English words), 9d. and 2s. Ditto arranged for Organ Solo by M. GUILMANT, 1s. 6d.
London: NOVELLO, EWER & CO.

MISS LOUISE ALLAN, Pupil of Sir Julius Benedict, Mr. W. S. Hoyte, and Mr. Fountain Meen, has VACANCIES for Pianoforte Pupils.—Address, by letter, care of Shelley Fisher, Esq., Trinity College, London, W.

ORGANIST WANTED, for WICK PARISH CHURCH. Salary £50. A well qualified Teacher will find this a good opening.—Apply to D. Nicolson, Montpellier House, Wick.

WANTED, LESSONS ON THE ZITHER, by a Lady.—Address, stating Terms, to X. Y. Z., No. 1, Evelyn Street, Deptford.

JUST PUBLISHED.

In Paper Wrapper, 1s. In Cloth Gilt, 2s.

Musical History and Biography.

With Especial Reference to English Music and Musicians.

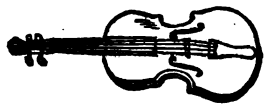
BY

FREDERIC J. CROWEST.

Author of "The Great Tone Poets," "Phases of Musical England," "A Book of Musical Anecdotes," &c., post 8vo (168 pages), including a Copious Index.

W. REEVES: 185, Fleet Street, E.C.

HOW TO PLAY CHOPIN. The Works of Frederic Chopin, and their Proper Interpretation. Three Lectures delivered at Varsovia by Jean Kleczynski. Translated by Alfred Whittingham. With several Illustrations. Post 8vo, boards, 2s. 6d.; cloth, bevelled boards, 3s. 6d.
W. REEVES: 185, Fleet Street, London, E.C.



MAKERS AND REPAIRERS.

GEORGE WITHERS & CO.

(Late of Coventry Street),

WHOLESALE IMPORTERS OF

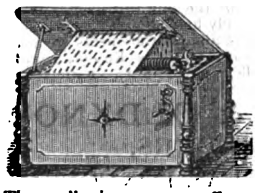
MUSICAL STRINGS,

From Rome, Padua, and Naples.

A FINE COLLECTION OF ITALIAN INSTRUMENTS.

Bows, Cases, Music Stands, &c. See Price Lists.

51, ST. MARTIN'S LANE, LONDON.



ORCHESTRIONETTES,

Ehrlich's Patent.

Are the greatest invention of modern times in the sphere of mechanical Music Works! It is only necessary to put in a note, made of fine pasteboard, in order to play a new piece. The smaller instruments suffice as accompaniment to dance music. The larger ones can be used IN PLACE OF AN ORGAN.

Preparatory knowledge not necessary; therefore the instruments can be sent to any part of the world. Large number of Notes, suitable for all countries, always on hand. Extra Notes made to order, after supplied originals, at any time. Please send orders to any dealer in musical instruments.

Commission allowed to Dealers.

FABRIK LEIPZIGER MUSIKWERKE VORM. PAUL EHRLICH & CO., ZU GOHLIS BEI LEIPZIG (GERMANY).

HELE & COMPANY,

ORGAN BUILDERS,

WYNDHAM STREET, PLYMOUTH.

London Agency: Mr. W. H. HELE, 59, Gresham St., E.C.

Organs of any magnitude contracted for. Professional attendance when desired.

Extract from testimony by E. H. Turpin, Esq., of College of Organists, referring to organ at St. John's Church, Waterloo Road, S.E.:—

"To Messrs. Hele and Co. very high praise is due for the judgment and skill with which they have accomplished the rebuilding of the instrument. All the foundation work I noticed to be round, even, and admirably voiced. The 'chorus' struck me as being well balanced and decisive, without being intrusive or too pronounced above the 8-feet work. The reeds are of very high quality, at once rich and characteristic in tone. The solo registers I found to be after their several types—delicate and finished in quality of tone and in their voicing. The mechanism throughout a trying night's work never failed me, and it is everywhere true, reliable, and admirable. My impressions were so pleasant, that I feel it is a duty to express an unqualified approval of the labours of the very able organ builders."

Just Published.

HARVEST ANTHEM, "BLESSED BE THOU, LORD GOD OF ISRAEL." In Four Voices, by E. BUNNETT, Mus.D., Cantab. Octavo, Price Threepence.
London: NOVELLO, EWER & CO.

HANDEL'S FIRST ORGAN CONCERTO, with Orchestral Accompaniment, as performed at the Handel Festival, Crystal Palace, edited, arranged, and supplemented with a Cadenza by W. T. BEST. Organ Score, 1s. 6d.; Orchestra Parts, 2s.; complete, 2s. 6d. nett.—AUGENER & CO., 86, Newgate Street, Foubert's Place, and 81, Regent Street, London.

Digitized by Google

THE VOICE

MUSICALLY AND MEDICALLY CONSIDERED.

BY

ARMAND SEMPLE, B.A., M.B., Cantab., M.R.C.P., Lond.,
Physician to the Royal Society of Musicians.

(Continued from page 56).

Ear and Tune.

A good voice is, of course, the first requisite for a vocalist, but next in importance, if not quite equal in importance, is the possession of an accurate ear for tune.

A singer endowed by nature with the most beautiful voice must fail to produce a pleasing effect if there is the slightest fault in his or her intonation; and the individual on whom natural gifts have been far less liberally bestowed may, nevertheless, always ensure considerable success by perfect intonation, i.e., by singing absolutely in tune.

No doubt many persons by nature possess a keen ear for tune; but, I believe, in many cases this faculty is acquired.

It is possible that the child of non-musical parents, or one who is not thrown in the way of hearing musical strains, who never hears its nurse sing, may show the possession of a good ear for music when later in life the opportunity of hearing music is obtained; but I am strongly of opinion that such a case is extremely rare. I believe that an ear for music is acquired in early life, I may say, in infancy, the mother or nurse of the child being always in the habit of lulling it to sleep with some popular refrain. I have heard a child of under two years of age give utterance to such tunes, as "Oh, my little darling," and "Over the garden wall,"—melodies at one time to be heard on every street organ—with perfect intonation, these being tunes which, no doubt, this child had been sung to sleep by, night after night, and day after day.

There can be no doubt that the auditory-nerve fibres in infants and young children are acutely sensitive to impressions, and that they become readily attuned to sweet sounds, and cannot do otherwise than keenly appreciate any deviation from a correct interval.

I have seen instances, over and over again, in different families, of the keen perception of tune and the reverse.

In one family, the father and mother being both fond of music, there were several children, every one of whom could hum a tune perfectly. In another, both parents being unmusical, not one of the children had the slightest idea of tune, and in fact their efforts were positively unpleasant to a musical ear; and in another, where the children had been played to and sung to by both parents from the time they were born, every individual member picked up a tune with remarkable facility. I have also known instances where individuals have positively been unable to recognise the difference between the melodies, "God save the Queen" and "Rule Britannia," and one gentleman, of very brilliant attainments, was so disagreeably affected by music in any shape or form, that he told me he was obliged to leave the room when any was about to be performed. I am perfectly certain that the above-mentioned cases were those of non-acquirement, and had these persons as children, been brought up in an atmosphere of music, they would, in all probability, have had quite as much appreciation of the beautiful art as others placed under more favourable circumstances.

Change of Voice, or Transition Period.

In the Female the voice undergoes no marked change at any time, with the exception that it loses the acute sounds possessed by many in very early youth; the quality, however, remains the same, and as the vocal organ becomes firmer and stronger, so proportionately do the sounds increase in fulness and power.

In the Male, on the contrary, the vocal organ is subject to very remarkable alterations during its passage from boyhood to manhood. This change usually takes place at some period between thirteen and fifteen years of age. It is, however, in some cases, considerably protracted. The acute, or high sound of the voice, at first becomes weak, since the muscles are relaxed; and a certain amount of hoarseness is observed, which somewhat resembles an ordinary cold, the sound frequently going off with a kind of squeak at the end of a sentence. During this period of change, the entire vocal organ by degrees becoming enlarged and descending in the throat, there is a complete inability of fixing the voice, even during the act of speaking.

When the vocal organ is thus relaxed, it should never be much exercised, for, although it is true that, in some instances, in consequence of the strength of the muscles, it is tolerably evident what quality the voice will ultimately assume, still it is usually a matter of difficulty to determine its character until it has finally settled. Whatever may be the quality of the voice, in the majority of cases it becomes firm at first in the lower sounds. In the Tenore Leggiero the organ descends but little in the throat, and as its muscular construction is slight, it is possible to recognise its character during the period of change, which is rarely very marked.

During this transition period, it is advisable, if the voice is exercised at all, to treat it with the utmost care, and sedulously avoid the use of the extreme sounds, especially the high ones, for any straining at this time may occasion mischief which is irretrievable. It is judicious to turn the attention more to an acquirement of the theoretical principles of the art than to abuse a highly precarious gift by premature exhibition.

Many teachers are opposed to the voice being used at all during the transition period, and will not even allow young girls to sing, as they consider this proceeding is calculated to spoil the voice in after years; but so long as the voice is carefully guarded against any strain, and the middle portion is almost exclusively used, every piece of music being transposed so that the highest note shall be easily within the compass of the individual, it is fair to anticipate that the muscles will acquire power and the voice firmness. No reasonable person would oppose a child running about, or taking a fair amount of exercise, for by so doing the muscles occupied in locomotion are improved in firmness and strength, and may not the same argument apply to the muscles of the throat and the larynx.

(To be continued).

PROMISING PRIZE PUPILS OF THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The report of the interesting ceremony last week may be fitly supplemented by a cursory notice of some of the promising pupils in the Royal Academy of Music. Miss Thudicum is already known as a singer on the concert platform; she has a fine soprano voice, but appears to be too self-conscious, or as the Germans would say, subjective, a fault to be rectified. Miss M. Burton, who received a bronze medal for singing, has an organ of much power and sweetness, with distinct articulation. Miss Alexandra Ehrenberg distinguished herself for declamatory English vocalization, and received the "Llewelyn Thomas" gold medal accordingly. Miss Frances Powell stands in the first division of "commenced" singers; she has a splendid soprano voice, of extensive compass, and is likely to succeed in her own chosen department of the art, to wit, operatic concerts and oratorios. Miss Powell is much esteemed by the Principal of the Academy, and by her own particular professor. Miss Eleanor Rees, silver medallist, has a rich sympathetic contralto.

As regards pianists, Miss Dora Bright, a silver medalist, is a fine executant, and plays with confidence. At the June concert she was entrusted with the andante and the rondo vivace of Chopin's Concerto in E minor, Op. 11.

Amongst the gentlemen pupils may be named Mr. Musgrave Tufnail, who won the "Carl Rosa" gold medal for the singing of selected pieces; he also carried off the Evill Prize, a purse of ten guineas for good declamatory English singing. Mr. Tufnail sang Mozart's fine air from "Figaro," "Vedro', mentr' io sospiro," at the June concert. Mr. William Lucas won a silver medal for singing. The "Heathcote Long" prize, a purse of ten guineas, for selected pianoforte pieces, was worthily won by Mr. G. W. P. Crowther, who has great sensibility. Alexander Christian and Jesse W. Buckland also deserve honourable mention. Vix tenent lacrymas, quia nil lacrymabile cernunt.

Digitized by Google

Musical Intelligence.

THE WELSH NATIONAL EISTEDDFOD.

(From the "Daily Telegraph.")

CARDIFF, Monday.

The energetic and flourishing town in which I write has put on its bravest apparel to honour the National Eisteddfod of Wales. Even the most benighted dweller in Saxon Britain must know that while every year many places in the principality get up Eisteddfods on their own account, one is chosen for the national celebration, the rule being to favour the north and south alternately. It has now come to the turn of the south, and of Cardiff, which shows, I am bound to say, a very thorough appreciation of its good fortune. At the present moment it seems bent upon suggesting to thoughtful minds the question whether the National Eisteddfod, when visiting the south, could find such a welcome and such good quarters anywhere else. The local Eisteddfod committee, as worthily representing a wealthy town, has devoted an unusually large amount to the encouragement of excellence in various branches of literature, science, and art. Some of the prizes are valuable enough to bring the best talent into the lists: thus, £100 is offered for the best essay on the history of Welsh literature during a certain period; a like sum for the best choral singing; £50 for the best musical setting of a dramatic poem, and so on. As for the subjects in which competition is stimulated by smaller though still desirable amounts, their name is legion. They do not, however, comprise the homely and common-place themes that on former occasions have excited sarcasm. It has been too much the fashion at Eisteddfod meetings to judge according to conditions dictated rather by regard for the competitors than for absolute merit. Hence a contentment of mediocrity with itself, and an absence of striving after a superior condition, the existence and necessity of which are kept out of evidence. The Cardiff committee have taken pains to avoid this mistake. Not only do observers find the character of the competitions raised, but they note the engagement of adjudicators who are not likely to forget, in consideration for the candidates, what is due to the literature, science and art they represent. In respect of music, always prominent at an Eisteddfod, even more has been done by the engagement of a first-class London orchestra, nearly sixty strong, and the making of programmes that are most instructive. An orchestra of some kind is no novelty on occasions like the present, but I believe that such a body of instrumentalists as that brought down here is without precedent in Eisteddfod history. Unique also will be the performance during the week of works like Spohr's "Power of Sound," Schubert's symphony in B minor, Mendelssohn's concerto in G minor, the overtures to "Leonora," "Der Freyschütz," "Die Zauberflöte," and other compositions of a similar class. It is by thus setting before a local public the highest examples of universal art that the existence of shortcomings is demonstrated, and wholesome dissatisfaction with actual attainments encouraged. On the whole the Cardiff Eisteddfod bids fair to prove most valuable as a stimulus to Welsh culture. Its general tendency is less national, and therefore less narrow, than of many gatherings in the past. The Eisteddfod opened this morning with the ceremonies that never vary and have often been described. The Marquis of Bute, president of the day, was escorted from the Castle to the "Pavilion," a huge engine shed not yet occupied by the railway company, the Mayor and Corporation in full municipal state taking part in the pageant. An immense crowd watched this public display, to which all the resources of the town contributed, including even the Fire Brigade. The ancient and significant ceremonies of the gorsedd followed, presided over by the venerable chief bard, Clwydfardd, whose fourscore years and four sit lightly upon him; and then an adjournment to the pavilion was made, for the purpose of carrying out the programme of competitions and adjudications. Lord Bute's reception by an audience numbering some 5000 or 6000 persons was enthusiastic. Hearty, likewise, was the greeting bestowed upon Lady Bute by the Mayor of Cardiff, the venerable Archdeacon of Llandaff, and the many Welsh notables who presently filled the platform. The National Anthem having been played by Mr. E. H. Turpin upon the organ specially erected by Messrs. Brindley and Foster, Lord Bute delivered an address which showed very considerable and painstaking research into the past of the Welsh nation. His speech would perhaps have better suited the Cymmrodorion Society now in session here, but it was heard with laudable attention by the noble president's very miscellaneous audience, and obtained, as it deserved, frequent applause. The judications then proceeded, those in literature, science, painting, &c., having been, of course, determined beforehand; but the musical competitions, as far as they entailed performance, went on then and there, some in separate rooms, others on the great platform, the judges being Sir G. A. Macfarren, Messrs. Barnby, Bennett, Evans, Jenkins, Brinley Richards, Turpin, and John Thomas. They comprised an orchestral performance of the overture to "Masaniello," for which bands entered from Cardiff, Merthyr, and Treherbert. This was most interesting, as demonstrative of the attention paid to instrumental music in its highest and most complicated form. It was also gratifying as proving that attention to be neither slight or fruitless. The Cardiff string band, to which Sir G. A. Macfarren awarded the first prize, played really well, while much credit, in addition to the second prize, was earned by the amateurs from Merthyr. In other competitions, in the singing of "Quando Corpus," in playing pianoforte solos, which brought to the front a clever Newport lad, named Try, and in the singing of an anthem by church or chapel choirs, the result was not quite satisfactory. Prizes for sight-singing, offered by Mr. S. Aitken, chairman of the Musical Committee, were not contested, the choirs entered failing to make an appearance, much to general disappointment. Altogether the music of the morning sitting was not remarkable. Apart from the playing of the two prize bands it lacked the superior merit which confers distinction by marking its purposes out from the common run.

The evening sitting was presided over by Sir E. J. Reed, M.P. for Cardiff, and had music for its chief attraction, there being competitions for brass bands, solo violinists, organists, pianists, harmonium players, string quartets, &c., in addition to which performances were given by Signor Foli, Mr. Brinley Richards, Mr. John Thomas, Mr. Turpin, Mr. Ap Herbert, and the local Blue Ribbon choir, whose ladies wore Welsh costume.

CARDIFF, Tuesday.

In my letter of yesterday I said that the musical adjudicators engaged here were not men likely to be influenced by mere sentiment in coming to conclusions. Their decisions have again and again proved that I was right. Some prizes have been withheld altogether, others have been reduced in value, while in certain cases the second prize has become the first, and the advertised first has disappeared. Possibly one result is soreness of spirit here and there, but I feel sure that public common sense approves a course which, if in itself disagreeable, tends to bear good fruit by and by. Let it be declared again, as a fact beyond dispute, the lenient judgment in past times is answerable for much mischief. Unfriendly critics of the Eisteddfod sometimes assert that the institution has really done very little of a noticeable character. I should answer that often the best work is not noticeable, but the fact remains, and a habit of praising everything and everybody has tended to restrain the spirit of progress by inspiring content with present achievement. The Eisteddfod now in session may be said to mark a new departure; its discipline many will find to be not joyous but grievous; but all this is worth undergoing for the sake of the conviction that there is not only a higher good unattained but that the good in question is demanded by the standard applicable to Eisteddfod exercises.

To-day's weather was much more favourable than that of yesterday. Nevertheless, the attendance at the morning session, which was mainly devoted to adjudications and competitions, fell short of the expected number. This, however, is not unusual at Eisteddfodau on the second day. The public reserve themselves for the session whereat the winner of the choir prize is inducted into his distinguished place with the ancient form and ceremony. In the present case they held back also for the admirable concert of this evening, which promised a first-class London orchestra, and such excellent vocalists as Miss Annie Marriott, Mr. Barton McGuckin, and Signor Foli. But if the immense engine shed, capable of receiving 20,000 people, was not crowded, a large and greatly distinguished audience assembled, watching the proceedings hour after hour with unflagging patience. The chairman of the day, Lord Aberdare, having been duly installed, and his address delivered, business went rapidly and smoothly on. The literary adjudications were many, and their subjects various, ranging from the libretto of a pantomime up to the condition and prospects of King Cole. The interest of the morning sitting chiefly gathered, as usual, round the musical competitions, some of which were necessarily conducted in private, only the results being made known and the winners heard in public. Some very satisfactory work was done. For example, an instrumental solo competition, choice of instrument open, showed a good average of merit, the first prize being taken by a clever Swansea boy named Griffiths (flute), and the second by an excellent, though self-taught trombonist (Mr. Foxwell), of Newport. A madrigal and part-song competition also showed valuable results, as did in special measure a competition amongst male voice choirs. The winners of the first prize in the last-named case were a party of sixteen colliers from Rhondda Valley. Anything more admirable than the singing of these underground workers I do not expect to hear in London. Power and delivery, precision and artistic freedom were conspicuous to a degree which filled strangers with amazement. That the decision of the judges in favour of the Rhondda men was endorsed by a delighted audience goes without saying—let the so-called musical countries show anything better among their miners and I will admit their supremacy without further cavil. Time and space fail me to tell of other excellent work such as was done in vocal duet competitions, in a choral competition which brought bodies of singers, all working men and women, from Abergavenny, Dowlais, Merthyr, Neath, and Tregedar. Merit varied, of course, but was never entirely absent, and ever deserved the praise due to a good attained in despite of untoward circumstances. All things considered, it created astonishment and a profound belief that a country able to show such results in the "green tree" of actual conditions will take a brilliant place in the good time coming.

Digitized by Google

This evening was devoted to an orchestral concert, in which a band of sixty London players made a first appearance here, conducted—and well conducted, too—by Mr. E. H. Turpin. The connection of such an orchestra with the Eisteddfod is an event calling for hearty congratulation, and reflects the utmost credit upon the Cardiff committee, who are showing themselves worthy to represent a university town. These eminent London performers—among whom are Messrs. Pollitzer, Lazarus, Barret, Reynolds, and many others equally well known—come down not only to delight unaccustomed ears, but to show what excellence is, and thus to stimulate effort by setting up a more exalted standard. Their playing this evening was a grand lesson, worth all the sacrifice entailed. It opened the eyes of many to see that which theretofore had been unimagined, and made a distinct step towards the highest good. The works performed included Beethoven's C minor Symphony and "Leonora" overture; Handel's first organ concerto, solo by Mr. Scott, a local professor of high attainment both in an executive and artistic sense; the overtures to "Der Freyschütz" and "Semiramide;" Mendelssohn's scena, "Infelice," sung most admirably by Miss Annie Marriott; a harp solo by Mr. John Thomas, who again demonstrated his dexterous skill; and songs in which Mr. Barton McGuckin and Signor Foli brought down the house. Altogether the first classical concert was a brilliant success, auguring well for those to follow.

BISHOP'S STORTFORD.

The annual festival usually held at the end of the Midsummer term of the High School took place on Tuesday, the 31st ultimo. At 2.30 p.m. a full choral and orchestral service was held in the fine old parish church, when the combined choirs of the church and the school were reinforced with members of St. Paul's Cathedral, the Temple, and St. James's Chapel Royal, London, and of St. George's Chapel Royal, Windsor. The principal musical items were Dr. Stainer's Service in B flat, Mendelssohn's 115th Psalm, "Non Nobis Domine" as the anthem, and Handel's "Hallelujah Chorus." The solo portions of the works were taken by two of the Temple choristers, and by Messrs. Kenningham and Kempton, of St. Paul's Cathedral. A select orchestra accompanied, which included the well known names of Val. Nicholson, Doyle, Ould, Woolhouse, Harper, Lazarus, Barrett, Horton, Hutchings, Anderson, Matt, and many others with Mr. Warwick Jordan at the organ. In the evening a concert was given in the Gospel Hall, at which the same artists, both vocal and instrumental, performed, with Mrs. Scales, Miss Baldock, and Mr. Frost as additional solo vocalists. A highly interesting and well diversified programme was thoroughly well rendered, including notably amongst the orchestral numbers, Schubert's unfinished symphony in B minor, and amongst the vocal solos "From mighty Kings," "Deeper and deeper still," and "Waft her, angels." Beethoven's "Hallelujah Chorus," which concluded the first part, and Faning's "The Vikings" at the end of the second part, deserve also especial notice. Mr. Lewis Marcus, the organist of the parish church, conducted both the service and the concert, and he is to be congratulated on the fact that the performances which he had been at the pains of producing are rarely excelled in any provincial town.

CORK.

(From our own Correspondent.)

On the 26th ult., the members of the Cork Orchestral Union gave a grand concert in the great hall of the Exhibition, when they performed the following programme:—

Overture, "Le Puito d'amour"	Balfe.
Ballet Music, "La Reine de Saba"	Gounod.
Allegro Moderato, Concerto in E minor	Prout.
Andante for organ and orchestra	Prout.
Marche, "Firenze"	Atkins.
Concert Overture, "Queen Marie Stuart's hunt"	Zoeller
Fantasia de Concert, "Souvenir d' Irlande"	Bonicoli.
Tonbild, "Die Turkish Scharwache"	Michaelis.
Overture, "La Gazza Ladra"	Rossini.

The programme was lengthened by songs of Sir R. P. Stewart, C. Dick, B. Tours, etc., sung by Mr. W. Ellis, Miss Colthurst, and Mr. Longfield.

Herr Swertz presided at the organ, and played the concerto remarkably well, and Mr. Ringrose Atkins conducted as usual. The only fault to be found was that the andante of Prout's concerto was taken much too slow.

On Friday evening the 27th ult., Mr. G. F. Moran gave a piano recital in the Exhibition hall. The programme, which is too long for entire quotation, was very well received, Mr. Moran showing great power as a pianist. The following were the principal items played by him.

"Ruy Blas," Overture	Mendelssohn.
Allemagne, Valse	Rubinstein.
Valse, Op. 34, No. 1	Chopin.
La Bella Capricciosa	Hummel.
Andante from Sonata, Op. 110	Beethoven.
"Tannhauser," March	Wagner-Lisrt.

He also gave an organ recital on the 28th ult., showing as an organist even to greater advantage than as a pianist.

Rigoletto (Verdi) was produced on the 30th ult., at the Opera House, in Italian. The principal characters were well sustained by Mdlle. de Laporte, Mdlle. Mosiana, Signor Bellatti, and Signor Arturo Salvini.

Verdi's "Trovatore," (Tuesday), and Bellini's "Somnambula" (Wednesday), have been also produced by this company.

F. St. John Lacy.

LEEDS ORGAN SCHOOL AND ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The half-yearly students' concert and award of certificates of honour took place on Saturday afternoon at the Institution in Great George Street, in the presence of numerous friends. The programme was an unusually good and interesting one. Most of the pieces embraced in it were difficult works by the great masters, and their performance might not have been satisfactorily accomplished by the students; but it must be allowed that they were one and all given in a creditable manner, and with appropriate taste and expression. Special mention may be made of Miss Greenwood's organ playing, Mr. Arthur Elvey's performance of Bach's great organ Fugue in G minor and Weber's fine "Concert-Stuck" for the pianoforte. Towards the end of the programme the Rev. J. Bewley, M.A., of St. Martin's Church (chairman), proceeded to distribute the awards.—Yorkshire Post.

Digitized by Google

PROMENADE CONCERTS, COVENT GARDEN.

A season of Promenade Concerts, under the direction of Mr. A. G. Crowe, appears to be an established annual institution—proving the successful manner of conducting former series, and inspiring confidence in the management of the one which commenced on Saturday evening last. The orchestra comprises most of the eminent performers who have been marshalled under Mr. Crowe's baton before, with Mr. J. T. Carrodus at the head of the strings. On Wednesday evening there was a crowded house, attracted by the first classical programme of the season. The orchestral numbers of the first part were : Overture, "Der Freischütz" (Weber) ; Ballet music, "Faust" (Gounod) ; Danse des Sylphes, "Faust" (Berlioz) ; and "The Italian Symphony" (Mendelssohn). Mr. J. T. Carrodus gave an excellent performance of Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto, which met with warm appreciation. The interest which the audience manifested in the performance of these works was evidence of the development of a wide appreciation of the higher class of musical art, and which, it is to be hoped, will tend to an increase of the classical element in the programmes of the Promenade Concerts. The vocal numbers in this part of the programme were Beethoven's "Creation's Hymn," well sung by Madame Fassett ; a scena from Gounod's "La Reine de Saba," for which Mr. Joseph Maas received a determined encore, which, however, he wisely and firmly declined ; and Handel's charming aria, "Lascia ch'io pianga," from "Rinaldo," contributed by Miss Mary Lemmens. The second part comprised, Overture, "Maritana" (Wallace) ; new Waltz, by A. G. Crowe ; Polka, "Grelots' (Villac) ; Operatic Selections, "L'Italiana in Algieri," and "Lucia di Lammermoor," and Berlioz's "Hungarian March." Madame Fassett sang "Jock o' Hazeldean" ; Mr. Maas gave Balfe's "Come into the garden" ; and Miss Lemmens, "Away to the mountain's brow," by Lee.

Foreign Musical Intelligence.

The death of Dimitri Glinka, brother of the Russian composer, is announced from Lisbon.

An international meeting of bands and choirs will be held in Amsterdam next month.

Cagnoni, the composer of "Don Bucefalo," is writing an opera on the story of "King Lear."

Le Ménéstrel has an appreciative article on "Parsifal," from the pen of Victor Wilder.

The distribution of prizes at the Paris Conservatoire took place on August 4th.

It is stated that several architects have gone to Bayreuth to ascertain if it be possible to transport to Monaco the theatre constructed by Wagner for himself.

The Gazetta Musicale di Milano says that not Berlin, but Vienna, will have the first representation of the new operetta of G. Strauss, "Le Notti Veneziani."

Formerly the direction of the Court Theatre in Sweden was the exclusive right of the Swedish nobility. Breaking through tradition, King Oscar has this year entrusted the management to Anders Willman, an esteemed artist of the opera at Stockholm.

All the French newspapers, in noticing the memorial stone in honour of Rameau in the church of St. Eustache, Paris, have suggested that Rameau was organist there. This is incorrect ; Rameau was only buried in the Church of St. Eustache, Sept. 13th, 1764.

The subscriptions opened in France for a monument to Berlioz have already reacheda large sum, sufficient to ensure the completion of the work. So much cannot be said of the monument to Félicien David, which remains incomplete for want of funds.

Petrella's "Ione" has been revived, after the lapse of several years, at the Teatro del Principe Alfonso, Madrid. This opera, a great favourite in Italy, was produced in Madrid in 1863. It became the rage and was performed over fifty times.

It is announced that Franz Liszt has been presented by Messrs. Mason and Hamlin, of Boston, U.S., with a fine chamber organ, which is said to be worth 6,000 dollars. Liszt has transferred the present, according to his usual practice, to the music-school at Weimar.

Professor Dr. Hermann Zopff, a composer of talent, and for some time editor of a leading German musical journal, and one of the most eminent musical theorists in Germany, died at Leipzig on the 12th ult. Besides numerous instrumental and vocal works, he composed several operas.

The following is a list of the chief provincial Conservatoires of France, with the dates of foundation attached : Aix, 1850 ; Angers, 1857 ; Besançon, 1861 ; Bordeaux, 1852 ; Boulogne, 1829 ; Caen, 1835 ; Cambrai, 1821 ; Douai, 1799 ; Dunkirk, 1863 ; Lille, 1801 ; Marseilles, 1820 ; Nantes, 1844 ; Nimes, 1864 ; Toulon, 1866 ; Toulouse, 1830 ; Valenciennes, 1836.

Massenet's new opera, "Manon Lescaut," it is reported, is to be put into rehearsal at the Opéra Comique, Paris, next October, and it is hoped that it will be produced about the end of the year. The principal part is to be "created" by Mdme. Heilbronn. It will not be overlooked that Auber has written an opera on the same subject to a libretto by Scribe.

In the course of the season just ended at the Royal Opera House of Vienna, 303 performances took place, comprising a répertoire of 78 different works. Of these 42 evenings were devoted to Meyerbeer, 41 to Wagner, 31 to Verdi, 23 to Mozart, 21 to Gounod, 16 to Donizetti, 15 to Adam, 14 to Boïto, 10 to Gluck, and 9 only to Weber. Beethoven, with "Fidelio," 2.

The Italian season in St. Petersburg commences on the 1st of October, and terminates on the 2nd of March, 1884. The band will number ninety performers ; the chorus, ninety voices. The ballet-master is M. Petipa ; the conductors, Bevignani and R. Driga. The novelties will include Anton Rubinstein's "Nerone" (first time in Italian) ; "Richard III.," grand opera in four acts, book by M. E. Blavet, music by G. Salvayre (first performance) ; "I Lituani," four-act opera by Ponchielli ; "Philémon et Baucis," three-act opera by Gounod (first time in Italian) ; and "La Moglie Rapita," three-act buffo opera by R. Drigo (first performance). The general repertory includes : "Mefistofele," "Carmen," "La Gioconda," "Lohengrin," "Les Huguenots," "Robert le Diable," "L'Africaine," "L'Etoile du Nord," "Guillaume Tell," "La Muette de Portici," "Faust," "Mignon," "Zampa," "Fra Diavolo," "Aïda," "Rigoletto," "La Traviata," "Don Giovanni," "La Favorita," "Norma," "La Juive."

ORPHAN SCHOOL FOR DAUGHTERS OF MUSICIANS.

Miss Helen Kenway, who with the assistance of friends has during the last five years educated a few fatherless girls in Bath, is now making arrangements to take a house in London, and hopes to open the Orphan School in September. The school is intended to provide—1. Free board and education for orphan and indigent daughters of musicians. 2. Board and education at a moderate cost for daughters of musicians, or girls with musical abilities whose means are limited.

The pupils will receive a good general education, with special opportunities for the study of music in preparation for the Royal Academy or Royal College, together with some training and practice in the art of teaching. Orphans without musical ability will be trained for some other profession or business. All fees payable in advance, and to be devoted to the benefit of the charity. Accounts subjected to a public auditor, and the school examined annually. Some subscriptions to meet the increased expenses of furnishing, etc., have been received, also several small gifts of furniture, but further donations of money, furniture, standard books, or music, are earnestly solicited. Five orphans are waiting for admission, and three others have been under Miss Kenway's care in Bath.

Until Aug. 15th, the address will still be—Miss Helen Kenway, South Hill House, Bath. After Aug. 15th, the address will be 10, Darnley Road, Royal Crescent, Notting Hill, W.

Digitized by Google

Organ News.

HALSTEAD, ESSEX.

An organ recital was given at the Parish Church on Thursday, August 2nd, by Mr. Thomas Adams, A.C.O., the organist of the Church. The following was the programme :—

Prelude and Fugue in B minor	Bach.
Andante in D	Robinson.
Holsworthy Church Bells	Wesley.
Prelude and Fugue in G	Mendelssohn.
March Romaine	Gounod.
Organ Sonata, No. 2	Mendelssohn.
Festival March	Pinney.

FISHERIES EXHIBITION.

Mr. James Loaring, F.C.O., gave recitals every day last week on Messrs. Henry Jones and Son's organ, the programmes being selected each day respectively from the works of Handel, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Mendelssohn and Bach.

Mr. Loaring's programme, on the 30th ult., included :—

Overture, "La Clemenza di Tito"	Mozart.
Lieder ohne Worte (a) The first Violet (b) The Garland	Mendelssohn.
Chorus, "Immortal Lord" ("Deborah")	Handel.
Prelude and Fugue in D minor	Bach.
The "Midnight March"	Williams.

STOKE DAMEREL.

An organ recital was given by Mr. John Hele, Mus.Bac., in the Parish Church, on Friday, July 27th. The following was the programme :—

Overture, "Occasional"	Handel.
Air	Lachner.
Installation Ode	Bennett.
Air, "With verdure clad"	Haydn.
Duet, "Quis est homo"	Rossini.
Finale from 3rd Symphony	Mendelssohn.

And on Friday, August 3rd :—

Marche Religieuse	Gounod.
Movement from an "Ode"	Bennett.
Air, "There is a green hill"	Gounod.
Benediction Nuptiale	Saint Saëns.
Chorus, "Disdainful of danger" ("Judas Maccabeus")	Handel.
Air, "But the Lord is mindful" ("St. Paul")	Mendelssohn.
"Silver Trumpets"	Viviani.

LEEDS.

An organ recital was given on Wednesday, August 1st, by Alfred Benton, Esq., on the new organ in St. Martin's Church. The following was the programme :—

4th Concerto (major) (Allegro Moderato—Andante—Adagio—Allegro—Fuga).	Handel.
Allegretto and Grand Chœur	Salomé
Andante from the 5th Quintet	Mozart.
Fugue in G Major	Krebs.
"Marche Funèbre et Chant Séraphique"	Guilmant.
March in E flat major	"

CORK INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION.

The following are the programmes of the organ recitals given in the main hall of the Exhibition on July 28th, by Mr. G. F. Moran :—

Prelude and Fugue in E	Bach.
"See the proud chief ("Deborah")	Handel.
Two Andantes (No. 1 in G ..... No. 2 in E minor)	Batiste.
Sonata in B flat	Mendelssohn.
"Pater in manus Tuas" (last seven words)	Haydn.
Grand Offertoire in G	Wely.
Andante (Quartet in F)	Haydn.
"Hallelujah," Chorus ("Messiah")	Handel.
War March of the Priests ("Athalie")	Mendelsschn.

And on July 30th by Signor Cellini :—

Grand March in D	Cellini.
Overture "Nabuco"	Verdi.
"La Passione"	Coop.
Selection, "Aida"	Verdi.
Melodie in C minor	Croisez.
Potpourri, "Sapho"	Paccini.
Fugato e Finale	Cellini.

And on July 31st, by Mr. H. Daly :—

Marche Romaine	Gounod.
Grand Offertoire in G	Wely.
Adagio, Op. 47	Spohr.
Gloria, 12th Mass	Mozart.
Fantasia, Op. 40	Tutz.
Offertoire in C minor	Batiste.
Festival March	Best.
"Hallelujah" Chorus ("Messiah")	Handel.

NORTH BERWICK.

An organ recital was given on Monday July 30th, at St. Baldred's Church, by Mr. T. S. Guyer. The following was the programme :—

Overture, "Messiah"	Handel.
Larghetto, 2nd Symphony	Beethoven.
Sonata, No. 1 (Allegro—Adagio—Andante—Allegro).	Mendelssohn.
Air, "Holy, Holy"	Handel.
Andante con moto	Haydn.
Fugue in G minor	Bach.
Andante in G	Smart.
Chorus, "from the Censer" ("Solomon")	Handel.

YARMOUTH.

An organ recital was given at the Parish Church, on Tuesday evening, by Mr. H. Stonex. The following was the programme :—

Andante in A (Posthumous work, No. 1)	Smart.
Offertoire in A flat	Batiste.
Ave Maria in F ("16th Century")	Arcadelt.
Offertoire in F, No. 2	Wely.
Barcarolle in F, 4th Concerto	Bennett.
Cantilene Pastorale in B minor	Guilmant.
Meditations in B flat	Clark.
Concertstück for the organ	Spark.

BAMBURGH.

The organ in the fine old Church of St. Ardan, Bamburgh, Northumberland, has recently been moved from the west end to the Chancel. Special services in connection with the re-opening of the instrument took place on the 24th, Mr. J. Collinson, Mus.Bac., organist of St. Mary's Cathedral, Edinburgh, presiding at the key-board. The services, which were of the usual festal nature, included the anthem, "O how amiable" (Richardson), and Dean Alford's fine processional hymn, "'Forward' be our watchword," with its stirring tune by H. Gadsby. Mr. Collinson gave two organ recitals, the playing of this gentleman giving the greatest pleasure to the crowded congregation and fully sustaining the reputation he has earned during the time he has officiated as organist of St. Mary's Cathedral, Edinburgh, where, as perhaps some of our readers are aware, Mr. Collinson presides at a very fine four-manual organ by Henry Willis.

The work of removing the organ was entrusted to Messrs. Harrison, of Durham, who have re-constructed and re-modelled the instrument, which consists of 2 manuals with pedal organ, about 15 sounding stops, with the usual couplers, composition pedals, &c.

AN ORGAN PERFORMANCE ON BANK HOLIDAY.

On Monday, the Bank Holiday, Mr. Edwin Bending held two recitals on the great organ of the Royal Albert Hall, at noon, and again at four o'clock. The British public, alas! attended in very weak force, numerically speaking, for only the arena or floor of the hall was occupied; the reporter, who sat in the amphitheatre, was quite alone in his glory. Mr. Bending had been engaged to play pieces suited to the popular taste. He chose Guilmant's "Marche Funèbre et Chant Séraphique," a dance air by Czibolka, a "Fantasia Pastorale" of Wély, the overture to "Semiramide," and an (extempore) "Marche Militaire." In a set of ingenious pot-pourri, Mr. Bending introduced a snatch of "Rule Britannia," "Auld Robin Gray," and "God bless the Prince of Wales," with imitations of Church bells in octaves, and the note of the cuckoo (a major third). A selection from Mendelssohn's works was omitted, but the beautiful minuet from Sir W. Sterndale Bennett's Symphony in G minor (first heard as a separate piece at the Cambridge Institution in 1862) must have charmed every sensitive auditor. Mr. Bending made good use of his soft stops, but the solo organ utterly failed to produce the proper effect in Rossini's grand overture. A professor once spoke of the organ as all "soot and snow," in this case it is all daub and smear; the rapid scale passages for the violins were quite lost, and the upward rush of the octave passage at the coda sounded like a "caution." Mr. Bending ascribes the failure, mainly if not entirely, to the acoustical faults of the Albert Hall, and of course no one would blame this esteemed organist. It may be suspected, however, that even modern "solo" organs are inadequate to the due expression of delicate orchestral passages. The organ is fitted to sustain sound, not to execute runs with nice accentation and point. The recital lasted only an hour, yet the "British public" held a "processional march" in and out of the arena nearly the whole time.

Digitized by Google

WINDSOR CASTLE.

The following is the specification of the organ just completed by Messrs. Gray and Davison in St. George's Chapel. The cases and most of the pipes of the old organ, which were mostly Gray and Davison's make, are incorporated in this instrument.

GREAT ORGAN.

1. Double Open Diap.	16 ft.	8. Twelfth	2⅔ ft.
2. Large Open Diap.	8 „	9. Fifteenth	2 „
3. Open Diapason	8 „	10. Sesquialtera (3 ranks)
4. Stopped Diapason	8 „	11. Mixture (2 ranks)
5. Clarabella	8 „	12. Posaune	8 „
6. Principal	4 „	13. Clarion	4 „
7. Harmonic Flute	4 „

SWELL ORGAN.

15. Leiblich Bourdon	16 ft.	23. Mixture (3 ranks)
16. Open Diapason	8 „	24. Contra Fagotto	16 ft.
17. Stopped Diapason	8 „	25. Cornopean	8 „
18. Dulciana	8 „	26. Oboe	8 „
19. Voix Celestes	8 „	27. Vox Humana	8 „
20. Principal	4 „	28. Clarion	4 „
21. Octave Dulciana	4 „	29. Tremulant
22. Fifteenth	2 „

CHOIR ORGAN.

31. Dulciana	8 ft.	35. Flute	4 ft.
32. Kexaulophon	8 „	36. Piccolo	2 „
33. Stopped Diapason	8 „	37. Corno di Bassetto	8 „
34. Principal	4 „

SOLO ORGAN.

39. Harmonic Flute	8 ft.	41. Tromba	8 ft.
40. Orchestral Oboe	8 „

PEDAL ORGAN.

43. Open Diapason	16 ft.	46. Violoncello	8 ft.
44. Violone	16 „	47. Trombone	16 „
45. Bourdon	16 „

COUPLERS.

49. Solo to Great.	52. Swell to Pedal.
50. Swell to Great.	53. Great to Pedal.
51. Solo to Pedal.	54. Choir to Pedal.

Four Manuals CC to A, 58 Notes.
Pedals CCC to F, 30 Notes.
Four Composition Pedals, to Great and Pedal.
Three „ „ to Swell,
One „ „ to Great to Pedal.
One „ „ to Pedal Organ.

Pneumatic action to great organ and its couplers, stops drawing at an angle, keys overhanging and near each other, pedals concave, not radiating; keys, &c., at south end, enabling organist to see toward either choir or nave; wind reservoirs near the sound boards, swell pedal on new system, so as to remain wherever left by the organist's foot; draw stop knobs of solid ivory, stool made so that the seat may be raised or lowered, swell shutters facing both south and west.

[A somewhat serious and obvious defect in this otherwise excellent scheme is the want of 32-feet pipes in the Pedal organ, such tone being necessary in all important instruments having 16-feet stops on the manuals.—ED. M.S.]

BEAUTY IN MUSIC.

Writing upon the philosophy of music a "Scottish Graduate" says in the St. Cecilia Magazine:—

Some philosophers have accounted for art by declaring that the nature of beauty is simply the beauty of nature; for this is tantamount to saying that art only imitates nature. This was Aristotle's doctrine. He says (Phys. II. 8):—"Art is wholly concerned with supplementing nature when it is found wanting, and with imitating it." By the art which is supplementary of nature's deficiency, he understands industrial art. Fine art, according to him, is imitative. Now, painting may imitate the varied hues of nature in colour, sculpture may imitate the pose and gesture of nature in effigy; but can it be said that music imitates the sounds of nature or the harmonies of nature, further than for those adventitious effects which have been already considered? It is only by a metaphor that the breeze is said to be musical, the running brook melodious, the plash of breaking waves rhythmical. Goethe's saying, that beauty is a manifestation of hidden laws of nature, which, but for this phenomenon, would have been for ever hidden from us, is an excellent observation as regards natural beauty; but, if applied to art, all it can mean is that æsthetic beauty cannot be explained by any reference to the laws of nature. There is nothing like a tune in nature; it has no harmonies. Whatever the other arts may be, music at least, is not imitative of nature, but creative of beauty, not,—if the reader will pardon the pedantry of a neologism—physicomimetic, but callopoetic. Aristotle, indeed, when face to face with what under a solely imitative theory is a paradox, i.e., that the work of art may be beautiful, although the object imitated be of the most ordinary sort, modifies his doctrine so that not so much the particular, as the essential, of the special object is to be imitated by the artist. This is much nearer the truth, and in this sense we might say that music imitates in objective sound subjective feeling; but even in this account no notice is taken of the artistic regulation of the emotions to be imitated, and the subjective feeling cannot be spoken of as part of any other nature than human nature. Music is therefore not imitative of nature, but seeks a higher beauty. The beauty of art is for human beings a light of something higher than the beauty of nature. In nature we are never fully assured, as in art, that the beauty is the creation of mind in thorough sympathy with our own, seeing with the same eyes, feeling with the same heart as we do. Art is beautiful because of the palpable presence in it of an informing human mind, with all its aspirations and failings, all its vast possibilities and littleness of realization. Nature has none of this: it is perfect, passionless. "Nature," says Novalis, "is an Æolian harp, whose tones again are keys to higher strings in us."

In music, beauty is form. No musical sound or note has in itself what we call artistic beauty. This, as regards the particular notes, and in most instances as regards phrases and movements, is a quality relative to the position occupied by the note, phrase, or movement, as compared with other notes, phrases, and movements, and with the whole work. The number of single notes which are recognised as musical is extremely limited as compared with the number of musical compositions; but the modes of arrangement and rearrangement, the forms of music, are inexhaustible. But this is crude theorizing. If we recall the logical distinction between matter and form, our enquiry will be more philosophical, for this distinction is as clearly established for the imagination as for the reasoning powers. The matter is what of the product is given to the thinking or imagining faculty; as in a proposition, the subject; in a representation of the imagination, the original representation in sense-perception. The form is what is given by the thinking or imagining faculty; as, in a proposition, the quantity or quality predicated of the subject; in a representation, the mode and variety in the selection by which the sense-presentations are revived. Thus, in music, nature supplies the necessary, permanent, material factor, sound. But in addition to this original matter, there is a derivative matter supplied to the artist. This derivative matter has in the development of our art been added to the primary Stoff by the action of formative processes working upon it. To the original sounds of nature the form of notes has been given, these again have been fashioned into scales, moulded into modes, rough cast and chiselled into all the technique of the art. The theory of music, the mechanism of thoroughbass and counterpoint, have been developed by what we may call æsthetic selection. Æsthetic selection is a good enough name for the process; genius is the name given to those in whom the process works unconsciously. Kant defines genius as that talent or endowment of nature which gives rules to art. All this theory, then, is so much matter given to the composer, and has not in itself what is most essential to musical beauty; for one can write with the strictest attention to all the rules and maxims of theoretical music without inspiring his hearers with that impression of grace or power which the lightest lyric of a musical genius awakens. All this matter, therefore, has to pass through the creative mind of the artist. It is fictile and receives the impression of all his inner life, all his fulness of knowledge and deftness of practical skill. The artist's mind is plasmic, and superinduces on the material object the subjective quality of artistic form or beauty—the total effect in which the rudis indigestaque moles is reduced to the unity of musical charm.

Artistic beauty, then, is not something having an objective existence in the beautiful thing, but a subjective quality, form, superinduced on the matter by the artist's mind. This inversion, though it can hardly be called Copernican, as being neither original nor revolutionary, may yet explain some problems which in the other view are paradoxical, and is moreover in harmony with the teaching of some great philosophers. As an instance of a paradoxical problem solved, take the difference in musical tastes which resolves itself into the radical and derived differences between different individuals, inasmuch as the subjective quality, the effect of the whole mind of the artist on his work, will at once appeal to those mentally constituted similar to the artist himself and to one another. Plato and Kant may be instanced as maintaining the subjective nature of beauty. For Plato, the beautiful is that idea which imparts to its sensible copies the highest brilliancy, since it, most of all ideas, shines through its copies. For Kant, the beautiful is that which through the harmony of its form with the human faculty of knowledge awakens a disinterested, universal, and necessary satisfaction.

Digitized by Google

So much for the nature of beauty. We now pass to the last question which shall be raised here: What is the function of music as an art? Here we must revert to that essay of Mr. Herbert Spencer's which we quoted in our first part. While disagreeing with him as to the origin of music, we cannot but admire his account of its function. Using the word cadence as comprehending all modifications of voice, he says:—"Cadence is the commentary of the emotions upon the propositions of the intellect. Beyond the direct pleasure which it gives, music has the indirect effect of developing the language of the emotions. Modifications of voice are the chief media of sympathy, and the tendency of civilization is more and more to repress the antagonistic elements of our nature and to develope the social ones." He concludes his essay in terms highly laudatory of the art, thus:—"In its bearings on human happiness, we believe that this emotional language which musical culture develops and refines, is only second in importance to the language of the intellect, perhaps not even to it."

The doctrine of emotional education as the function of music may be compared with Aristotle's κάθαρσις τῶν παθημάτων, which he holds to be the function of tragic poetry. The expression has puzzled the commentators. It means purification of the emotions. κάθαρσις means a purifying or purging, and has been imported into our language in the nomenclature of pharmacy. But although many medical properties have been ascribed to music by learned doctors, although music has been prescribed for sciatica, viper-bites, gout, and insanity—as to which, see the paper, "Medical Music," in Disraeli's "Curiosities of Literature"—yet Aristotle's κάθαρσις is moral, not physical. It has been variously interpreted as bringing the emotions to their ethical mean, the elimination of all painful ingredients in the emotions, and the provisional satisfaction of a regularly recurring emotional instinct. All these functions music may be said to fulfil, but this is not what the composer has in view when he sets to work. For him, the end of art is beauty as a product and pleasure in the beautiful, implying judgment, as an effect.

This thing of beauty, art's product, is no mere flash of pretty fancy, nor does it come at once into the world. It was Minerva who sprang all armed from the head of Jove. Apollo had a longer and more laborious birth. By patience and long musing the artist knows or feels those of our fleeting emotions which are at one with the ideal, that beacon of the onward progress of humanity. He knows—

> "Such harmony is in immortal souls,
> But, while this muddy vesture of decay
> Doth grossly close it in, we cannot hear it."

He feels the great love which reconciles aspiration and realization, and, music and love being type and ante-type, translates his inner feeling into the one language which is universally intelligible. But his translation, being man's work only, is imperfect. Yet he will try again. So the artist works towards an ideal. The ideal, the god-like beautiful in its singleness of form, strikes upon him as on a harp, and he recognises a concord from the symphony of the universe. He gives his life to reconstruct the symphony; and, after his life his work, stays, like the fabled tomb of Memnon, to give forth sweet harmony when the sun has risen upon another day.

With regret the lamented death of Mr. Joseph Wallis, the well known musical instrument manufacturer and importer, is announced as having occurred at Ryde on July 31st.

MUSIC STRINGS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF ALL KINDS OF

STRINGS FOR VIOLIN, VIOLA, VIOLONCELLO, DOUBLE BASS HARP, ZITHER, GUITAR, BANJO, &c., &c.,

Have always in Stock the Largest Assortment of Music Strings of any House in the World.

39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

All Kinds of Strings covered in a superior manner by powerful machines, made on the best principle with all modern improvements.

JUST PUBLISHED, "MORNING and EVENING SERVICE," set to music for the especial use of Parish Choirs, by Fredk. Hunnibell, F.C.O. Price, 1s.; or separately, 8d. and 6d. London: NOVELLO, EWER & CO.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

The Voice Musically and Medically Considered. By Armand Semple, B.A., M.B., Cantab., M.R.C.P., Lond.

Promising Prize Pupils of the Royal Academy of Music.

Musical Intelligence:—The Welsh National Eisteddfod—Promenade Concerts, Covent Garden—Bishop's Stortford—Cork—Leeds Organ School and Academy of Music

Foreign Musical Intelligence.

Orphan School for Daughters of Musicians.

Organ News:—Halstead, Essex—Fisheries Exhibition—Stoke Damerel—Leeds—Cork Industrial Exhibition—North Berwick—Yarmouth—Bamburgh—An Organ Performance on Bank Holiday—Windsor Castle.

Beauty in Music.

Editorial:—On Musical Thinking—Form in Vocal Music.

Academical Intelligence:—Oxford University—Trinity College, London.

The History of the Pianoforte. By A. J. Hipkins.

Professionals and Amateurs.

Asmodeus in the Musical World.

Correspondence:—"Counterpoint."

Passing Events. Service Lists, &c.

LONDON: SATURDAY, AUGUST 11, 1883.

ON MUSICAL THINKING.

IS it possible to turn to practical and profitable account the processes of tone-thought? All are familiar enough with the phenomenon of thinking verbally in silent words, and all recognize the undoubted utility of such a mental operation. Surely, then, the mind stocked with musical idioms, and ever alive to musical impulses, may be encouraged to the systematic direction and assortment of the toneless tones of musical thought. As a matter of fact, no form of thinking produces more haunting, fascinating impressions than does the exercise of imaginative thought in unheard musical sentences. It is unnecessary to assert that all mental achievements must originate in that great human motive power, thought. Musical people will also duly remember the saying attributed to Schumann, that it was comparatively easy to think extemporaneously, but the real mental difficulty was that of successfully consigning ideas to paper. Still, it may be urged, that systematic musical thinking is not as much practised as it might be with advantage, seeing that it must inevitably lead to the development and strengthening of those qualities which are essential to the composer, whose task it is to conduct musical thoughts into shapely forms by means of a strong mental grip upon his own imagination and to fix them upon his listeners' minds through the formation of a memory in part created and chiefly sustained by the operation of such forces as evolution, development, proportion, and recapitulation. There is abundant evidence to show that many of the great masters did assiduously cultivate the art of musical thinking; we can all call to mind the shaping of a goodly number of masterpieces by the force of systematised thinking. However, the object of my present words is less that of advising prolonged meditation before composition on paper, than it is to suggest the systematic utilization of musical thinking at such times as when composition may not be conveniently pursued. To this end it is suggested that the precipitation of musical ideas upon the mind should neither be neglected or resisted. The recipient should endeavour to form them into definite rhythmical periods; should especially seek to define the sources of such impulses; try to clothe them with suitable if imaginary harmony, and endeavour before dismissing them to find subjects of a companionable type, just as it is the business of the composer to place in conjunction themes on paper which may serve to secure that necessary contrast which is ever essential to the maintenance of the listener's interest and to the due refreshment of his mind. There may be times when such exercise as this can be conducted to special advantage, when it is even well for the thinker to be at rest and away from the actual machinery of composition. Thus, in the enjoyment of the beauties of Nature, the musician may dream extemporaneous music which will strengthen his powers of perception; enrich the storehouse of his mind, and enable him to realise more and more the universality of his art, and teach him much valuable self-knowledge as to his own powers of mind and memory.

Digitized by Google

Surely Beethoven, Mendelssohn, and many others must have practised such an art of thought-cultivation as this; and as the painter loves to seek Nature, so the composer should also study her powers and moods and learn to apply his knowledge, through the process of musical thinking, to the production of music strong and pure.

E. H. Turpin.

FORM IN VOCAL MUSIC.

VI.

That the principles of Form—as musicians understand the word in its large, architectural sense—should have been of slower growth, save in the contrapuntal department, in vocal than in instrumental music, is a matter easily to be realised. In vocal music the expression of verbal thoughts would naturally overrule and supersede the exigencies of musical shapeliness for ages, and it was chiefly through the advances made in the instrumental forms that the application of the processes of musical architecture gradually made themselves felt as—to a large extent—essential features in the logical conduct of the vocal branch of the art. But ultimately we arrive late in the eighteenth century at the anomalous position of the subjugation of the verbal text, even when it consisted of sacred words of the most solemn import, to the musically effective plans now fully adopted from the instrumental structures. Such an obvious abuse of the reverent and common-sense treatment of words will often be observable in the Masses and other Church works of the Viennese school of the period just spoken of. The modern English school of Church music has in the directions of a dignified treatment of the verbal text, and a subjective as well as objective use of form in vocal music, exercised a real and beneficial influence in the art of our own times, an influence which has carried weight further away from home than many of us are apt to think likely or possible. It is of importance, however, to remember, that the principles of form not only show themselves at an early period of the history of vocal music, but have had no insignificant influence through vocal moulds in the domain of instrumental art, as in the formation of cantabile subjects often assigned to instruments, and as in the meditative instrumental sentences of the unaccompanied or accompanied monologue and recitative types of musical thought.

E. H. Turpin.

THE MAJORITY OF THE "MUSICAL STANDARD."

The reference made to the twenty-one years' existence of the Musical Standard in last week's issue by Mr. Stephen S. Stratton, to whom the readers of this paper are indebted for valuable contributions and information from time to time, claims a word or two. It must, in justice to my predecessors and colleagues, be asserted that the vitality of the paper has been owing to their ability, skill, and watchfulness, and to the fact that they have ever striven to keep the paper apart from unworthy selfish interests, and honestly endeavoured to advance true art. All connected, too, with the Musical Standard desire to join me in gratefully recording our lasting indebtedness to our many occasional contributors, correspondents, supporters, and last but not least, to our faithful subscribers; to whom, indeed, much of the power of carrying forward our good work is owing. Readers may feel assured that the efforts made in past times to make the Musical Standard useful to both Art and Artists will be earnestly continued. The staff will not only be diligent in endeavouring to increase the general utility of the paper, but will strive to make it more and more of practical value to the musician, in the hope that the Musical Standard will advance with no diminution of energy, but with increased vitality, as having increased usefulness, along the course of time, again and again to be congratulated by its constant and faithful readers upon the attainment of such further epochs and landmarks as time may apportion to us mortals whose business here is to think and to work.

E. H. Turpin.

A description of the superb home of Gounod, in Paris, suggests the individual character which the master likes to give to his surroundings. The exterior has the severely solemn aspect of a monastery. One enters through grim iron gratings, fastened with stern-looking locks, and comes through gloomy passages to a huge, mysterious staircase. But here comes in the spirit of the composer—locks and gratings are adorned with graceful female heads, the passages are ornamented with beautiful pictures and statuary, and the stairs, richly carpeted, lead up to the great, light, airy apartment, handsomely furnished, where Gounod sits at his desk-piano, and, as he composes music, writes it down.

Digitized by Google

Academical Intelligence.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY.

Examinations for Degrees in Music.

The second examination for the degree of Bachelor in Music will commence on Tuesday, October 9th. In addition to the usual subjects, there will be required a critical knowledge of the full scores of Beethoven's symphony, No. 6 (Pastorale), and Mozart's Motet "Misericordias Domini." The examination for the degree of Doctor in Music will commence at the same time. Candidates are required to give in their names to the clerk of the Schools on or before October 1st.

TRINITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

The following address has been issued to the Honorary Officers and Council of Trinity College, London :—

My Lords and Gentlemen,

At the close of another academical year, a brief retrospect of the work of this College during the past twelve months is due to those who have taken an active part in that work ; and may also be interesting to many others outside the governing body who have most kindly concerned themselves in the welfare of the institution.

It is with deep thankfulness that I place upon record the fact that the past year has been one of solid growth and prosperity. It is a matter of sincere gratification to us all to learn that the balance-sheet just issued by the auditors is of a highly satisfactory character, and leads us to hope that in the course of a very few years there will be a sufficient surplus to allow of some further additions being made to the Scholarships tenable at the College.

The Session which has just closed has been marked by the establishment of three such Scholarships :—1st. The Henry Smart Scholarship, founded in 1882 in memory of the great musician of that name, who was connected with the College as a member of this Council, and also as an Examiner for our diplomas. It will be felt by all that it is most fitting so good and staunch a friend to the College, whose official connection with the institution was terminated only by death, should be thus remembered by his grateful colleagues. It is to be hoped that this Scholarship will be the means of helping forward many a promising young student in the future, and so prove to be no unworthy perpetuation of the memory of Henry Smart.

During the present year, two free Exhibitions have been constituted, one for Pianoforte Students, the other for Vocalists ; and these have been associated (by kind permission in each case) with the names of two eminent members of the Council, Sir Julius Benedict and Mr. Sims Reeves. There is good reason to believe that a large number of candidates will compete in September next for the honour of holding either the Sir Julius Benedict or the Sims Reeves Exhibition. I should add that these Exhibitions, as well as the Henry Smart Scholarship, are by no means restricted to the present students of the College, but are open to all British subjects, under certain necessary conditions named in the published regulations.

In the course of the Session great improvements have been made in the organization of the teaching department. Very much is due to Mr. Bradbury Turner, Mus.B., who, as Director of the Musical Studies, is not only zealous in the interests of the institution, but is most popular with the students. The curriculum has been carefully systematized, and brought into closer harmony with the requirements of the public examinations ; and while the number of the students has been well maintained, the tone and status of the students themselves as a class show a marked improvement of late years, doubtless owing in a great measure to the distinctive lines on which our work is conducted—namely, the promotion of musical education on a basis of general culture. Before leaving this branch of my subject, I must not omit to state that the reputation of Trinity College as a Musical School has now spread, not only through the United Kingdom, but abroad to other countries, and that amongst the more recent alumni are students from the Continent, from India, and from Australia.

A brief reference should here be made to the goodly accession of subscribing members. The number on the books reaches the very respectable total of six hundred and fifteen members. These were formerly designated "Honorary Members" but lately the Academical Board obtained the necessary authority to discontinue the term "Honorary," as liable in some cases to be misunderstood. Members by the revised regulations are eligible for election on presenting certificates (easily procurable by any really suitable candidate) of educational and moral fitness. Although about forty Board meetings have been held during the year, only two meetings have passed without election of new members. I may also state that 430 Local Institutions, Schools, and Societies are now enrolled in union with the College, thus representing a very large and widespread constituency.

Not less encouraging have been the results of our efforts in the department of Examinations during the Academical year now ended. Upwards of one hundred and seventy candidates have entered at the Higher Examinations of the College, and of these a fair proportion have passed with distinction. It is extremely satisfactory to note that the matriculation or entrance examination in arts, which, following the enlightened lead of Sir Robert Stewart at Dublin, this institution initiated in our own division of the United Kingdom as the necessary complement of a professional qualification for musicians, has proved no bar whatever to real musical merit, and that the number of candidates for matriculation is steadily on the increase. There can be no doubt that this effort to place the holders of our professional diplomas on an educational footing with those of the sister professions has added greatly to the value of our higher examinations. At the same time their technical efficiency has been thoroughly guaranteed by means of friendly co-operation, as Examiners, of some of our most eminent musicians, including Sir Julius Benedict, Sir George Elvey, Dr. Hopkins, of the Temple Church, Dr. Mann, of Cambridge, Dr. Hubert Parry, Mr. F. H. Cowen, Mr. E. H. Turpin, Mr. James Higgs, Mr. Walter Parratt, and many other distinguished men, to whom our warmest acknowledgments are due for their able assistance during the past year.

But it is in the field of Local Examinations that our most signal successes have been achieved. No less than 3,900 candidates have entered at the examinations in Elementary Musical Knowledge, while 1,640 have been examined in Instrumental and Vocal Music, making a grand total for the year of 5,540 local candidates, as against 5,275 last year. This, as has been demonstrated on a previous occasion, places the College far ahead of all other examining bodies engaged in the same branch of musical work—a well-known institution standing second with about one-fifth of the number. It must be borne in mind, however, that Trinity College was the first by several years to hold these examinations on a considerable scale, and that this lengthened experience has enabled the Academical Board, with the most valuable help of the Registrar, Mr. Humphrey Stark, Mus.B., to bring every detail of the work to a high degree of perfection. Our grateful acknowledgments are also due to the Local Secretaries of the 250 Local Centres of the College for the zeal and ability with which they have aided us in our operations, and to the influential Local Committees, who have assisted in maintaining the public character of the examinations.

It will thus be seen that the prestige of the Trinity College Certificate has in no way been affected by the flattering imitation of certain older musical bodies. On the contrary, though our standard is as high—to say the least—as that of any similar system, the number of candidates has continued to increase year by year. This fact must prove one of two things—either that the competition (if in no invidious sense I may so term it) has been commenced too late, or that the field is amply wide enough for more than one examining body. For myself, I am fully convinced that the latter is the true state of the case. The oft-repeated question, "Why multiply institutions?" is on the face of it a very sagacious one, but it has lost much of its force by being too frequently asked by those who desire nothing less than a monopoly of the field for some one institution. On the other hand, there are those who believe Oxford to be the better for the friendly rivalry of Cambridge, and both these the better for the enterprise of the younger Universities. It is no secret that Trinity College has aroused certain other organizations from the comparative stagnation into which they had lapsed ; and even from this point of view our College may be considered to have done good service to the public. Since the foundation of our Society new musical institutions have been established—notably the Royal College of Music—and we can only rejoice that in the ever widening arc of musical enterprise other zealous and distinguished workers have been found willing to share our labours. Recent events, in addition to previous experience, have confirmed us in the belief that there is abundant scope for every existing institution, and that persistent emulation conduces to the public benefit, so long as a narrow-minded and short-sighted hostility is not imported into such operations. The community as a whole is quick to appreciate the efforts of those who honestly endeavour to meet a public want—and has little concern—and less sympathy—with the position of isolation favoured by a few over-zealous partisans; and I am enabled to assert, from no small acquaintance with what I may term the musical laity, that our own College owes very much of the popularity it has obtained throughout the country to the readiness of the governing body to co-operate in a thoroughly friendly spirit with its accredited fellow-workers in the common cause.

Digitized by Google

Our obituary record for the year is happily but small in point of numbers. Yet ours is a heavy loss, since it includes one which is deeply mourned by greater societies and worthier men, and our regrets for ourselves are augmented by those which we must needs feel in respectful sympathy with others. William Spottiswoode, P.R.S., who, as an honorary Fellow of this College, signalized his connection with the institution by many acts of kindness, which (like the late Sir John Goss and Henry Smart, and like others whom I see around me) he took care to show chiefly at a time when we stood most in need of sympathy and support, has left us a memory which we shall ever gratefully treasure and an example which the best of us may well aspire to follow. Our roll of Honorary Fellows is thus bereaved of an illustrious name, which the Council will find it difficult to replace. Before I leave this sad page of our annual register, regretful allusion must be made to the loss which the Council has sustained in the lamented death of George Critchett, F.R.C.S., and also to the late John Owen, of Chester, one of the most highly esteemed of our local representatives.

To return, in conclusion, to a brighter key, our Council has lately been reinforced by several members, with whose valuable aid in the various departments of our work the College will surely continue to extend its usefulness and add to its achievements; profiting in the course of the second decade on which it has now fairly entered, by the experience it has gained during the past eleven years. I have the honour to be,

My Lords and Gentlemen,

Your most obedient servant,

H. G. BONAVIA HUNT,

July 14, 1883. (Chairman of the Council.)

THE HISTORY OF THE PIANOFORTE.

By A. J. Hipkins.

(Continued from page 72.)

I will now proceed to recount briefly the history of the pianoforte from the earliest mention of that name, continuing it to our contemporary instruments, as far as they can be said to have entered into the historical domain. It has been my privilege to assist in proving that Bartolommeo Cristofori was, in the first years of the 18th century, the real inventor of the pianoforte, but with a wide knowledge and experience of how long it has taken to make any invention in keyed instruments practicable and successful. I cannot believe that Cristofori was the first to attempt to contrive one. I should rather accept his good and complete instrument as the sum of his own lifelong studies and experiments added to those of generations before him which have left no record for us as yet discovered.

The earliest mention of the name pianoforte (piano e forte), applied to a musical instrument, has been recently discovered by Count Valdrighi in documents preserved in the Estense Library, at Modena. It is dated A.D. 1598, and the reference is evidently to an instrument of the spinet or cembalo kind; but how the tone was produced there is no statement, no word to base an inference upon. The name has not been met with again between the Estense document and Scipione Maffei's well-known description written in 1711, of Cristofori's "gravecembalo col piano e forte." My view of Cristofori's invention allows me to think that the Estense "piano e forte" may have been a hammer cembalo, a very imperfect one, of course. But I admit that the opposite view of forte and piano, contrived by registers of spinet-jacks, is equally tenable.

Bartolommeo Cristofori was a Paduan harpsichord maker, who was invited by Prince Ferdinand de Medici to Florence, to take charge of the large collection of musical instruments the Prince possessed. At Florence he produced the invention of the pianoforte, in which he was assisted and encouraged by this high-minded, richly cultivated, and very musical Prince. Scipione Maffei tells us that in 1709, Cristofori had completed four of the new instruments, three of them being of the usual harpsichord form, and one of another form, which he leaves undescribed. It is interesting to suppose that Handel may have tried one or more of these four instruments during the stay he made at Florence in 1708. But it is not likely that he was at all impressed with the potentialities of the invention any more than John Sebastian Bach was in after years, when he tried the pianofortes of Silbermann. The sketch of Cristofori's action in Maffei's essay, from which I have had a working model accurately made, shows that in the first instruments the action was not complete, and it may not have been perfected when Prince Ferdinand died in 1713. But there are Cristofori grand pianos preserved at Florence, dated respectively 1720 and 1726, in which an improved construction of action is found, and of this I also exhibit a model. There is much difference between the two. In the second, Cristofori had obtained his escapement with an undivided key, reconciling his depth of touch, or keyfall, with that of the contemporary harpsichord, by driving the escapement lever through the key. He had contrived means for regulating the escapement distance, and had also invented the last essential of a good pianoforte action, the check. I will explain what is meant by escapement and check. When, by a key being put down, the hammer is impelled towards the strings, it is necessary for their sustained vibration that, after impact, the hammer should rebound or escape; or it would, as pianoforte-makers say, "block," damping the strings at the moment they should sound. A dulcimer player gains his elastic blow by the free movement of the wrist. To gain a similarly elastic blow mechanically, in his first action, Cristofori cut a notch in the butt of his hammer, from which the escapement lever, "linguetta mobile," as he called it—"hopper," as we call it—being centred at the base, moved forward when the key was put down to the extent of its radius, and after the delivery of the blow returned to its resting-place by the pressure of a spring. The first action gave the blow with more direct force than the second, which had the notch upon what is called the underhammer, but was defective in the absence of any means to regulate the distance of the "go-off," or "escapement" from the string. In the second action, a small check before the hopper is intended to regulate it, but does so imperfectly. The pianoforte had to wait for 50 years for satisfactory regulation of the escapement.

In the first action, the hammer rests in a silken fork, dropping the whole distance of the rise of every blow. The check in the second action, the "paramartello," is next in importance to the escapement. It catches the back part of the hammer at different points of the radius, responding to the amount of force the player has used upon the key. So that, in repeated blows, the rise of the hammer is modified, and the notch is nearer to the returning hopper in proportionate degree.

I have given the first place in description to Cristofori's actions, instead of to the "cembalo" or instrument, to which they were applied, because piano and forte, from touch, became possible through them, and what else was accomplished by Cristofori was due, primarily, to the dynamic idea. He strengthened his harpsichord sound-board against a thicker stringing, renouncing the cherished sound-holes. Yet the sound-box notion clung to him, for he made openings in his sound-board rail for air to escape. He ran a string-block round the case, entirely independent of the sound-board, and his wrest-plank, which also became a separate structure, removed from the sound-board by the gap for the hammers, was now a stout oaken plank, which, to gain an upward bearing for the strings, he inverted, driving his wrest-pins through in the manner of a harp, and tuning them in like fashion to the harp. He had two strings to a note, but it did not occur to him to space them into pairs of unisons. He retained the equidistant harpsichord scale, and had, at first, under-dampers, later, over-dampers, which fell between the unisons thus equally separated. Cristofori died in 1731. He had pupils, one of whom made, in 1730, the "Raffael d'Urbino," the favourite instrument of the great singer Farinelli. The story of inventive Italian pianoforte making ends thus early, but to Italy the invention indisputably belongs.

The first to make pianofortes in Germany was the famous Freiberg organ builder and clavichord maker, Gottfried Silbermann. He submitted two pianofortes to the judgment of John Sebastian Bach in 1726, which judgment was, however, unfavourable; the trebles being found too weak, and the touch too heavy. Silbermann, according to the account of Bach's pupil, Agricola, being much mortified, put them aside, resolving not to show them again unless he could improve them. We do not know what these instruments were, but it may be inferred that they were copies of Cristofori, or were made after the description of his invention, by Maffei, which had already been translated from Italian into German, by König, the court poet at Dresden, who was a personal friend of Silbermann. With the next anecdote, which narrates the purchase of all the pianofortes Silbermann had made by Frederick the Great, we are upon surer ground. This well accredited occurrence took place in 1746. In the following year occurred Bach's celebrated visit to Potsdam, when he played upon one or more of these instruments. Burney saw and described one in 1772. I had this one, which was known to have remained in the new palace at Potsdam until the present time unaltered, examined, and, by a drawing of the action, found it was identical with Cristofori's. Not, however, being satisfied with one example, I resolved to go myself to Potsdam, and being furnished with permission from H.R.H. the Crown Princess of Prussia, I was enabled in September, 1881, to set the question at rest of how many grand pianofortes by Gottfried Silbermann there were still in existence at Potsdam, and what they were like. At Berlin there are none, but at Potsdam, in the music-rooms of Frederick the Great, which are in the town palace, the new palace, and Sans Souci—left, it is understood, from the time of Frederick's death undisturbed—there are three of these Silbermann pianofortes. All three are, with unimportant differences having nothing to do with structure, Cristofori instruments, wrest-plank, sound-board, string-block, and action, the harpsichord scale of stringing being still retained. The work in them is undoubtedly good; the sound-boards have given in the trebles, as is usual with old instruments, from the strain: but I should say all three might be satisfactorily restored. Some other pianofortes seem to have been made in North Germany about this time, as our own poet Gray bought one in Hamburg in 1755, in the description of which we notice the desire to combine a hammer action with the harpsichord, which so long exercised men's minds.

Digitized by Google

(To be continued.)

PROFESSIONALS AND AMATEURS.

In the course of an article contributed to the Musical Times, Dr. W. Pole, himself a distinguished amateur, writes thus:—

Let us endeavour to distinguish clearly between the different classes of people who have to do with music. In the first place, there is a very large and meritorious body of persons, deserving of all respect, who make their livelihood solely by occupation in some branch of music, chiefly either by teaching or public performance. These are properly distinguished as "professional" people; though their assumption of the title "Professor" is unfortunate; it has no precedent in other professions; it clashes with the legitimate use of the term, and it has given rise to some ridiculous parodies, such as "Professors" of gymnastics, hair-dressing, or conjuring. "Professional Musician," "Teacher of Music," are honourable and intelligible terms. "Professor of Music" has either a false meaning or none at all.

Then, secondly, there is the great class of the music-loving public, who take interest in the art but do not make any use of it for the purpose of money-making. These are the true "Amateurs."

So far all is simple, but such is the complex nature of our social system that in this, as in all other attempts at statistical classification, we soon come upon anomalous relations which destroy the sharpness of any line of demarcation it is attempted to draw.

Music offers great attractions to minds sensitive to it, and if it happens that persons so constituted are intelligent and persevering, they may, without any intention of making a living by the profession, carry their study and practice so far as to obtain a knowledge and proficiency fully equal to that of many professional men. Now, undoubtedly, such persons are not "professional musicians" in the sense that they depend on music for their subsistence; but are they to be thereby debarred from exercising their musical abilities, or from receiving any profit that is obtainable therefrom? The class of persons in question becomes more numerous in lower ranks. A young man, for example, who is a poorly paid office clerk, may by dint of hard practice have become a clever organ-player: is he to be forbidden to take a paid office at a church if he can play well enough to obtain one? Or a man engaged in a shop all the day may have acquired considerable proficiency on the violin: may he not be allowed to take a place in a paid orchestra in the evening? Or a young girl in a Magazin des Modes has learnt how to manage well a naturally fine voice: is it a social crime for her to form the first soprano of a paid choir? It may have been distasteful to English professional composers that a young German amateur should have been given a large sum for composing "Elijah" for the Birmingham Festival, but if the Birmingham people have been satisfied, one can hardly see in either case an infraction of any rule of justice or propriety. The same thing occurs continually in analogous cases. It is difficult to draw a parallel with the clerical, legal, or medical professions, as the practising of these is necessarily hemmed in by special restrictions; but in literature and art the parallel exists abundantly. Could we deny the right of anybody to publish a profitable book or a paid magazine article, if he did not depend entirely on literature for his living? or to sell a picture or a bust, if he were not strictly a professional artist? or to take an engagement as an actor, if he had any other means of support?

The regulating check must obviously be the competence of the person for the duty he undertakes to do. The semi-professional must recollect that if he enters into competition with bona fide professional men on their own ground, he must expect no favour—on the contrary, he fairly provokes hostile criticism; and if the Liverpool musicians have good reason to complain of the undue encouragement of incompetence in their semi-professional rivals, no one can object to their using strong language, or to their taking any means to expose the injustice. And, again, the semi-professionals should bear in mind that in entering the field against professional musicians they ought to compete with them on equal terms, and not (if I may be pardoned the expression) to undersell them. It is hardly fair for an amateur who is able to do profitable musical work to do it for less remuneration than would be reasonably paid to the professional man whom he supersedes, so taking advantage, to the prejudice of the latter, of his less need of the pay. It is probable that this condition has not always been borne in mind, particularly by amateur organists, who, I fear, are often tempted to undertake duties for remuneration often below what ought fairly to be paid. No doubt cases arise where, from scarcity of funds, offers of this kind are encouraged; but the wisdom of the policy is doubtful, and church authorities would do well to recollect that the labourer is worthy of his hire, and that work underpaid is seldom heartily done. I should say that the professional musicians may reasonably demand this recognition of their position, and would be justified in publishing and holding up to reprobation any clearly proved cases, not only of incompetence for musical duties undertaken, but of their being done for obviously inadequate pay.

If these conditions are carried out, it is difficult to believe that professional men have much to fear from their semi-professional rivals. The cases of real competence are rare, and these must be almost entirely confined to performance. One cannot think that teaching can be carried on to any extent by such persons, who would have neither time nor inclination for it, and we know that teaching is the main source of income to professional men.

The often mooted idea of forming a strictly professional body, with the view of excluding all others from undertaking profitable musical work, is a delusion; no such thing would be practicable. It is quite practicable and expedient to promote the issue of certificates of competence, from properly constituted authorities, and to encourage the public to rely on them, or to demand them, before entrusting important work to unknown hands; but it is obvious that this system would in no wise exclude really competent semi-professional men, but would rather improve their position, for no respectable examining body could refuse them certificates for any special branch of music in which they were properly qualified.

A word or two may perhaps be added as to the general relations between professional men and amateurs, properly so called. It would be salutary for the latter class to bear in mind that in the matter of performance, they must of necessity be much behind professional men. Speaking generally, I am afraid the standard of amateur musical performance, is in this country, deplorably low. This cannot be due to want of the necessary mental qualification: it must arise either from bad teaching or from ignorance, bad management, bad taste, or bad judgment on the part of the learners or their friends—probably more or less from all combined. However, the question of general improvement is far too large to enter upon here. I would refer more to the rarer cases of fairly good performance which an educated musician can listen to with interest or pleasure. The more such cases can be encouraged and multiplied the better for the cause of music in society. But there is always a tendency for the performers to presume too much on their own merits; they should recollect that, notwithstanding all their talent and industry, it is scarcely possible for them to approach the standard of the professional performer, whose life has been devoted to the cultivation, in the most favourable manner, of his technical skill. For this reason amateur performance ought generally to be confined to private society; it would seem to be a mistake to thrust it into public positions, which must provoke invidious comparisons with the members of the profession. Public solo concerts by amateurs are usually got up more for the gratification of the performers than the hearers, and I should say the fewer of them there are the better.

Digitized by Google

There are, however, many right-thinking people who will cordially echo the wish expressed by a writer in this magazine, that the tone of the musical profession could be raised by the introduction into it of persons of higher culture, of superior social standing, and of broader and more enlightened views. The new Royal College might do much towards this; but, alas! they seem to think the low social origin of their scholars a subject for congratulation, and there is, at present at least, no evidence of an intention to adopt a higher education than mere technical training.

ASMODEUS IN THE MUSICAL WORLD.

IV.

"Truly," said the wily Asmodeus, "thou art innocent, indeed, friend Zambullo, not to know that no musical institution, like any other human organization, can be other than imperfect, both as regards motives and designs. The society of the Musical Brotherhood in Madrid is no exception to the rule; though it is but fair, thou descendant of a much more astute ancestor, to say that from the first day of the existence of this society it has ever been well served by good and true men." "But," quoth the descendant of Don Cleofas Leandro Perez Zambullo, "the worthies who now guide the destinies of the Brotherhood are not only doing good service to the art, but are working for no self gain." "Far be it from your impish friend," cried Asmodeus, "to gainsay your, in the main, true and well meant words. Let us however take a flight through mid-air, and alight at the college where music holds its sway, and where the learned directors of the Brotherhood are wont to meet." Zambullo, as he has been often known to do before in the annals of this diverting history, resigned himself to the supernatural agency of the very reliable demon of friendly impulses, and presently the worthy pair were listening, unseen, to the disputations of the excellent chiefs of the Brotherhood of Harmony. It concerneth not the reader to disclose all that was said upon this occasion, especially as, like most human discussions, there was much said that Time will, through the want of human foresight, unsay at no very remote date. Suffice it to assert that the chief object of the meeting was the settlement of the claims of sundry well known professors of the art to the musical leadership of the company, a matter made necessary by the somewhat paradoxical and striking discovery that the eminent artist who had for many years led the Musical Brotherhood was neither too old or too little appreciated, but was reluctant for some reason or other to again allow himself to be nominated for one of the greatest positions of the kind in Europe. The end of this discussion was the decision to invite some half-dozen much esteemed musicians to act by turns as musical leaders of the famous Madrid Brotherhood of Harmony. (The commentator ventures to ask the reader to pause in his perusal of this delectable narrative, in order to contemplate another proof of the remarkable way in which history persists in repeating herself in the resemblance between the details just given and certain recent proceedings of our own much valued Philharmonic Society. The resemblance is striking enough to induce the wary to suppose that this passage is probably an interpolation by some unscrupulous modern hand, and is intended to reflect satirically upon the doings of an existing body of professional gentlemen. The commentator, however, desires to assure the reader that there are no signs of any such tampering with the MS., and as he has been previously prompted to add, the reader must draw his own conclusions upon this matter). "Truly," cried Asmodeus, "though it is only fair criticism to question the wisdom of the proposal to invite six musical generals to alter, or it may be, to undo each other's work, and possibly to introduce an element of weakness and confusion in the ranks of those to be subjected to the inconveniences of a mixed and complicated leadership. These directing worthies have many interests of level power to balance, and probably only such a course as that proposed could save the Brotherhood from falling into the hands of an alien leader, a contingency which would now be deplorable, seeing that Spain is once more learning to be true to her own children of song. Anyway, Don Zambullo, these same directors have gracefully contrived to bell one cat likely, before, to give the Brotherhood no little trouble. They have, with a liberality not often exercised in such a direction, secured the valuable literary services of the musical dictator of the 'leading journal' of Madrid, who, once devoted to alien interests, is now engaged upon the pleasant and profitable task of writing gossiping accounts of the music to be rendered by the instrumental servants of the Brotherhood, and thus doing a judicious stroke of policy fairly identified with the objects of the harmonious society."

Correspondence.

"COUNTERPOINT."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "MUSICAL STANDARD."

SIR,—I have, with much pleasure, read Mr. Stark's paper on "Counterpoint" (as given in your columns) and I am thankful for having his able help in the crusade against antiquated dogmas which, for some thirty years, I have been waging. In the Musical Record, in The Choir, in my "Grammar of Music," and in many other ways, I have striven to show the absurdity of endeavouring to perpetuate a bondage which neither we nor our fathers have been able to bear. It is truly wonderful how, without the addition of a single new idea, people multiply modern editions of those dry-as-dust old rules that were long ago thrust aside by all practical musicians. For nothing is clearer, or more indisputable, than that the rules still given in the text-books of so-called "counterpoint" were not submitted to even by the men to whose modes of writing they are supposed to afford a clue.

What an amount of nonsense has been written about second inversions! Yet how absolutely clear it is that, in itself, the second inversion of a consonant triad is more satisfactory than the first, and more nearly resembles the natural form of the chord.

And what a subject of ridicule a University examination becomes when Beethoven's Ninth Symphony is scrutinized to detect its author's varied modes of treating second inversions, all of "which are generously 'passed' as satisfactory, although 'exceptional.'"

Or how can a student respect a system (!) which, only at the end of his training, confesses that his surmises have been right all along, and that that puzzling "first inversion" of a chord that may not be used in any other shape is really the second inversion of the familiar dominant seventh chord, with the root omitted; and that the dissonant sound thus smuggled in (because the queerly sensitive ears of the ancients could not tolerate a consonant fourth) may actually be doubled, contrary to all his modern harmony notions of well-balanced chords.

And with what delight a sharp pupil points to the delightfully excruciating "false relation" quoted by Mr. Stark from page 27 of Macfarren's "Counterpoint," and to many other instances, of broken rules found in that work.

I heartily wish Mr. Stark "God speed!" And, if he will refer to the "Grammar" already alluded to, he will, I think, find some further ground for, and help in, fighting against the groundless and ridiculous theories about consecutions, &c., still prevalent.

Yours truly,
HENRY HILES.

Osborne House, Penmaenmaur,
August 6th.

IT will be remembered that at Bayreuth considerable trouble was occasioned by the difficulty of securing an instrument to execute the four notes of the bell-motive in the finales of the first and third acts. Actual bells, besides being too expensive, were not available, on account of the harsh, dissonant overtones which always accompany their proper tone. Hans Richter's "bell-piano," which contained four thick strings consisting each of several ordinary strings twisted into one, did not prove a success, and the tamtams substituted for them did not indicate the pitch with sufficient distinctness. In place of these Mr. Thomas, the eminent New York conductor, conceived the happy idea of getting four steel bars of different thicknesses, which are carefully tuned, and, on being struck with a wooden hammer, give forth a silvery sound as free from overtones at a distance as tuning forks, and strikingly suggestive in their sound of actual cathedral chimes.

Digitized by Google

Passing Events.

The Buffalo (U. S.) Sangerfest was held on July 16th, 17th, and 18th.

The New York Musical Critic has just entered upon the fifth year of its existence.

A new comic opera by an American composer, Mr. Robert Stoepel, "All about a Bonnet," will be shortly produced.

At the Welsh National Eisteddfod, at Cardiff, it was announced that funds had been collected to found a scholarship for Welsh boys and girls at the Royal Academy of Music.

The "Sterndale" School of Music, Wallington, under the direction of Mr. Herbert Green, had a pupils' matinée on July 28th. The programme included some excellent classical pianoforte music.

The service at Gloucester Cathedral on Wednesday afternoon will in future be sung by the lay vicars only, thus allowing the choir boys a weekly half-holiday. This change has been adopted on the recommendation of Mr. C. L. Williams, the organist.

English opera is very popular in America, as indeed it has become in England. Mr. James C. Duff is organising an English opera company for next season. This will add yet another company to the already considerable number before the American audiences.

Messrs. James Nisbet & Co. have recently published the Bible Psalter, being the authorized version of the Psalms, pointed for chanting, and with chants adapted thereto, or specially composed for this work by Sir Herbert Oakeley, Mus.Doc., etc. The pointing of the "Anglican" Psalter, or Prayer Book version, is in contemplation, with the same selection of chants and under the same editorship.

The proprietors of the Orchestra, Choir and Musical Education, have determined to offer prizes for all kinds of musical composition. For the best setting of songs (words given) for a single voice with pianoforte accompaniment, a prize of £3 3s. and 100 printed copies of the song (words and music) will be accorded, subject to the following conditions:—1. The melody must not exceed one octave and three notes in compass. 2. The accompaniment must not present any technical difficulties.

It is stated that the directors of the Crystal Palace have arranged with Mr. Faulkner Leigh to give a second series of twelve grand operas, commencing the 21st inst. The following artists are already engaged:—Mdme. Rose Hersee, Miss Emily Parkinson, Mdme. Cave-Ashton, Miss Josephine Yorke, Miss Helen Armstrong, and Miss Palmer; Messrs. J. W. Turner, Walter Bolton, Lansmere, Aynsley Cook, and Faulkner Leigh. The following operas are to be performed:—"Maritana," "Faust," "Lurline," "Rose of Castille," and "Favorita" (first time at the Palace). Sterndale Bennett's "May Queen" and Benedict's "Graziella" are to be placed on the stage for the first time in England. The chorus has been engaged from the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden, and the band will consist of the Crystal Palace Orchestra; the series will be conducted by Mr. August Manns.

A fine carillon of twenty-five bells is now on its way to Philadelphia to be placed in Holy Trinity Church. The bells were cast by Severin van Aerschodt, the celebrated founder, of Louvain. Before leaving the foundry they were examined by Dr. Stainer on behalf of the Philadelphia committee, and he expressed a very high opinion of their merit, both as to workmanship and beauty of tone. The carillon is a gift to the church by Mr. Joseph E. Temple, in memory of his late wife. Each bell is ornamented with a medallion portrait of both Mr. and Mrs. Temple in bas-relief. There will be a keyboard acting upon the bells, constructed on the Belgian principle. The weight of the largest bell is rather more than one ton and a quarter, its diameter is four feet four inches, and it gives the note F of the old organ pitch, nearly E flat concert pitch. The smallest bell weighs half a hundredweight. The whole of the bells are designed with great taste, and, according to the custom of the country, have been carefully polished.—Musical Times.

Mr. H. C. Tonking, R.A.M. (pupil of Dr. Charles Steggall) will give an Organ Recital at the Fisheries Exhibition on Monday, 13th.

Wagner never enjoyed jokes against himself. Alexander Dumas, calling upon him, made some good-humoured remarks about his own ignorance of music, which he had once defined as "the most expensive of noises," but his pleasantries were listened to with such a smileless stolidity that he went home in a huff, and wrote his contemptuous protest against "Wagnerian din—inspired by the riot of cats scampering in the dark about an ironmonger's shop." On the day before this was printed in l'Opinion Nationale, Wagner returned Dumas's visit, and was kept waiting for half an hour in an ante-room. Then the author of "Les Trois Mousquetaires" marched in, attired in a plumed helmet, a cork life-belt, and a flowing dressing-gown. "Excuse me for appearing in my working dress," he said, majestically. "Half my ideas are lodged in this helmet, and the other half in a pair of jack boots, which I put on to compose love scenes." Snubs of this sort, of which Wagner encountered many, rankled deep in his mind and made him say that the French were vandals.—Boston Transcript.

Service Lists.

TWELFTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

AUGUST 12th.

London.

St. Paul's Cathedral.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Stainer in E flat; Introit, Jesu, gentlest Saviour; Holy Communion, Stainer in E flat. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Stainer in E flat; Anthem, God is our hope and strength (Greene).

Holy Trinity, Gray's Inn Road.'— Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Jackson in F; Jubilate, Chanted. Even.: Service, Magnificat, Chanted; Nunc Dimittis, Bunnett in F; Anthem, The Lord is my strength (Lowe).

Holy Trinity, Tulse Hill.—Morn.: Chant Service. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Gregory in E flat; Anthem, The wilderness (Goss).

St. James's Private Episcopal Chapel, Southwark.—Morn.: Service, Introit, O food that weary pilgrims love; Communion Service, Schubert in C Even.: Service, Calkin in G; O Lord, the maker ("King Henry VIII.")

St. Magnus, London Bridge.—Morn.: Service, Opening Anthem, If we say (Calkin); Te Deum and Jubilate, Nares in F; Kyrie (Nares). Even.: Service, Cantate and Deus Miseratur, Goss in C; Anthem, Thou visitest the earth (Greene).

St. Margaret Pattens, Rood Lane, Fenchurch Street.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, and Benedictus, Tuckermann in F; Communion Service: Offertory Anthem, Lovely appear (Gounod); Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei, and Gloria, Schubert in B flat. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Steggall in C; Anthem, O Lord, have mercy (Pergolesi).

St. Paul's, Avenue Road, South Hampstead.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Smart in F; Benedictus, Lawes; Kyrie, Stainer in E flat. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Gounod in D; Anthem, O send out thy light (Gounod).

St. Paul's, Bow Common, E.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum Nares in F; Benedictus, Dykes in F. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Stainer in A; Anthem, As pants the hart (Spohr).

St. Sepulchre's, Holborn. — Morn: Service, Dykes in F; Anthem, Lord, for Thy tender (Farrant). Even.: Service, Cooke in C; Anthem, "In Jewry" (Clarke-Whitfeld).

St Augustine and St. Faith, Watling Street.—Morn.: Service, Stainer in E flat; Introit, The Lord is my light (South); Communion Service, Stainer in E flat. Even.: Service, Garrett in E flat; Anthems, How lovely are Thy dwellings fair; and Happy who in Thy house reside (Spohr).

St. Saviour's, Hoxton. — Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Smart in F; Holy Communion; Kyrie, Credo, Sursum Corda, Sanctus, and Gloria in excelsis, Tours in F. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Stainer; Anthem, They that wait upon the Lord (Stainer).

Digitized by Google

ST. MARY BOLTONS, WEST BROMPTON, S.W.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Armes in G; Benedictus, Dykes in F; Holy Communion, Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, and Gloria in excelsis, Thorne in G; Benedictus and Agnus Dei, Monk in C; Offertory (Barnby). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Arnold in A; Anthem, O taste and see (Goss).

Country.

ST. ASAPH CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Atkins in C; Anthem, Sing ye praises (Mendelssohn). Even.: Service, Bridge in C; Anthem, Thou wilt keep him (Gauntlett).

ASHBURNE CHURCH, DERBYSHIRE. — Morn.: Service, Garrett in E; Continuation Lloyd in E flat. Even.: Service, Lloyd in E flat; Anthem, I will mention (Sullivan).

BIRMINGHAM (S. ALBAN THE MARTYR).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Dykes in F; Holy Communion; Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Gloria, Dykes in F; Benedictus and Agnus Dei, Redman in D. Evensong: Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Parry in D.

BIRMINGHAM (ST. CYPRIAN'S, HAY MILLS).—Morn.: Service, Cobb in G (throughout); Anthem, Thy word is a lantern (Purcell). Even.: Service, Cobb in G; Anthem, Ascribe unto the Lord (Travers).

BIRMINGHAM (S. PHILIP'S CHURCH). — Morn.: Service, Stainer in A; Anthem, Blessed are they (Tours). Evensong Service, Hopkins in F; Anthem, The wilderness (Goss).

CANTERBURY CATHEDRAL. — Morn.: Service, Porter in D; Anthem, Thou wilt keep him (Jarrett); Communion, Porter in D. Even.: Service, Porter in D; Anthem, Wherewithal shall a young man (Elvey).

CARLISLE CATHEDRAL. — Morn.: Service, Ouseley in G; Introit, Behold, God (Stainer); Kyrie, Ouseley in G; Nicene Creed (Goss). Even.: Service, Chipp in A; Anthem, The Lord is loving (Garrett).

CHESTER (ST. MARY'S CHURCH).—Morn.: Service, Hopkins in F; Communion Service, Tearne in G. Even.: Service, Goss in E; Anthem, O how amiable are Thy dwellings (Barnby).

DUBLIN, ST. PATRICK'S (NATIONAL) CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Stainer in E flat; Holy Communion, Kyrie, Creed, Sanctus, Stainer in E flat; Anthem, We have heard with our ears (Sullivan). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Smart in B flat; Anthems, Happy and blest are they (Mendelssohn), and The heavens declare (Boyce).

ELY CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Boyce in C; Kyrie and Credo, Arnold in B minor; Gloria, Monk in A; Anthem, O how amiable (Barnby). Even.: Service, Goss in E; Anthem, The glory of the Lord (Goss).

FOLKESTONE (ST. MICHAELS).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Smart in F; Anthem, Lead, kindly light (Stainer). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Smart in F; Anthem, The Lord is my Shepherd (Gaul).

LEEDS, ST. MARTIN'S CHURCH (POTTERNEWTON). — Te Deum and Benedictus, Chants; Anthem, Lift thine eyes (Mendelssohn). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Chants; Anthem, Blessed be the God and Father (Wesley).

LIVERPOOL CATHEDRAL.—Aft.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Stewart in G; Anthem, I have surely built Thee an house (Boyce).

LIVERPOOL (ST. CUTHBERT'S, EVERTON).—Morn.: Service, Turle in D. Even.: Service, Turle in D; Anthem, The Lord will comfort Zion (Hiles).

MANCHESTER CATHEDRAL. — Morn.: Service, Boyce in A; Full Communion Service, Cobb in G; Anthem, Save me, O God (Boyce). Aft.: Service, Arnold in A; Anthem, Sing praises unto the Lord (Gounod).

MANCHESTER (ST. BENEDICT'S).— Morn.: Service, Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Agnus Dei, and Gloria in excelsis, second "Messe des Orphéonistes" (Gounod). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis (Stainer).

MANCHESTER (ST. JOHN BAPTIST, HULME).—Morn.: Service, Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, and Gloria in excelsis, Dykes in F; Benedictus, and Agnus Dei, Calkin in B flat. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis (Willing).

ROCHESTER CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Travers in F; Anthem, Lord, for Thy tender mercies (Farrant). Even.: Service, Travers in F; Anthem, They that go down (Attwood).

SALISBURY CATHEDRAL. Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Attwood in C; Kyrie and Credo, Gadsby in C; Offertory (Barnby). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Attwood in C; Anthem, I will mention (Sullivan).

SHERBORNE ABBEY. — Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Tozer in F. Even.: Service, Anthem, Trust in the Lord (Lyle).

SOUTHAMPTON (ST. MARY'S CHURCH).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Custard in F; Holy Communion, Introit, O how amiable (Macfarren); Service, Custard in E flat; Offertory, Be merciful; and Blessed is he (Barnby); Paternoster, Field. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Russell in A; Apostles' Creed, Harmonized Monotone.

WELLS CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Bennett in E; Introit, Blessed are the pure in heart (Macfarren); Kyrie, Mendelssohn in G. Even.: Service, Elvey in A; Anthem, O be joyful (Boyce).

WORCESTER CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Lloyd in E flat; Anthem, O taste and see (Sullivan). Even. Service, Lloyd in E flat; Anthem, God is our hope (Greene).

 Post-cards must be sent to the Editor, 6, Argyle Square, W.C., by Wednesday. Lists are frequently omitted in consequence of not being received in time.

NEWSPAPERS sent should have distinct marks opposite to the matter to which attention is required.

NOTICE.—All communications intended for the Editor are to be sent to his private address. Business communications to be addressed to 185, Fleet Street, E.C.

HENRY SPEECHLY,

CAMDEN ORGAN STEAM FACTORY,

KING'S ROAD, ST. PANCRAS, LONDON, N.W.

ESTABLISHED 1860.

Specifications and Estimates for Organs of any Magnitude, also for Reconstructions, Repairs, and Re-voicing.

Tunings contracted for, and Tuners sent to all parts of the Country at regular intervals or when required.

ORGANS ON HIRE WITH OPTION OF PURCHASE.

 Church, Chamber, and Chancel Organs for Sale or Hire; One or Two Manuals. Ready for immediate use. Easy Terms if required.

☞ All Pipes and other Parts manufactured on the Premises.

JUST PUBLISHED.—Full Anthem, "BE NOT DRUNK WITH WINE, WHEREIN IS EXCESS." For Temperance Services, etc., by E. H. TURPIN. Price 4d. net.—Messrs. WEEKES & CO., 14, Hanover-street W

THE STUDENT'S HELMHOLTZ.

MUSICAL ACOUSTICS,

OR

THE PHENOMENA OF SOUND AS CONNECTED WITH MUSIC,

With Examination Questions and over 100 Illustrations,

BY JOHN BROADHOUSE.

Price 7s. 6d. net.

London: WILLIAM REEVES, 185, Fleet-street.

Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged, cloth, 3s. 6d.

BEETHOVEN'S PIANOFORTE SONATAS, explained by ERNST von ELTERLEIN, translated by E. Hill. Preface by E. Pauer.

W. REEVES, 185, FLEET STREET, LONDON.

PRIZE TUNES and CHANTS.—THREE PRIZES for the BEST TUNES in the order of merit. See the "ORCHESTRA, CHOIR, AND MUSICAL EDUCATION," for April, May, June, and July, price 3d.

W. REEVES, 185, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

Post 8vo., boards, 2s. 6d., post free.

TECHNICS OF VIOLIN PLAYING, by KARL COURVOISIER. Edited and translated by H. E. Krehbiel. Numerous illustrations.

Joachim says: "It is my opinion that this book will offer material aid to all violin players.

W. REEVES, 185, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

BEETHOVEN'S SYMPHONIES CRITICALLY DISCUSSED. By A. T. TEETGEN. 3s. 6d.

FREDERIC CHOPIN; His Life, Letters, and Works. By M. KARASOWSKI. Translated by E. HILL. 2 vols., 12s. 6d.

ELEMENTARY MUSIC. By Dr. WESTBROOK. 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

TO ORGANISTS and CHOIRMASTERS.—VOCAL EXERCISES for CHOIRS and SCHOOLS, by Dr. WESTBROOK, in neat cover, 2d.

WOMAN AS A MUSICIAN, an Art Historical Study. By F. RAYMOND RITTER. Price One Shilling.

TO PIANOFORTE TEACHERS.—Plaidy's (professor at Leipzig Conservatory) PIANOFORTE TEACHER'S GUIDE can be had in boards, price 1s.

W. REEVES Fleet Street, London.

Digitized by Google

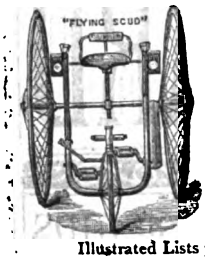
BICYCLES AND TRICYCLES.
NEW AND SECOND-HAND.



"FLYING SCUD" and "ECLECTIC" TRICYCLES, are the Machines for 1883. Spoken of by the Daily News of January 30th as "Splendid machines." "NANCY LEE," Weldless Steel," and "NONSUCH" Steel Bicycles, from £5 5s. Any machine at maker's price for twelve or less equal monthly payments, or for £5 down and 20s. per month, or large discount and carriage paid for cash. Can be seen and tried before purchasing in our school (60 by 40, concrete floor, tuition free), adjoining Show-rooms, the largest in London, with over 400 new and second-hand on View. Machines bought, sold, cleaned, repaired (estimates given), warehoused, advanced upon and exchanged.

Illustrated Lists post free. Hours 9 till 7; Saturdays till 4.

Repairs of all kinds neatly, cheaply, and promptly executed. Cheapest house in the trade for fittings. Parts and sundries of all descriptions kept in stock.

Machines Let on Hire with Option of Purchase.

SOUTH LONDON MACHINISTS' COMPANY.

STEAM WORKS: Suffolk Works, Suffolk Grove, Great Suffolk Street, S.E. Show Rooms and Offices: 28 and 29, Suffolk Grove. Bicycle and Tricycle School: 18, Suffolk Grove. City Depot, Show Rooms, and School: Tower Chambers, Moorgate Street, E.C. (Nearly opposite Moorgate Street Station.) PERAMBULATORS and all Domestic Machines at lowest prices for cash, or on easy terms without extra charge. Lists free. State kind required.

ESTABLISHED 1872.

When writing please say where you saw this advertisement.

T. R. WILLIS,

Organ Builder, Metal & Wood Pipe Maker and Voicer,

TOWER ORGAN WORKS, 29, MINORIES, LONDON.

AN ORGAN KEPT FOR PRACTICE.

REBUILDING, TUNING, AND REPAIRING.

E & W. SNELL,

Manufacturers of Harmoniums, and Reed Pedal Organs,

KING STREET NORTH, CAMDEN TOWN, LONDON, N.W.

NOTE.—These are the only Instruments at which an Organist can really find himself "at home," as all Scales, Positions, and Measurements are adopted strictly in accordance with the Resolutions of the Council of the College of Organists. Estimates free.

MALEY, YOUNG & OLDKNOW,
ORGAN BUILDERS,

KING'S ROAD, ST. PANCRAS, LONDON, N.W.

Specifications, Estimates, and Designs for Church, Chamber, Concert, and all Descriptions of Organs.
Materials, Workmanship, and Tone guaranteed to be First Class.
Organs rebuilt to suit any position, enlarged, and Revoiced at very moderate charges.
Tunings in all parts of the Kingdom.

PROSPECTUS FREE ON APPLICATION.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts, excepting under exceptional circumstances.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit, at Three per cent. interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables, the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons, and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares, and Annuities.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

The Birkbeck Building Society's Annual Receipts exceed Five Millions.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with immediate Possession, and no Rent to Pay.—Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate Possession, either for Building or Gardening purposes.—Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

WITH 25 PER CENT DISCOUNT FOR CASH,
OR 15/- PER MONTH.
SECOND HAND 10% Per Month
ON THE 3 YEARS' SYSTEM.
BORD'S PIANOS
PIANOS EXCHANGED.
LISTS FREE OF
C. STILES & Co. 42 SOUTHAMPTON ROW, W.C.

CONSTANT LAURENT, HARMONIUM and ANGLO-ORGAN MANUFACTURER, Established in 1859 at 85, HIGH STREET, MARYLEBONE, LONDON, W.—Repairing and Tuning Executed Promptly. Price List on Application.—Intending Purchasers are respectfully solicited to inspect my Instruments and Factory.

EUSTACE INGRAM, Organ Builder,

Combines excellence of Tone and Workmanship with Economy.

INSPECTION INVITED.

WORKS:—Burnard Place, Eden Grove, Holloway, London, N.

THE THROAT IN ITS RELATION TO SINGING. By WHITFIELD WARD. Illustrated, post 8vo, boards, 2s. 6d.—Advice to Singers on every point of interest in reference to the Vocal Organs.

W. REEVES: 185, Fleet Street, E.C.

ART of MODULATION: Handbook, showing at a glance the Modulations from one Key to any other in the Octave, or Orgaists and Musical Directors. 2s. 6d., paper; 4s., cloth.

W. REEVES, 185, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

MUSIC SENT ON SALE OR RETURN on highly advantageous terms by

B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster-row, London.

MUSIC of EVERY PUBLISHER supplied to Dealers, Teachers, and Schools. Having the largest varied Stock Europe. The terms, which are highly advantageous, sent on application

London: B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster-row.

ALL WHO POSSESS A PIANOFORTE and cannot play it, may now play at once, without any previous knowledge of Music, by ROYLANCE'S NUMERICAL SYSTEM, which contains a FIGURED DIAGRAM to fit on the Keyboard of any Pianoforte (or Harmonium, and a choice selection of forty SACRED and SECULAR MELODIES, composed for the use of those who have no time to study Music. Thousands are now able to play who did not believe such a thing possible. The diagram alone will be found most useful to Professors for teaching purposes. 6d. nett.—Price 2s. 6d. nett; post free 33 stamps.—C. ROYLANCE, 184, Tottenham Court-road; and all Music Sellers.

SYDNEY SMITH'S
FOUR NEW PIANOFORTE PIECES.

LA FEE DES ONDES.	Morceau brilliant ...	4 0
LE DOMINO NOIR.	Fantaisie brillante sur l'opéra d'Auber	4 0
MARGUERITE.	Chanson d'une fileuse	4 0
STYRIENNE	... ...	4 0

SYDNEY SMITH'S
FOUR NEW PIANOFORTE DUETS.

GAVOTTE ET MUSETTE	... ...	5 0
I PIFFERARI.	Musette moderne	5 0
LOHENGRIN.	Grande Fantaisie sur l'opéra de R. Wagner	6 0
NONCHALANCE.	Caprice de Concert	5 0

LONDON:

EDWIN ASHDOWN, Hanover-square.

Printed for the Proprietor by BOWDEN, HUDSON & Co., at 23, Red Lion Street, Holborn, London, W.C.; and Published by WILLIAM REEVES, at the Office, 185, Fleet Street, E.C. West End Agents:—WEEKES & CO., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W. Subscriptions and Advertisements are received either by the Publisher or West End Agents.—Communications for the EDITOR are to be forwarded to his private address, 6, Argyle Square, W.C

SATURDAY, AUGUST 11, 1883.—Entered at the General Post Office as a Newspaper.

Digitized by Google

THE MUSICAL STANDARD

A NEWSPAPER FOR MUSICIANS PROFESSIONAL AND AMATEUR

No. 994. VOL. XXV. FOURTH SERIES. SATURDAY, AUGUST 18, 1883. WEEKLY: PRICE 3D.

LEEDS TRIENNIAL MUSICAL FESTIVAL,

October 10th, 11th, 12th, and 13th, 1883.

Conductor..... SIR ARTHUR SULLIVAN.

BAND AND CHORUS OF 420 Performers.

PRINCIPAL VOCALISTS:—Mdme Alwina Valleria, Miss Annie Marriott, and Miss Anna Williams; Mdme. Patey, Miss Damian, and Miss Hilda Wilson; Mr. Edward Lloyd and Mr. Joseph Maas; Mr. Frederick King, Mr. Henry Blower, and Mr. Santley.

ORGANISTS:—Dr. Wm. Spark and Mr. Walter Parratt, Mus.Bac.

CHORUS MASTER;—Mr. J. Broughton.

ACCOMPANIST:—Mr. A. Broughton.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.—Mendelssohn's "Elijah."

WEDNESDAY EVENING.—Cantata (written for this Festival), "Gray's Elegy" (Alfred Cellier); Beethoven's Symphony in D (No. 2), &c.

THURSDAY MORNING.—Raff's Oratorio, "The World's End." (First performance in England.) Selection from the Works of Handel.

THURSDAY EVENING.—97th Psalm (written for this Festival), by Joseph Barnby; Third Motet (Mozart); Cantata (Bach); Rossini's "Stabat Mater."

FRIDAY MORNING.—"King David," an Oratorio (written for this Festival), by Sir George Macfarren.

FRIDAY EVENING.—"The Crusaders," by Niels Gade, &c.

SATURDAY MORNING.—Grand Mass in D (Beethoven); "Hymn of Praise" (Mendelssohn).

Serial Tickets, a limited number only.....	£3	3s.	0d.	each.
FIRST SEATS—Single Ticket (Reserved), Morning..	1	1	0	,,
,, ,, ,, ,, ,, Evening..	0	15	0	,,
SECOND SEATS—Single Ticket (Reserved), Morning	0	10	6	,,
,, ,, ,, ,, ,, Evening..	0	7	6	,,

First Seat Tickets will not be on sale until TUESDAY, August 28th.

Second Seat Tickets will not be on sale until MONDAY, September 3rd.

No application for Tickets, either personally or by letter, will be noticed unless accompanied by a remittance for the full amount of tickets required, and stating also the number of tickets wanted.

Cheques and Orders are payable to E. B. FABER, Hon. Treasurer, or to the Hon. Sec.

All communications to be addressed to

FRED. R. SPARK, Hon. Sec.,

Festival Office (near the Town Hall), Leeds,
August 10th, 1883.

WOLVERHAMPTON TRIENNIAL MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

In aid of the Funds of the Wolverhampton and South Staffordshire General Hospital.

President—EARL DARTMOUTH.

THURSDAY and FRIDAY MORNINGS and EVENINGS, SEPTEMBER 13th and 14th.

MENDELSSOHN'S	"ELIJAH."
BEETHOVEN'S	"MOUNT OF OLIVES."
GOUNOD'S	"MESSE SOLENNELLE."
HUMMEL'S	"ALMA VIRGO."
MACFARREN'S	"LADY OF THE LAKE."
MACKENZIE'S	"JASON."

Miss Anna Williams.	Miss Mary Davies.
Madame Patey.	Miss Emilie Lloyd.
Mr. Edward Lloyd.	Mr. Joseph Maas.
Signor Foli.	Mr. Frederic King.

Band and Chorus of 300 Performers.

Principal Violin ..	Mr. Carrodus.
Conductor	Dr. Swinnerton Heap.

Detailed prospectuses, stating prices, date, and arrangements for ballot, and other information, may be had on application to the Honorary Secretaries, MESSRS. LAWRENCE & PAGE, Darlington Street, Wolverhampton.

MUSICAL INTERNATIONAL COLLEGE, LONDON.

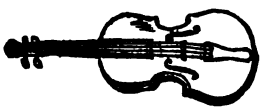
Founded for Examining purposes only.

Principal—EDWIN M. LOTT.

PRACTICAL EXAMINATIONS in INSTRUMENTAL and VOCAL MUSIC throughout the kingdom, conducted personally by the Principal. Next LOCAL THEORETICAL EXAMINATION, DECEMBER, 1883.

For particulars, address SECRETARY, Musical International College, 270, Cornwall Road, Notting Hill, W.

ORGANIST WANTED, for WICK PARISH CHURCH. Salary £50. A well qualified Teacher will find this a good opening.—Apply to D. Nicolson, Montpellier House, Wick.



MAKERS AND REPAIRERS.

GEORGE WITHERS & CO.

(Late of Coventry Street),

WHOLESALE IMPORTERS OF

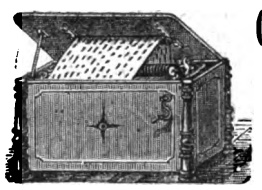
MUSICAL STRINGS,

From Rome, Padua, and Naples.

A FINE COLLECTION OF ITALIAN INSTRUMENTS.

Bows, Cases, Music Stands, &c. See Price Lists.

51, ST. MARTIN'S LANE, LONDON.



ORCHESTRIONETTES,

Ehrlich's Patent.

Are the greatest invention of modern times in the sphere of mechanical Music Works! It is only necessary to put in a note, made of fine pasteboard, in order to play a new piece. The smaller instruments suffice as accompaniment to dance music. The larger ones can be used IN PLACE OF AN ORGAN.

Preparatory knowledge not necessary; therefore the instruments can be sent to any part of the world. Large number of Notes, suitable for all countries, always on hand. Extra Notes made to order, after supplied originals, at any time. Please send orders to any dealer in musical instruments.

Commission allowed to Dealers.

FABRIK LEIPZIGER MUSIKWERKE VORM. PAUL EHRLICH & CO., ZU GOHLIS BEI LEIPZIG (GERMANY).

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER of Cirencester Abbey desires immediate RE-ENGAGEMENT. Fourteen years' Cathedral experience. Excellent references.—Address as above.

MISS LOUISE ALLAN, Pupil of Sir Julius Benedict, Mr. W. S. Hoyte, and Mr. Fountain Meen, has VACANCIES for Pianoforte Pupils.—Address, by letter, care of Shelley Fisher, Esq., Trinity College, London, W.

A BACHELOR OF MUSIC (Cambridge) desires an Appointment as PROFESSOR of MUSIC in some COLLEGE or SCHOOL in the Midland Counties. A Liberal Honorarium will be given to any one through whose introduction such an appointment may be obtained.—Address, Cantab., care of Messrs. Novello, Ewer & Co., 1, Berners Street, London.

HELE & COMPANY,

ORGAN BUILDERS,

WYNDHAM STREET, PLYMOUTH.

London Agency: Mr. W. H. HELE, 59, Gresham St., E.C.

Organs of any magnitude contracted for. Professional attendance when desired.

Extract from testimony by E. H. Turpin, Esq., of College of Organists, referring to organ at St. John's Church, Waterloo Road, S.E.:—

"To Messrs. Hele and Co. very high praise is due for the judgment and skill with which they have accomplished the rebuilding of the instrument. All the foundation work I noticed to be round, even, and admirably voiced. The 'chorus' struck me as being well balanced and decisive, without being intrusive or too pronounced above the 8-feet work. The reeds are of very high quality, at once rich and characteristic in tone. The solo registers I found to be after their several types—delicate and finished in quality of tone and in their voicing. The mechanism throughout a trying night's work never failed me, and it is everywhere true, reliable, and admirable. My impressions were so pleasant, that I feel it is a duty to express an unqualified approval of the labours of the very able organ builders."

Digitized by Google

GASPARO SPONTINI, AND HECTOR BERLIOZ.

(Translated from the Deutsche Musiker Zeitung.)

By Miss Edith E. Southgate.

The compositions of Spontini and Berlioz were, during their life time, the subject of constant notice, either of praise or censure. The value of their various works was often discussed, and the novelty of the forms in which they were cast afforded a theme for much critical disputing. Spontini, who had won a place of honour among his contemporaries by his operas, "La Vestale," and "Ferdinand Cortez," and had achieved triumphs of all kinds, was at last himself compelled to acknowledge that everything on this earth is transient. He had to admit that even the fame of a composer, won after much labour, energy, and many trying conflicts, rarely endures for long. The stirring and rapidly changing period during which he lived was a remarkable one: it affected him to a considerable extent, and its prominent features are to be seen reflected in his music. His fame rose rapidly, and, in consonance with the transientness of the time, as rapidly fell. A brief consideration of the current circumstances will assist us in forming a correct estimate of his art works, and assessing their real value.

Spontini was born at Jesi, in the Italian Papal States, in 1778. He went to Paris at the time when France was preparing herself for the last great scene with which the drama of the French Revolution ended, namely, the crowning of Napoleon, which took place on 2nd December, 1804. The splendour which attended the creation of the realm, the effulgence which surrounded the new chief officer of the young state, and the recollection of the glorious achievements of the various wars, radiated far and wide through this brilliant time, and had a marked effect on Spontini. The glamour of the Empire fascinated a character so ambitious and thirsting for glory as was his: thus, it is easy to understand that this important epoch had a great influence on the ardent spirit of the young Italian, and distinctly affected the peculiar path of his genius. Public attention was first directed to his ability by the appearance of his successful opera, "Iphigenie in Aulis," which was frequently given at the Grand Opéra. In 1807, appeared that remarkable fruit of his inspiration, the opera, "La Vestale," causing a great sensation. The national feelings of the French, which had been called forth by the victories of Napoleon and the glory of the period, found utterance in the opera, "Ferdinand Cortez," which followed the "Vestal," in 1808, and with this Spontini had reached the highest point of his fame. Those that he brought out afterwards, the opera, "Olympia," which appeared at the time of the Restoration; and again later on, in 1822, "Lalla Rookh," produced at Berlin; "Nurmahal," given in 1825, and others, possessed but little imagination or constructive ability; and were but a re-echo of his former greatness. The power he had once possessed disappeared more and more, for these latter works were produced at the time when Napoleon's glory began to decline, and gradually lose its former splendour. In sympathy with this altered condition of public affairs, the incentive that Spontini once had to compose existed no longer; thus, his genius faded with the setting of the Napoleonic star.

With Berlioz it was altogether different. Spontini, during his youth, enjoyed the tuition of such celebrated masters as Padre Martini, Sala, Traëtta, and Cimarosa, and even before he went to Paris was celebrated for his works, written for the Italian stage. Berlioz, who was born in 1803, at a French village, in the Dauphine La Côte Saint André, received his first musical instruction from his father, who was a physician. He learnt to play the flute, and afterwards took lessons on the guitar, from a musician of Lyons, who had settled himself in the village, by the persuasion of Berlioz's father. It is difficult to decide how much of the real art of music the youth obtained from the knowledge of this instrument. As a boy he occupied himself with small compositions for home use. But as his father became aware of the boy's passionate inclination for music, he set him to anatomical studies, hoping to turn him from his love for art, and induce him to follow the profession of a physician. In 1822, he sent him to Paris, to study medicine, but music attracted young Berlioz so strongly, that he left everything else, and, against the will of his parents, gave himself up entirely to the study of the art. His masters at the Conservatoire were Lesueur and Reicha. He especially applied himself to the study of Gluck's works, a design he carried on with great and continuous industry. He also studied the symphonies of Beethoven, the works of Spontini, and Weber, and in fact everything that seemed to indicate a new departure in the art. His restless and eccentric ideas found an approximate image in the exclamation of Chateaubriand's Réné, "Un instinct secret me tourmente." A mysterious feeling seems indeed to have troubled him, and examples of its cryptic voice may be found in nearly all his works. When he, for the third time, hoped to obtain the chief composition prize at the Conservatoire, many of his works had already attracted notice, and in consequence of this it was hinted to him from different quarters that he would be sure to receive the prize this time. This expectation excited him to the composition of the cantata on the history of Cleopatra—who kills herself by means of a poisonous adder—and he essayed to illustrate the theme in music, according to what he thought displayed a Shakesperian imagination and influence. He loftily ignored any consideration or concession to the ruling tastes and musical forms of the day. But the work made such a bad impression, that the prize judges determined to award no prize on this occasion. Boieldieu, the well-known opera composer, one of the judges, had the following conversation with Berlioz the next day.—"Mon Dieu! what have you done? You had the prize within your grasp, and have thrown it away." "Yet I can assure you that I have done my best." "It is just that with which we have to reproach you. You should not have done your best, because your best is the enemy of good order. How could I call anything like that good? I love above all music which moves me, and excites me agreeably." "Well, but it is difficult to compose music, to lull one pleasantly, when the Queen of Egypt, frightened by her guilty conscience, and poisoned from the bite of a venomous snake, is sinking in the moral and physical agony of death." "You always know how to defend yourself, but that does not prove anything; one cannot be calm and graceful in all situations." "Yes, the gladiators of old knew how to die with grace, but Cleopatra was not so trained, because it was not her office. She did not die either, as they did before an audience." "You exaggerate, we do not ask that you should set the scene in dance rhythm. On the other hand, what possessed you to put such out-of-the-way, perfectly incomprehensible harmony? And then this peculiar rhythm in the accompaniment, which one has never heard of!"—"I don't see why one should eschew new forms in composition, where one is happy enough to hit upon such, and bring them in in the right places."—"My young friend, Madame Dobadie, who sang your cantata, is a capital musician, but one could see that she had to use great effort and attention to keep herself correct."—"Upon my honour, I did not know that music is intended to be performed without taste or attention."—(Memoires de Hector Berlioz, I. 142.) Boieldieu drew the conversation to a close with the significant remark, that Spontini might make good use of these observations in writing for the prize of next year. This he appears to have done, for after having tried for it four times, the coveted distinction was presented to him in 1830. It is worth noting, and seems indeed remarkable, that Berlioz should have shown such a strong original tendency, surrounded as he was by a musical atmosphere of quite a different character.

Symphony concerts were not given in Paris until the year 1848. The Parisians only heard music in their theatres and ball-rooms; they took interest chiefly in the music of the Opéra Comique, and afterwards favoured the dance music of the composer Musard. The various pieces given at the virtuoso concerts, which took place at this time, were mainly selected from one or other of these types. In consequence of this, the public were not musical enough to hear with interest, and properly appreciate, foreign, or peculiar original music. How this condition was felt here and there, may be illustrated by the following account of what happened at the theatre in the Palais Royal. During the scene in a play represented, some journeymen were seen at their work. One of them sings a song; after he has finished, a companion wishes to know by whom this song is, and receives as a reply, "De Mosard." "You are mistaken," the other replies—who was most likely an Alsatian, for he gave the right sound to the German z—"we French say Musard, but the Germans say Mozart."

It was acknowledged on all sides that Berlioz was a talented author. His witticisms were treasured and feared; but, as a composer, he never secured a marked success with his countrymen. Unhappily, it is too often the case that celebrated men are really honoured only after their death. Public appreciation, which would have been sunlight to them during their creative period, is frequently denied them. It is hardly possible to believe the many disappointments this man had to contend against when he wished to bring out one of his works. The collecting of so great an orchestra, choir, and soloists as was necessary for the performance of his pieces, caused a great many difficulties. The mass of performers could only be obtained from different theatres, and this necessitated a perfect understanding with the directors of the theatres. Nor was the difficulty over when the period of rehearsal arrived. The aversion to his music was not confined only to its practising: the performers also had to suffer, for the aversion to it was shared by the audience, most of the listeners only coming out of curiosity in the hope of hearing all sorts of curious effects, which one could joke about afterwards. Neither the artistic nor material results rewarded the trouble which such a performance entailed. The energy and activity which, in spite of this, Berlioz exhibited, is really to be admired. He accepted most of the barren results with calmness; but at the same time he watched his enemies with a sharp eye, and at times found the opportunity of revenging himself with his pen. His concerts in Germany at once met with approbation, and this induced him to continue his concert tour. The art-loving public of Austria, Hungary, Russia, and England, willingly took him up, and he found everywhere that which had been denied to him in Paris, viz., appreciative notice, general acknowledgment of his merits, and pecuniary gains. Encouraged by these unexpected results, he again appeared at Paris as a concert-giver. Soon after the revolution of 1848, it so happened that Berlioz arranged a concert the programme of which included the first scene of the second act from Spontini's opera, "Ferdinand Cortez." Berlioz, who had a great admiration for Spontini's genius, invited him to its rehearsal, and Spontini, who felt the negligence of the administration of the theatre keenly, was very willing to accept such an invitation. When the rehearsal was about to begin, Spontini asked for the music, feeling himself once again in the exercise of his beloved art. Various copies of his score were placed before him, but all to no avail; his eyes were dim with age, rendering the reading of the notes impossible. Full of sadness, he rubbed his eyes and polished his glasses, but all to no purpose. Like a brave champion who, having the goal of victory before him, never thinks of the loss of the battle, but keeps his place firm, so Spontini pushed the score from him and took his place in front of the orchestra.

Digitized by Google

The rehearsal began; it was touching to notice how the enthusiasm of the old man was roused, and at the same time, the physical strength to direct was denied to him. He lifted his trembling hands in the air as if he implored the aid of the Muses; then he rubbed convulsively his face and forehead, and fell back almost fainting in a chair which his companion had pushed towards him. The martial introduction of the scene had, during this painful proceeding, arrived at the part in which the Spanish officer exclaims "Dans un piège fatal!" This awakened the fiery old man from his lethargy, and, greatly excited, he listened as well as his strength allowed him. But when the chorus answers the soldiers so decidedly, "Quittons ces bords," he could not contain himself any longer; springing up, with an effort he walked towards the singers, and with an angry "Halt!" accompanied by movements of his arm, indicated to them that their rendering was too tame, and that they as mutineers ought to sing more peremptorily and to speak their words firmer and with more spirit. He went on to say, "Have you already forgotten the recent barricades?" Here there was a pause as if he felt that he had, in his eagerness, gone too far with this searching question; he then tried to sing their parts to them, but his voice failed him. The aged composer quickly tore the cravat from his throat, as if it had affected his voice, and when he could no longer sing, he seemed to be in doubt as to what to do. Berlioz and Spontini's companion tried to quiet him, but the great exertion he had undergone had completely unstrung him, and left him powerless. After resting a few minutes, he was led from the room, and lifted into his carriage.

Spontini, who had begun by a brilliant career in Paris, and later on spent many years in active service at Berlin, where he attained to the post of General Music Director, lived eventually at Paris, quite retired from the excitement of the day. The same jubilations with which Spontini had been honoured, now fell to the lot of his countryman, Rossini, as Berlioz stated in the Figaro. But this supremacy was soon disputed, for Meyerbeer obtained the first position at the chief place, viz., the Grand Opéra. Rossini wrote only one opera for this institution, that was "Wilhelm Tell," in 1829. Meyerbeer, who with his first opera, "Robert the Devil," gained almost undisputed preeminence, published in 1836 "The Huguenots," a work which surpassed the former. His creative power was exerted to the greatest extent, and he brought before the never tired Parisians, "The Prophet," 1849, "The Star of the North," 1854, and others, mainly preserving through the various compositions the old order of things.

The French composers, who, according to the wish of Boieldieu (with the sole exception of Berlioz), only composed music qui berce, were, through the influence of Meyerbeer, roused from their musical slumber, somewhat confused. They found that the old-fashioned form in which they had been working was now effete, and their goal being no longer recognized, their aims became obliterated. It was not until after the appearance of Gounod's "Faust," in 1859, at the Théatre Lyrique, that the charm which Meyerbeer had exercised seemed to fade. The power which he displayed had caused the French composers to almost disappear from the stage for a short time. Under such circumstances it is not to be wondered at that Spontini, who had never won a genuine triumph with his works, was somewhat forgotten. It also appears quite natural, that Berlioz could not succeed in attracting general notice during this period, for he was not only in continual opposition to the art tendency of his countrymen, but also in collision with the concert arrangements of the Paris musical world. Had he directed his aims to the composing of opera music, and worked at this branch with the same perseverance that he displayed in the construction of symphonies (which at this day occupy a peculiar place in art), he would, perhaps, during his lifetime have obtained an honourable position in the general musical life of Paris. But although those remarkable and highly characteristic works, which he wrote for its concert rooms, and which he called, symphonies, are in their way grand and show much imagination and intellectual power, they are too deep for the every-day musical understanding of the Parisian public. When his opera, "Benvenuto Cellini" (1836), was given at the Grand Opéra, the set opinions of the French were too deeply rooted to appreciate its value. The work was a complete failure. Hereupon followed—in 1841-2—the exciting journeys. The triumphs which he achieved at this time won for him the respect of his countrymen, and when his second opera, "Les Troyens à Carthage" (1863), was given at the Théatre Lyrique, instead of the Grand Opéra, he was in a measure made happy, for it was performed twenty times, and brought him in a good sum. He, being the author both of the words and music, received all the fees. Before this (1862), one of his comic operas, "Béatrice et Bénédict," had been given in Baden, then at Weimar, and met with approval.

Berlioz seemed to the Parisians like two separate persons, who, continually finding fault with one another, do not appear at their best, despite the fact that they acknowledge one another's good qualities on either side. And after death there was also a great difference between Berlioz and Spontini. The Parisians can now hardly hear enough of their gifted countryman's symphonic music. In honouring him with enthusiasm as a composer, we must take it that there exists yet another reason, viz., that they at last acknowledged the true art and greatness of this man. Just as the French call the violinist Gaviniés their Tartini, and celebrate Méhul as their Mozart, so they have eventually discovered in Berlioz their Wagner.

The splendid enthusiasm of the Welsh people continued to burn brightly to the very end of the Eisteddfod proceedings. Several of the successful candidates, as the young harpist hailing from Caerphilly, were received with every manifestation of delight upon returning home. On the return, on August 10th, of the North Wales choir gaining the £100 prize, and the gold medal, the members were received by admiring thousands, with the attending demonstrations of bands, triumphal arch, etc., and at night bonfires lit up the surrounding mountains.

Digitized by Google

Musical Intelligence.

CARDIFF.

Concerts were given on Saturday the 11th and Monday the 13th, by the Blue Ribbon Choir, ably conducted by Mr. Jacob Davis, and the band of the Black Watch, 2nd Battalion Royal Highlanders, conducted by Mr. Walter G. Buck, the bandmaster. The choir distinguished itself by singing, with excellent effect, several choruses, part-songs, &c., and the band played a number of overtures and selections, greatly pleasing the audiences by their performances. The programmes included vocal solos, and organ solos were given by Mr. E. H. Turpin. The concerts, which were for the benefit of the local Infirmary, were largely attended, taking place in the immense Eisteddfod building, the large and fine organ built by Messrs. Brindley and Foster for the recent festival being used upon these occasions.

PROMENADE CONCERTS, COVENT GARDEN.

The programme on Wednesday was comprehensive, both vocally and instrumentally, the vocalists being Miss Mary Lemmens, Mdme. Enriquez, and Signor Foli; and the chief solo instrumentalists, Mr. J. T. Carrodus (violin), Mdme. Frickenhaus (pianoforte), and Mr. Howard Reynolds (cornet); Mr. J. M. Carrodus leading the orchestra of 100 performers, the band of the Coldstream Guards playing under the direction of Mr. C. Thomas, Mr. F. Clyffe being the pianoforte concert accompanist, and Mr. John Cheshire playing the harp. Mr. A. Gwyllym Crowe was the conductor of the concert. The first, or "classical" part included the overture to "Anacreon" (Cherubini), and the succeeding pieces included some ballet music from "Rosamunde" (Schubert); Concerto in A minor (Schumann), in which Mdme. Frickenhaus admirably illustrated her well-known powers on the pianoforte; Allegro from violin concerto (Beethoven), the soloist being Mr. J. T. Carrodus, who was rapturously applauded; and the unfinished symphony in B minor (Schubert); the conclusion of the first part being the overture to "Rosamunde." The "miscellaneous" programme constituting the second division of the concert, included a selection, "L'Italiana in Algieri" (Rossini), in which the orchestral and Coldstream bands united. This was succeeded by a tarantella from "Vinezia e Napoli" (Liszt), in which Mdme. Frickenhaus again appeared as pianoforte soloist; and after, an entr'acte from "Lohengrin," the orchestral and military bands again joining. The remaining pieces embraced a new waltz "In the Moonlight" (A. G. Crowe), the quick march, "Habt Acht," or "Attention" (Gung'l), forming with the combined strains of the bands a pleasant finale to a concert, the interest of which never flagged for a moment.

Beverley.—Dr. Spark gave an organ performance recently in St. Mary's Church. The profits of the performance were given in support of an educational institution. Dr. Spark's treatment of the classical programme was highly appreciated by the large and studious audience.

Carnarvon.—The North Wales Musical Eisteddfod opened at Carnarvon on August 6th, under the presidency of Mr. Rathbone, M.P. The Festiniog choir won the fifty guinea prize in choral competitions, the Llanberis band winning twenty guineas in brass band competitions. Mr. Henry Leslie and Dr. F. G. Rogers, organist of Bangor Cathedral, were chief adjudicators. Sir Llewellyn Turner presided at the evening concert.

Melbourne.—The last of the Kennedy concerts, which was given in the Town Hall on June 9th, attracted the largest audience yet assembled to enjoy these popular entertainments. The pieces in the programme, which had been selected by the audience, included some of the most popular songs given by the Kennedy family, and were received with enthusiastic applause. Mr. Kennedy at the conclusion of the entertainment, after thanking the public for their patronage, made the pleasing announcement that he would return in twelve months' time, and bid a final farewell to Melbourne. Mr. R. Kennedy, who during the week had become a Benedict, had an old shoe with a bouquet attached thrown at him in accordance with the time-honoured custom, which regards such a missile as a token of good fortune. Mr. and Mrs. R. Kennedy intend to take a tour round the world, which will occupy about five years. This is a proper kind of honeymoon, is it not?—Melbourne Herald, June 11th, 1883.

Long Eaton.—A new organ, built by Messrs. Brindley & Foster, of Sheffield, for Zion Chapel, Long Eaton, was opened on July 29. The chapel was also re-opened after having been closed for repairs and cleaning, etc. Sermons were preached by the Rev. T. Rushworth. Mr. S. W. Pilling, of Bolton, presided at the organ in the morning and afternoon, and Mr. W. Gadsby, of Ilkeston, in the evening.—An organ recital was given on August 4th by Mr. Pilling. The following is the specification of the instrument: Great organ CC to C, 61 notes, 6 stops; Swell organ, CC to C, 61 notes, 6 stops; pedal organ, CCC to F.—Nottingham Guardian.

Carmarthen.—A musical matinée was given on August 1st at the Assembly Rooms, by Mrs. Prince, principal of the High School in this town. The programme was gone through by the pupils in a manner reflecting credit both on themselves and their teachers. Without being invidious, we feel compelled to mention Miss F. Steele's artistic performance of Beethoven's Sonata in A flat (Op. 26); and the singing of Mendelssohn's duet, "I would that my love," by Misses E. Tudor Thomas and Ch. Williams. The concert concluded with "God save the Queen," after which the Vicar proposed a vote of thanks to Mrs. Prince, the pupils, and teachers, and to Mr. Cooke, the zealous conductor.—A concert was given at the Assembly Rooms on the evening of August 2nd by Miss Ellis, R.A.M. She was assisted by a number of competent artists, and patronised by the nobility and gentry of this and the neighbouring counties.—The Eisteddfod, held in a spacious marquee at New Quay, on July 31st, proved a great success. There was a large attendance.—Carmarthen Journal.

Foreign Musical Intelligence.

An International Music Meeting has recently been held at Bayonne, under the presidency of M. Gounod.

A musical institute has been founded at Cordova. The Governor of the Province has contributed to the cost 30,000 francs.

An opera, entitled "L'Alcade de Zalaméa," book by Détroyat and Silvestre, music by Benjamin Godard, will be produced during the coming winter in Antwerp.

It is reported that Spondrini, architect of the Teatro Costanzan, Rome, will be entrusted with the task of building the new Italian Opera-house, Paris.

A memorial is to be erected to C. M. von Weber in his native town, Eutin, and will be unveiled on the 18th December, 1886, the 100th anniversary of his birth.

Wagner's "Ring des Nibelungen" and "Tristan und Isolde" will probably be heard, it is stated, ere long at the Theatre Royal, Dresden.

Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini" is attracting attention just now in Germany. Flotow's posthumous opera, "The Count of San Megrin," is to be given presently in Cologne.

At the seventh Silesian Musical Festival, to be held, it is said, next Whitsuntide, at Breslau, Blumner's oratorio, "Der Fall Jerusalems," will be performed on the first day under the direction of its composer.

It is extraordinary how wide the artist will open his mouth when America is mentioned. Signor Fancelli, who is, perhaps, the most sweet-voiced tenor of the present day, being approached, replied that he understood Signor Campanini was to get half a million of francs (£20,000), and, therefore, he would want three quarters of a million (£30,000) for the season. The story goes that a stipulation was likewise made that the tenor should not be obliged to attend rehearsals, nor to learn new parts, and that scented soap and cigars were to be provided gratuitously. He expressed an opinion that his voice would suffice to divide America in twain, and render all current talk about the Panama Canal superfluous. Another great tenor has asked the more moderate price of £275 per night, and he will probably be accepted.—Figaro.

Among the solo performances of the recent Cardiff concerts are noticed the splendid artistic playing of Herr Pollitzer (violin), Mr. Lazurus (clarionet), in concertos by Mendelssohn and Weber and Mr. W. Morrow, as trumpet obbligato in "Let the bright Seraphim."

Digitized by Google

Organ News.

FISHERIES EXHIBITION.

Mr. James Loaring, F.C.O., gave his 40th recital last week. The programmes included :—

Overture, "Crown Diamonds"	Auber.
Toccata and Fugue in D minor	Bach.
Organ Concerto, No. 1	Handel.
Andante, from Quintet in C minor	Mozart.
"Sound an alarm"	Handel
Festive March in D	Smart.

Overture, "Occasional"	Handel.
Allegro Vivace, from "Jupiter" Symphony	Mozart.
Andante in G	Batiste.
"Hailstone" Chorus	Handel.
"With verdure clad"	Haydn.
March from "Fidelio"	Beethoven.

Mr. S. Claude Ridley gave organ recitals on Thursday and Friday, August 9th and 10th. The following are the programmes :—

Triumphal March and Ballet Music	Verdi.
Romance "Feuille de Rose"	Voss.
Concert Fugue in G	Krebs.
Gavotte, "Mignon"	Thomas.
Fantasia, "The Storm"	Lemmens.
"Air du Dauphin"	Roeckel.
Overture to "Zampa"	Hérold.

Processional March in E flat	Wely.
Andante, with variations in A	Haydn.
Selections from the "Pirates of Penzance"	Sullivan.
Prelude and Fugue in B flat	Bach.
Offertoire in D, No. 5	Batiste.
Gavotte. "Louis XV."	Lee.
Overture to "Masaniello"	Auber.

Hymne, Marche Triomphale	Verdi.
Andante with variations	Haydn.
Prelude and Fugue in B flat	Bach.
Gavotte, "Louis XV."	Lee.
Overture to "Masaniello"	Auber.
Romance in A flat	Voss.
Offertoire in D	Batiste.
Chorus, "Lift up your heads" ("Messiah")	Handel.

And on Monday, August 13th, by Mr. W. H. Hedgecock:—

"Occasional" Overture	Handel.
"Evening Prayer"	Smart.
March, "Naaman"	Costa.
Ballet Air, "Rosamunde"	Schubert.
Allegro in D	Tours.
Melody in C	Silas.
Gavotte in G	Handel.
Selection, "Carmen"	Bizet.

And on Monday, August 13th, by Mr. H. C. Tonking, R.A.M. :—

Concerto for Organ, No. 2	Handel.
Postlude in C minor	Steggall.
Gavotte in F	Martini.
Gavotte, "Mignon"	Thomas.
Postlude in D	Smart.
Toccata and Fugue in D minor	Bach.
March from "Ode to St. Cecilia"	Handel.
March from "Occasional Oratorio"
Grand Chorus	Guilmant.

GODALMING.

A short organ recital was given by Humphrey J. Stark, Esq., Mus.Bac., Oxon., in the Parish Church, on Sunday, August 12th. The following was the programme :—

Andante with variations	Beethoven.
Fugue in G minor	Bach.
Offertoire in D major	Batiste.

WISBECH.

Mr. Jude has been lately visiting Wisbech, which is his native town, and the opportunity was taken by Mr. Chas. King, the organist of the Parish Church, to obtain his consent to the giving of a recital. A very large number of people assembled in the church, and Mr. Jude delighted his audience with his talented performances. The recital lasted rather more than an hour, but the interest was fully sustained by the variety of the compositions, which were from the works of such distinguished composers as Handel, Mendelssohn, Sterndale Bennett, Guilmant, Wesley, and one piece, a Trumpet March, of Mr. Jude's own composition. The following was the programme :—

Chorus, "When His loud voice"	Handel.
Barcarolle, from the 4th Concerto	Bennett.
Chorale, with variations, in D minor	Mendelssohn.
Trumpet March, "La Garde Passe"	Jude.
"Holdsworthy Church Bells"	Wesley.
Grand Sonata for the Organ	Guilmant.

CARDIFF.

The following is the specification of the organ supplied for the Eisteddfod (Cardiff, 1883), by Brindley and Foster of Sheffield :—

GREAT ORGAN. CC TO C.

1. Double Stopt Diap.	16 ft.	6. Harmonic Flute	4 ft.
2. Open Diapason	8 „	7. Grave Mixture (2 ranks)
3. Viola	8 „	8. Full Mixture (3 ranks)
4. Hohl Flöte	8 „	9. Double Trumpet	16 „
5. Principal	4 „	10. Trumpet	8 „

SWELL ORGAN. CC TO C.

11. Bourdon	16 ft.	17. Fifteenth	2 ft.
12. Open Diapason	8 „	18. Mixture (4 ranks)
13. Gamba	8 „	19. Cornopean	8 „
14. Voix Celestes	8 „	20. Oboe	8 „
15. Gedact	8 „	21. Spare Slide
16. Principal	4 „

CHOIR ORGAN. CC TO C.

22. Salicional	8 ft.	25. Lieblich Flute	4 ft.
23. Lieblich Gedact	8 „	26. Piccolo	2 „
24. Dulciana	8 „	27. Clarionet	8 „

PEDAL ORGAN. CCC TO F.

28. Sub Bourdon	32 ft.	30. Sub Bass	16 ft.
29. Open Diapason	16 „	31. Trombone	16 „

COUPLERS.

32. Swell to Great.	37. Swell Super.
33. Swell to Choir.	38. Great Super.
34. Swell to Pedal.	39. Pedal Super
35. Great to Pedal.	40. Tremulant.
36. Choir to Pedal.

Three Composition Pedals, to Great and Pedal.
Three „ „ to Swell,

Drawstop action diagonal : pedal board, concave ; "College of Organists'" resolution ; case and decorated front pipes to design sent.

LIMERICK.

The following is the synopsis of the new organ just erected in the new Parish Church (R.C.) of S. Michael, by Messrs. Telford and Telford, of Dublin :—

GREAT ORGAN. (CC TO G IN ALT).

1. Open Diap. (No. 1)	8 ft.	6. Octave	4 ft.
2. „ „ (No. 2)	8 „	7. Fifteenth	2 „
3. Bourdon	16 „	8. Mixture (4 ranks).
4. Gamba	8 „	9. Trumpet	8 „
5. Stopped Diapason	8 „

SWELL ORGAN. (CC TO G IN ALT).

10. Open Diapason	8 ft.	15. Octave	4 ft.
11. Dulciana	8 „	16. Fifteenth	2 „
12. Voix Celeste	8 „	17. Mixture (3 ranks).
13. Bourdon	16 „	18. Oboe	8 „
14. Double Gedact		19. Cornopean	8 „

CHOIR ORGAN. (CC TO G IN ALT).

20. Stopped Diapason	8 ft.	23. Dulciana	8 ft.
21. Flute Harmonic	4 „	24. Clarinet	8 „
22. Piccolo Harmonic	2 „

PEDAL ORGAN. (CCC TO F).

25. Bourdon	16 ft.	27. Double Open	16 ft.
26. Open Diapason	8 „

COUPLERS.

28. Swell to Choir.	30. Swell to Great.
29. Swell to Pedal.	31. Great to Pedal.

Accessory Stop, Blower.

Great	648 Pipes.
Swell	592 „
Choir	256 „
Pedal	90 „
Total	1,586.

No. of Stops 32

The Swell-box has vertical, instead of horizontal, shutters. The organ is an excellent instrument, the Pedal organ being very fine, and the whole of the reeds good and well voiced. The case is of stained pine, with diapered open diapason pipes in front. The instrument stands in the choir gallery, over the South transept. The church has just been erected at a cost of about £14,000, and is considered to be one of the finest in the South of Ireland.

Digitized by Google

BAKEWELL.

An organ recital was given in All Saint's Church, on Wednesday, August 1st, by S. W. Pilling, Esq. The following was the programme :—

Organ Sonata (No. 2 in C minor) (Grave—Adagio—Allegro—Maestoso—Fuga).	Mendelssohn.
Pastorale	Guilmant.
Caprice in B flat
Allegro Pomposo	Smart.
Air, "O God have mercy" ("St. Paul")	Mendelssohn.
Fantasia	Guiraud.
Prelude and Fugue in G minor	Bach.
March, with "Hymn of Priests"	Chauvet.
Cavatina	Raff.
Andante con moto	Boely.
Elevation and Finale	Saint-Saëns.

And on Wednesday, Aug. 8th, by Mr. J. F. Dovaston :—

Introduction and Allegro	Wood.
Andante con moto	Smart.
Andante quasi Adagio	Calkin.
Recit. and Air (Vocal) "O come hither"	Elvey.
Air (Vocal) "Gracious is the Lord"	Harris.
Allegro Pomposo	Smart.
Prelude and Fugue	Mendelssohn.
Barcarole	Bennett.
Moderato Maestoso	Hoyte.
Air (Vocal) "Lord, what is man?"	Handel.
Solo (Vocal) "Be Thou faithful"	Mendelssohn.
Triumphal March	Lemmens.

THE HISTORY OF THE PIANOFORTE.

By A. J. Hipkins.

(Continued from page 88.)

The Seven Years' War put an end to pianoforte-making on the lines Silbermann had adopted in Saxony. A fresh start had to be made a few years later, and it took place contemporaneously in South Germany and England. The results have been so important that the grand pianofortes of the Augsburg Stein, and the London Backers, may be regarded, practically, as re-inventions of the instrument. The decade 1770-80 marks the emancipation of the pianoforte from the harpsichord, of which before it had only been deemed a variety. Compositions appear written expressly for it, and a man of genius, Muzio Clementi, who subsequently became the head of the pianoforte business now conducted by Messrs. Collard, came forward to indicate the special character of the instrument, and found an independent technique for it.

A few years before, the familiar domestic square piano had been invented. I do not think clavichords could have been altered to square pianos, as they were wanting in sufficient depth of case, but that the suggestion was from the clavichord is certain, the same kind of case and key-board being used. German authorities attribute the invention to an organ builder, Friederici of Gera, and give the date about 1758 or 1760. I have advertised in public papers, and have had personal inquiry made for one of Friederici's "Fort Bien," as he is said to have called his instrument. I have only succeeded in learning this much, that Friederici is considered to have been of later date than has been asserted in the text-books. Until more conclusive information can be obtained, I must be permitted to regard a London maker, but a German by birth, Johannes Zumpe, as the inventor of the instrument. It is certain that he introduced that model of square piano which speedily became the fashion, and was chosen for general adoption everywhere. Zumbe began to make his instruments about 1765. His little square, at first of nearly five octaves, with the "old man's head" to raise the hammer, and "mopstick" damper, was in great vogue, with but little alteration, for forty years, and that in spite of the manifest improvements of John Broadwood's wrest-plank, and John Geib's "grasshopper." After the beginning of this century, the square became much enlarged and improved by Collard and Broadwood, in London, and by Petzold, in Paris. It was overdone in the attempt to gain undue power for it, and, about twenty years ago, sank in the competition with the latter cottage pianoforte which was always being improved.

To return to the grand pianoforte. The origin of the Viennese grand is rightly accredited to Stein, the organ builder, of Augsburg. I will call it the German grand, for I find it was as early made in Berlin as Vienna. According to Mozart's correspondence, Stein had made some grand pianos in 1777, with a special escapement, which did not "block" like the pianos he had played upon before. When I wrote the article "Pianoforte" in Dr. Grove's "Dictionary" no Stein instrument was forthcoming, but the result of the inquiries I had instituted at that time ultimately brought one forward, which has been secured by the curator of the Brussels Museum, M. Victor Mahillon. This instrument, with Stein's action and two unison scale, is dated 1780. Mozart's grand piano, preserved at Salzburgh, made by Walther, is a nearly contemporary copy of Stein, and so also are the grands by Huhn of Berlin, which I took notes of at Berlin and Potsdam; the latest of these is dated 1790. An advance, shown by these instruments of Stein and Stein's followers, is in the spacing of the unisons, the Huhn grands having two strings to a note in the lower part of the scale, and three in the upper. The Cristofori-Silbermann inverted wrest-plank has reverted to the usual form; the tuning pins and downward bearing being the same as in the harpsichord. There are no steel arches as yet between the wrest-plank and the belly-rail in these German instruments. As to Stein's escapement, his hopper was fixed behind the key; the axis of the hammer rising on a principle which I think is older than Stein, but have not been able to trace to its source, and the position of his hammer is reserved. Stein's light and facile movement with shallow key-fall, resembling Cristofori's in bearing little weight, was gratefully accepted by the German clavichord players, and, re-acting, became one of the determining agents of the piano music and style of playing of the Vienna school. Thus arose a fluent execution of a rich figuration and brilliant passage playing, with but little inclination to sonorousness of effect, lasting from the time of Mozart's immediate followers to that of Henri Herz, a period of half a century. Knee-pedals, as we translate "génouillères," were probably in vogue before Stein, and were levers pressed with the knees, to raise the dampers, and leave the pianoforte undamped, a register approved of by Carl Philip Emmanuel Bach, who regarded the undamped pianoforte as the more agreeable for improvising. He appears, however, to have known but little of the capabilities of the instrument, which seemed to him coarse and inexpressive beside his favourite clavichord. Stein appears to have made use of the "una corda" shift. Probably by knee-pedals, subsequently by foot-pedals, the following effects were added to the Stein pianos. The harpsichord "harp"-stop, which muted one string of each note by a piece of leather, became by the interposition of a piece of cloth between the hammer and the strings, the piano, harp, or celeste. The more complete sourdine, which muted all the strings by contact of a long strip of leather, acted as the staccato, pizzicato, or pianissimo. The Germans further displayed that ingenuity in fancy stops Mersenne had attributed to them in harpsichords more than a hundred and fifty years before, by a bassoon pedal, a card which, by a rotatory half-cylinder just impinging upon the strings, produced a reedy twang; also by pedals for triangle, cymbals, bells and tambourine, the last drumming on the sound-board itself. Several of these contrivances may be seen in a six-pedal grand pianoforte belonging to the Queen, at Windsor Castle, bearing the name as maker of Stein's daughter, Nannette, who was a friend of Beethoven.

We gather from Burney's contributions to "Rees's Cyclopædia," that after the arrival of John Christian Bach in London, A.D. 1759, a few grand pianofortes were attempted by the second rate harpsichord makers, but with no particular success. If the workshop tradition can be relied upon that several of Silbermann's workmen had come to London about that time, the so-called "twelve apostles," more than likely owing to the Seven Years' War, we should have here men acquainted with the Cristofori model, which Silbermann had taken up, and the early grand pianos referred to by Burney would be on that model. I should say the "new instrument" of Messrs. Broadwood's play-bill of 1767 was such a grand piano; but there is small chance of ever finding one now, and if an instrument were found it would hardly retain the original action, as Messrs. Broadwood's books of the last century show the practice of refinishing instruments which had been made with the "old movement." Burney distinguishes Americus Backers by special mention. He is said to have been a Dutchman. Between 1772 and 1776, Backers produced the well-known English action, which has remained the most durable, and one of the best up to the present day. It refers in direct leverage to Cristofori's first action. It is opposite to Stein's contemporary invention, which has the hopper fixed. In the English action, as in the Florentine, the hopper rises with the key. To the direct leverage of Cristofori's first action, Backers combined the check of the second, and then added an important invention of his own, a regulating screw and button for the escapement. Backers died in 1776. It is unfortunate that we can refer to no pianoforte made by him. I should regard it as treasure trove if one were forthcoming in the same way that brought to light the authentic one of Stein's. As, however, Backers' intimate friends, and his assistants in carrying out the invention, were John Broadwood and Robert Stodart, we have, in their early instruments, the principle and all the leading features of the Backers grand. The increased weight of stringing was met by steel arches placed at intervals between the wrest-plank and the belly-rail, but the belly-rail was still free from the thrust of the wooden bracing, the direction of which was confined to the sides of the case, as it had been in the harpsichord. Stodart appears to have preceded Broadwood in taking up the manufacture of the grand piano by four or five years. In 1777, he patented an alternate pianoforte and harpsichord, the drawing of which patent shows the Backers action. The pedals he employed were to shift the harpsichord register, and to bring on the octave stop. The present pedals were introduced in English, and grand pianos by 1785, and are attributed to John Broadwood, who appears to have given his attention at once to the improvement of Backer's instrument. Hitherto the grand piano had been made with an undivided belly-bridge, the same as the harpsichord had been; the bass strings, in three unisons, to the lowest note, being of brass. Theory would require that the notes of different octaves should be multiples of each other, and that the tension should be the same for each string. The lowest bass strings, which at that time were the note F, would thus require a vibrating length of about twelve feet. As only half this length could be afforded, the difference had to be made up in the weight of the strings and their tension, which led, in these early grands, to many inequalities. The three octaves towards the treble could, with care, be adjusted, the lengths being practically the ideal lengths. It was in the bass octaves (pianos were then of five octaves) the inequalities were more conspicuous. To make a more perfect scale, and equalise the tension, was the merit and achievement of John Broadwood, who joined to his own practical knowledge and sound intuitions the aid of professed men of science. The result was, the divided bridge, the bass strings being carried over the shorter division, and the most beautiful grand pianoforte in its lines and curves that has ever been made was then manufactured. In 1791, he carried his scale up to C, five and a half octaves; in 1794, down to C, six octaves, always with care for the artistic form. The pedals were attached to the front legs of the stand, on which the instrument rested. The right foot pedal acted first as the piano register, shifting the impact of each hammer to two unisons instead of three; a wooden stop in the right hand key-block permitted the action to be shifted yet further to the right, and reducing the blow to one string only, produced the pianissimo register, or una corda, of indescribable attractiveness of sound. The cause of this was in the reflected vibration through the bridge to the untouched strings. The present school of pianoforte playing rejects this effect altogether, but Beethoven valued it, and indicated its use in some of his great works. Steibert called the una corda the celeste, which is more appropriate to it than Adam's application of this name to the harp-stop, by which the latter has gone ever since.

Digitized by Google

(To be continued).

MODESTY IN CONNECTION WITH MUSIC AND ITS SISTER ARTS.

PAPER II.

It is generally accepted by all who labour mentally or bodily, that there is a certain amount of self-assurance necessary if we wish to make headway in our respective avocations. Yet at the same time we must be very discreet in saying such a thing, for fear it should be misunderstood; for this self-assurance if misapplied is the seed of vanity. It is observable from the highest to the lowest: we see it playing about the work of the common labourer, on the canvas of the successful artist, in the lives and works of musicians of accepted fame, in the mendicant whose canvas is the London flagstones, endeavouring to convince the public of the artistic merit that exists in his work by writing the words "I am an artist." I was rather amused a few weeks back, by observing the conceit of an itinerant street singer. He was a man, I should say, who had seen "brighter days," but whose present degraded position was due to a "common weakness;" after going through some hackneyed ballad, he solicited alms of those who were standing round, evidently thinking he had well earned the right of asking. And judging from his exertions, he had; but the crowd was not appreciative—the people seemed reticent to encourage his "talent." So after returning his almost penniless hat to its accepted place of location, he remarked (with an air of injured talent, as he turned on his heels once more) "and this is artistic England!" I felt greatly inclined to remark, "It is," but such men as this we pity, and as they can hardly be said to enter the pale of art, we must dismiss them from our subject; but we are inclined to look upon conceited and egotistical art workers with great contempt. It is quite necessary for an artist to feel his ability and to feel a natural degree of pride from the fact of his being in possession of talent; but the gift is not his own—he is simply the instrument through which it has pleased the "Giver" that art should flow.

If we take a glass of pure water, and mix it with a dirty substance, it at once becomes impure, but the impurity is in the dirty substance, not in the water; it is so with music, which in itself is so pure, but if it mingles with impurities it becomes unclean. Pride is this impurity, which is the great opposite to music and crushes with relentless hatred its loving influence. How many clever men we see utterly ruined, how many lives wasted, by this greatest of humanity's failings! This pride in some men will very often get to such a pitch that they will in course of time begin to look upon art as something which in their "exalted positions" they deign to patronise. We cannot indeed be too careful when we praise people—even encouragement may be too lavishly bestowed; let us leave the young artist alone, let him work on in the realms of "art" undisturbed. Let him, I say, work on for the love of that which he follows, instil into him that he is but a poor journeyman in "His" workshop. Tell him not that the pinnacle of fame is easy to reach, but rather impress upon his youthful imagination that it is a road which is hard and stony at first to travel, but as he gets on he will find that it becomes easier and smoother to traverse. Conscientious art workers need neither praise or encouragement from human lips. Art will whisper words of consolation which will urge on energy, and as time goes on, he will find a world of such resplendent beauty open to him such as he has never seen before. It will be always present with him; it will enable him to appreciate that which before he was unable to. Charity will be his watchword, and art his companion. The ore of humanity (instead of being crusted over with the rust of conceit) will shine out with dazzling brightness; he will feel that emotion, half rapturous, half sad, that can fill one's soul when listening to some great masterpiece—it may be of music, poetry, or perchance a splendid outburst of eloquence, and he may have this same feeling come over him at the sight of a marvellous picture. With what rapture does he listen devoutly to the lofty strains of that massive master Beethoven, to the tender soul-stirring music of Mendelssohn!—the rapture of gratitude to Him for sending such great spirits whose ears have heard such inscrutable things, which they can but translate into sound for us! What beautiful things Beethoven must have heard if his music is but an echo of his thoughts! Yet, nevertheless, we feel a little sad, for one cannot help feeling such a feebleness of stature—there is the thought, subdued, perhaps half latent, yet none the less real—and why does this feeling come over us? it is because we are but children grouping in semi-darkness—using what? the prattling language of children. Yet we have been in the presence of "men heroes" whose eyes are opened to see that which is nearly obscure to us. We have heard with bated breath their bold strong utterances. What shall we do? What can we do? What is left for us to do? Why, to strive with unflinching ardour, to follow in their wake. Who can tell but that some day we may find this great era of recognised childhood, the precursor, or as our Teuton friends would say, the apprenticeship, of full manhood. Even in this life, modest art-workers will tell us that through art we may have glimpses short but clear of the higher realities, and as we see, so we interpret to others by means of art. I say, even here we may have partial sight, and catch a reflection from that "glory" that will make us truer, nobler, and more courageous. From the angels who see this glory is evoked the angels' song; from us who see so dimly, is evoked what?

Do not such thoughts as these make us abhor conceited people? Do not they make us feel, that to touch them, we shall become contaminated? All these thoughts, however small they make us feel, yet in our littleness tell us we may be real; they should also bring comfort, for we must remember "No man has a right to underrate honest work, whether his own or another man's." When Shakespeare remarked "that to be honest is to be one man picked out of ten thousand," he was not more harsh than true. The paucity of such men make them so precious; if we could pick up diamonds as easily as we do the particles of sand on the sea-shore, they would at once lose their value. This seems strange to say, but it has always struck me as being a dispensation of Providence that His faithful servants should stand out, with exceptional prominence. With all art there should be a feeling of rest, of consolation, and of peace, in which nothing becomes a man so much as modesty and humility. Let us strain our ears to catch the song of love, which is sung continually by the angels; let us try with a common brotherhood, those of us who are here below, to encourage this modest love; let us join hands and hearts in sending up our portion, that with one grand and exultant pean of joy we may mingle our hearts' song with those above, that the one anthem of devotion may echo through the arches of heaven with a resonance transcending the power of human words to describe, that our one great "mission" may resound o'er the Paradise hills with such grandeur that as it ascends onwards and upwards to the Eternal Throne we may trace a smile of recognition and delight on the countenance of Him who has bestowed on us such power of praise. Who is it that would dare to be vain that can appreciate such thoughts as these, for it is only by looking at such a virtue as "modesty" from the highest stand-point that we are enabled to find something which is detrimental to the progress of its opposing vice.

GEO. F. GROVER.

Digitized by Google

A PROPOSED WELSH MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

Mr Brinley Richards's suggestion that Cardiff should, like several English towns, get up a musical festival, is well worthy of consideration. There are several reasons why the effort should be made, and there are also substantial reasons for expecting such an effort to prove successful. We mention Cardiff rather than any other town in Wales simply because Mr. Richards named it, but any considerable town might take the hint and try the experiment. Of material there is no lack. If such an institution as an Annual or Triennial Musical Festival can find the necessary material anywhere, it ought to find it with greater facility in this part of the country than anywhere else. Wales abounds in large and well-trained choirs. Every town, every village, almost every place of of worship, has its choir. All that is needed is co-operation under one conductor. But here we come face to face with an obstacle, which. we fear, no ordinary effort will push out of the way. Mr. Brinley Richards has suggested the institution, and we have every reason to believe that, coming from him, the suggestion will be received throughout the Principality with great respect. But he would need go a step further. He would, in our opinion, require to show the advantages which music-loving Wales would gain from such an institution, and further how the object would most likely be made successful. At present the choirs in different localities are trained by their leaders quite independently of one another. Each choir makes its selection of musical compositions, and gets them up. Very frequently they have entered the lists as competitors at some local eisteddfod and of course, they practise separately, and with a view to win a prize. The difficulty of amalgamation under such circumstances must be obvious. Local eisteddfodau and consolidation or amalgamation of choirs are, we fear, hostile to each other. That very competition that acts as a stimulus to the several choirs acts also as a hindrance to their amalgamation. In England it can hardly be said that such an obstacle exists, so that large choirs are possible there. At the same time the advantages of the institution which Mr. Richards so strongly recommends are such as to make it desirable that the genuine lovers of music in Wales should set themselves to see if nothing whatever can be done. We believe that Wales suffers from its neglect of great musical compositions. That is to say, the time and labour of the choirs are spent upon detached choruses and similar compositions, to the neglect of the works from which the composition has been taken. We do not say this is a fault everywhere. At Swansea several works have been got up from beginning to end by a choral society which practises in that town. But there is no denying the assertion that the usual custom is to learn extracts. A chorus is selected from the "Messiah" or from "Acis and Galatea," or other work, and much time is devoted to it. But how can a detached chorus be fully appreciated? It occurs only as a part of a whole, as a portion of a complete edifice. To understand it, to know precisely what it means, and consequently to know how it should be sung, it should be studied in its place. The composer inserted it in his work to fit a certain place. It is built, so to speak, on what preceded it, and is made to correspond with its surroundings. In order, then, to give it the force intended by the composer, it should be studied in, and not out of, its own place. How can one give due effect to such pieces unless he knows what effect was intended, and how can he discover the intention without studying the work as a whole? In delivering their verdict on the singing of the choirs, the adjudicators laid stress upon the fact that the intention of the composer was evidently misunderstood in some of the passages. But how can this mistake be avoided? Of course, it may, to a large extent, be avoided, if the conductor, having thoroughly studied the composition himself, takes good care to impart his ideas to his choir. But we are firmly persuaded that our great composers will never have ample justice done to them until the rendering of their chief productions in their entirety becomes more common. We hope, therefore, that Mr. Brinley Richards, having thrown out a happy suggestion, will endeavour, for the sake of the musical reputation of his own country, to strive to realise it.—South Wales Daily News.

Dr. J. Stainer's new work for the Gloucester Festival is reported to be a composition of much interest and effect.

MUSIC STRINGS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF ALL KINDS OF

STRINGS FOR VIOLIN, VIOLA, VIOLONCELLO, DOUBLE BASS HARP, ZITHER, GUITAR, BANJO, &c., &c.,

Have always in Stock the Largest Assortment of Music Strings of any House in the World.

39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

All Kinds of Strings covered in a superior manner by powerful machines, made on the best principle with all modern improvements.

JUST PUBLISHED, "MORNING and EVENING SERVICE," set to music for the especial use of Parish Choirs, by FREDK. HUNNIBELL, F.C.O. Price, 1s.; or separately, 8d. and 6d.
London: NOVELLO, EWER & CO.

WANTED, Preparation by Correspondence for PRELIMINARY LITERARY EXAMINATION for MUS.BAC. Degree (Oxford Senior Local). Please state Terms to G., care of Weekes and Co., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

GASPARO SPONTINI, AND HECTOR BERLIOZ. By Miss Edith E. Southgate.
MUSICAL INTELLIGENCE:—Cardiff—Promenade Concerts, Covent Garden—Beverley—Carnarvon—Melbourne—Long Eaton—Carmarthen.
FOREIGN MUSICAL INTELLIGENCE.
ORGAN NEWS:—Fisheries Exhibition—Godalming—Wisbech—Cardiff—Limerick—Bakewell.
THE HISTORY OF THE PIANOFORTE. By A. J. Hipkins.
MODESTY IN CONNECTION WITH MUSIC AND ITS SISTER ARTS—Paper II.
A PROPOSED WELSH MUSICAL FESTIVAL.
EDITORIAL:—A Musical Experience in Wales—An Observation Anent Military Bands—The Opera, Past, Present, and Future.
THE VOICE MUSICALLY AND MEDICALLY CONSIDERED. By Armand Semple, B.A., M.B., Cantab., M.R.C.P., Lond.
CORRESPONDENCE:—"Counterpoint."
PASSING EVENTS. Service Lists, &c.

MUSICAL THE STANDARD

LONDON: SATURDAY, AUGUST 18, 1883.

A MUSICAL EXPERIENCE IN WALES.

ANNUALLY much is written and said about the recurring ancient Eisteddfod. The importance of the meeting of the present year has perhaps caused more than usual to be both written and said about it. To some extent, the special character and importance of the Eisteddfod just concluded are to be ascribed to the fact that the meeting took place at Cardiff. The Festival, like that ancient and now chief town of south Wales, had some contrasts to present and much of encouragement to show. Just as at one side of Cardiff stands the quiet, stately old castle, emblem of the still life of a once existing picturesque, but now impossible, feudalism, and on the other side of the town is found the busy life of a huge commerce, congested and partly strangled for want of space—so the Eisteddfod as an institution shows in one direction a weak craving after art forms which are primitive, and of the past, whilst in the other direction there is the presence of a real, living, healthy enthusiasm, and a downright, honest, earnest desire to cultivate the divine art upon a wide and sensible basis. Those who have read the admirable comments of the shrewd special correspondent of the Daily Telegraph will at once realise the situation. The Welsh Eisteddfodau are indeed institutions requiring the full light of day, and the nourishment of vigorous modern thought, in order that they may not only continue to exist, but grow into a timely and beneficent gain, not only to the inhabitants of the Principality, but to the whole world of art. It is, of course, not unnatural that many will still persist in ascribing to the Eisteddfod an archaic character. To carry this doctrine too far, as many well-meaning supporters of the Eisteddfodau still do, is to take a position as absurd in its way as would be a proposal to return to any of the other typical forms of mediæval life. The Welsh Eisteddfodau would indeed cease, save that a more generous policy has prevailed to a considerable extent, and been the means of more or less adapting such meetings to the exigencies of modern artistic life. One has nothing to urge against the picturesque retention of old features and the performance of traditional Welsh melodies; but it is important that so valuable an institution as the Eisteddfod may be made, should not be lost in that exclusive and hopeless clinging to effete and worn-out forms and customs which in the end would, unless modified by a recognition of present art requirements, destroy the very institutions it was intended to preserve. The bringing of the Eisteddfodau to towns having such a wholesome admixture of modern artistic impulses and earnest belief in the progress of institutions intended to benefit the human race as are possessed by Cardiff and Liverpool, has practically brought to an issue the questions, Is the Eisteddfod to droop away in the Welsh mountains and be lost in the mists of that mistaken antiquity-loving spirit which embraces rather unconsciously to destroy than to preserve? or, Is it to be supported with a combined spirit of reverence for its age and long continued national service, and to be strengthened by judicious and earnestly applied modern thought into a powerful engine for the artistic development of one of the most musically gifted races to be found on the face of the earth? Despite certain shortcomings ever attending the control of large meetings, Cardiff has displayed that public spirit which may always be confidently expected of one of the grandest centres of healthy, vigorous, commercial life to be found in the United Kingdom. An enormous building, with a fine large concert organ by BRINDLEY and FOSTER, an ample staff of English and Welsh musical and literary adjudicators, and a series of high-class concerts, were awaiting the beseiging army of competitors and listeners. A London orchestra formed a notable feature of the exhaustive scheme. Under the management of the able concert agent, Mr. J. STEDMAN, this department was as perfect as it could well be, and included such leading players as Herr POLLITZER, Messrs. WATSON, Herr BERNHARDT, Messrs. WOOLHOUSE, REYNOLDS, BARRY, G. HORTON, H. LAZARUS, WOOTTON, WENDLAND, W. MORROW, CHATTAWAY, SMITH, &c. The welcome innovation of such an array of instrumental skill in the exemplification of the orchestral masterpieces of MOZART, BEETHOVEN, SCHUBERT, MENDELSSOHN, WEBER, &c., was an effort indeed worthy of art-loving Cardiff, and for this the town and visitors were chiefly indebted to Mr. S. AITKEN, the esteemed and able Chairman of the Music Committee, whose earnestness, large-sightedness and musical experience were simply invaluable. This gentleman is not only an enthusiastic caterer for the public but an accomplished and talented musician, playing the organ part in SULLIVAN'S "In Memoriam" overture at one of the recent Cardiff concerts with admirable judgment, and giving other practical proofs during the Eisteddfod of his artistic taste and musical skill. Nor must the artistic support of such men as Mr. BROOKSBANK, Mus.Bac. (organist of Llandaff Cathedral) and Mr. W. SCOTT (whose admirable performance of HANDEL'S 2nd Organ Concerto was a principal feature of one of the concerts) be overlooked. Mr. S. AITKEN'S forethought in the provision of such illustrations of the great composers' choicest works presented in their entirety, furnished a memorable precedent at perhaps the most memorable Eisteddfod yet held; and greatly helped to weld the ancient institution to the exigencies of the art of our own times; and by this happy adaptation of the purposes of the venerable Welsh nursery of vocal and instrumental music to the present requirements of living Welshmen, such worthy to be recorded judgment and energy has, whatever the heedless lovers of antiquity for its own sake may assert, helped not a little to satisfactorily solve the question of the future hopeful existence of the Eisteddfodau. The admirable precision, excellent discipline and earnestness of some of the competing choirs again showed the real life of Welsh musical instincts. To see an audience of many thousands patiently seated through a long and severely contested trial of vocal skill was truly an invigorating spectacle. The leading merits of the different choirs were displayed in the directions of certainty of attack and a watchful unity of purpose. Their defects were a proneness to sing out of tune usually on the sharp side through the application of a too abundant energy and the in itself excellent habit of sharply defining the pronunciation of the consonants, and the occasional want of a well sustained piano. The singing of a choir of male voices; the in every way admirable performance of the successful Penrhyn Choir (under the leadership of Dr. ROLAND ROGERS, of Bangor, who conducted with rare tact and judgment); and the singing of the Llanelly Choir (taking the second prize at the great choral competition) were efforts to be duly remembered. The successful performances of the Cardiff string quartet party and of the Cardiff Orchestral Society were characterized by much power and promise. The wisdom of the introduction of good orchestral concerts found an indirect though emphatic justification in the competitions upon various instruments; these revealing, among other tokens of progress, excellent performers on the piccolo, flute, trombone, &c., and illustrating the preparedness of the Welsh people for the development of instrumental music. The solo vocal trials brought to the front some good singers, one, Miss IDA BROWN, attracting much attention by her capital contralto singing. The quartet singing again brought forward some talented displays of the vocal art. The solo performances on the organ, pianoforte, and harmonium also showed much skill. The prizes for the cantata, anthem and duet for pianoforte and harmonium were withheld; and the chief bardic prize being also withheld, the Eisteddfod lost in consequence the picturesque old custom of chairing the bard. The Marquis of Bute presided upon several occasions and took a large interest in the proceedings, attending almost every meeting in a most praiseworthy manner. This was as it should be, for upon this esteemed nobleman, the "King of South Wales," has fallen a commercial and artistic responsibility almost unique. The eyes of the world indeed look to him not only to aid by large personal sacrifices in freeing great commercial interests from the thraldom of territorial restrictive interests, but to assist in the due development of Welsh art of all kinds by the exercise of an intelligent patronage and encouragement. There are hopeful signs that the Marquis of Bute will, indeed, do his best to foster the commerce and art of the Principality. The other presidents included Dean Vaughan, Archdeacon Griffiths, Sir E. Reed, &c.

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Among the Welsh musicians present were Mr. Brinley Richards, who urged upon one occasion the institution in rich Cardiff of a musical festival, Mr. John Thomas, who has succeeded in raising a scholarship for Wales at the Royal Academy of Music, to be held alternately by vocal and instrumental students, Mr. Jenkins, Mr. E. Evans, &c. The English musicians assisting included Sir G. A. Macfarren, Mr. J. Barnby, Mr. Joseph Bennett, &c. The disappointments of the Festival were centred in the proceedings of the last day, when the vast surging audience of some 20,000 took possession of the entire building, including the orchestra, so that the leading features of the final scheme of a concert of combined choirs had to be abandoned, an unfortunate termination which was chiefly brought about by allowing, from the first day onwards, the occupiers of the shilling places to clamber over the barriers to the higher priced seats, an irregularity which naturally led to a kind of demoralization, though it must be noted that the public behaved with much more patience and forbearance than might have been expected under their disappointment; and in certain of the fruitless competitions in which the prizes remained unawarded from the lack of works of sufficient merit to justify the favourable judgment of the adjudicators. However, the national Eisteddfod of 1883 was a grand and striking event, proving abundantly the presence in the sister country of remarkable musical gifts, extensive cultivation, and unmistakable earnestness. That the artistic power of the Principality will be discreetly fostered, that the ancient Eisteddfodau will continue under wise guidance to promote the development of Welsh talent, and that these interesting and important meetings will still fulfil their original purposes upon a sufficiently enlarged and enlightened basis to expand their objects in accordance and in just proportion with the exigencies of our rapidly advancing artistic life, must indeed be the earnest wishes of all anxious for the highest attainable growth and welfare of the talented people of Wales, and of those near neighbours whose interest is ever onwards, bound up in the doings of the gifted, hospitable, kindhearted inhabitants of the Cambrian plains and mountains.

E. H. Turpin.

AN OBSERVATION ANENT MILITARY BANDS.

The growth of brass instruments played with valves has assumed something of the form of an abuse, as having invaded in many military and brass bands the entire brass family. Some recent experience induces me to urge upon military authorities the importance of retaining the older members of the brass genus, as the French horn, trumpet, and trombone, with slides; not only as regards the superiority of their tone-qualities, but as the means of imparting a better and more elastic temperament, so to speak, to the military orchestra. I fully concede the necessary employment of brass instruments of such executive facilities and manipulative conveniences as are obviously possessed by those playing chiefly in the second and third octaves of their respective harmonics, and having a complete and handy chromatic compass by means of valves; but on the other hand, the exclusive use of valve brass instruments tends to a lack of pure and varied tone, to a loss, in consequence, of some power, and to the presence of a defective temperament, inasmuch as the valve instruments, even in the hands of experienced players, are rarely, if ever, in perfect tune with each other in the mass. The employment of valve trombones in a complete military band of much excellence especially called my attention to this matter, and convinced me that in this department alone it was a mistake to sacrifice a group of instruments possessing a pure, free tone, and by the simple medium of the slide having the power of infusing into the general mass of sound strong triads in perfect tune. The observation must also be extended to the group of French horns, and even to the re-introduction of the old slide trumpets, for which parts could easily be added to the usual score. The use of these instruments with a large number of open sounds presents a distinct gain, for the wood instruments with keys are also somewhat wanting in elasticity of temperament, and the powerful and to be made perfectly in tune chords of the trumpets, horns, and especially trombones with slides, will be found to permeate and draw together the whole of the mass of military instruments into one perfectly harmonious, ringing sound; a function performed by these same instruments in the stringed, or what Mr. H. Chorley sometimes called the "civil orchestra." It is needless to point out that the power of the military band is obviously increased in this way, not only by the direct presence of true tune, but by the increased confidence gained by performers, sensitive as to tonality, feeling the wholesome presence of a massive body of naturally well-tuned sound. In the brass band pure and simple the retention of the slide trombones at least lends purity and brightness to the general level monotony of a body of valve brass instruments. I duly recognise the difficulties of lipping to be encountered on horseback or on the march by performers playing for the most part in the upper octaves of the harmonic range under conditions of movement involving lip disturbance. Still, it must surely be worthy of the attention of military musical authorities to duly consider the importance of retaining the presence of instruments boasting the advantage of such perfect and simple mechanisms. E. H. T.

Digitized by Google

THE OPERA: PAST, PRESENT, AND FUTURE.

"Rumour, full of tongues," may lie through the throat as in Shakespeare's time, but one thing seems to be certain: the monopoly of "Italian "Opera" can no longer be maintained. The air, of late, has been pregnant with warnings, and signs of the times. The Times (quoted in these columns) had a significant "last notice" of the theatre in Covent Garden a few weeks ago, and we hear, now, that the immense building on the Thames Embankment is to be completed in time for the season of 1884, with a view to the performances of European opera, French, German, Italian, and it may be hoped, English. Every accommodation will be provided for the public, and it is said—almost too good to be true—that the extravagant prices of admission (to the stalls for instance), will be reduced 50 per cent.

Good news, this, for the long suffering and severely fleeced inhabitants of West London. The "stars," great and little, must hide their diminished rays; vocalists may no longer rely on the trickery of roulades and fioriture; the barrel-organ tunes of Bellini, Mercadante, and other degenerate descendants of the old Italian school, will give place to the "leit-"motifs" of Wagner, and it may be Mr. A. C. Mackenzie! The sunny land of ague, malaria, earthquakes, and chronic mendicancy already sees the hand-writing on the walls, not in Hebrew characters to be deciphered by a second Daniel, but in letters to be "read" by those that "run." The reign of humbug and imposture draws towards its ignominious end. A brighter day is about to dawn. It may be remembered that the "King's Theatre" in the Haymarket had a monopoly of Italian opera for a long period. Fashion supported the establishment far more than music. The five gentlemen stood up and displayed their frilled shirts and diamond studs in "fops' alley;" and the ladies glittered with diamonds in the boxes on the evening of a "Drawing Room" day. "Full dress" was so rigorously enforced that on one occasion, in 1817, five gentlemen were turned back from the gallery because they wore coloured neck-ties; and a seat in the gallery then cost five shillings! The pit, however, occupied half the floor of the auditorium, and admission to that part of the house might be secured, through the medium of a music-seller, for about eight shillings, the "regulation" price being ten.

The writer remembers to have seen his father's opera hat, a fashionable head-gear at the beginning of the century, in the form of the military "cocked" covering for the head. Spagnoletti then acted both as conductor and "leader," altenately waving his fiddle-stick and playing on the violin. At Boulogne-sur-Mer, in 1838, the same phenomenon was seen by the writer. No regular conductor was to be found anywhere; but Mr. Costa, who took the "chair" at the King's Theatre between 1820 and 1830, "changed all that," as Sganarelle says in "Le Médécin malgre lui." A Frenchman named Laporte directed the King's Theatre up to the year 1841. He was always in difficulties, and the artists were obliged to dun him for their salaries. Mr. Lumley, Laporte's lawyer, took the theatre in 1842, and went on swimmingly until 1846, when he quarrelled with his conductor, Mr. Costa, and a secession took place. Costa retired in triumph, carrying with him Grisi, Persiani, Tamburini, Mario—in fact, all the "stars" except old Lablache.

The "Royal Italian Opera" was established by the seceders in 1847, and still exists under the Gye dynasty. Mr. Lumley still held on at the old house in the Haymarket, called, after the accession of Queen Victoria in 1837, "Her Majesty's Theatre;" and introduced the famous Jenny Lind in 1847; but in spite of her success, as a "star," fortune frowned upon the old Opera, and poor Lumley failed. The theatre was closed for a time and then re-opened, with Signor Arditi as conductor. It was burnt down in December, 1867. Mr. Mapleson has come conspicuously to the front, and after a brief coalition with Mr. Gye, at Covent Garden, engaged "old "Drury," and held annual seasons of opera (on the retirement of Mr. Wood), from 1871 up to 1877, when he returned to the rebuilt theatre in the Haymarket. Mdme. Christine Nilsson was always a staunch supporter and pillar of this institution. After several successful summer and winter seasons, Mr. Mapleson retired at the end of 1881, and it is understood that he made some arrangement with the Gye's to the effect that no opera of any kind or nationality should be performed at Her Majesty's for the time being. Mr. Gye, accordingly, has enjoyed a monopoly for the last two years, 1872 and 1873.

The new theatre on the embankment, it is supposed, will be under the direction of Mr. Mapleson, but this matters little so long as the public are properly treated, and the "star" system is put down. Mr. Carl Rosa has still golden opportunites before him at Drury Lane Theatre, but his seasons are too short. Herr Franke, too, promises to come forward again next Spring at the same house, and with Wagner's texts "interpreted" by a man like Herr Richter. Let all hope that he may find ample compensation for the (pecuniary) non-success of his spirited enterprise in 1882.

Gross personalities disfigured the crisis in 1847, when Lumley was left in the cold. The late Mr. Gruneisen, then critic of the defunct Morning Chronicle, took up the cudgels for Mr. Costa (now Sir Michael), and attacked Lumley's management with some acerbity. Even Jenny Lind was found fault with, and at length Mr. Lumley withdrew the daily advertisement. Of course at the "Royal "Italian" all was gold that glittered, in our friend Gruneisen's eyes; and it ought to be stated in his favour, that he introduced the famous contralto, Mdlle. Alboni, as he afterwards brought over to England Dr. Hans von Bulow, the pianist. Gruneisen was ever at war with the Gyes, and paid for his admission to their theatre. The Morning Chronicle, moreover, during a short interregnum of sacerdotal or "ritual" churchianity, sternly refused to accept any honorary admissions for their musical reporter. Many years ago, some one suggested an omnibus box for the use of all the critics, but the objection that some of them would play the "bear and lion," as in Dr. Watts's nursery line, was held to be fatal. One critic had personally abused another in print; the assailed one retorted by ridiculing his adversary's articles, in which, sad to relate, appeared such solecisms as the key of A sharp, and E sharp, (for A and E major). A. M.

Digitized by Google

THE VOICE

MUSICALLY AND MEDICALLY CONSIDERED.

BY

Armand Semple, B.A., M.B., Cantab., M.R.C.P., Lond.,

Physician to the Royal Society of Musicians.

(Continued from page 78).

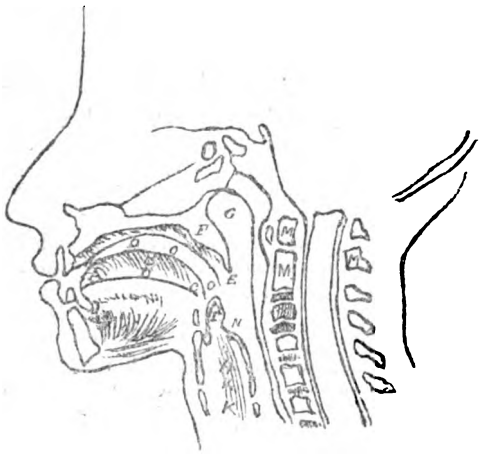
The accompanying plate shows the parts of the throat and mouth which are brought into action during the development of the voice.



While the mouth remains shut, the tongue takes the form A, B, C. At E is seen the Uvula, a small appendage attached to the Soft Palate F, and which may be seen at the back of the throat.

The passage behind the uvula and communicating with the nose is shown at G.

The Larynx, or Vocal Organ, is represented at H. I is the Epiglottis. K is the Trachea (Windpipe). L is the Rima Glottidis (chink of the glottis), the inlet of the larynx, through which vocal sounds are produced by the air ascending from the lungs. The letters M, M, M, indicate the spinal vertebræ. N is the expansion of the throat; and O, O, O, the cavity of the mouth.

The trachea (windpipe) is capable by nature of rising and falling, and this action conveys to the larynx (vocal organ) a motion, either upwards towards the cavity of the mouth (O) or downwards towards the expansion of the throat (N). In the production of the grave sounds the windpipe (K) descends, and the inclination of the larynx (H) is towards the expansion of the throat (N). In the passage from the grave to the acute sounds, the windpipe (K) rises gradually, and the larynx (H) ascends, inclining towards the cavity of the mouth (O), thus causing the so-called head-vibration. During this action, the internal muscles of the larynx (K) either contract or dilate, gradually contracting for the acute sounds and dilating for the grave.

This elastic property of the muscles endows the rima glottidis (entrance of the glottis) with the power of forming itself into various spaces. Now every sound is generated in a space, and from these various spaces the different sounds of the voice take their origin, the quality of each individual voice being declared by the natural position of the organ in the throat.

The Different Positions of the Mouth, and the Effects Resulting from each Position.

When pronouncing the opening sound of the Italian A (Anglice Ah), the tongue lies nearly flat in the mouth, as represented at A, D, C. The uvula (E) and the soft palate (F) recede towards (G), the passage which communicates with the nose, thus causing a space of sufficient calibre to allow the sound to pass with perfect freedom, and with capability of vibration. At the commencement of the cultivation of a voice, this is perhaps the best position for practice, but the continuous habit of practising upon this position exclusively, is in my opinion injudicious if not positively injurious, especially in the production of the higher notes, as it throws the voice too far back in the throat and renders its quality too open. This subject will, however, be treated more fully hereafter.

The results which are obtained by singing in other positions are given below:—

1. The pronunciation of the sound O. Here the lips project. The muscles of the throat are compressed, and thus a free expansion of the sound is prevented. The sound is thick in quality, and is not capable of any vibratory power.

2. When the lips are extended too far laterally, a thin quality of sound is produced, since in this case the muscles of the throat and mouth are rendered stiff, and thus the sound possesses no capability of expansion and very little power of vibration.

If the teeth are too much closed, nearly the same effect is produced as when the mouth is shut, for the whole space is then compressed. The tongue curves in the direction A, B, C, and the soft palate (F) and the uvula (E) descend. The sound is thus prevented from issuing freely, and makes its way through the passage (G) which communicates with the nose. The sound thus becomes of a nasal quality.

If the construction of the vocal organ is not understood, and the voice is not formed on correct principles, the organ always remains in an imperfect condition, and this leads to incorrect intonation. The slightest effort or compression either disturbs or obstructs natural action; at first the effect is not felt, but very soon the muscles become relaxed, and their flexible powers are lost. The voice becomes harsh, and the sounds are more and more imperfect, until the loss of correct intonation is atttributed to want of ear in the singer, whereas the fault really consists in improper development of the organ, by which all sounds can be made only with effort.

In all uncultivated voices defects exist, and these defects are the same in all the different qualities of voice in the organs both of the female and of the male; the same method of cultivation consequently must be employed in each, the only difference being that the male organisation is more rigid than that of the female, and therefore male voices cannot so easily be rendered flexible and extensive.

From what has been stated in earlier pages, it will be seen that the different voices may be classified as follows:—

1. Bass, Baritone, and Contralto.
2. Tenore Robusto and Mezzo-Soprano.
3. Tenore Leggiero and Soprano.

The organ of the Bass, Baritone, and Contralto being of strong muscular construction and difficult to render flexible, produces the most effect in sustained singing —canto di portamento. The Baritone is, however, softer and more flexible than the bass, and is therefore more adapted for dramatic effects and is of greater brilliancy. The Tenore Robusto and Mezzo-Soprano are of full quality and capable of considerable flexibility. They are the most suited for the expression of the stronger as well as the more delicate sentiments and passions, especially in the recitative, which calls for energy and declamatory power. These voices are therefore cultivated for sacred music and grand opera (opera seria).

The Tenore Leggiero and Soprano, from their delicate muscular construction, are thin and light in quality, and usually weak or indistinct in the lower notes, since the vocal organ is situated high in the throat. They are not effective in the canto di portamento, and seldom even in drama. From their brilliancy of execution and clearness, they are chiefly cultivated for light opera and opera bouffa.

As a memento of his visit to Windsor Castle, the Queen has presented Mr. Baillie Hamilton with her portrait and autograph set in rich velvet and encased in a frame of silver filigree work, as a souvenir of his performance before Her Majesty on the vocalion at Windsor.—Musical World.

Digitized by Google

Correspondence.

"COUNTERPOINT."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "MUSICAL STANDARD."

SIR,—I take an early opportunity of thanking Dr. Hiles for his manly and outspoken letter in your last issue. It is only by means of very plain speaking that we can hope to make an impression on teachers who have for years been travelling along the old paths; but I believe that, in the end, the true principles of art will prove triumphant, and our present counterpoint text-books will be consigned to a well-deserved oblivion. Unfortunately for my argument, considerations of space appear to have forbidden the insertion in the Musical Standard of most of the examples with which I have illustrated the text of my lecture. My object was to prove the falsity of most contrapuntal rules by an appeal to the works of the great masters; and at the College of Organists I had lithographed copies of these extracts from classical authorities freely circulated amongst the audience. Owing to the omission of these illustrations, readers of my paper in the Musical Standard can hardly form a fair idea of the real strength of the position which I have felt bound to take up; but in order that the matter may be properly placed before the musical world, I am now making arrangements for the production of my paper in pamphlet form, with all the musical examples properly set out.

It certainly appears strange that musicians still continue to use books which not only abound with glaring contradictions and inconsistencies, but are also known to be founded on principles directly opposed to the works of the great composers. How can we profess to admire a symphony of Beethoven, and at the same time uphold a system of study which is in conflict with every page of the score? Yet musicians of good repute are doing this every day, and appear to think that the obsolete rules of bygone ages must remain in force for all time. The present system of examinations for degrees in music has much to answer for in this respect, and although I have been a consistent advocate of the examination system, I am bound to say that it is at present working badly for the cause of musical progress. The fault is not in the system itself, but in the misuse of it on the part of the powers that be, and to this result the plan of selecting text-books has largely contributed. Candidates should be judged by their works rather than by their faith, yet the text-book system offers a direct encouragement to the "crammers," who lose sight of the artistic aspect of music in a vain and unprofitable adherence to the shibboleths of the examination room. Those who plead for some reasonable revision of the contrapuntal system are gravely informed that counterpoint is a "means to an end," and that, although the rules may be opposed to truth, yet a course of study under their guidance is likely, in some mysterious way, to benefit the student. It is possible that those who do not care to look beneath the surface may be content with such an explanation, but the "means to an end" argument is in reality the strongest condemnation of the existing system. We may fairly ask, What is the "end" sought to be achieved? and we shall of course be told that the object of all musical theory is to place the learner in a position to compose music if he has the genius requisite for the task, or at least to understand and appreciate the works of the great masters. Here, then, is the reductio ad absurdum of the argument. A student is trained to compose music by a system of restrictive rules, yet it is admitted that he can only produce satisfactory and original work by a consistent violation of the dogmas which he has been taught. One might as reasonably expect a child to walk after having his legs tied together, or a grown man to acquire the art of swimming with the assistance (?) of a millstone around his neck. To put the case in another way, would any sane person attempt to teach astronomy, geography, or indeed any subject of general education, by means of text-books dated two centuries back? This is, however, the present condition of the art of counterpoint, and so it will remain unless a determined effort is made to shake off the obselete fetters of a bygone age.

The fatal influence of the text-book system is directly responsible for the perpetuation of these errors, since students are compelled to work according to the ideas of the University Professors for the time being, and frequently to confess an adherence to views which are known to be erroneous. Sir George Macfarren's work was selected for criticism solely because it might be taken to represent the latest ideas of the most recently appointed University Professor; but I venture to say that if any other Cambridge text-book were found to contain a tithe of the errors and contradictions to be found in this work, it would be very quickly suppressed by the authorities.

I am aware that the enunciation of views such as these may place one, for a time, in a somewhat unenviable position, but that is a very small matter as compared with the interests of truth. Let it be remembered that the reform for which I am contending is no new thing. It dates from the writings of John Sebastian Bach, and our justification is to be found in every page of his incomparable Counterpoint."

As Dr. Hiles refer me to his own book on counterpoint, I may say that it was shewn to me a few weeks ago by a professional friend, and since then I have made a careful study of it. I earnestly advise every musician to do the same, and I believe most persons will rise from its perusal with a conviction of the truth of Dr. Hiles' theories, and a strong inclination to make a bonfire of any other counterpoint text-books which may happen to be in their possession.

I am Sir, yours faithfully,
HUMPHREY J. STARK.

Passing Events.

Sir G. A. Macfarren's oratorio, "David," written for the Leeds Festival, is in print, and is a work of a very high character.

The band of the Grenadier Guards, under the direction of Mr. D. Godfrey, gave a concert in Cardiff on August 15th.

Mr. J. Barnby's new psalm, written for the Leeds Festival, is said to be a work of much excellence, and to contain some effective choral writing.

The new oratorio, by Dr. G. B. Arnold, for Gloucester Festival, is being looked forward to as a work of much character and excellence.

The music trade season seems about to set in with considerable activity, and a large crop of new works, some of much importance, will be issued presently.

The new organ, built by Messrs. Brindley and Foster (consisting of 3 Manuals and Pedal organ, with some 40 stops), for the Albert Hall, Nottingham, will, it is said, be heard there for the first time next month.

It is said that the masterly pen of Mr. Joseph Bennett is secured for the analysis of the new and leading works to be performed at the approaching Leeds Festival; the works thus to be written about are Sir G. A. Macfarren's "David," Mr. Barnby's new "Psalm," etc.

The orchestra engaged for the Gloucester Festival includes many of our leading performers, and will doubtless prove an effective body of instrumentalists. Mr. C. L. Williams, the cathedral organist, has already proved himself to be an able conductor, and a notable Festival may be confidently expected.

Lord Garmoyle, the eldest son of Earl Cairns, is announced as about to be married to Miss Fortescue, a beautiful and clever actress at the Savoy Theatre. The lady, whose real name is Finney, and who is the daughter of the head of a large coal firm (Finney, Seal, & Co.), has, in the short time she has been upon the stage, won the respect and esteem of all who know her.—Musical World.

Speaking at the recent Eisteddfod, at Cardiff, Sir G. A. Macfarren strongly defended the claims of the old stave notation to general use, as most fully representing to the eye the multiform effects of sound, and as including many ingenious inventions. Upon the same occasion the Professor deprecated the habit, which prevails extensively in Wales, of singing too much from memory, and laid much stress upon the importance of constant practice in sight-seeing.

Despite the busy lives led by our leading musicians, and the still too largely prevailing neglect of our native composers, it is probable that no other country can, at the present time, show such a display of composing activity as is now being exhibited in England, and which will with due encouragement be enormously increased in the immediate future. Undoubtedly England is gradually taking up a leading position as a musical country, both from the productive and executive points of sight.

During the now fast departing summer season an unusually large number of American organists and musical people have visited England and the European continent, partly from motives of observation, and partly for pleasure. This aptitude for travelling on the part of our cousins, will undoubtedly be attended by the gain of enlarged views and a usefully extended experience; and to some extent will tend to rectify the prevailing leaning towards modern German art and art theories, which is now noticeable in the musical doings of the United States.

Digitized by Google

The Temple Church is now closed for the long vacation. The services will be resumed on October 7th.

The projected tour of Mr. Sims Reeves, which was to begin this week, will extend to the middle of October.

The programme of the Society of Arts Examinations for 1884 is now ready. Copies can be obtained gratis on application to the secretary.

A Musical Lectureship is part of the academical scheme of the new University College of South Wales and Monmouthshire. The College opens in Cardiff with the next term.

English opera is to be produced in New York next fall by Messrs. Brooks and Dickson at the Standard Theatre. Max Maretzek will be conductor, and a number of prominent artists will be members of the company. Two or three of Balfe's operas will be produced.

It is stated that Mr. F. H. Cowen is about to undertake a professional tour in the United States, on the invitation of Dr. Damrosch and Mr. George Henschel. He will conduct his cantata "St. Ursula," the "Scandinavian" Symphony, and other works.

The library of music of the late William Laidlaw, Esq. (of Liverpool), comprising full and vocal scores of operas, oratorios, and other works, publications of various musical societies, Handel's works by Arnold, orchestral parts of a large selection of compositions, theoretical treatises, etc., was to be sold by auction by Messrs. Puttick and Simpson on August 17th.

The Athenæum has it that the various Wagner societies in Germany have sent delegates to the number of 180 to Bayreuth to discuss the important question as to the future of the theatre in that town. It is said that the representations for next year are already assured, thanks to the disinterestedness of the artists, who will be content with a simple indemnity against loss in return for their services.

The Sacred Harmonic Society's offices have been removed to 12, John Street, Adelphi. The prospectus for the ensuing season will be ready early in September next, and will, it is thought, be found to contain works of such interest to the subscribers and friends of the society, and to the musical public and profession generally, as will command their hearty co-operation and support; and the council look forward with confidence to a success attending next season's concerts even greater than that attained by the last. It is announced that Mr. Charles Hallé will act as conductor, and Mr. W. H. Cummings as assistant conductor.

Not long ago, at a wedding in a village church, an amateur organist, in honour of the occasion, agreed to herald the entry of the bride into church and her exit therefrom by appropriate selections. The bride and bridegroom, and, indeed, all the persons immediately concerned, were what is known in society as "good" people, and there was a large assemblage of friends. The organist was equal—more than equal—to the occasion. As the bride, followed by her bridesmaids, entered the church, he crashed out the familiar strains, "See, the conquering hero comes." Perhaps it was a delicate attention on the part of the player with a view of inspiring courage into the bridegroom's heart.

In addition to being a thorough musician, Mdme. Rudersdorff was a most entertaining woman. The stories of her life are full of interest. She was a great favourite with the Princess Royal of England, who is now the Crown Princess of Prussia. Shortly after the marriage of the Princess, Madame Rudersdorff sang at a Court concert at Berlin, and was invited by the Crown Princess to breakfast with her. They breakfasted together informally, and afterwards madame sang several songs of Handel, the Princess's favourite composer, her royal hostess playing her accompaniments. After a while, the Princess proposed a visit to the nursery. As madame was sitting on the floor, with one child playing with the charms on her watch-chain, another hanging over her shoulder, and the baby in her arms, the door opened, and the Crown Prince walked in. The Princess arose and introduced her visitor. Madame looked up, and, with her ready tact and wit said, "Your Royal Highness, I must either disregard Court etiquette or drop the baby." The Prince bowed courteously, and said, with a smile, "Do what you like with etiquette, but regard the baby."

Dr. Spark, of the Leeds Town Hall, is giving a series of organ recitals in North Yorkshire, including Saltburn, Whitby, Market Weighton, Driffield, Beverley, Hull, etc. The first recital took place in the Parish Church, Saltburn, the programme including a concerto by Handel, a fugue by J. S. Bach, and other important and interesting works by Mendelssohn, Beethoven, Guilemont, Rossini, Batiste, and the performer himself, was highly appreciated by the audience. In the evening Dr. Spark presided at the organ at a festival of choirs, consisting of about 200 voices, and amongst the pieces sung with great effect was the new festival anthem, entitled, "And now, Israel, what doth the Lord thy God require of thee?" This piece, which formed quite the feature of the evening concert, is melodious and effective, and will be found useful for choirs. During the evening Dr. Spark performed several voluntaries of a character well suited to display the excellent organ built by Messrs. Foster and Andrews, Hull.

Surely the claque might be dispensed with at the opera! The claquers do their duty vigorously, but they check genuine applause, and this must, I should fancy, be of very much more value to singers than the applause they buy—for I take the individual singer, or her friends, to be responsible for the business. It is done in France, of course, and I gather from a recent event that it is now the habit in Italy. I judge so, because of what took place on the first night of a composition called "La Regina di Scozia" at the Folies Dramatiques. A lady dressed in black was seated in a stage-box. She had a large fan. When she opened the fan and used it, applause came from a section of the gallery in accordance with the vigour with which the fan was waved. When the instrument was closed the applause ceased. All this was so neatly done that it must have been practised, and, as the company came from Italy, I assume that it was practised there.—Illustrated Sporting and Dramatic News.

Service Lists.

THIRTEENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

AUGUST 19th.

London.

St. Paul's Cathedral.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Smart in F; Introit, Now my tongue, the mystery telling; Holy Communion, Smart in F. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Smart in F; Anthem, How beautiful are the feet, and Break forth into joy (Handel).

Foundling Chapel.—Morn.: Service, Tours in F; Anthem, God is our hope and strength (Greene). Aft.: Children's Service.

Holy Trinity, Gray's Inn Road.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Dykes in F; Jubilate, Chanted; Nicene Creed (Merbecke); Offertory Sentences (Grainger). Even.: Service, Magnificat, Parry in D; Nunc Dimittis, Chanted; Anthem, Solo and Chorus, Sing ye then, Let all men praise the Lord (Mendelssohn).

Holy Trinity, Tulse Hill.—Morn.: Chant Service. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Agutter in D; Anthem, How lovely are Thy dwellings (Spohr).

St. James's Private Episcopal Chapel, Southwark.—Morn.: Service, Introit, He is blessed that cometh (Mozart); Communion Service, Mozart in C, No. 1. Even.: Service, Stainer in E flat; Anthem, Hallelujah (Beethoven).

St. Magnus, London Bridge.—Morn.: Service, Opening Anthem, If we say (Calkin); Te Deum and Jubilate, Goss in A; Kyrie (Nares). Even.: Service, Cantate and Deus Misereatur, Goss in C; Anthem, To the Lord God (Goss).

St. Michael's, Cornhill.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Thorne in C; Anthem, Awake up my glory (Wise); Kyrie, Arnold in A; Creed, Stainer in G. Even. Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Thorne in E flat; Anthem, Thou, O God, art praised in Zion (Greene).

St. Margaret Pattens, Rood Lane, Fenchurch Street.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Smart in F; Benedictus, Dykes in F; Communion Service: Offertory Anthem, Lift thine eyes (Mendelssohn); Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei, and Gloria, Schubert in B flat. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Steggall in C; Anthem, From Thy love as a Father, "Redemption" (Gounod).

Digitized by Google

ST. PAUL'S, AVENUE ROAD, SOUTH HAMPSTEAD.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Tilleard in F; Benedictus, Turle; Kyrie, Tours in F; Offertory (Barnby); Credo, Sanctus and Gloria in excelsis, Tours in F. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Arnold in A; Anthem, Blessed are they (Tours).

ST. PAUL'S, BOW COMMON, E.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Chants; Holy Communion, Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, and Gloria in excelsis, Dykes in F; Benedictus and Agnus Die, Redhead in F; Offertory (Stainer). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Tours in F; Anthem, O rest in thd Lord, and He that shall endure to the end (Mendelssohn).

ST AUGUSTINE AND ST. FAITH, WATLING STREET.—Morn.: Service, Garrett in E; Introit, The Lord is the strength (South); Communion Service, Smart in F (throughout). Even.: Service, Gadsby in C; Anthem, Praise His awful name (Spohr).

ST. SAVIOUR'S, HOXTON. — Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Smart in F; Holy Communion; Kyrie, Credo, Sursum Corda, Sanctus, and Gloria in excelsis, Tours in F. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Stainer in F; Anthem, Lord how long (Mendelssohn).

ST. MARY BOLTONS, WEST BROMPTON, S.W.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Benedictus, Goss in C; Holy Communion, Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, and Agnus Dei and Gloria in excelsis, Monk in C; Offertory (Barnby). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Arnold in A; Anthem, He that shall endure to the end (Mendelssohn).

ST. SEPULCHRE'S, HOLBORN. — Morn: Service, Dykes in F; Anthem, Call to remembrance (Farrant). Even.: Service, Porter in D; Anthem, O taste and see (Goss).

Country.

ST. ASAPH CATHEDRAL. — Morn.: Service, Tours in F; Anthem, The Lord is my Shepherd (Macfarren). Even.: Service, The Litany; Anthem, Praise the Lord (Elvey).

ASHBURNE CHURCH, DERBYSHIRE. — Morn.: Service, Garrett in F; Kyrie, Credo and Gloria, Garrett in B flat. Even.: Service, Musgrave in F; Anthem, O come, let us worship (Mendelssohn).

BABBACOMBE (ALL SAINTS).—Morn: Service, Plain Song; Communion Service; Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei, Gloria in excelsis, Mozart's 1st Mass in C. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Faux Bourdons; Anthem, Hear my prayer (Mendelssohn).

BIRMINGHAM (S. ALBAN THE MARTYR).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Dykes in F; Holy Communion; Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Gloria, Dykes in F; Benedictus and Agnus Dei, Redman in D. Evensong: Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Parry in D.

BIRMINGHAM (ST. CYPRIAN'S, HAY MILLS).—Morn.: Service, Cobb in G; Anthem, O clap your hands (Stainer). Even.: Service, Cobb in G; Anthem, This is the day (Elvey).

DONCASTER (PARISH CHURCH).—Morn.: Service, Calkin in B flat. Even.: Service, Calkin in B flat; Anthem, The Lord is King (Trimnell).

DUBLIN, ST. PATRICK'S (NATIONAL) CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Aldrich in G; Holy Communion, Kyrie, Creed, Sanctus, Aldrich in G; Anthem, Rejoice in the Lord (Purcell). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Wheeler in C; Anthems, Distracted with care (Haydn) and O Lord Thou art my God (Haydn and Gaudry).

ELY CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Leslie in D; Benedictus, Plain Song; Kyrie, Credo, and Gloria, Richardson in F; Anthem, O that I knew (Bennett). Even.: Service, Anthem, The Lord hath done great things (Smart).

FOLKESTONE (ST. MICHAELS).—Morn.: Service, Communion Service, Mozart in C. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Garrett in F; Anthem, Come unto me (Husband).

HARROGATE (ST. PETER'S CHURCH). — Morn.: Service, Te Deum (Helmore); Benedictus, Chant; Anthem, Out of the Deep (Mozart); Kyrie (M. S.); Credo (Goss). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Tours in F; Anthem, As pants the hart (Spohr).

LLANDAFF CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Smart in G; The Litany. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Ebdon in C; Anthem, O Lord, how manifold (Barnby).

LICHFIELD CATHEDRAL. — Morn.: Service, Barnby in E; Communion Service, Barnby in E; Anthem, My song shall be of mercy (Kent). Even.: Service, Barnby in E; Anthem, O, God, when Thou appearest, "Splendente Te Deus" (Mozart).

LEEDS (ST. LAURENCE CHURCH, PUDSEY). — Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Chants; Kyrie and Credo, Best in F; Sanctus, Gibbons in C; Offertory Sentences, Strickland in D. Even. Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Chants; Anthem, Lord God of Heaven (Spohr).

LIVERPOOL CATHEDRAL.—Aft.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Banks in E flat; Anthem, The healing of blind Bartimaeus (Burstalll).

LIVERPOOL (ST. CUTHBERT'S, EVERTON).—Morn.: Service, Holy Communion, Smart in F. Even.: Service, Smart in F; Anthem, O where shall wisdom (Boyce).

MANCHESTER CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Full Communion Service, Stainer in E flat; Anthem, O taste and see (Goss). Aft.: Service, Stainer in E flat; Anthem, How lovely are Thy dwellings fair (Spohr).

MANCHESTER (ST. BENEDICT'S).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Sullivan in D; Kyrie and Credo, (Mercadante); Sanctus, Benedictus, and Agnus Dei, "Messe Solennelle" (Rossini). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Tours in F.

MANCHESTER (ST. JOHN BAPTIST, HULME).—Morn.: Service, Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei, and Gloria in excelsis, Agutter in B flat. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Bunnett in F.

PETERBOROUGH CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Ross in G; Introit, Send out Thy light; Communion Service, Smart in F. Even.: Service, King in C; Authem, Wherewithal (Elvey).

ROCHESTER CATHEDRAL. — Morn.: Service, Smart in F; Anthem, O come every one (Mendelssohn). Even.: Service, Smart in F; Anthem, The Lord is very great (Beckwith).

SALISBURY CATHEDRAL. Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Benedictus, Kyrie and Credo, Parry in D; Offertory (Stainer). Aft.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Parry in D; Anthem, Come let us sing (Mendelssohn).

SHERBORNE ABBEY. — Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Chants; Kyrie, Smart in G; Offertories (Barnby). Even.: Service, Anthem, O sing unto the Lord (Lyle).

WELLS CATHEDRAL. — Morn.: Service, Mendelssohn in A Introit, Drop down ye Heavens (Macfarren); Kyrie, Cooke in G. Even.: Service, Smart in F; Anthem, I was in the Spirit (Blow).

WORCESTER CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Smart in F; Anthem, Cast thy burden (Mendelssohn). Even. Service, Smart in F; Anthem, Praise His awful name (Spohr).

APPOINTMENT.

Mr. ERNEST SLATER, R.A.M., A.C.O. (late Assistant Organist of Exeter Cathedral), has been appointed Organist and Choir Master of Lambeth Palace Church.

HENRY SPEECHLY,
CAMDEN ORGAN STEAM FACTORY,
KING'S ROAD, ST. PANCRAS, LONDON, N.W.
ESTABLISHED 1860.

Specifications and Estimates for Organs of any Magnitude, also for Reconstructions, Repairs, and Re-voicing.

Tunings contracted for, and Tuners sent to all parts of the Country at regular intervals or when required.

ORGANS ON HIRE WITH OPTION OF PURCHASE.

 Church, Chamber, and Chancel Organs for Sale or Hire; One or Two Manuals. Ready for immediate use. Easy Terms if required.

☞ All Pipes and other Parts manufactured on the Premises.

Just Published.

HARVEST ANTHEM, "BLESSED BE THOU, LORD GOD OF ISRAEL." In Four Voices, by E. BUNNETT, Mus.D., Cantab. Octavo, Price Threepence.
London: NOVELLO, EWER & CO.

CANTATA:

"SENNACHERIB" ..... Price 1s. 6d.
(Composed for the Gloucester Festival, 1883.)

ORATORIO:

"AHAB" ..... Price 3s. od.
(First performed by the National Choral Society, Exeter Hall, April, 1864.)

MOTET:

23RD PSALM, "The Lord is my Shepherd"..... Price 1s. od.

MOTET:

43RD PSALM, "Give sentence" ..... Price 0s. 6d.

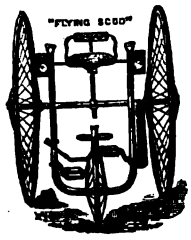
By GEORGE B. ARNOLD, Mus. Doc., Oxon.

WEEKES & CO.: 14, Hanover Street, London.
Orchestral Parts may be obtained from the Publishers.

CHRISTMAS HYMNS AND CAROLS. — New Edition. One Penny each.
"RING OUT, GLAD CHIMES, AT CHRISTMAS TIME."
"CHILDREN'S VOICES."
"CHRIST IS BORN IN BETHLEHEM."
"LULLABY."
"GATHER THE HOLLY BOUGH."
"CHRISTMAS MORNING."
"GLORY TO JESUS."
"HARK! WE HEAR THE CHILDREN SINGING."
Words by Mrs. Gaskell. Music by Edwin Lemare.
WEEKES & CO.: 14, Hanover Street, London, W.

Digitized by Google

BICYCLES AND TRICYCLES.
NEW AND SECOND-HAND.



"FLYING SCUD" and "ECLECTIC" TRICYCLES, are the Machines for 1883. Spoken of by the Daily News of January 30th as "Splendid machines." "NANCY LEE," Weldless Steel," and "NONSUCH" Steel Bicycles, from £5 5s. Any machine at maker's price for twelve or less equal monthly payments, or for £5 down and 20s. per month, or large discount and carriage paid for cash. Can be seen and tried before purchasing in our school (60 by 40, concrete floor, tuition free), adjoining Show-rooms, the largest in London, with over 400 new and second-hand on View. Machines bought, sold, cleaned, repaired (estimates given), warehoused, advanced upon and exchanged.

Illustrated Lists post free. Hours 9 till 7; Saturdays till 4.

Repairs of all kinds neatly, cheaply, and promptly executed. Cheapest house in the trade for fittings. Parts and sundries of all descriptions kept in stock.

Machines Let on Hire with Option of Purchase.

SOUTH LONDON MACHINISTS' COMPANY.

STEAM WORKS: Suffolk Works, Suffolk Grove, Great Suffolk Street, S.E. Show Rooms and Offices: 28 and 29, Suffolk Grove. Bicycle and Tricycle School: 18, Suffolk Grove. City Depot, Show Rooms, and School: Tower Chambers, Moorgate Street, E.C. (Nearly opposite Moorgate Street Station.) PERAMBULATORS and all Domestic Machines at lowest prices for cash, or on easy terms without extra charge. Lists free. State kind required.

ESTABLISHED 1872.

When writing please say where you saw this advertisement.

T. R. WILLIS,
Organ Builder, Metal & Wood Pipe Maker and Voicer,
TOWER ORGAN WORKS, 29, MINORIES, LONDON.

AN ORGAN KEPT FOR PRACTICE.
REBUILDING, TUNING, AND REPAIRING.

E & W. SNELL,
Manufacturers of Harmoniums, and Reed Pedal Organs,
KING STREET NORTH, CAMDEN TOWN, LONDON, N.W.

NOTE.—These are the only Instruments at which an Organist can really find himself "at home," as all Scales, Positions, and Measurements are adopted strictly in accordance with the Resolutions of the Council of the College of Organists. Estimates free.

MALEY, YOUNG & OLDKNOW,
ORGAN BUILDERS,
KING'S ROAD, ST. PANCRAS, LONDON, N.W.

Specifications, Estimates, and Designs for Church, Chamber, Concert, and all Descriptions of Organs.
Materials, Workmanship, and Tone guaranteed to be First Class.
Organs rebuilt to suit any position, enlarged, and Revoiced at very moderate charges.
Tunings in all parts of the Kingdom.

PROSPECTUS FREE ON APPLICATION.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts, excepting under exceptional circumstances.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit, at Three per cent. interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables, the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons, and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares, and Annuities.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

The Birkbeck Building Society's Annual Receipts exceed Five Millions.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with immediate Possession, and no Rent to Pay.—Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate Possession, either for Building or Gardening purposes.—Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

WITH 25 PER CENT DISCOUNT FOR CASH
OR 15/- PER MONTH,
(SECOND HAND 10/6 Per Month)
ON THE 3 YEARS' SYSTEM.
BORD'S PIANOS
PIANOS EXCHANGED.
LISTS FREE OF
C. STILES & Co. 42 SOUTHAMPTON ROW. W.C.

CONSTANT LAURENT, HARMONIUM and ANGLO-ORGAN MANUFACTURER, Established in 1859 at 85, HIGH STREET, MARYLEBONE, LONDON, W.—Repairing and Tuning Executed Promptly. Price List on Application.—Intending Purchasers are respectfully solicited to inspect my Instruments and Factory.

EUSTACE INGRAM, Organ Builder,
Combines excellence of Tone and Workmanship with Economy.
INSPECTION INVITED.
WORKS:—Burnard Place, Eden Grove, Holloway, London, N.

THE THROAT IN ITS RELATION TO SINGING. By WHITFIELD WARD. Illustrated, post 8vo, boards, 2s. 6d.—Advice to Singers on every point of interest in reference to the Vocal Organs.

W. REEVES: 185, Fleet Street, E.C.

ART of MODULATION: Handbook, showing at a glance the Modulations from one Key to any other in the Octave, or Orgaists and Musical Directors. 2s. 6d., paper; 4s., cloth.

W. REEVES, 185, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

MUSIC SENT ON SALE OR RETURN on highly advantageous terms by

B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster-row, London.

MUSIC of EVERY PUBLISHER supplied to Dealers, Teachers, and Schools. Having the largest varied Stock Europe. The terms, which are highly advantageous, sent on application

London: B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster-row.

ALL WHO POSSESS A PIANOFORTE and cannot play it, may now play at once, without any previous knowledge of Music, by ROYLANCE'S NUMERICAL SYSTEM, which contains a FIGURED DIAGRAM to fit on the Keyboard of any Pianoforte (or Harmonium, and a choice selection of forty SACRED and SECULAR MELODIES, composed for the use of those who have no time to study Music. Thousands are now able to play who did not believe such a thing possible. The diagram alone will be found most useful to Professors for teaching purposes. 6d. nett.—Price 2s. 6d. nett; post free 33 stamps.—C. ROYLANCE, 184, Tottenham Court-road; and all Music Sellers.

SYDNEY SMITH'S
FOUR NEW PIANOFORTE PIECES.

LA FEE DES ONDES.	Morceau brilliant ...	4 0
LE DOMINO NOIR.	Fantaisie brillante sur l'opéra d'Auber	4 0
MARGUERITE.	Chanson d'une fileuse	4 0
STYRIENNE	... ...	4 0

SYDNEY SMITH'S
FOUR NEW PIANOFORTE DUETS.

GAVOTTE ET MUSETTE	... ...	5 0
I PIFFERARI.	Musette moderne	5 0
LOHENGRIN.	Grande Fantaisie sur l'opéra de R. Wagner	6 0
NONCHALANCE.	Caprice de Concert	5 0

LONDON:

EDWIN ASHDOWN, Hanover-square.

Printed for the Proprietor by BOWDEN, HUDSON & Co., at 23, Red Lion Street, Holborn, London, W.C.; and Published by WILLIAM REEVES, at the Office, 185, Fleet Street, E.C. West End Agents:—WEEKES & CO., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W. Subscriptions and Advertisements are received either by the Publisher or West End Agents.—Communications for the EDITOR are to be forwarded to his private address, 6, Argyle Square, W.C

SATURDAY, AUGUST 18, 1883.—Entered at the General Post Office as a Newspaper.

Digitized by Google

The Musical Standard

A NEWSPAPER FOR MUSICIANS PROFESSIONAL AND AMATEUR

No. 995. Vol. XXV. FOURTH SERIES. SATURDAY, AUGUST 25, 1883. Weekly: Price 3d.

LEEDS TRIENNIAL MUSICAL FESTIVAL,

October 10th, 11th, 12th, and 13th, 1883.
Conductor.—SIR ARTHUR SULLIVAN.

BAND AND CHORUS OF 420 Performers.

PRINCIPAL VOCALISTS:—Mdme Alwina Valleria, Miss Annie Marriott, and Miss Anna Williams; Mdme. Patey, Miss Damian, and Miss Hilda Wilson; Mr. Edward Lloyd and Mr. Joseph Maas; Mr. Frederick King, Mr. Henry Blower, and Mr. Santley.

ORGANISTS:—Dr. Wm. Spark and Mr. Walter Parratt, Mus.Bac.

CHORUS MASTER;—Mr. J. Broughton.

ACCOMPANIST:—Mr. A. Broughton.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.—Mendelssohn's "Elijah."

WEDNESDAY EVENING.—"Gray's Elegy," a Cantata (written for this Festival), by Alfred Cellier; Beethoven's Symphony in D (No. 2), &c.

THURSDAY MORNING.—Raff's Oratorio, "The World's End." (First performance in England.) Selection from the Works of Handel.

THURSDAY EVENING.—97th Psalm (written for this Festival), by Joseph Barnby; Third Motet (Mozart); Cantata (Bach); Rossini's "Stabat Mater."

FRIDAY MORNING.—"King David," an Oratorio (written for this Festival), by Sir George Macfarren.

FRIDAY EVENING.—"The Crusaders," by Niels Gade; Overture, "Genoveva," by Schumann; March and Chorus from "Tannhäuser," &c.

SATURDAY MORNING.—Grand Mass in D (Beethoven); "Hymn of Praise" (Mendelssohn).

Serial Tickets, a limited number only ..... £5 5s. od. each.
FIRST SEATS—Single Ticket (Reserved), Morning .. 1 1 0 „
„ „ „ „ „ Evening .. 0 15 0 „
SECOND SEATS—Single Ticket (Reserved), Morning 0 10 6 „
„ „ „ „ „ Evening.. 0 7 6 „

First Seat Tickets will be ready for sale on and after TUESDAY next, August 28th, at 10 a.m.

Second Seat Tickets will be ready for sale on and after MONDAY, Sept. 3rd. Office open from 10.0 till 5.0.

No application for Tickets, either personally or by letter, will be noticed unless accompanied by a remittance for the full amount of tickets required, and stating also the number of tickets wanted. Detailed Programmes are now ready.

Cheques and Orders are payable to E. B. FABER, Hon. Treasurer, or to the Hon. Sec.

All communications to be addressed to

FRED. R. SPARK, Hon. Sec.

Festival Office (near the Town Hall), Leeds,
August 24th, 1883.

WOLVERHAMPTON TRIENNIAL MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

—In Aid of the Funds of the Wolverhampton and South Staffordshire Hospital.

President—The EARL of DARTMOUTH.

THURSDAY and FRIDAY, September 13th and 14th, 1883.

THURSDAY MORNING.—Mendelssohn's "Elijah."

THURSDAY EVENING.—Macfarren's "Lady of the Lake," and Miscellaneous Selection.

FRIDAY MORNING.—Beethoven's "Mount of Olives"; Hummel's "Alma Virgo"; Gounod's "Messe Solennelle"; and Mozart's "Jupiter" Symphony.

FRIDAY EVENING.—Mackenzie's "Jason," and Miscellaneous Selection, including Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto in E minor (Mr. Carrodus); Songs by Miss Anna Williams, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Signor Foli, &c.

Principal Vocalists: Miss Anna Williams, Miss Mary Davies, Miss Eleanor Farnoll, Madame Patey, Miss Emilie Lloyd, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Joseph Maas, Mr. Frederick King, and Signor Foli.

Principal and Solo Violin: Mr. Carrodus.

BAND AND CHORUS OF 300 Performers.

Conductor—DR. SWINNERTON HEAP.

ADMISSION:—

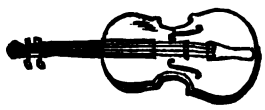
	Morning Performances.	Evening Performances.	Series of four Perfomances. (Transferable).
	£ s. d.	s. d.	£ s. d.
First Reserved	0 15 0	.. 10 6	.. 2 2 0
Second do.	0 7 6	.. 5 0	.. 1 1 0
Unreserved	0 3 6	.. 2 6	.. 0 10 0
Family Tickets, admitting 4 persons to 1st Reserved Seats ..	2 12 6	.. 1 15 0

Ballots for priority of choice of seats, Sept. 3rd and 4th.

Remittances to be made payable to the Hon. Financial Secretary, W. C. Sheldon, 7, Rupert Street, Wolverhampton, to whom applications for seats, accompanied by remittance, are to be addressed.

Detailed Prospectuses, with particulars of special railway arrangements, and other information, on application to the Honorary Secretaries,

R. T. LAWRENCE } Darlington Street,
JAS. WELLS PAGE } Wolverhampton.



MAKERS AND REPAIRERS.

GEORGE WITHERS & CO.

(Late of Coventry Street),

WHOLESALE IMPORTERS OF

MUSICAL STRINGS,

From Rome, Padua, and Naples.

A FINE COLLECTION OF ITALIAN INSTRUMENTS.

Bows, Cases, Music Stands, &c. See Price Lists.

51, ST. MARTIN'S LANE, LONDON.

GLOUCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL.—Sept. 4th,

5th, 6th, and 7th.

PRINCIPAL SINGERS:—

Miss ANNA WILLIAMS,	Madame PATEY,
	AND
Mdlle. AVIGLIANA,	Miss HILDA WILSON,
AND
Miss MARY DAVIES,	Mr. FREDERIC KING,
Mr. EDWARD LLOYD,	Mr. W. H. BRERETON,
AND	AND
Mr. BOULCOTT H. NEWTH.	Mr. SANTLEY.

Full particulars at Mr. Nest's, Westgate Street, Gloucester.

TO ORGANISTS, BUILDERS, and Others. Re MORTON & TAYLOR, Limited, in Voluntary Liquidation.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON respectfully invite Tenders for the Purchase of the above well known BUSINESS, together with the Plant and Material and Stock-in-Trade. The Directors are prepared to offer most exceptional terms to intending Purchasers.—47, Leicester Square, W.C., August 20, 1883.

MUSICAL INTERNATIONAL COLLEGE,

LONDON.

Founded for Examining purposes only.

Principal—EDWIN M. LOTT.

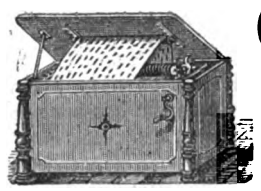
PRACTICAL EXAMINATIONS in INSTRUMENTAL and VOCAL MUSIC throughout the kingdom, conducted personally by the Principal. Next LOCAL THEORETICAL EXAMINATION, DECEMBER, 1883.

For particulars, address SECRETARY, Musical International College, 270, Cornwall Road, Notting Hill, W.

Just Published.

"I WILL GREATLY REJOICE." Anthem, suitable for Harvest Festivals. Composed by H. S. IRONS, Organist of St. Andrew's Church, Nottingham.

NOVELLO, EWER & Co.: 1, Berners Street, London, W.



ORCHESTRIONETTES,

Ehrlich's Patent.

Are the greatest invention of modern times in the sphere of mechanical Music Works! It is only necessary to put in a note, made of fine pasteboard, in order to play a new piece. The smaller instruments suffice as accompaniment to dance music. The larger ones can be used IN PLACE OF AN ORGAN.

Preparatory knowledge not necessary; therefore the instruments can be sent to any part of the world. Large number of Notes, suitable for all countries, always on hand. Extra Notes made to order, after supplied originals, at any time. Please send orders to any dealer in musical instruments.

Commission allowed to Dealers.

FABRIK LEIPZIGER MUSIKWERKE VORM. PAUL EHRLICH & CO., ZU GOHLIS BEI LEIPZIG (GERMANY).

Digitized by Google

MOZART'S ORGAN WORKS.

By Frank J. Sawyer, B.Mus. Oxon., F.C.O.

[A Lecture delivered at the College of Organists.]

Ladies and Gentlemen,—In coming before you to-night, I feel that my first duty is to make some sort of explanation of the sudden change that has come over the subject of my lecture from that first announced—"The Organ Writers of the Nineteenth Century"—to that with which I hope to interest you, viz., "Mozart's Writings for the Organ."

It is not saying, I feel sure, too much, if I assert, that a few months ago, out of every hundred organists, barely one, if indeed one, had the slightest idea that Mozart had, with the exception of a work for mechanical organs, written anything for the "king of instruments." To such ignorance I must myself plead guilty. Imagine, then, my surprise, when, on searching "Köchel's Thematic Catalogue of Mozart's Works," I accidentally found allusion made to 15 organ sonatas; all, however, with the note "unpublished."

A preliminary notice of the scope of these compositions appeared, by kindness of the editor, in the columns of the Musical Standard, while an enquiry at the firm of Messrs. Breitkopf & Härtel, of Leipzig, elicited a reply and copy of these sonatas, recently printed in the complete edition of all Mozart's works now being prepared by that firm. Still further allusion was made to them in a paper read before the Musical Association by Mr. Prout, and entitled "The Use of the Organ with the Orchestra," an article subsequently reprinted in the pages of the Musical Record.

So far the subject had advanced when I suggested to the Council of the College of Organists that I might be allowed to take it up in lieu of that already announced; a suggestion which, I need not say, was accepted.

I propose first of all to see the state of organ music when these 15 organ sonatas, which form the special topic of this evening's lecture, were written. Mozart, born Jan. 27, 1756, must at a very tender age have begun his studies on the organ, since we find that when only seven years old he performed in the chief churches of the towns through which, in his early travels, he passed. The first question naturally is: From what had he studied? Bach had been dead then about 12 years; and there would, perhaps, be little possibility, in those days of heavy locomotion, of the great Leipzig cantor's works being widely dispersed, especially as, perhaps then as now, they were "too good for the money." Froberger and Frescobaldi would doubtless in his studies have represented the early school, together, perhaps, with pieces by Pachelbel and Kerl; still, these could scarcely represent the entire scope of his studies for the organ, and one must therefore suppose that other works were then to hand of which we at present know nothing. Organ music occupies, undoubtedly, an anomalous position among the various branches of the art. While the early writers for the voice, the piano or harpsichord, the violin, the opera, and the oratorio, have received attention—first at the hands of the archæologist, and lastly at the hands of the more general public—the past of organ music has remained almost a blank. It is not, perhaps, difficult to trace the reason of this. An organist's performances are almost entirely in Church, and at a time when little particular attention is paid and no enthusiasm evinced. In fact, as some clergy would put it, the organist's performance is merely a noise to cover the tread of the approaching or departing congregation.

Again: there was always up to the beginning of this century, with the exception of the Handel school, a seriousness and earnestness in organ music that would not arouse public interest. Hence we of to-day are left to solace ourselves with merely the name and none of the works of many a great composer. Let us hope, however, that as the position of the organist is gradually bettering itself, so the scope of organ music will extend, reaching not only forward to the moderns but backwards to the ancients.

That the music Mozart studied made, comparatively speaking, no influence on his organ compositions, those performed to-night will testify, for in them we find no traces of any one, save "Mozart himself" pure and simple.

Whatever works may have formed the infant prodigy's organ practice, the fact remains that at the early age of five years he must have devoted himself to the instrument. His father, Leopold Mozart, is known to us only as a violinist, yet he, too, was, according to Otto Jahn, an "excellent organist," and thus doubly well fitted to fill the post he so self-sacrificingly occupied of tutor to his marvellous little son. And so readily had the son profited that, when at the age of seven, he set out on his first travels, we read, "At the monastery of Ips, while their travelling companions, three monks, were saying mass, Wolfgang mounted to the organ loft, and played so admirably that the Franciscan friars, and the guests they were entertaining, rose from table and came open-mouthed with astonishment to listen to him."

The next interesting point in Mozart's organ life we find in a letter of his father. On their second journey from Salzburg in 1763, the carriage broke down at Wasserbrunn, thus delaying them. "The last new thing is," writes the father, "that in order to pass the time, we went to look at the organ, and I explained the pedals to Wolferl. He set to work on the spot; pushed the stool away, and preluded, always standing, using the pedal as if he had practised it for months. We were all lost in astonishment. What has caused others months of practice, comes to him as a gift of God." Another hidden point of interest lies in this narrative: had the organs previously used possessed pedals, the inquiring mind of Mozart would never have left them even so long unused, but even if unable from his youthful stature to reach them, would have understood their use. Hence we may perhaps surmise that in 1750 pedals were not universal to organs.

During this journey, "Wolfgang performed on the organ constantly, and was even more admired as an organist than as a clavier player"; for instance, "Making an excursion to Heidelberg, Wolfgang played the organ at the Church of the Holy Spirit, and so astonished his audience that the Dean ordered his name to be inscribed as a memorial on the organ." The announcement of his last Frankfort concert, as "the boy who is not yet seven summers,—he will finally, both on the harpsichord and the organ, improvise as long as may be desired, and in any key, thus proving that he is as thoroughly acquainted with the one instrument as with the other, great as is the difference between them."

Again, when, after the Paris visit, he arrived in London, and was received in such a friendly manner by George III. and Queen Charlotte, we find when summoned to the court he played various pieces by Bach, Abel, and Handel, at sight, at his Majesty's request, and then "surpassed his clavier playing when he sat down to the King's organ."

On his return through Holland, we find him playing on the organ at the Church of S. Bernhard, and at Haarlem.

During the period of quiet study in Salzburg we find nothing of special note to us to-night, nor during the production of his earliest operas in Vienna.

Digitized by Google

In December, 1769, we find him starting for Italy with his father. His reception was marvellous. At Roveredo, "when he wanted to play the organ at the principal church, the report of it spread through the town, and the church was so full that it took two strong men to clear the way to the choir, and then it was a quarter of an hour before they could get to the organ, they were so besieged by the audience." When he played at the church of St. Thomas, at Verona, the scene was repeated. "The press was so great that they were obliged to get into the church through the monastery, and even then they could hardly have reached the organ had not the monks formed a ring round them, and so made a way through the crowd." "When it was over the noise was still greater, for every one wanted to see the little organist."

But we have not time to-night to watch the youthful Mozart through all his organ triumphs. In 1775 we find the first definite trace of a composition for the instrument that had been the means of bringing him so many laurels.

In July of that year the first dated sonata appears, and here it becomes necessary to explain the nature and scope of these works, which cannot be better done than by quoting the passage in extenso from Jahn:—"At Salzburg, as Mozart told Padre Martini, a sonata was introduced between the Epistle and the Gospel, until Archbishop Hieronymus (or Colloredo) replaced it by a gradual in 1783."

Kochel, in his great thematic catalogue of Mozart's works, says:—"The organ sonatas were introduced at High Mass between the Gloria and the Credo."

To continue from Jahn:—"They are all inscribed as sonatas, and all consist of a lively movement of moderate length in two parts, and in regulation sonata form. The Church sonatas (sonati di chiesa) differ, indeed, from the chamber sonatas (sonata di camera) in being serious, dignified, often fugued and in counterpoint, but the style has nothing that suggests a sacred performance. The tone is neither solemn nor devotional, nor the style severe. The tone and treatment of the commencement remind us of the first movements of the smaller sonatas and quartets; the subjects are, sometimes, very pretty; the treatment is free and skilful, and in the later pieces not without touches of Mozart's originality. They are usually written for two violins and violoncello, to which the organ part was always added, but never obbligato (?), nor with any regard to executive display; it has often only its customary office of accompaniment to the 'cello, in which case a figured bass part is written. Even when the organ part is independent, it is for the most part limited to what the skilful organist can make out of the continuo; its independence is very modest, and it never aspires to a solo or any passages."

So Jahn says, but I think you will shortly agree with me, that these strictures are not merited.

(To be continued.)

It seems that the projected Italian season at Paris is to consist of from twenty to twenty-five performances, which are to be held at the Théâtre des Nations. The direction is in the hands of MM. Corti. Their artistic representative is the excellent baritone M. Maurel; Signor Faccio has been secured as musical conductor; and among the singers already engaged or likely to be engaged are Mesdames Devriès, Tremelli, Reske, and C. de Vère, and MM. Gayarré and Reske. Wagner's "Lohengrin" will be one of the attractions. The prices are fixed as follows: Avant-scène, 35 francs; Loges de face, 30 francs; Loges de côté, 25 francs; Loges de 1re galerie, 20 francs; Loges de 2de galerie, 15 francs. The price of the fauteuils has not yet been fixed, but will probably be 20 francs.

Musical Intelligence.

LEEDS MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

The first great musical festival in Leeds was held as part of the inaugural ceremony, when the Town Hall was opened by the Queen, on September 7th, 1858. The four days following were devoted to the festival, Professor W. Sterndale Bennett being the conductor. The works produced on that occasion included "Elijah," the "Messiah," "Israel in Egypt," "Mount of Olives," "Stabat Mater," Haydn's "Seasons" (Spring and Summer), Bach's "Passions Music" (St. Matthew), and Bennett's "May Queen," then produced for the first time. In September, 1860, a public meeting, convened by the mayor, also resolved to continue the festivals. A committee was formed, and Dr. Bennett was again invited to become the conductor. Many of the works were selected, and preliminary arrangements were entered into with the principal singers. Unforeseen difficulties, however, arose, which were of so serious a nature that in May, 1861, the committee passed the following resolution:—"That considering all the circumstances and difficulties attending the organization of the arrangements of the musical festival, and the doubts entertained of its success, it is desirable that no festival be held this year." From that period no attempt was made to revive festivals in Leeds till 1874, when the then mayor (Ald. Marsden), convened a meeting of the principal inhabitants, and again it was determined to establish, if possible, Leeds Triennial Musical Festivals. Under the conductorship of Sir Michael Costa, a festival was held. The chief works produced were "St. Paul," the "Messiah," part of "Israel in Egypt," Mendelssohn's "Lobgesang," Henry Smart's "Bride of Dunkerron," Macfarren's oratorio "St. John the Baptist," "Stabat Mater," and Schumann's "Paradise and the Peri." Three years afterwards (1877), the committee felt justified in giving a commission to Professor Macfarren to write a new work. On that occasion the oratorio of "Joseph" was written, and was for the first time produced. The other works included "Elijah," "Solomon," Mozart's "Requiem," Beethoven's "Mount of Olives," Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Night," and Bach's Magnificat in D. Sir Michael Costa was the conductor. In 1880 the festival was in every way a great success. Mr. (now Sir Arthur) Sullivan accepted the important position of conductor. The band and chorus were enlarged to 420 performers. Mr. Jas. Broughton being the chorus-master, and Mr. J. T. Carrodus the principal of the violinists. The chief works were—the "Elijah," Handel's "Samson," Beethoven's Mass in C, Haydn's "Creation" (Parts 1 and 2), Spohr's "Last Judgment," Sullivan's "Martyr of Antioch" (written for the festival), Bennett's "May Queen," Beethoven's Choral Symphony, and a new cantata by J. F. Barnett, "The Building of the Ship." For the festival arranged to be held this year, three new works have been composed. These are—"King David," an oratorio by Sir George Macfarren; "Gray's "Elegy," a cantata, by Alfred Cellier; and the 97th Psalm, by Joseph Barnby. The composition by the late Joachim Raff, which may properly be termed a symphony-oratorio, was the last great work of that prolific German musician. When the committee in the early part of last year decided to perform the oratorio at the next festival, they invited the composer to conduct his own work. Shortly afterwards, the death of Herr Raff ensued; but the following extract from a letter shows that it was his intention to comply with the committee's request:—Mdme. Raff wrote on July 24th, 1882, as follows:—"It was one of his last occupations to enter the excellently translated words of his oratorio 'Weltende,' into the manuscript, in order to get the work ready for the Leeds Musical Festival. He had quite made up his mind to attend the performance at Leeds personally, and this occasion would have been his first visit to England. But, alas! it was not to be so." The band will comprise the best London instrumentalists, and a few local players. It will be seen that the chorus has been selected from Leeds and various towns in the West Riding. There were 700 applicants in response to an advertisement; and every one of these was tested individually and alone, both for voice and reading ability. Of these, the best 320 were engaged. Already, up to the issue of this programme, 29 full rehearsals have been held, members of the chorus being brought by railway from parts of the Riding outside Leeds. Before the festival takes place, about 44 full chorus rehearsals will have been held, besides several sectional rehearsals. The programme is here outlined:—Wednesday morning, October 10th, Oratorio, "Elijah" (Mendelssohn); organist, Dr. Spark. Wednesday evening, Cantata (written for this festival), "Gray's Elegy" (Alfred Cellier), conducted by the composer, and a miscellaneous selection; organist, Mr. Walter Parratt. Thursday morning, Symphony-oratorio, "The World's end, the Judgment, the New World" (Joachim Raff) (first time in England); organist, Mr. Walter Parratt. selection from the works of Handel, organist, Dr. Spark. Thursday evening, 97th Psalm, "The Lord is King" (Joseph Barnby), conducted by the composer (written for this festival), organist, Dr. Spark; Motet No. 3 "Glory, Praise, and Honour" (Mozart); Sacred cantata, "Thou Guide of Israel" (Bach) (first performance in this country); Oratorio, "Stabat Mater" (Rossini), organist, Dr. Spark. Friday morning, Oratorio "King David" (Sir George Macfarren), (written for this festival), organist Mr. Walter Parratt. Friday evening, secular Cantata "The Crusaders" (Niels Gade), and a selection. Saturday morning, Grand Mass in D (Beethoven); Symphony cantata "Hymn of Praise" ("Lobgesang"), (Mendelssohn). Saturday evening, extra miscellaneous concert, consisting of selections from the Festival works. Band, chorus, and principals.

Digitized by Google

CORK.

(From our own Correspondent.)

On Sunday, the 12th inst., the Exhibition buildings were thrown open to the public, notwithstanding a determined opposition on the part of some of the exhibitors. The sequel proved the committee to have been right, as an immense crowd paid for admittance on that day. At 3 p.m. Herr H. C. Swertz gave an organ recital of a sacred character, of which the following were the principal pieces played. Overture, "Last Judgment" (Spohr); air, "I waited for the Lord" (Mendelssohn); "March to Calvary" ("Redemption") (Gounod); "Cum Sancto Spiriti" (3rd Mass) (Cherubini). On Monday evening following, he gave another recital, of a mixed character, consisting of pieces by Hérold, Chopin, Weber, Mendelssohn, etc., and was much applauded, one of the items being encored.—The students of the Cork School of Music, under the conductorship of Mr. T. J. Sullivan, gave a concert on Tuesday evening, consisting of Spohr's "Last Judgment," and a second part, miscellaneous. They were not, however, as successful as one could wish, the number of voices employed failing to fill the hall, besides being very unevenly balanced. The orchestra was also too large in parts, quite drowning the voices. The second part was much better, and as deserving of special praise I must mention the following: Miss O'Connell and Mr. FitzGibbon for their singing of the duet from Spohr's oratorio, "Forsake me not;" and Miss Bayly, Miss O'Keefe, and Miss Weekes for their piano playing. Miss O'Hanlon was also very successful in Bishop's song, "Tell me, my heart"; her voice, though not very powerful, being exceedingly well cultivated. Mr. FitzGibbon also sang "Salve Dimora" from Gounod's "Faust," with violin obbligato by Capt. Haynes.

F. St. John Lacy.

The recent performances of "Parsifal" at Bayreuth appears to have given much artistic satisfaction to the disciples of the departed master. The principal parts were this year distributed as follows:—Parsifal, Herren Winkelmann, of Vienna, and Gudehus, of Dresden. Kundry, Mmes. Materna, of Vienna, and Malten, of Dresden. Gurnemanz, Herren Scaria, of Vienna, and Siehr, of Munich. Amfortas, Herr Reichermann, of Vienna. Klingsor, Herren Fuchs of Munich, and Degele of Dresden. Titurel, Herr Fuchs of Munich. The orchestra consisted of thirty-six violins, twelve violas, twelve violoncellos, eight double basses, four flutes, four oboes, one alto oboe, four clarinets, one bass clarinet, four bassoons, one double bassoon, six horns, three trumpets, four trombones, one bass tuba, two drummers (kettle-drums), and four harps. Herren H. Lewi and Franz Fischer, of Munich, were the conductors.

Foreign Musical Intelligence.

MUSIC IN PARIS.

(From our Own Correspondent.)

Paris, August 21st, 1883.

It may seem rather early to speak of the novelties, or quasi-novelties, with which we are to be entertained in Paris during the approaching season: but so dull, flat, and uneventful has this Summer been here, so devoid of the faintest musical interest; so drearily, drowsily, and dismally unmusical, indeed, that there is nothing else worth writing to you about at present. With a free and easy disregard of its duty which we have for years past somehow tolerated and grown resigned to, the management of the Opéra Comique has closed the doors of that theatre for a couple of months, and will not re-open them for another ten days or so. The Opéra has been open three times weekly, as usual at this season; but, ever since the June sun drove Parisians to the sea-side, M. Vancorbeil has offered us wretched casts and the stalest of repértoires. Of concerts (unless those at the Jardin d'Acclimation and the parks be accepted) we have had none—none at least worthy the name; for really one cannot apply the word to the sinister rubbish played and sung in the Champs Elysées of nights; and even at the Trocadéro, where we do occasionally hear an organ recital in August, nothing has been done this year. A stupid tradition still prevents impresarii from venturing on the experiment of Summer classical concerts. The Paris Biergarten is, and bids fair long to be, a dream of the future. For "the quarter of an hour" we are all supposed to have forgotten Beethoven, and to have developed a taste for the prurient balderdash now dignified by the name of chansonettes, and until September comes, bringing back the scattered Parisians to their beloved asphalte, we shall have to "possess our souls in patience."

Early in September, however, the Opéra Comique will give us a revival of Félicien David's "Perle du Brésil," for the rentrée of Miss Emma Nevada (who, by-the-by, has been winning golden opinions lately at Aix-les-Bains.) This may be followed by the production of a new opera, by M. Poise, the composer of so many charming and delicate trifles, and by the revival (not a very much needed one) of M. Joncières' "Dimitre." But the event of the season at the Opéra Comique will doubtless be the first performance of a new 3-act opera by M. Massenet, founded on the fascinating story of Manon Lescaut, and entitled "Manon." In deference to the nice morals of the age, the librettists of "Manon" have altered the characters of the Abbé Prévost's hero and heroine considerably. We are to be shown a revised, reformed, and respectable Chevalier des Grieux, at all events, and his light-o'-love will be made as decorous as may be humanly possible. M. Massenet has been working at the opera in the sunny South for some time past, but is expected back in Paris within the fortnight.

At the Opéra, with all respect to M. Dubois and his ballet "La Farandole," the most interesting feature by far of the season will probably be the long hoped for revival of Gounod's "Sapho." Not that I anticipate it will prove a success, however carefully or splendidly it may be put upon the stage. There is a monotony about its beauty—a weariness of nobleness, if I may use the expression—which will, I fear, always prevent its being "popular." Still, judging from the fragments we have heard on several occasions lately at the Conservatoire, to all true lovers of music, to all artists and people of delicate culture, the reappearance of "Sapho" on the stage, after all these years of oblivion, will be looked forward to with delighted curiosity, and overshadow all other events at the Opéra—even the possible production of M. Salvayre's "Richard III.," of which there has been some talk again.

The Theâtre Italica—as the Theâtre de Nations (the ex-Lyrique) will shortly be rechristened—is likely to open with the revised versions of "Simon Boccanegra" and "Don Carlos." These may be followed by the "Herodiade" of M. Massenet, and, it is hoped, by the production (at last!) of M. Boïto's "Mefistofele."

A fourth opera-house, doomed only too certainly to speedy failure, is to be given us at the Chateau d'Eau, where we are promised a revival of Mermet's "Roland à

Digitized by Google

Roncevaux"—which, I fear, will seem rather antiquated to the ears of this generation. The Chateau d'Eau management, mindful of the passing triumph scored by the fortunate impresario who introduced Paris to M. Prevost some years ago, will trust for its chances of success more to a marvellous new tenor, named Rouvière, who is to be the "star" of its company.

I need scarcely trouble you with very particular details of the opéra bouffes which are to be given us next season. Amongst them is a new work by M. Hervé, entitled "Vertigo," and one by M. Sellenick, the well-known bandmaster, to be called "Le fou Chopine."

M. Ambroise Thomas has been seriously ill for weeks past; but I am glad to say he is now better.

C. HARRY MELTZER.

Selections from Berlioz's works have been given lately at the concerts in Brussels.

The Courier de la Meuse speaks highly of the quartet performances of MM. Wolf, E. Ludwig, Ender, and Jules Thys at Maestricht, in Holland, at a concert recently given there.

The concerts of the sea-side season at the Casino, Ostend, are said to be excellent. The singing of M. and Mdme. Padilla Artôt there is reported as being artistic and successful.

The death of Antony Mocker took place in Paris on July 26th. He was born at Marseille in 1795, and was an esteemed pianist, composer for the pianoforte, and professor at the Conservatoire, Paris.

The Opéra Comique, Paris, will be re-opened in the beginning of September. The rehearsals of "Joli Gilles," by MM. Monselet and Poise, will presently be resumed, so as to be ready for performance in September.

It is reported that besides Reyer's "Sigurd," the Théâtre de la Monnaie (Brussels) will probably next winter bring to a hearing a grand opera by Henri Litolf, entitled "Les Templiers."

Among the victims of the terrible catastrophe at Casamicciola were Giovanni de Monte, violoncellist, L. Gravina, announced in the Italian papers as an English composer and pianist, and several well-known nonprofessional performers of talent.

Upon the façade of 202, Rue Saint Honoré, Paris, an inscription has been placed, stating that the old theatre once standing there was occupied by Molière's company in 1641 and by the Royal Academy of Music (or opera) from 1673 to 1781.

François A. d'Albert Doppler died at Baben near Vienna, on July 28th. He was born in 1821, and was a composer of ability, a good flute player, chef d'orchestre at the Court Theatre, and a professor at the Conservatoire, Vienna.

It is stated that Gounod has for the summer months taken up his abode at Nieuport. On a former occasion he finished there his opera "Zamora"; this time he will be busy with the alteration of "Sapho," and no doubt with his new oratorio for the next Birmingham Festival.

M. Mathis Lussy, one of the contributors to Le Ménéstrel, is writing on "Musical Rhythm." He rightly attaches high importance to the full consideration of this subject, which, notwithstanding its necessary presence in all music, is much neglected as a systematic study.

La Tribune de Genève tells that the Lutheran Church of that town is preparing to celebrate the 400th anniversary of the Reformer by the performance of a kind of oratorio entitled "Luther at Worms." This work, by Meinardus, has been written some years, and will be executed, it is reported, in a large number of towns.

The question of continuing the Bayreuth Theatre performances has been seriously discussed by the various Wagner Societies, and, as the artists have agreed to perform with salaries for the next year, it is hoped that afterwards an arrangement will be made so that the theatre may become a permanent institution.

Suppé has completed some time ago his operetta "The Blue Rose," and it will be given in Vienna. The scene is laid in Russia, and a love episode between the Empress Katherine and the Potemkin furnishes the plot. Suppé is now engaged, it is stated, on a serious work for the Vienna Grand Opera, "The Vendetta." The plot is laid in Corsica, the home of Napoleon I.

The Grand Prix of the Conservatoire, Paris, has been won by M. Vidal, a pupil of Massenet; the Premier Second Grand Prix by M. Dubussy, a pupil of Guiraud; and the Deuxieme Second Grand Prix by M. René, a pupil of Léo-Delibes. Their task consisted in the setting to music the lyric scene "Le Gladiateur," by M. E. Moreau.

A new Wagner society, it is announced, has been founded. Its object is the continuation of Bayreuth dramatic festival performances. The rules, which were put into circulation some weeks ago, comprise 24 paragraphs. The contribution of members is four shillings per annum, and the Bayreuther Blätter, the organ of the society, will be supplied to them at the reduced price of six shillings.

The German theatres announce operatic performances of interest. At Berlin Lortzing's "Ondine," and possibly Delibes's "Lakmé"; at Cologne, A. G. Thomas's "Esmeralda" and Delibes's "Lakmé"; at Hamburg, Rubinstein's "Sulamite" and Mackenzie's "Colomba"; at Frankfort, Dresden, Munich, Leipzic and Prague, "Lakmé" will be given; at Bremen, F. Thomas's "Mignon"; at Vienna, Wagner's "Tristan" and most likely "Lakmé," etc. Of all recent works, "Lakmé" appears to have attained the largest popularity in Germany.

A BIRTHDAY LETTER.

In a recent issue of the Deutsche Rundschau was published a letter, written by Richard Wagner to his mother upon her birthday. Herewith is appended a literal translation, from an American musical contemporary:—

MY DEAR MOTHER:—It is so long since I have offered you my congratulations on your birthday, that I am really glad for this once to avail myself of the right day—which the pressure of business has so often in former years caused me to overlook—and to tell you how rejoiced I am that you are still spared to us—that I can still look forward to sitting with your hand in mine, recalling the days when my youth was nourished and fostered by your tender care. Nothing but the consciousness of your presence among us would suffice to unite your children into a family; we, driven hither and thither by the winds of life, ever forming new ties, new interests, find our bond of union in the thought of the dear old mother who has never had a tie but that which bound her to her children. God grant that this happiness may be ours for many years to come, and may He long preserve in you so clear a mind that the only earthly joy which remains for you—the joy and sympathy in the well-being of your children—may be yours to the very end! Perplexed, as I often am, by the riddle of life, now urged forward, now held back, always striving after perfection, seldom attaining the success I long for, wearied and disgusted by contact with the outer world, and by the contradiction of my dearest hopes, the only pleasure that never fails me is in the enjoyment of nature. When I fling myself with bitter tears and lamentations into her arms, she consoles and strengthens me by showing me what fancied sorrows they are that oppress mankind. We lose ourselves in striving after an impossible ideal; then Nature calls us gently back, and would fain convince us that we are her children as surely as the trees and plants which spring from seed and shoot upwards, warmed by the sun and strengthened by the fresh air, to live on until they have scattered the seed which is to renew the eternal youth of all created. If I can once grasp the idea that I, too, belong to this bountiful Nature, my thoughts are no longer centered on self; I am conscious of my fellowship with all that is good in mankind. And how can this feeling exist without bringing with it a yearning love for the mother who bore me, and who withers while I bloom? We, dear mother, can afford to smile at the wayward mistakes and follies of human society, tormenting itself to invent new theories of life, which tend only to confuse, destroy, or sever the loving ties of Nature! How surely are all the trifling differences that have come between you and me dissipated by these thoughts. Turning my back upon the turmoil of the city, I wander into a lovely wooded valley, stretch myself upon the mossy turf, admire the freshness of the foliage, and listen to some sweet wood-bird's song, till tears, but not of sorrow, start unbidden to my eyes. Just so, I feel when through the mass of wayward folly which clings to me, I stretch my hand to lay hold upon yours, and cry, "May God preserve my dear old mother, and when it pleases Him to take her from me may it be gently, and without pain." We need not speak of death, for do you not live on in your children a richer, fuller life than yours ever could be? Thank God, that he has blessed thee in thy children! Farewell my dearest mother.

Your son, RICHARD.

Dresden, September 19th, 1846.

Digitized by Google

Organ News.

LIVERPOOL.

An organ recital was given in St. George's Hall, by Mr. W. T. Best, on Thursday, August 16th. The following was the programme :—

Fantasia Cromatica in A minor	Thiele.
Serenade, "Through the night"	Schubert.
Pastorale (Cor Anglais and Flute) / Military March in G major	Gambini.
Toccata and Fugue in C major	Bach.
Musette, from the 6th Concerto	Handel.
Cornelius March	Mendelssohn.

And on Saturday afternoon, August 18th :—

Organ Sonata (No. 2 in C minor)	Mendelssohn.
Pastorale and Ronde Militaire, "Jean d'Arc"	Gounod.
Fantasia in F minor	Mozart.
Andante from the 4th Symphony	Haydn.
Overture for the Organ, C major, Op. 106	Gambini.

FISHERIES EXHIBITION.

The folowing organ recitals have been given during the last week.

Mr. Loaring's programmes included the following :—

Overture, "Le Nozze di Figaro"	Mozart.
Chorus, "The King shall rejoice" ("Dettingen Anthem")	Handel.
"La Carita"	Rossini.
Chorus, "Happy Pair" ("Alexander's Feast")	Handel.
Adagio from "Sestet," Op. 81	Beethoven.
Double Fugue, "Baumgarten"
Overture, "Il Turco in Italia"	Rossini.

Overture, "Zauberflöte"	Mozart.
Prelude and Fugue in D minor	Bach.
Chorus "From the Censer" ("Solomon")	Handel.
"Cujus Animam"	Rossini.
Chorus, "The King shall rejoice" ("Coronation Anthem")	Handel.
Melody from a Motet, "Jepthe"	Paer.
Overture, "Pré aux Clercs	Hérold.

The programmes of the recitals by Mr. H. C. Tonking, R.A.M., on Wednesday, August 15th, were :—

March in B flat	Silas.
Postlude in C minor, (introducing "Jerusalem on High")	Steggall.
Gavotte, "Mignon"	Thomas.
Finale from 1st Sonata	Mendelssohn
Barcarolle, from the 4th Concerto	Bennett.
March from "St. Cecilia"	Handel.
Andante in F	Wely.
Fugue in E major	Best.
Gavotte in F	Martini.
Grand Chorus	Guilmant.

On Saturday, August 18th :—

Allegro from Sonata in D	Mozart.
"Air du Dauphin"	Roeckel.
"Hercules" March	Trembath.
Air, "Che faro"	Gluck.
"War March of the Priests"	Mendelssohn.
Gavotte, "Mignon"	Thomas.
"Scotch Airs"
Festal March in D	Smart.

On Monday, August 20th :—

Allegro from Sonata in D	Mozart.
"Air du Dauphin"	Roeckel.
Fugue in G minor	Bach.
Aria, "Che faro," from "Orfeo"	Gluck.
"War March of the Priests"	Mendelssohn.
Pastorale, Op. 57	Kullak.
Grand Sonata in A	Mendelssohn.
Postlude in D	Smart.
"Lascia ch'io pianga," from "Rinaldo"	Handel.
Festal March in D	Smart.

The programme of the recital by Mr. Harry Dancey, F.C.O., on Monday, August 20th, was :—

Allegro, from Concerto in G minor	Handel.
Pastorale	Kullak.
Allegro Vivace	Morandi.
Allegretto in C major	Gade.
Andante in G	Batiste.
Gavotte in G major	Dancey.
Vesper Hymn, with variations	Turpin.
Triumphal March, from "Alfred"	Prout.

On Monday, Aug. 20th, by Mr. W. W. Hedgecock :—

March in D	Best.
Entr'acte, "Rosamunde," (No. 2)	Schubert.
Allegro in E flat	Batiste.
Minuet	Schubert.
Grazioso in F	Smart.
Gavotte in C minor	Saint-Saens.
March, from "The Camp of Silesia"	Meyerbeer.

ACCRINGTON.

On Wednesday evening, August 1st, Mr. Tattersall, the organist at the Parish Church, gave an organ recital and performed the following pieces :—6th Sonata (Mendelssohn) ; Air, with variations ; Pleyel's hymn-tune ; Organ Concerto in D (Handel) ; and Fantasia Pastorale (Lefébure-Wely). There was a large attendance.

ST. LEONARD'S-ON-SEA.

An organ recital was given on Tuesday evening, by H. C. Nixon, Esq., in St. Paul's Church. The following was the programme :—

Overture, "Athalie"	Mendelssohn.
Chorus, "Give unto the Lord ("The Widow of Nain")	Abram.
Andante in D major, ("Pianoforte Quintet")	Nixon.
Air, with variations, in F major, from the "Nonette"	Spohr.
Prelude and Fugue in C minor	Bach.
Andante in F major, from the 4th Symphony	Mozart.
Funeral March and Scherzo, ("Pianoforte Quintet")	Schumann.
Notturno in E major	Mendelssohn.
"Coronation March"	Meyerbeer.

MAIDSTONE.

Mr. W. de M. Sergison, of St. Peter's, Eaton Square, gave an organ recital upon the fine instrument by Lewis, on the 15th ult., at the Parish Church, which was attended by over 1,000 persons, and £18 was collected towards establishing a surpliced choir, the formation of which will be entrusted to Mr. Sergison. The following was the programme :—

Concerto in D minor Introduction—Fugue—Largo—Finale.	Bach.
Sonata Chorale and Variations—Fugue—Andante.	Mendelssohn.
Concerto in B flat Andante—Maestoso—Allegro—Largo Allegro.	Handel.
Andante	Wesley.
"March "Nuptiale"	Guilmant.
Pastorale and Finale from 1st Organ Sonata

BRIGHOUSE.

An organ recital was given on Tuesday evening last, August 21st, in St. James's Church, by C. W. Pearce, Esq., Mus.Bac. Cantab. The following was the programme :—

Overture, "Samson"	Handel.
Romanza, "La Reine de France"	Haydn.
"Spring Song"	Pearce.
Air, "Angels ever bright and fair"	Handel.
Concert Fantasia	Stewart.
Andante from Organ Sonata	Macfarren.
Postlude in C	Smart.
Anthem, "Blessed be the God"	Wesley.
Grand March	Silas.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Two organ recitals were given by Mr. S. Claude Ridley, on Thursday, August 23rd, in the above Hall. The following were the programmes :—

Overture to "Zampa"	Hérold.
Air, "My heart ever faithful"	Bach.
Fanfare of Trumpets	Lemmens.
Prelude and Fugue in E minor	Bach.
Andante from 5th Symphony	Haydn.
Chorus, "See the Conquering Hero"	Handel.
Sonata in C (No. 2)	Mendelssohn.
Gavotte in A	Gluck.
Grand Pageant March	Gounod.

Festival March	Smart.
"Love Song"	Henselt.
Prelude and Fugue in D	Bach.
Gavotte, "Mignon"	Thomas.
Chorus, "Fixed in His everlasting seat"	Handel.
Nocturne in G minor	Chopin.
Military March	Schubert.
Andante in F sharp minor	Wesley.
Overture to "Guillaume Tell"	Rossini.

CHELMSFORD.

Special interest was attached to the services at the Unitarian Chapel, Legg Street, New Street, on Sunday, when a new reed organ, by Messrs. E. and W. Snell, of London, was used for the first time. The organ, which is of great sweetness and purity in tone, contains five sets of reeds, with ten stops and knee action, and is enclosed in a handsome Gothic case. Mr. E. Snell, of London, presided at the morning and evening Service, giving at the close of each an organ recital, which embraced the following selections :—Choral Fugue (Mozart) ; Prelude by Chopin ; March from "Athalie" (Mendelssohn) ; Adagio (Guilmant) ; "Morceau" Fugue (Matthias van den Gheyn) ; Lento in E flat (Scotson Clark) ; Procession March (Scotson Clark). Miss E. Maddocks presided in the afternoon. Each service was well attended ; and the cost of the new instrument, with the exception of a small sum, has been defrayed by subscriptions and the collections on Sunday.

Digitized by Google

SANDRINGHAM.

An organ recital was given in Sandringham Church on Wednesday, August 8th, by Mr. Arthur H. Crosse. The following was the programme :—

Grand Sonata in A (Con moto maestoso—Andante tranquillo.)	Mendelssohn.
Andante in D	Gladstone.
Aria, "My heart ever faithful" }	Bach.
Fugue in G minor }
Andante con moto in A	Smart.
Grand Offertoire in G	Wely.
Organ Sketch in G minor	Chipp.
Offertoire in A flat	Batiste.
"Gloria in Excelsis" ("Mass in G")	Weber.

WEST NEWTON.

An organ recital was given in the West Newton Church, on Wednesday, August 15th, by Mr. Arthur H. Crosse. The following was the programme :—

Grand Sonata in C minor	Mendelssohn.
Pastorale in F	Merkel.
"La Carita"	Rossini.
Fugue in D	Bach.
Melody for the Organ	Westbrook.
Grand Offertoire in A	Batiste.
Allegretto Cantabile in D	Hopkins.
Aria in F	Glück.
March, "Albert Edward"	Elvey.
"Vivat Regina"

ASTBURY CHURCH.

The following is the specification of the new organ, now being built by Mr. Stringer, of Hanley :—

GREAT ORGAN. CC TO G.

1. Open Diapason ...	8 ft.	6. Wald Flute	4 ft.
2. Stopped Diapason...	8 „	7. Fifteenth	2 „
3. Clarabella	8 „	8. Mixture (2 ranks).
4. Keraulophon	8 „	9. Trumpet	8 „
5. Principal	4 „

CHOIR ORGAN.

10. Dulciana	8 ft.	13. Harmonic Flute ...	4 ft.
11. Gamba	8 „	14. Clarinet	8 „
12. Stopped Diapason ...	8 „

SWELL ORGAN. CC TO G.

15. Bourdon	16 ft.	20. Gemshorn	4 ft.
16. Open Diapason.....	8 „	21. Harmonic Piccolo...	2 „
17. Lieblich Gedact ...	8 „	22. Mixture (2 ranks).
18. Salcional	8 „	23. Hautboy	8 „
19. Vox Angelica	8 „	24. Cornopean	8 „

PEDAL ORGAN. CCC TO F.

25. Grand Open Diap.	16 ft.	27. Bass Flute.....	8 ft.
26. Grand Bourdon.....	16 „

Three Composition Pedals, to Great Organ.
Three „ „ to Swell.
And Five Couplers.

The Great, Choir, and Pedal Organs will be placed on the north side of the chancel, supported on two pillars, about twelve feet from the floor, and rising up to the clerestory. The Swell will open from the north aisle to the chancel arch.

The annual Welsh musical festival of North Wales choirs, numbering six hundred voices, was held within the ancient walls of Harlech Castle. The weather was delightfully fine, and special trains being run from the watering places, the old castle was crowded with a vast audience. At the morning and afternoon performances, English, Irish, and Welsh airs, together with anthems from the great masters, were rendered by seven choirs. The principal vocalists were—Miss Annie Marriott, Mr. Byfed Lewis, and Mr. Lucas Williams. Sir Richard Wyatt presided. Mr. Samuel Holland, M.P., said, "Now that musical colleges were being established, we should doubtless become a thoroughly musical community." In the evening Handel's oratorio "Judas Maccabœus" was performed by the united choirs, led by Eos Morlais. Mr. Samuel Pope, Q.C., presided, and said no one felt more interested in the promotion and cultivation of music than himself. Excepting the people of Lancashire—his native county—he knew no people who possessed more of the whole heart and soul of music than Welshmen. He hoped when the colleges for higher education in the Principality were erected, students of music would not be forgotten-

THE LATE SCOTSON CLARK.

The Musical Record has the following particulars of the late popular composer and organ player :—

He was born on the 16th of November, 1840, and received his earliest musical instruction from his mother, the daughter of Richard Cusack Kearney, an Irish landed proprietor ; she had studied with Mrs. Anderson, and had, it is said, also received lessons from Chopin. At the age of ten Master Clark played the violin ; at the age of twelve he took the service at the parish church of Ewell, whither he had been sent to school ; at the age of fourteen he was appointed organist at Regent Square church ; and at the age of eighteen he became a teacher in the Royal Academy, where he had studied under the late Sterndale Bennett, the late Sir John Goss, Engel, Pinsuti, and Pettitt.

Before he was twenty years old he had to undergo an operation for cataract ; through the skill of Mr. W. Bowman, his sight improved, although he was always afterwards obliged to wear powerful glasses.

In the year 1865 he founded a College of Music, a special feature of which was the advantage offered to students of the organ and of church music. He was for some time organist of Exeter College, Oxford ; and in 1867 he took the degree of Mus.Bac. In the same year he was appointed Head Master of St. Michael's Grammar School, Brighton. About this time Mr. Scotson Clarke took holy orders, after which he went to Leipzig, where, besides doing duty at the English Church, he devoted himself with fresh energy to the study of music, and for two seasons had the advantage of being under Richter, Reinecke, and other eminent professors. From Leipzig he went to Stuttgart, and continued his studies with Lebert, Kruger, &c. In 1873 he returned to London, and for two years he occupied himself almost exclusively with composition. In 1875 he resumed his connection with the London Organ School. In 1878 he was one of the organists at the Paris Exhibition ; he gave an organ performance at the Trocadéro, and received a gold medal. With regard to memory he was exceptionally gifted. He could play Bach's fugues by heart, and could learn any new piece in an incredibly short time. A distinguished organist and composer once wrote a successful and difficult organ piece, which he refused to publish, wishing to keep it specially for his own use at concerts. Mr. Scotson Clarke went to hear him perform it ; and so, it is said, immediately afterwards played it from memory.

REMINISCENCES OF AN OLD REPORTER.

I first went to a theatre, even old Covent Garden, on Friday, January 18th, 1828, when the "play" was Mozart's opera "Il Seraglio," with an altered plot, and the pantomime "Harlequin and Number Nip of the Giant Mountain." Head over (y)ears in love with a little fairy of 10 or 11 summers, and uncomfortable for 48 hours : anno statis, nine. In this pantomime occurred performances on the slack and the tight rope ; the slack rope man played the "Copenhagen" valse on a horn whilst suspended, like St. Peter, with his head downwards ! The pantomimists then changed their costumes for the harlequinade on the stage ; brand-new "personages" now lazily slipped on from the sides. The music of "Il Seraglio" seemed to be fairly appreciated by the "pittites," amongst whom I sat. The Processional Chorus in C, "Singt dem grossen Basha lieder," took my fancy as a boy, for my father, a "whole-hog" Mozartean, had taught me the tune at home. The opera was capitally performed by a German company at old Drury in 1854 ; it was done at the Royal Italian a year ago. The libretto, like "Die Zauberflöte," was originally German, the title of the work "Die Entführung aus dem Serail" (The abduction from the Seraglio). Osmia's song in D "O wie will ich triumphiren," is strangely neglected by concert singers. Staudigl, and afterwards Formes, made a great hit with this piece 40 years ago. I shall never forget the "run" of Auber's opera "Gustavus III." in the winter of 1833-34. It went on from the middle of December until the next May, at Covent Garden, and afterwards at Drury Lane, for Mr. Bunn held a lease of both houses. The masquerade scene was a marvel of scenic effect. Henry Phillips, Mr. Templeton, Miss Inveraritz, and Mr. Warde were the "principals," and a Miss Shirrett, Oscar the page. Tom Cooke, the conductor, had the brass to manufacture a song for Phillips from the first few bars of the overture in E flat, where Auber effectively uses augmented fifths. The title of this piece was "When time hath bereft thee of charms now divine," and every amateur baritone bought it for domestic use. Phillips was fortunate with his operatic airs. John Barnett gave him the fine song of Hela in the "The Mountain Sylph," "Farewell to the Mountain" (A.D. 1834), and Balfe, in 1836, wrote for him "The light of other days is faded," in "The Maid of Artois ;" the air was twice or thrice encored nearly every night, and the other principals were savagely jealous—genus irritabile vatum! Phillips also scored a point in "The Siege of Rochelle" (A.D. 1835), where he sang a piece, "When I beheld the anchor weighed." His sudden production of two pistols from his boots, on a threat of assassination with a dagger by the villain of the opera (Mr. Giulilei), created a tremendous sensation. I was melted to tears on hearing Phillips's exquisite reading of John Barnett's air in A major from his opera "Fair Rosamond" (A.D. 1837), "Sweet Rose of the World," and used to sing it at home—how weakly in comparison, alas!

Digitized by Google

At old Drury in 1835, Mr. Bunn produced "La Juive" of Halévy, as a grand spectacle and without the music! This was no loss, for Halévy had little melody in his soul; the opera is dulness itself, and the bass air, too often sung by Mr. Foli at concerts, an infliction. Halévy's Shakesperian opera "The Tempest," produced at Her Majesty's Theatre in 1850, with old Lablache as Caliban, fell to the ground still-born—a dead failure. Hector Berlioz and other French critics came over from Paris to witness the performance, and to write feuilletons for their own papers. Berlioz greatly pitied the reporters of the London daily papers, then compelled to write a column or two about a new opera the very same night, and within the interval of an hour and a half to two hours. Poor old Hogarth of the Morning Chronicle and the Daily News, left the Italian Opera on the first night of the season in 1842, at one o'clock, to write his notice, and the morning papers then went to press at about two at the latest. Hector Berlioz and the foreign critics produced their feuilletons as at present, once a week, in the form of a general "musical review," or omnium gatherum. So now in London, a first performance is dismissed with half-a-dozen lines, and the details are given a few days afterwards. Mr. James Davison, of the Times, knocked off one night nearly two columns of an excellent notice on Spohr's "Faust;" the newspaper was exhibited some years afterwards at the Kensington Museum amongst other "curiosities." I myself have sat up until half-past one or two after attending an opera or a grand concert, and written a long notice, either at the newspaper office or at some coffee-house hard by, sipping green tea at intervals, and I had to walk or cab it to Hackney afterwards. "Think of that, Master Brook!" Mr. Tyas, as the head of the parliamentary staff of reporters on the Times, one night fell asleep in a cab, engaged to drive him from the Palace at Westminster to Printing House Square, and was woke up in the Mile End Road, some three miles off, his copy yet unwritten! At musical festivals in the country, reporters for the London papers often write the notice on their hats during the morning performances in the cathedral or town hall, so as to be "up to the collar." At the Worcester Festival of 1845, I was scribbling my notice every day from about one o'clock until five in the afternoon, so as to catch the train which left at the latter hour; then a hasty dinner, and a rush to the evening concert at eight. Observe that I had to "lump in" the concert notice of the preceding night with the critique on the next day's morning performance in the cathedral! Newspaper reporters must not feel drowsy, and there is no time to take snuff, however much they may be "up to it."

A long and formal notice of an opera announced, but suspended on the actual night, appeared in the Morning Herald (A.D. 1856). The reporter had been left in the lurch; he was at once dismissed, but subsequently re-appointed. Many reports of concerts have been written on speculation. Mr. Oxenford of the Times used to say, "go to the concert-hall for a few minutes, if only to see that the house is not burnt down!"

I saw Mendelssohn at Exeter Hall during his visit to England in 1842, also at the Philharmonic concert of June 13th, when he conducted his Symphony in A minor. At Exeter Hall I scrutinized him closely, within a few feet of distance, in the artists' row, where he conversed affably with Muller the organist, Mr. Henry Phillips, and other musicians. Mendelssohn looked pale, and his handsome features struck me as of a rather feminine type. He played variations of his own on "The Harmonious Blacksmith," and made the large organ "speak" that evening. Other organ recitals in the City churches made a great noise at the time, and were eulogised by Mr. H. F. Chorley.

Auber used to praise the Stilton cheese as the "perfect cadence" of our English dinners. Mine is only a half cadence, or suspension of the final tonic chord. A. M.

MUSIC STRINGS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF ALL KINDS OF

STRINGS FOR VIOLIN, VIOLA, VIOLONCELLO, DOUBLE BASS HARP, ZITHER, GUITAR, BANJO, &c., &c.,

Have always in Stock the Largest Assortment of Music Strings of any House in the World.

39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

All Kinds of Strings covered in a superior manner by powerful machines, made on the best principle with all modern improvements.

JUST PUBLISHED, "MORNING and EVENING SERVICE," set to music for the especial use of Parish Choirs, by FREDK. HUNNIBELL, F.C.O. Price, 1s.; or separately, 8d. and 6d.
London: NOVELLO, EWER & CO.

WANTED, Preparation by Correspondence for PRELIMINARY LITERARY EXAMINATION for MUS.BAC. Degree (Oxford Senior Local). Please state Terms to G., care of Weekes and Co., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

MOZART'S ORGAN WORKS. By Frank J. Sawyer, B.Mus. Oxon, F.C.O.
MUSICAL INTELLIGENCE:—Leeds Musical Festival—Cork.
FOREIGN MUSICAL INTELLIGENCE.
A BIRTHDAY LETTER.
ORGAN NEWS:—Liverpool—Fisheries Exhibition—Accrington—St. Leonard's-on-Sea—Maidstone—Brighouse—Royal Albert Hall—Chelmsford Sandringham—West Newton—Astbury Church.
THE LATE SCOTSON CLARK.
REMINISCENCES OF AN OLD REPORTER.
EDITORIAL:—Some Account of an Ancient Institution—A Few Words of Registring on the Organ—The Concert Season of 1883-84.
THE VOICE MUSICALLY AND MEDICALLY CONSIDERED. By Armand Semple, B.A., M.B., Cantab., M.R.C.P., Lond.
REVIEWS OF BOOKS AND MUSIC.
CREMONAS.
THE MUSIC OF A HUNDRED YEARS AGO.
THE APPROACHING CHURCH CONGRESS.
CORRESPONDENCE:—Organ Recitals at Kensington—Royal Academy Pupils—On the Teaching of Counterpoint.
PASSING EVENTS. Service Lists, &c.

LONDON: SATURDAY, AUGUST 25, 1883.

SOME ACCOUNT OF AN ANCIENT INSTITUTION.

THE season of the Welsh Eisteddfodau affords a timely opportunity to say something concerning one of the most ancient series of musical gatherings the world can point to. The word is Eisteddfod, derived from eistedd "to sit," denoting a session of bards. The word bard is of uncertain etymology. LUCAN (Liber 1) writing about A.D. 60 has a passage in which the word occurring in the Latin plural, and in one the common of ancient bardic functions is pourtrayed

> "Vos quoque, qui fortes animas, belloque peremptas
> Laudibus in longum vates dimittitis ævum
> Plurima securi fudistis carmina Bardi."

In these prosaic but far more sensible days, poets and musicians have other tasks than that of celebrating the "patriot souls in battle slain," and in pompous stately periods glorying in various deeds. According to TACITUS, the ancient Germans had warlike songs, called "barditus" by the Latin author. Bards were intimately associated with the daily lives and early art aspirations of the different Celtic tribes. Originally spread over a great part of Western Europe, the bardic race found a last retreat in Wales and Ireland, and now from the ashes of the past, or rather in the glimmering of an unbroken poetical chain of meetings and traditions, the literature, music, and art of the imaginative Welsh people are being fostered in the more than ever popular Eisteddfodau. According to WHARTON, and there is much shrewdness in his conclusion, the bards were in the first instance a "constitutional appendage of the Druidical hierarchy." The ruins of an archdruid's house the "Trer Drew" existed in, and probably may still be seen in, the parish of Llanidau in the Isle of Anglesey. Near this spot is the "Hamlet of Bards," or "Trer Beird." So strong was the Welsh love of poetry and song, that all the changes of ages, the acceptation of the Christian religion, and new political conditions failed to shake, though they modified, the national position of the bards. It may be that the artistic life of a nation is indeed indestructive and plastic, surviving alike decay and change and endowed with a never-ending youthfulness. The domination of the Romans in Britain did, indeed, as far as we know, crush out the primitive songs and art-life and all but destroy the very language of the ancient Britons; but no such results occurred in Wales, where the people, jealous of the encroachments of aliens, whether Romans or Saxons, remained faithfully attached to their songs and Celtic habits. The laws of HOEL DHA, promulgated about the year 940, or 950, recognise the court-bard or "Bardd Teulu." As an officer of an important position in the household, he enjoyed very special court privileges and ranked as worthy of the eighth place in the court of the prince. When the three great feasts of Christmas, Easter, and Whitsuntide came round, he sat next to the prefect of the palace, who delivered the harp to the bard. The bard who gained the chief badge in a musical contest, or Eisteddfod, was supposed to be prepared to sing a hymn to the glory of God, a song in honour of the prince, and the bard of the hall (TEULUWR) sang a song upon a chosen topic. The person and property of the bard were sternly and anxiously protected, rigorous laws being enacted to this end. One of the higher and most privileged of the domestic bards was the PENCERADD GWLAD, though he was not a regularly appointed member of the household. The bards were anciently supposed to be endowed with a sort of a prophetic inspiration. Doubtless they were expert flatterers, as they made a special study of genealogy, a craze characteristic of other than ancient days, and affording, even in modern times a ready access to the pride of birth. They were diligent students of their specially famed predecessors, MYRDDYN AP MORFRYN, MYRDDYN EMRYS, and TALIESIN BEN BEIRDD. About 1080, or as some say in the year 1078, GRYFFTH AP CONAN, KING or Prince of WALES, re-constituted and reformed the bardic hierarchy. In the early history of the Eisteddfodau, the judges were appointed by commission from the princes. One of the last occasions upon which such a commission was granted or deemed necessary, occurred sometime in 1568. It would not interest the reader to go further into this matter. It may however be noted that players on the harp were held to be supreme as instrumentalists, and that performers upon the crwths (or ancient violins with three or more strings), tabor, or pipe were held to be artists of an inferior grade. Four degrees were allowed in the poetical and five in the musical faculty. PENNANT has much to tell upon these matters. A word or two on the Welsh harp may not be out of place, especially as the instrument seems now to be a thing of the past. Though the Welsh, like the Irish, had some form of harp at a very early period, the Welsh triple-stringed harp is not after all a very ancient instrument. Its compass ranged recently from G G to about G in altissimo on the right hand side, and from gamut G to a similar height on the left hand side. The outside strings proceeded in unison, diatonically, and the semitones (moving a semitone higher than the adjacent notes in each case) were placed upon the middle row of strings; thus in modulating from C to G, the F sharp was found upon the middle string level with the two outside strings sounding F natural. The instrument attained some importance by being written for by HANDEL. However, it was an inconvenient, though ingenious instrument in some respects. The infinite superiority of the modern double-action harp as heard under the fingers of so artistic and accomplished a performer as Mr. JOHN THOMAS (himself a Welshman), has convinced all but the most wrong-headed lovers of antiquity, that it is absolutely necessary now, even in Wales, to adopt the modern and improved instrument. The above particulars suggest one thought beyond the interesting testimony they offer as to the early and universally prevailing power of the divine art. This is the question, Have not our musicians in modern days rather lost than gained ground socially speaking? It may be that our princes and nobles seek other pleasures than the pure delights of music; still, all the same, it seems clear that the musician has even now some ground to recover, and the listening patron has yet some lesson to learn, before the old reverence of the art and its professors is fully re-established. On the other hand, it must be allowed that the artist is no longer under the obligation of seeking help and shelter under the patronising wing of the prince or noble; he may now best appeal to the public at large for appreciation and support. All honour is however due to men of olden time who so earnestly supported music and song; and similar honour is also due to the men who still in Wales carry forward the same good work by annually holding the valuable and interesting meeting still dignified by the ancient title of the Eisteddfodau. It is, in conclusion only to be hoped that they will be faithfully continued in the full daylight of modern art-thought.

Digitized by Google

E. H. TURPIN.

A FEW WORDS OF REGISTRING ON THE ORGAN.

OWING to such changes in the construction of the modern organ as increased wind pressure, the importation and invention of novel stops, and the large extension of orchestration of late years, the art of applying tone-colour to organ music has undergone some decided changes during the past half-century. Mr. JAS. HIGGS has already alluded to this matter in a highly interesting paper on "Organ Arrangements." It is certain that the old directions, such as a preceding generation were familiar with in such works as NOVELLO'S Select Organ Pieces, are things of the past. It is also true, that there is a feeling against the too slavish use of the stereotyped composition pedal combinations. Providing this new feeling for nice tone gradations and frequent modifications of the tone qualities of the organ is not carried to a feverish point, it is an undoubtedly artistic advance. One would jealously watch a movement which would induce our organ players to sacrifice anything of that spirit of calmness which arises from the occasionally prolonged use of registers of the diapason genus. Still, it is clear that our organs are in future to contain a larger admixture of 8-feet and soft 4-feet stops, and that the art of organ playing will involve a more and more skilled employment of soft mixed tone qualities of these types, and a decreasing tendency to handle the organ as an instrument of fixed combinations and effects. The combinations up to principal or to principal and fifteenth, have become of less frequent use for instance, partly from the introduction of stops of the harmonic flute type, which are so useful in the performance of contrapuntal music, as throwing forward without too much sharpness the outlines of the moving parts. The presence of more soft reeds again, and the introduction of the stringed-toned family of stops, have in different directions tended to create new effects in the art of registring, and the presence of soft doubles of 16-feet pitch has also resulted in adding richness to certain organic effects. It may be that increased wind pressures have had much to do with a changed taste in stop manipulation, but it is also evident that the future of skilled organ playing will require the careful cultivation of the art of judiciously mixing the softer tone-qualities. This subject may receive further attention presently.

Digitized by Google

E. H. Turpin.

THE CONCERT SEASON OF 1883—84.

The "recess," in respect of musical business, is not quite so long as the parliamentary one. Even now, activity prevails at the Crystal Palace, where Mr. A. Manns, untiring, and unfatigued by the exhausting labours of the last ten months, is holding weekly concerts on Saturday evenings, and performing standard operas every afternoon, beginning with Wallace's "Maritana" last Tuesday, and promising Auber's "Fra Diavolo," Sir Julius Benedict's "Graziella," and Sir W. Sterndale Bennett's "May Queen," which may be mounted for the stage. The autumnal season of Saturday afternoon concerts will begin at the end of the first week in October.

With November, not always so "dark and dreary" as the song suggests, will come forward Herr Richter and Mr. Arthur Chappell. Herr Richter, in addition to his nine Spring concerts, now gives three "extras" in the Autumn, and might, probably, increase the number, without pecuniary loss. The three concerts of this "fall" are fixed for October 29, and November 3 and 10. The materials are sure to be of stirling value. The "Popular" Concerts, no longer "Monday Popular," for one is held every Saturday afternoon, have taken deep root in the ground, and fully deserve the patronage which the public, not always disposed to support classical enterprises, so liberally bestows. It might be, and has been, hinted to the worthy Director of the "Popular" Concerts that the repertoire would be improved by an extension, to include more new compositions of acknowledged merit on the Continent. Mr. Charles Halle has set a good example in this respect at his own annual Recitals, now held in the Grosvenor Gallery. Mr. Arthur Chappell, moreover, might provide a greater variety of pianists and solo players.

Mdlle. Janotha, Miss Zimmermann, and Miss Krebs are admirable exponents of classical texts; the first is now famous. Mr. Charles Halle, of course, may rest content with his laurels. Nevertheless, several eminent European pianists remain to be heard; the engagement of Herr Vladimir de Pachmann, last winter, was a good move in the right direction, and holds out a fair prospect for future seasons. It would be invidious to name individual artists, not hitherto engaged at the "Popular," but their names are familiar in the wide, wide (musical) world.

Everyone is glad to be informed that the old Philharmonic Society, the friend and in one sense the foster-mother of Beethoven, has done well this year in the financial department. The energetic Treasurer, Mr. Charles E. Stephens (ably seconded by the Honorary Secretary, Mr. Henry Hersee), has restored the fortunes of the Philharmonic; so, in 1842, Sir Robert Peel by his Budget—(no thanks for the permanent Income Tax)—converted the annual deficits of the ministry of the day into a respectable surplus. The Philharmonic Directors had prudently widened their boundaries, so as to comprehend more modern works, many of them quite new to the English public. It is to be regretted, on the other hand, that so much money is squandered for the engagement of "star" vocalists, however eminent.

The motive of the directors is, no doubt to draw audiences, but if fine symphonies and cantatas do not suffice to fill St. James's Hall, it is to be feared that the "occupation" of the Society is "gone," like Othello's.

Mr. Wilhelm Ganz of the "Orchestral," once the "New Philharmonic," concerts, has abandoned his enterprise after some years of valiant campaigning. The public thus lose the opportunity of hearing fine compositions splendidly performed, with a leader like Mr. Politzer, on Saturday afternoon, and by daylight. But Mr. Ganz cannot be expected to pay the piper at the expense of a certain deficit. He is entitled to many thanks for the production of Hector Berlioz's "Symphonie Fantastique" with the two big bells, and the engagement of fine pianists, such as Mdme. Menter, Herr De Pachmann and Herr Loewenberg.

Very early in the Spring of 1884—leap year, by the way—the Philharmonic concerts will be resumed, and Herr Richter is to follow suit in May. The "Monday Pops" will go on from the end of October until the Monday in Passion, or as the Ritualists term it, "Holy" Week, which, next year, is on April 7th, as Easter Day falls on April 15th, or three weeks later than in 1883. The "Ballad" concerts are good of their kind, and splendid pianists, such as Mdme. Menter, have been engaged of late years.

The Royal Albert Hall must not be forgotten. Mr. Barnby will, as before, hold an oratorio concert once a month, beginning in November. It is hoped and expected by the sanguine, that he will perform "La "Messa des Morts" of Hector Berlioz, the general execution of which colossal work last Spring at Sydenham failed to satisfy connoisseurs, notwithstanding the laudable efforts and clever conducting of friend Manns. Fortune does not always favour the bold; for a good general must be backed by a serviceable and efficient army!

Digitized by Google

The autumn season of this year will comprise two "provincial" festivals at Gloucester and Leeds, to take place respectively in September and October. The old festival of the "Three Choirs" rather lives on a respectable reputation than on present prowess, but the managers certainly endeavour to maintain vitality by the infusion of fresh blood, not always of the purest or bluest! Formidable, indeed, to musical reporters, for the list of important novelties at this forthcoming festival, is truly terrific in the eyes of unfortunate men who will be obliged to scribble off slips of "copy" by the hundred, for transmission to London by express, and to dash off telegrams, for the composition of which in elegant terms, time always fails. A. M.

THE VOICE

MUSICALLY AND MEDICALLY CONSIDERED.

BY

Armand Semple, B.A., M.B., Cantab., M.R.C.P., Lond.,

Physician to the Royal Society of Musicians.

(Continued from page 104).

The Various Organs concerned in Vocalisation.

Hitherto in speaking of the voice, the larynx has been almost exclusively discussed, but it must be mentioned that various other organs are concerned in vocalisation, viz. :—

1. The Lungs, or Bellows, or Organs of Air-Supply.
2. The Larynx, or Organ of Vibration.
3. The Pharynx, or Organ of Reflection.
4. The Mouth providing the organ of articulation, viz., the Lips, Tongue, Palate, and Teeth.

The Lungs, the Air-Supplying Organs.

These organs are two in number, one on each side of the chest; they are the essential organs of respiration, are situated underneath the vocal organ, and perform an office exactly analogous to that of the bellows of an harmonium or church organ supplying the air or wind requisite to throw the vocal cords into vibration. From the lungs the air passes through a number of small tubes, termed the ramifications of the bronchi (bronchial tubes), which converge into one bronchus or bronchial tube on each side, the two bronchi at last meeting to form an extremely elastic tube, termed the trachea or windpipe, which ascending the anterior surface of the neck in a vertical direction terminates in the larynx.

The lungs are frequently but very erroneously imagined to give rise to the sounds commonly known as Chest Notes. This fallacy originates in the fact that men, certainly not women, perceive in the act of speaking or singing, in the lower tones, a powerful vibration in the chest and back; but the chest has no power to create these sounds, the vibrations of which are simply transmitted, and in reality the chest under these circumstances may be compared to the harmonic or sounding-board of a violin or piano.

The lungs simply act as receptacles for the accumulated air; they are enclosed by the ribs and lie upon the diaphragm, by which structure they are separated from the abdomen. The lungs are developed during the act of inspiration simultaneously and conjointly from above downwards through the contraction of the diaphragm, and laterally by the ribs becoming distended. It is uncertain whether these two acts could take place independently of one another, but it is exceedingly probable that upon their conjoint action depends perfect inspiration. The inspiratory act in the female subject is more frequently effected by the elevation of the chest or thorax, hence their breathing is known as thoracic.

The Larynx.—The Vibrating Organ.

This organ is the generator of the voice, and forms in the male the protuberance in the front of the throat, to which the name of Pomum Adami or Adam's apple has been given. In the centre of the larynx is a narrow passage formed by two membranes spread horizontally across it, having a common attachment at the pomum and passing backwards one on each side. These are the vocal ligaments or true cordæ vocales (vocal cords).

The aperture between these ligaments is called the glottis or rima glottidis (chink of the glottis), and these cords are therefore frequently called the lips of the glottis. To these lips or ligaments the vibrations of the voice are solely due. During inhalation the shape of the glottis is nearly triangular, but in the act of phonation (speaking or singing) it assumes a linear form, the ligaments being closely drawn together. The vocal cords are not similar in structure throughout their entire length, the anterior three-fifths being composed of ligament, and their posterior two-fifths of cartilage. Situated above the vocal ligaments are two oblong cavities termed the ventricula laryngis, or ventricles of the larynx, one on each side, each being surmounted by a fold or band, the position of which is parallel to the vocal cord. The space between the folds is termed the superior upper or false glottis. This orifice is far wider than the inferior true or real glottis, and it never closes. The office performed by the upper glottis is to circumscribe an elliptical space immediately above the lower lips, enlarging and contracting this space, so that when desired the quality and volume of the voice may be capable of modification. During the emission of vocal sounds the superior opening of the larynx is free, but during deglutition it is completely closed by the epiglottis, a kind of small heart-shaped lid, which is situated behind the tongue. The registers, the brightness or dulness of sounds, and their volume and intensity are entirely formed by the larynx.

The Pharynx.—The Reflecting Organ.

This is an elastic cavity situated at the back of the mouth, between the tongue and the arch by which the circumference of the palate is formed. The voice on its issue from the glottis is echoed and reflected by this cavity, and since the pharynx can assume numerous forms it communicates a distinctive character to the sounds generated by the larynx.

The Mouth.—The Articulating Organ.

This is composed of divers movable parts, viz., the tongue, jaw, palate, and lips, the special function of which is to render the vowels precise, and to make the process of articulation perfect by the addition of the consonants.

Register. Timbre. Intensity.

Every sound is possessed of these three attributes. The Registers are 3 in number, viz. :—

1. The Chest Voice or Voce Di Petto.
2. The Falsetto Voice or Voce Di Fasetto.
3. The Head Voice or Voce Di Testa.

Timbre or Quality.

The leading qualities are 2 in number.

1. The Open or Clear.
2. The Closed or Muffled.

(To be continued).

A medal has been awarded to the celebrated export pianos manufactured by Weidenslaufer, Berlin, by the international jury of the Colonial Exhibition in Amsterdam.

At the recent temperance fête held at the Crystal Palace, and at which fifteen bands competed, Messrs. Besson and Co. not only presented a large proportion of the instruments which were contested for, but exhibited near the centre transept a case containing their latest productions in brass and wood instruments, and distributed circulars to all the musicians, inviting them to inspect their factory and show-rooms.

Digitized by Google

Reviews.

Vive La Reine. Gavotte for Pianoforte. By George Asch. (Willey & Co., 1883.)—An effective specimen of the genre in the key of F, with very pretty "motives."

The British Patrol. By George Asch. (Riviere and Hawkes).—This "Descriptive Allegro" is a sequel to the popular Turkish Patrol. It is performed every week at the Fisheries Exhibition and at the Crystal Palace, by a military band, and invariably envokes enthusiastic applause. The key is F.

Geh' Perlen Suchen; Der Tochter Klage. German Songs. Composed by Richard Dressel. (Stanley, Lucas and Co., 1883).—The first of these lieder, "Seek pearls upon the barren strand," is a pretty, sentimential effusion in E flat, but the signature is almost immediately contradicted by a C flat; as at the outset of Schumann's pianoforte quintet, and a touch of change to B flat minor. The range is from E natural to G natural above the lines. The second song, "Motherless," is short and pathetic; the key D minor; the range from C to F natural. The composer, as in the first song, shows a predilection for skips of the minor sixth; here, from G natural to E flat. Mr. Dressel's other German lieder, sung at his last concert, were reviewed about a fortnight ago.

Organ Cases and Organs of the Middle Ages, etc. By Arthur Hill, B.A., F.S.A. (David Bogue, 3, St. Martin's Place, Trafalgar Square).—An imposing volume, large folio size, and a handsome drawing-room or library book. The author well prepared for his task by earnest, antiquarian and technical study, opens with a chapter "On the Destruction of Ancient Organs"; which, although interesting, betrays the common error of describing all kinds of artistic neglect and wilful destruction to the period of the Commonwealth, an error it is now time to shake off. Mr. Hill has, however, much to say of organs which were not destroyed, and does not confine himself to the usual course of quoting prejudiced and not unnaturally spiteful Royalist accounts of certain ill-advised fanaticisms of the Commonwealth period. Indeed, he has something to say against vandalism of more modern times. The chapters on "Remarkable Organs of early and late times," "English Organs of the Middle Ages," "The Organ Case," etc., are admirably written, and very interesting. With regard to the more technical chapters, the name of the author is a sufficient guarantee for their accuracy and utility. In dealing with "The Position of the Organ in our Churches," Mr. Hill gives some sensible suggestions without confining himself to an advocacy of any fixed position for all large churches alike. The question is one of much importance; and it is not a little curious that the natural greed for large, open spaces in our great churches, makes it as difficult to properly place an organ in a cathedral as in a village church. A large portion of the volume is occupied by plates of the more famous organs and organ cases in England, Germany, France, Italy, etc., together with descriptions of and remarks upon their constructional peculiarities and contents. One reflection arises from a perusal of details: surprise at the skill, artistic power, and liberality of the people of former days; and the counter reflection also arises, that in these boastful times we are apt to be over fussy and to cackle exceedingly when we chance to build an organ of anything more than respectable dimensions. The thanks of the musical and architectural worlds are due to Mr. Arthur Hill for his painstaking labour, enterprise, and excellently written chapters of this notable work. The handsome volume previously issued by Mr. John Norbury, perhaps, to some extent, anticipated Mr. A. Hill's work; but Mr. Hill's valuable addition to the literature of the "King of Instruments" is exceedingly welcome, and, it is to be hoped, will receive a due public appreciation.

Franz Liszt, Artist and Man. By L. Ramann, translated from the German by Miss Cowdery. (W. H. Allen and Co., 13, Waterloo Place).—It is not often that the influence of the artist is great enough, or his life long enough, to justify so complete, so frank, and so thoroughly personal a narrative as is to be found in the well got up and interesting volumes now under notice. That there are errors of detail and misprints, that the work is one of considerable partisanship, are matters which go without saying. On the other hand, there is every sign, on the part of both author and translator, of painstaking enthusiasm, careful investigation, and appreciative thought. It is, indeed, a rare thing to find a book, entering as this does, most fully into an examination of the works, life, nay, very thoughts of the genius to be pourtrayed. What will be Liszt's ultimate position in the world of art, is a question often thought of, doubtless. His talents are of a most exceptional type truly, and as an executant he occupies a standing place all but unique. As a composer, and this is probably the department in which he wishes himself to claim the widest recognition, his long life and splendid reputation, have not even now secured for him a very exalted position. It cannot be denied that he possesses abundantly the faculty of being picturesque, and at times even poetical; but his want of constructive power, the art of saying only the right thing at the right time, and a consequent diffusive vagueness of manner, it must be allowed, have tended to deny to him the power and popularity his otherwise exceptional gifts and eloquence might have secured. Our author begins with Liszt from his birth, tracing very fully the development of his talents; his growth as an executant; his advance as a composer; his concert tours; his Parisian experience; his religious, political, and social thoughts and actions, and his loves and friendships. All these are gone into with a frankness and clearness at times damaging, and at times engaging. The artist and the man are indeed very minutely examined and pictured. To the student about to enter the world, to the artist already in the world, to the musician desirous of reading about the opinions and doings of the past great artistic generation, these volumes will be very welcome and of distinct use. Despite an occasional proneness to a rather excessive affectionate sentimentality not unnatural in a sincere admirer of a truly gifted man, the author writes with clearness and purpose; and the work fascinates the reader in its well sustained general and artistic interest.

CREMONAS.

The Rev. H. Haweis recently contributed an article to the Gentlemen's Magazine upon this topic, from which the following passages are extracted:—

At the beginning of this century, hidden away in old Italian convents and wayside inns, lay the masterpieces of the Amati, Stradivarius, Guarnerius, and Bergonzi. But Tarisio's eye was getting cultivated. He was learning to know a fiddle when he saw it. "Your violinio, Signor, requires mending?" says the itinerant pedlar, as he salutes some monk known to be connected with the sacristy or choir of Pisa, Florence, Milan. "I can mend it." Out comes the Stradivarius, with a loose bar or split rib, and sounding abominably. "Dio mio!" says Tarisio, but your violino is in a bad way. My respected father is prayed to try one that I have, in perfect and beautiful accord and repair, and permit me to mend this worn-out machine. And Tarisio, whipping a shining clean instrument out of his bag, hands it to the monk, who eyes it and is for trying it. He tries it; it goes soft and sweet, though not loud and wheezing, like the battered old Stradi. Tarisio clutches his treasure. The next day back comes the pedlar to the cloister, is shown up to the padre. "But" he exclaims, "you have lent me a beautiful violino and in perfect order." "Ah! if the father would accept from me a small favour," says the cunning Tarisio. "And what is that?" "To keep the violinio that suits him so well, and I will take in exchange the old machine which is worn out, but with my skill I shall still make something of it!" A glass of good wine or a lemonade or black coffee clinches the bargain. Off goes Tarisio, having parted with a characterless German fiddle—sweet and easy going and "looking nice," and worth now about £5—in perfect order, no doubt—and having secured one of those gems of Cremona which now run into the £200. Violin collecting became the passion of Tarisio's life. The story has been told by Mr. Charles Reade, and all the fiddle world knows how Tarisio came to Paris with a batch of old instruments, and was taken up by Chanot and Villaume, through whose hands passed nearly every one of those chefs-d'œuvre recovered by Tarisio.

Mr. Theodore Thomas has received a copy of the new symphonic poem by Franz Liszt, entitled "From the Cradle to the Grave," which his orchestra will bring out in Chicago.

Digitized by Google

THE MUSIC OF A HUNDRED YEARS AGO.

The following extracts are quoted from the Nineteenth Century :—

Music is a better test of the moral culture of an art age than its painting or its sculpture, or even its architecture. Music, by its nature, is ubiquitous, as much almost as poetry itself, and in one sense more so, for its vernacular tongue is common to mankind. Music in its nature is social, it can enter every home, it is not the privilege of the rich ; and thus it belongs to the social and domestic life of a people, as painting and sculpture—the arts of the few—never have done or can do. It touches the heart and the character as the arts of form have never sought to do, at least in the modern world. When we test the civilization of an age by its art we should look to its music next to its poetry, and sometimes even more than to its poetry. One wearies of hearing how grand and precious a time is ours, now that we can draw a corn-flower right. Music is the art of the eighteenth century, the art wherein it stands supreme in the ages—perfect, complete, and self-created. If one thinks of the pathos of those great songs, of the majesty of those full choirs, of the inexhaustible melody of their operas and all that Bach, Handel, Haydn, Mozart, Gluck, and the early years of Beethoven gave us, it is strange to hear that that age was dead to art. Neither the age which gave us Rheims and Westminster Abbey, nor even the age which gave us the Parthenon, did more for humanity than the age to which we owe the oratorios and the operas, the sonatas, symphonies, and masses of the great age of music. Not merely was music of the highest order produced, not merely did that age create almost all the great orders of music, but the generation gave itself to music with a passion such as marked all ages wherein art reaches its zenith. When Handel and Buononcini, Gluck and Piccini, divided the town, it was not with the languid partisanship which amuses our leisure, but with the passions of the red and green factions in the circus of Byzantium. England, it is true, had few musicians of its own, but Handel is for practical purposes an English musician, and the great Italian singers and the great German masters were never more truly at home than when surrounded by English admirers. Our people bore their fair share in this new birth of art, especially if our national anthem was really the product of this age. And not our people only, but the men of culture, of rank, of power, and the Court itself. And the story that the King caused the whole house to rise when the "Hallelujiah Chorus" was heard is a happy symbol of the enthusiasm of the time.

THE APPROACHING CHURCH CONGRESS.

Earnest people who are accustomed by long experience to disappointments regarding the conduct of the Church, and the intense difficulty to be encountered in making our clergy alive to the wants of our times, have special cause for disappointment in the stale, poverty-stricken scheme of the Church Congress at Reading from October 2nd to 5th. Of course there will be the usual overplus of clerical talk, and the chatter of those who think they are able to talk upon every subject it is possible for man to talk about. But, alas ! there is hardly a sign of any sensible and gainful discussion as to the necessary steps whereby to increase the national affection for the Church, to intensify, and where necessary (especially as regards the prevailing plethora of talk upon every possible subject in the pulpit during divine worship) to abbreviate and improve her Services, and to purify and enlarge the scope of sacred art. More love, more earnestness, more beauty in that precious heritage of the Christian religion ; music : less talk, less wrangling, less of clerical professional interests, these are the imperative calls now being made ; yet year after year passes by, and little or nothing is done. The only hopeful sign of the approaching meeting in which, as usual, clerical obtuseness and the clerical tendency to talk, rather than to listen now and then and to learn something of the people's religious wants, form the "dead flies in the ointment," is the consideration for two hours and a half only of the vital question, "the Services of the Church and their adaptation to modern needs."

Mr. Theodore Blockley, music publisher, has removed his stock to his new premises at 72, Berners Street, W.

Mr. James J. Monk presided at the organ at St. Peter's, Church Street, Liverpool, last Sunday morning and evening. Advantage was taken of the occasion to do Travers' rarely-sung anthem, "Ascribe unto the Lord" and Hatton's fine E flat Service. The Service altogether went well, and was an enjoyable change from the usual humdrum style of the parish services.—The Liverpool Musical and Dramatic World.

Passing Events.

An American musical paper asks, Was Rubinstein's opera "The Demon" composed as an "imp"-romptu?

The band and chorus at the Leeds Festival consist conjointly of 425 performers, of which the orchestra will number 112 players.

An American journal says, an operetta has been composed with the title of "In a Dilemma." Of course, the orchestral score will include two horns.

Messrs. Neumeyer and Co. are again to the front, this time having a show of their pianofortes and Bell organs at the Building Exhibition, which opened at Manchester recently, and is to continue for six weeks.

Five of the "Gala Cars" of the Rock Island, Chicago, and Pacific Railway Company, are named respectively after Adelina Patti, Clara Louise Kellogg, Anna Louise Cary, Emma Abbott, and Christine Nilsson.

The Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishops of London, St. Albans, and Rochester, have become patrons of the London Church Choir Association. The annual festival takes place at St. Paul's Cathedral on November 8th.

The Americans are adopting the titles "Mus. Doc." and "Mus. Bac." At the recent commencement of Racine College the degree of Doctor of Music was conferred upon George W. Warren, organist of St. Thomas's Church, New York.

The West End (London) Welsh Eisteddfod is to be held at the Vestry Hall, Kings Road, Chelsea, on Dec. 4th, the prize compositions being sent in by Nov. 12th. Particulars may be obtained of Mr. W. M. Jones, 197a, Buckingham Palace Road, S.W.

Readers will regret to learn that it is understood that Sir Michael Costa has been unfortunate in some important investments. The testimonial to the esteemed chef d'orchestre is likely presently to take a practical form. Sir Michael Costa, one is grieved to add, is still suffering from paralysis of the organs of speech.

In spite of the local competition of the Prince's Hall, and the multiplication of concert-rooms, the shares of St. James's Hall paid 8 per cent this year. It is true they produced 10 per cent two years ago, but on the other hand there has been a large outlay upon the hall during that period.

On Tuesday evening next, at St. John's, Waterloo Road, Mr. Samuel Millar, professor of the trombone at the Royal College of Music, will join Mr. H. J. B. Dart, in giving an organ recital, including a grand Fantasia and Chorale, "Ein feste burg" (Braüer) ; "Marche Funebre," from Concerto (David) ; and Prayer (Michael), for trombone and organ.

The Trovatore makes out the following thirty-five composers as having written operas on the subject of "Semiramide" : Andrea Ziani (1671), Strungk (1684), Aldovrandini (1701), Pollaroli (1714), Destouches (1718), Vinci (1723), Caldara (1725), Porpora (1729), Vivaldi (1732), Aroja (1738), Aliprandi (1740), Hasse (1747), Gluck (1748), Delle Dame (1750), Jomelli (1752), Cocchi (1753), Graun (1754), Sacchini (1762), Guglielmi and Traetta (1765), Sarti (1765), Paisiello (1773), Salieri (1774), Prati and Martellari (1785), Gyrowetz (1790), Nasolini (1792), Himmel (1795), Bianchi (1798), Cimarosa (1799), Portogallo and Catel (1802), Meyerbeer (1819), Rossini (1823), Garcia (1828).

Thomas Hamilton Murray, writing, for the Home Journal of the private libraries of Boston, U.S., says :—Dr. Eben Tourjée, of the New England Conservatory of Music, has a splendid collection of several thousand volumes, which comprises the finest music library in the United States. It includes, among other features, the extremely valuable collection of the late Dr. Tuckerman, and contains the complete scores of many of the great masters. There is also in the library a vast amount of interesting rarities, both in the line of music literature and in that of a general nature. In addition to the collection of works on music, there is also a fine library of historical and philosophical works, belles lettres, and books of reference.

Digitized by Google

Correspondence.

ORGAN RECITALS AT KENSINGTON.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "MUSICAL STANDARD."

Sir,—For the national credit and out of respect for some gentlemen of acknowledged ability whose names are on the list of performers, cannot some supervision be exercised in the selection of those who are permitted to give organ recitals at the International Fisheries Exhibition?

It was my misfortune to pass both the organs the other day, between six and seven o'clock. Recitals were in progress. In both instances the element of correct time was conspicuously wanting, and one was being concluded by a rendering of the "Wedding March" which baffles description. "Finis coronat opus." (There was no indication that it was intended by the performer as a comic reading of the work).

Yours, etc.,
AN ORGAN STUDENT.

London, August 20th.

ROYAL ACADEMY PUPILS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "MUSICAL STANDARD."

Sir,—You kindly mention my name as classed in a first division of commenced singers at the Royal Academy of Music. The printer should have printed it commended singers, a slight difference, as I am not a mere novice or freshwoman, but a pupil of two years' standing. Please correct this error, as it spoils the effect of your valuable notice.

Yours truly,
FRANCES POWELL.

5, Gledhow Terrace, South Kensington.
August 16th.

ON THE TEACHING OF COUNTERPOINT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "MUSICAL STANDARD."

Sir,—A few words from me upon this subject, recently discussed in your columns, may not be inappropriate.

The discussion seems to resolve itself into two questions: firstly, the desirableness, for students, of a course of strict (as distinguished from free) Counterpoint, using those terms in their precise, technical sense; secondly, the validity, goodness or badness, of the various notes given by writers of books on Counterpoint.

Eleven years ago, I wrote: "The study and practice of strict Counterpoiut is adapted to cultivate a pure and solid manner of writing. Free Counterpoint is soon learned after the student has subjected himself to the discipline of a course of strict Counterpoint; from the restrictions of which he will then easily emancipate himself, with greatly increased power, from having worked under them; albeit that they may have seemed to him somewhat arbitrary and irksome."—("Text book of Music," p. 119). From that main position I see no reason to recede, after some thirty-three years of professional experience.

Moreover, I think there is a pretty general consent among musicians to the conjoint study of Harmony—(chords, and their treatment)—and Counterpoint (see p. 41 of "Text book.")

Now, seeing that in studying Harmony the learner will in all probability be kept for some time at triads and their inversions, and that, in strict Counterpoint, triads and their first inversion are the only chords usually authorized, it will follow that the student's early contrapuntal work will be of the nature of strict Counterpoint, and, in the preface to my "Text book," (p. vii.), I endeavoured to sketch a plan for the side-by-side study of Counterpoint and harmony, as the student advanced with the latter. Undoubtedly, if the study of Counterpoint is not commenced until the learner has made considerable advance with harmony—mastering not only all the chords and their treatment, but also suspensions, passing-notes, etc., it will seem to him a most depressing repression to be held in with the bit and bridle of strict Counterpoint; and that, moreover, in two parts. The harness will chafe.

But, five years ago, I wrote,—(I must be forgiven for quoting myself)—"There is nothing revolutionary in suggesting the enlargement of the basis of contrapuntal study, in conformity with the wider range of harmonies now recognized. There is really no justification for the perpetual and rigid exclusion, all through the student's contrapuntal course, of the chord of the 7th and its inversions. Or, to put the matter in another way: if, ... the study of Harmony . . . . be pursued in conjunction with that of Counterpoint, there is no valid reason why the rules should not be so far elasticized as to be progressively adapted to the further insight of the student into the various essential chords . . . . . The subsequent application of the rules respecting passing-notes, suspensions, etc., need be of no practical difficulty under a judicious teacher. . . . . If all this is done, with a wise, progressive conservatism, there will be no real provocation of the frequent complaints of students against the stringent exclusion of dissonant harmonies from their early exercises."—(Preface to seventh edition, pp. xiii.-xiv.)

I venture to submit, Mr. Editor, that these suggestions, thrown out years since, anticipated somewhat the matters that have been lately under discussion, and pretty well cover the ground. If any teachers, now-a-days, insist upon the study of strict Counterpoint exclusively, without extending their pupils' horizon beyond those narrow limits, or illustrating the application of the principles (not the rules, especially the prohibitory rules)—to modern, free writing, such musical Tories fail in their duty to those entrusted to them, through failure to apprehend, with their own minds, the philosophy of Counterpoint. But, though I am aware of the influence of certain examinations in perpetuating a somewhat antique rigidity, I believe that intelligent teachers are, now-a-days, more ready to proceed with what I have called a "progressive conservatism."

I may add that it is the "go-a-head" tendencies of the present day which have imbued students with a certain unsubmissive erraticism, necessitating more restrictiveness on the part of watchful teachers than might otherwise have been requisite.

I remain, dear Sir,
Yours faithfully,
HENRY CHAS. BANISTER.

August 21st, 1883.

Service Lists.

FOURTEENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

AUGUST 26th.

London.

St. Paul's Cathedral.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Selby in A; Introit, O God unseen, but ever near; Holy Communion, Alwyn in C. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Selby in A; Anthem, Whosoever drinketh of this water, and Therefore with joy (Bennett).

Foundling Chapel.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Goss in F; Jubilate, Sullivan in D; Anthem, The Wilderness (Goss). Aft.: Children's Service.

Christ Church, Clapham.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Plain-song; Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei, and Gloria in excelsis, Tours in F, and Eyre in A flat. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Tours in F; Anthem, Great and marvellous (Boyce).

Holy Trinity, Gray's Inn Road.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Dykes in F; Jubilate, Chanted. Even.: Service, Magnificat, Chanted; Nunc Dimittis, Parry in D; Anthem, In the beginning was the word (Allen).

Holy Trinity, Tulse Hill.—Morn.: Chant Service. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Garrett in D; Anthem, O that Thou hadst hearkened, and There is joy in the presence (Sullivan).

St. James's Private Episcopal Chapel, Southwark.—Morn.: Service, Introit, Blessed is he that cometh (Gounod); Communion Service, Haydn in B flat, No. 1. Even.: Service, Aldrich in G; Anthem, Plead Thou my cause (Handel).

St. Magnus, London Bridge.—Morn.: Service, Opening Anthem, If we say (Calkin); Te Deum and Jubilate, Goss in A; Kyrie (Goss). Even.: Service, Cantate and Deus Misereatur, Goss in C; Anthem, O praise the Lord (Goss).

St. Margaret Pattens, Rood Lane, Fenchurch Street.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Sullivan in D; Benedictus, Dykes in F; Communion Service; Offertory Anthem, To Thee, great Lord (Rossini); Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei, and Gloria, Hummel in B flat. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Steggall in C; Anthem, O love the Lord (Sullivan).

St. Paul's, Avenue Road, South Hampstead.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Hopkins in G; Benedictus, Goss; Kyrie, Nares in F. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Bunnett in F; Anthem, Incline Thine ear (Himmel).

St Augustine and St. Faith, Watling Street.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Tours in F; Benedictus (Gounod); Introit, Behold, O God (South); Communion Service, Tours in F. Even.: Service (Gounod); Anthem, I will mention (Sullivan).

St. Saviour's, Hoxton.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Smart in F; Holy Communion; Kyrie, Credo, Sursum Corda, Sanctus, and Gloria in excelsis, Tours in F. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Stainer in F; Anthem, The Lord is exalted (West).

St. Sepulchre's, Holborn.—Morn: Service, Boyes in A; Anthem, From the rising (Ouseley). Even.: Service, Porter in D; Anthem, Thy word is a lantern (Purcell).

Digitized by Google

Country.

ST. ASAPH CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Whitfeld in F; Anthem, Grant us Thy peace (Mendelssohn). Even.: Service, Whitfeld in F; Anthem, I will wash my hands (Hopkins).

ASHBURNE CHURCH, DERBYSHIRE.—Morn.: Service, Kempton in B flat, without accompaniement. Even.: Service, Arnold in B flat; Anthem, O taste and see (Goss); without accompaniment.

BIRMINGHAM (S. ALBAN THE MARTYR).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Dykes in F; Holy Communion; Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Gloria, Dykes in F; Benedictus and Agnus Dei, Redman in D. Evensong: Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Parry in D.

BIRMINGHAM (ST. CYPRIAN'S, HAY MILLS).—Morn.: Service, Cobb in G; Anthem, Wherewithal shall a young man (Elvey). Even.: Service, Cobb in G; Anthem, The Lord is my Shepherd (Kent).

CHESTER (ST. MARY'S CHURCH).—Morn.: Service, Boyce in C; Introit, O food that weary pilgirims love; Communion Service, Tuckermann in F. Even.: Service, Turle in D; Anthem, O rest in the Lord, and He that shall endure unto the end "Elijah" (Mendelssohn).

DONCASTER (PARISH CHURCH).—Morn.: Service, Calkin in B flat. Even.: Service, Stainer in E flat; Anthem, In humble faith (Garrett).

DUBLIN, ST. PATRICK'S (NATIONAL) CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Wesley in F; Holy Communion, Kyrie, Creed, Sanctus, Wesley in F. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Ebdon in C; Anthems, As pants the hart (Spohr), and Lord how they are increased (Stevenson).

ELY CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Walmisley in D; Kyrie and Credo, Walmisley in D; Gloria, Monk in A; Anthem, From all that dwell (Walmisley). Even.: Service, Walmisley in D; Anthem, Ye shall dwell in the land (Stainer).

HARROGATE (ST. PETER'S CHURCH).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Chants; Anthem, Come unto me (Smith); Kyrie and Credo, Wesley in E. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Turle in D; Anthem, O taste and see (Goss); Sullivan's arrangement of St. Ann's tune before Sermon.

LICHFIELD CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Calkin in B flat; Anthem, Rejoice ye "The morning stars" (Stainer). Even.: Service, Calkin in B flat; Anthem, Ascribe unto the Lord (Travers).

LEEDS PARISH CHURCH.—Morn.: Service, Garrett in F; Anthem, Lo, star led chiefs (Crotch); Introit, Blessed are they (Wesley), Kyrie and Creed, Dykes in F. Even.: Service, Garrett in F; Anthem, Blessed be the God (Wesley).

LEEDS (ST. LAURENCE CHURCH, PUDSEY).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Chants; Kyrie (Mendelssohn); Credo, Best in F; Sanctus, Marbeck in C; Offertory Sentences, Strickland in D. Even. Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Chants; Anthem, Praise His awful name (Spohr).

LEED'S (ST. MARTIN'S, POTTERNEWTON).—Morning Service, Te Deum (Merbecke); Benedictus (Crouch); Anthem, The Lord is great (Best). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Tours in F; Anthem, Wherewithal shall a young man (Elvey).

LIVERPOOL CATHEDRAL.—Aft.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Fitzgerald in B flat; Anthem, O sing unto the Lord (Purcell).

LIVERPOOL (ST. CUTHBERT'S, EVERTON).—Morn.: Service, Barnby in E. Even.: Service, Barnby in E; Anthem, O where shall wisdom (Boyce).

MANCHESTER CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Ouseley in G; Full Communion Service, Jeykll in C; Anthem, As for me (Wesley). Aft.: Service, Ouseley in G; Anthem, Proclaim ye this (Pyne).

MANCHESTER (ST. BENEDICT'S).—Morn.: Service, Credo and Gloria in excelsis, Williams in D; Kyrie, Sanctus, Benedictus, and Agnus Dei, Mozart in B flat, No. 7. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Tours in F.

MANCHESTER (ST. JOHN BAPTIST, HULME).—Morn.: Service, Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus, and Agnus Dei (Gounod); Gloria in excelsis, Tours in F. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Tours in F.

PETERBOROUGH CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Boyce in A; Introit, Give ear; Communion Service, Tours in F. Even.: Service, Hopkins in F; Anthem, The wilderness (Goss).

SALISBURY CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Jubilate, Kyrie and Credo, Wesley in F; Offertory (Stainer). Aft.: Service, Wesley in F; Anthem, How lovely are Thy dwellings (Spohr).

SHERBORNE ABBEY.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Clarke-Whitfield in E. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Chants; Anthem, Bring unto the Lord, O ye mighty (Limpus).

SOUTHAMPTON (ST. MARY'S CHURCH).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Garrett in D; Holy Communion, Introit, They that put their trust (Macfarren); Service, Monk in C; Offertory, Lay not up (Barnby); Paternoster (Field). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Garrett in D; Apostles' Creed, Harmonized Monotone. Anthem, In Jewry (Whitfeld).

WELLS CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Croft in A; Introit, Blessed are they (Macfarren). Even.: Service, Attwood in D; Anthem, Hear, O Thou Shepherd (Walmisley).

WORCESTER CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Stewart in G; Anthem, See what love (Mendelssohn). Even. Service, Stewart in G; Anthem, We will rejoice (Croft).

ERRATUM.—In paragraph number 10 of Passing Events, in last issue, page 105, for sight-seeing read sight-singing.

 Post-cards must be sent to the Editor, 6, Argyle Square, W.C., by Wednesday. Lists are frequently omitted in consequence of not being received in time.

HENRY SPEECHLY,
CAMDEN ORGAN STEAM FACTORY,
KING'S ROAD, ST. PANCRAS, LONDON, N.W.
ESTABLISHED 1860.

Specifications and Estimates for Organs of any Magnitude, also for Re constructions, Repairs, and Re-voicing.

Tunings contracted for, and Tuners sent to all parts of the Country at regular intervals or when required.

ORGANS ON HIRE WITH OPTION OF PURCHASE.

 Church, Chamber, and Chancel Organs for Sale or Hire; One or Two Manuals. Ready for immediate use. Easy Terms if required.

☞ All Pipes and other Parts manufactured on the Premises.

Just Published.

HARVEST ANTHEM, "BLESSED BE THOU, LORD GOD OF ISRAEL." In Four Voices, by E. BUNNETT, Mus.D., Cantab. Octavo, Price Threepence.
London: NOVELLO, EWER & CO.

MR. RUSSELL LOCHNER can accept engagement as Deputy Organist at Church, Town or Country, on any or all of the Sundays in September, Anglican or Catholic Service.—Address, 133, Lancaster Road W.

THE ORGANIST OF MARGATE PARISH CHURCH has an Opening for an ARTICLED PUPIL. Fine Organ. Healthy town.—For particulars apply to E. J. Bellerby, Mus.Bac., Oxon., The Grosvenor, Margate.

NEW ORGAN PIECE, by M. GUILMANT.—SPOHR'S 24th PSALM (English words), 9d. and 2s. Ditto arranged for Organ Solo by M. GUILMANT, 1s. 6d.
London: NOVELLO, EWER & CO.

CANTATA:

"SENNACHERIB" ..... Price 1s. 6d.
(Composed for the Gloucester Festival, 1883.)

ORATORIO:

"AHAB" ..... Price 3s. od.
(First performed by the National Choral Society, Exeter Hall, April, 1864.)

MOTET:

23RD PSALM, "The Lord is my Shepherd"..... Price 1s. od.

MOTET:

43RD PSALM, "Give sentence" ..... Price 0s. 6d.

By GEORGE B. ARNOLD, Mus. Doc., Oxon.

WEEKES & CO.: 14, Hanover Street,

Orchestral Parts may be obtained from the Publishers.

HELE & COMPANY,
ORGAN BUILDERS,
WYNDHAM STREET, PLYMOUTH.
London Agency: Mr. W. H. HELE, 59, Gresham St., E.C.

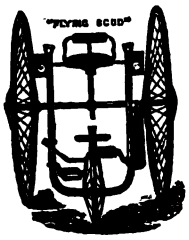
Organs of any magnitude contracted for. Professional attendance when desired.

Extract from testimony by E. H. Turpin, Esq., of College of Organists, referring to organ at St. John's Church, Waterloo Road, S.E.:—

"To Messrs. Hele and Co. very high praise is due for the judgment and skill with which they have accomplished the rebuilding of the instrument. All the foundation work I noticed to be round, even, and admirably voiced. The 'chorus' struck me as being well balanced and decisive, without being intrusive or too pronounced above the 8-feet work. The reeds are of very high quality, at once rich and characteristic in tone. The solo registers I found to be after their several types—delicate and finished in quality of tone and in their voicing. The mechanism throughout a trying night's work never failed me, and it is everywhere true, reliable, and admirable. My impressions were so pleasant, that I feel it is a duty to express an unqualified approval of the labours of the very able organ builders."

Digitized by Google

BICYCLES AND TRICYCLES.
NEW AND SECOND-HAND.



"FLYING SCUD" and "ECLECTIC" TRICYCLES, are the Machines for 1883. Spoken of by the Daily News of January 30th as "Splendid machines." "NANCY LEE," Weldless Steel," and "NONSUCH" Steel Bicycles, from £5 5s. Any machine at maker's price for twelve or less equal monthly payments, or for £5 down and 20s. per month, or large discount and carriage paid for cash. Can be seen and tried before purchasing in our school (60 by 40, concrete floor, tuition free), adjoining Show-rooms, the largest in London, with over 400 new and second-hand on View. Machines bought, sold, cleaned, repaired (estimates given), warehoused, advanced upon and exchanged.

Illustrated Lists post free. Hours 9 till 7; Saturdays till 4.

Repairs of all kinds neatly, cheaply, and promptly executed. Cheapest house in the trade for fittings. Parts and sundries of all descriptions kept in stock.

Machines Let on Hire with Option of Purchase.

SOUTH LONDON MACHINISTS' COMPANY.

STEAM WORKS: Suffolk Works, Suffolk Grove, Great Suffolk Street, S.E. Show Rooms and Offices: 28 and 29, Suffolk Grove. Bicycle and Tricycle School: 18, Suffolk Grove. City Depot, Show Rooms, and School: Tower Chambers, Moorgate Street, E.C. (Nearly opposite Moorgate Street Station.) PERAMBULATORS and all Domestic Machines at lowest prices for cash, or on easy terms without extra charge. Lists free. State kind required.

ESTABLISHED 1872.

When writing please say where you saw this advertisement.

T. R. WILLIS,
Organ Builder, Metal & Wood Pipe Maker and Voicer,
TOWER ORGAN WORKS, 29, MINORIES, LONDON.

AN ORGAN KEPT FOR PRACTICE.
REBUILDING, TUNING, AND REPAIRING.

E & W. SNELL,
Manufacturers of Harmoniums, and Reed Pedal Organs,
KING STREET NORTH, CAMDEN TOWN, LONDON, N.W.

NOTE.—These are the only Instruments at which an Organist can really find himself "at home," as all Scales, Positions, and Measurements are adopted strictly in accordance with the Resolutions of the Council of the College of Organists. Estimates free.

MALEY, YOUNG & OLDKNOW,
ORGAN BUILDERS,
KING'S ROAD, ST. PANCRAS, LONDON, N.W.

Specifications, Estimates, and Designs for Church, Chamber, Concert, and all Descriptions of Organs.
Materials, Workmanship, and Tone guaranteed to be First Class.
Organs rebuilt to suit any position, enlarged, and Revoiced at very moderate charges.
Tunings in all parts of the Kingdom.

PROSPECTUS FREE ON APPLICATION.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts, excepting under exceptional circumstances.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit, at Three per cent. interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables, the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons, and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares, and Annuities.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

The Birkbeck Building Society's Annual Receipts exceed Five Millions.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with immediate Possession, and no Rent to Pay.—Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate Possession, either for Building or Gardening purposes.—Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

WITH 25 PER CENT DISCOUNT FOR CASH, OR 15/- PER MONTH, SECOND HAND 10/6 Per Month ON THE 3 YEARS' SYSTEM.
BORD'S PIANOS
PIANOS EXCHANGED. LISTS FREE OF
C. STILES & Co. 42 SOUTHAMPTON ROW. W.C.

CONSTANT LAURENT, HARMONIUM and ANGLO-ORGAN MANUFACTURER, Established in 1859 at 85, HIGH STREET, MARYLEBONE, LONDON, W.—Repairing and Tuning Executed Promptly. Price List on Application.—Intending Purchasers are respectfully solicited to inspect my Instruments and Factory.

EUSTACE INGRAM, Organ Builder,
Combines excellence of Tone and Workmanship with Economy.
INSPECTION INVITED.
WORKS:—Burnard Place, Eden Grove, Holloway, London, N.

THE THROAT IN ITS RELATION TO SINGING. By WHITFIELD WARD. Illustrated, post 8vo, boards, 2s. 6d.—Advice to Singers on every point of interest in reference to the Vocal Organs.
W. REEVES: 185, Fleet Street, E.C.

Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged, cloth, 3s. 6d.
BEETHOVEN'S PIANOFORTE SONATAS, explained by ERNST von ELTERLEIN, translated by E. Hill. Preface by E. Pauer.
W. REEVES, 185, FLEET STREET, LONDON.

MUSIC SENT ON SALE OR RETURN on highly advantageous terms by
B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster-row, London.

MUSIC of EVERY PUBLISHER supplied to Dealers, Teachers, and Schools. Having the largest varied Stock Europe. The terms, which are highly advantageous, sent on application
London: B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster-row.

ALL WHO POSSESS A PIANOFORTE and cannot play it, may now play at once, without any previous knowledge of Music, by ROYLANCE'S NUMERICAL SYSTEM, which contains a FIGURED DIAGRAM to fit on the Keyboard of any Pianoforte (or Harmonium, and a choice selection of forty SACRED and SECULAR MELODIES, composed for the use of those who have no time to study Music. Thousands are now able to play who did not believe such a thing possible. The diagram alone will be found most useful to Professors for teaching purposes. 6d. nett.—Price 2s. 6d. nett; post free 33 stamps.—C. ROYLANCE, 184, Tottenham Court-road; and all Music Sellers.

SYDNEY SMITH'S
FOUR NEW PIANOFORTE PIECES.

LA FEE DES ONDES.	Morceau brilliant ...	4 0
LE DOMINO NOIR.	Fantaisie brillante sur l'opéra d'Auber	4 0
MARGUERITE.	Chanson d'une fileuse	4 0
STYRIENNE	... ...	4 0

SYDNEY SMITH'S
FOUR NEW PIANOFORTE DUETS.

GAVOTTE ET MUSETTE	... ...	5 0
I PIFFERARI.	Musette moderne	5 0
LOHENGRIN.	Grande Fantaisie sur l'opéra de R. Wagner	6 0
NONCHALANCE.	Caprice de Concert	5 0

LONDON:
EDWIN ASHDOWN, Hanover-square.

Printed for the Proprietor by BOWDEN, HUDSON & Co., at 23, Red Lion Street, Holborn, London, W.C.; and Published by WILLIAM REEVES, at the Office, 185, Fleet Street, E.C. West End Agents:—WEEKES & CO., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W. Subscriptions and Advertisements are received either by the Publisher or West End Agents.—Communications for the EDITOR are to be forwarded to his private address, 6, Argyle Square, W.C
SATURDAY, AUGUST 25, 1883.—Entered at the General Post Office as a Newspaper.

Digitized by Google

The Musical Standard

A Newspaper for Musicians Professional and Amateur

No. 996. Vol. XXV. Fourth Series. SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 1, 1883. Weekly: Price 3d.

WOLVERHAMPTON TRIENNIAL MUSICAL FESTIVAL.—In Aid of the Funds of the Wolverhampton and South Staffordshire Hospital.

President—The EARL of DARTMOUTH.

THURSDAY and FRIDAY, September 13th and 14th, 1883.

THURSDAY MORNING.—Mendelssohn's "Elijah."

THURSDAY EVENING.—Macfarren's "Lady of the Lake," and Miscellaneous Selection.

FRIDAY MORNING.—Beethoven's "Mount of Olives"; Hummel's "Alma Virgo"; Gounod's "Messe Solennelle"; and Mozart's "Jupiter" Symphony.

FRIDAY EVENING.—Mackenzie's "Jason," and Miscellaneous Selection, including Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto in E minor (Mr. Carrodus); Songs by Miss Anna Williams, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Signor Foli, &c.

Principal Vocalists: Miss Anna Williams, Miss Mary Davies, Miss Eleanor Farnoll, Madame Patey, Miss Emilie Lloyd, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Joseph Maas, Mr. Frederick King, and Signor Foli.

Principal and Solo Violin: Mr. Carrodus.

BAND AND CHORUS OF 300 Performers.

Conductor—DR. SWINNERTON HEAP.

ADMISSION:—

	Morning Performances.	Evening Performances.	Series of four Performances. (Transferable).
	£ s. d.	s. d.	£ s. d.
First Reserved	0 15 0	10 6	2 2 0
Second do.	0 7 6	5 0	1 1 0
Unreserved	0 3 6	2 6	0 10 0
Family Tickets, admitting 4 persons to 1st Reserved Seats	2 12 6	1 15 0

Ballots for priority of choice of seats, Sept. 3rd and 4th.

Remittances to be made payable to the Hon. Financial Secretary, W. C. Sheldon, 7, Rupert Street, Wolverhampton, to whom applications for seats, accompanied by remittance, are to be addressed.

Detailed Prospectuses, with particulars of special railway arrangements, and other information, on application to the Honorary Secretaries,

R. T. LAWRENCE } Darlington Street,
JAS. WELLS PAGE } Wolverhampton.

A SOLO VIOLONCELLIST (pupil of Fr. Grützmacher), experienced in opera and concert, with large repertoire, and provided with the best recommendations, wants to meet with an engagement either in Germany or abroad, by 15th of Sept. or 1st of Oct. next.—Please address to H., 56,160, care of Messrs. Haasenstein & Vogler, Advertising Agents, Berlin, S.W.

MUSICAL INTERNATIONAL COLLEGE, LONDON.

Founded for Examining purposes only.

Principal—EDWIN M. LOTT.

PRACTICAL EXAMINATIONS in INSTRUMENTAL and VOCAL MUSIC throughout the kingdom, conducted personally by the Principal. Next LOCAL THEORETICAL EXAMINATION, DECEMBER, 1883.

For particulars, address SECRETARY, Musical International College, 270, Cornwall Road, Notting Hill, W.

THE ORPHAN SCHOOL FOR DAUGHTERS OF MUSICIANS will be opened SEPTEMBER 17TH. Boarders and Day Pupils also received on moderate terms. Special musical advantages.—Address, Miss Helen Kenway, 10, Darnley Road, Notting Hill, W.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER WANTED at Michaelmas, for FETCHAM, near Leatherhead. Usual Services. Two Practices in the week. Surpliced Choir. Organ by Willis. Salary £40.—Apply, with Testimonials, to The Rector, Fetcham, Leatherhead.

THE ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER, GIBRALTAR CATHEDRAL, would be glad to hear from a Gentleman holding a similar Appointment in SURREY, SUSSEX, or HANTS, with a view to PERMANENT EXCHANGE. Fine Organ, recently erected. Choral Services, large Surpliced Choir; good Teaching connection.—Further particulars will be furnished on applying as above.

CHRISTMAS HYMNS AND CAROLS. — New Edition. One Penny each.

"RING OUT, GLAD CHIMES, AT CHRISTMAS TIME."
"CHILDREN'S VOICES."
"CHRIST IS BORN IN BETHLEHEM."
"LULLABY."
"GATHER THE HOLLY BOUGH."
"CHRISTMAS MORNING."
"GLORY TO JESUS."
"HARK! WE HEAR THE CHILDREN SINGING."

Words by Mrs. Gaskell. Music by Edwin Lemare.

WEEKES & CO.: 14, Hanover Street, London, W.

MAKERS AND REPAIRERS.

GEORGE WITHERS & CO.

(Late of Coventry Street),

WHOLESALE IMPORTERS OF

MUSICAL STRINGS,

From Rome, Padua, and Naples.

A FINE COLLECTION OF ITALIAN INSTRUMENTS.

Bows, Cases, Music Stands, &c. See Price Lists.

51, ST. MARTIN'S LANE, LONDON.

WANTED, an Efficient ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER for ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S CHURCH, Gray's Inn Road. Salary commencing at £20. Must be well recommended.—Address, Churchwarden, St. Bartholomew's Church, Gray's Inn Road.

ORGAN FOR SALE.—A very sweet-toned Chamber Organ, 2 Manuals, 11 Stops, and 2 Couplers, Pedals CCC to F, built by Messrs. Walker & Sons, offered by the Building Committee, on account of alterations in the Church.—Address, Rev. F. Dipscomb, Frogmore Vicarage, S. Alban's.

TE DEUM LAUDAMUS in A, for Congregational Use, by W. de M. SERGISON.

London: NOVELLO, EWER & CO.

THE ORGANIST OF MARGATE PARISH CHURCH has an Opening for an ARTICLED PUPIL. Fine Organ. Healthy town.—For particulars apply to E. J. Bellerby, Mus.Bac., Oxon., The Grosvenor, Margate.

THEORY OF MUSIC, BOOKS I., II., III., by LOUISA GIBSON. FIRST BOOK Revised (not Catechetical). Popular Edition, price 1s.

London: WEEKES & CO.: NOVELLO & CO.

Just Published.

HARVEST ANTHEM, "BLESSED BE THOU, LORD GOD OF ISRAEL." In Four Voices, by E. BUNNETT, Mus.D., Cantab. Octavo, Price Threepence.

London: NOVELLO, EWER & CO.

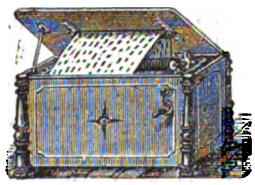
Just Published.

"I WILL GREATLY REJOICE." Anthem, suitable for Harvest Festivals. Composed by H. S. IRONS, Organist of St. Andrew's Church, Nottingham.

NOVELLO, EWER & Co.: 1, Berners Street, London, W.

PLAYING FROM SCORE.—The Celebrated Treatise on Playing from Score (a Clear Introduction to the Art of making Arrangements for the Organ, Pianoforte, &c.), translated into English, is now appearing in the Orchestra. Monthly, price 3d.; Annual Subscription, 3s. 6d.

W. REEVES 185, Fleet Street, London. E.C.



ORCHESTRIONETTES,

Ehrlich's Patent.

Are the greatest invention of modern times in the sphere of mechanical Music Works! It is only necessary to put in a note, made of fine pasteboard, in order to play a new piece. The smaller instruments suffice as accompaniment to dance music. The larger ones can be used IN PLACE OF AN ORGAN.

Preparatory knowledge not necessary; therefore the instruments can be sent to any part of the world. Large number of Notes, suitable for all countries, always on hand. Extra Notes made to order, after supplied originals, at any time. Please send orders to any dealer in musical instruments.

Commission allowed to Dealers.

FABRIK LEIPZIGER MUSIKWERKE VORM. PAUL EHRLICH & CO., ZU GOHLIS BEI LEIPZIG (GERMANY).

Digitized by Google

MOZART'S ORGAN WORKS.

By Frank J. Sawyer, B.Mus. Oxon., F.C.O.

[A Lecture delivered at the College of Organists.]

(Continued from page 111).

Although Sonata No. 6 is the first bearing a distinct date, July, 1775, yet Röchel arranges five others before this in point of age. Of these, No. 1 in E flat is the only one in a slow tempo andante, the organ part expressed solely by the words—Bassi ed Organo—to the bass line.

No. 2 in B flat (allegro) is more florid, but similarly marked as regards organ, as, indeed, is No. 3 in D. No. 4, likewise in D, opens with a vigorous staccato passage, and contains the addition of a figured bass to the organ part.

No. 5 in F has no tempo mark, but is undoubtedly allegro moderato. Here we first meet with the word tasto solo, as well as the figured bass, yet strangely the re-entry of the 'cello is not marked.

No. 6 in B flat (allegro) marks again a progress in the greater freedom and scope left for the organ in the accompanying passages to the violins.

To the same date, 1775, belong No. 7 in F, and 8 in A. The period of 1775 and '76 and '77, as far as September, spent at Salzburg, mark perhaps the only period of quiet in the life of Mozart. Then he would, from his father's duties, be brought frequently to the Cathedral. Hence we find the organ used during 1775 not only for the three sonatas, but also in a Mass in C, a Kyrie with organ accompaniment, an Offertorium and an "Osanna."

The first sonata in the following year, 1776, is not included in the Breitkopt and Hartel Edition; it was in E major allegro.

In March we find Mozart again at the organ, using it in the accompaniment to a Litania de Venerabili, and in April writing Sonatas 9 and 10, which shall furnish our first practical examples of his works.

That they may be the better understood I will first lay before you a short analysis of each.

No. 9 in F major, $\frac{3}{4}$-time allegro, opens with a pleasing theme announced by the first violin, the second violin playing a broken accompaniment, the 'cello reiterating the bass notes, and the organ—marked "copula alone," being an 8-foot flute stop—filling up much in the way that the wood wind in an orchestra would support the strings. At the eighth bar the theme is repeated, overture fashion, but this time it is given to the organ, the violins, and 'cello, merely accompanying until six bars later Mozart's usual progression to the dominant C takes place. Then the second theme starts with three staccato notes for the first violin, the use of the organ again being simple but excellent. The second phrase of the theme repeated, and six bars coda lead us to the double bar with its repeat.

The development in the second section is of much interest. The opening skip of the octave in the first theme forms the first material, and is at the fifth bar treated in canon at the fourth below between the first and second violins; then the second bar of the second theme and the second phrase before mentioned come in for treatment, and with a passage of descending chords of the sixth the return of the first subject comes. This section is in the usual style of this period, the repetition down to the close in C before the entry of the second theme being an exact copy, and from there to the end merely a transposition into the key of F.

I will now ask you to listen to the sonata.

[Sonata No. 9.]

It is with perhaps pardonable pride that I take the liberty of supposing that this performance of it, with which you have so approved, is probably the first time the sonata has been heard in public, since in about 1780 it was placed amongst the lumber of Salzburg Cathedral, by the order of Archbishop Colloredo.

No. 10 in D forms in many respects a contrast to its predecessor. Opening with a bold unison phrase on the tonic chord, the theme proper seems to start at the third bar, where the organ, in imitation of the wood wind, doubles the violins in the octave. A bold passage for all the instruments, forte, leads to the introduction of the second theme, with one of the most charming effects to be found in the sonatas. The organ, like a horn, holds on the dominant E, the violin's staccato giving out the elegant little second subject with its strange accented note in the second beat of the second bar, the whole passage being repeated. Then follows a forte phrase, and with a unison passage taken from the episode following the first subject, we reach the double bar. The development, starting in the key of A minor, is chiefly formed on this same phrase, treated in imitation between the first violin and 'cello. Then we reach the first pedal note, or rather note for the pedals, which we have yet met with, the dominant A, and which serves, after a curious use of the organ, to accompany the strings, to reintroduce the first theme; the repetition takes place exactly in the usual way, the only special point being the addition of a lower third octave to the sustained A of the organ during the entry of the second subject, an early use of the inverted pedal, to the beauty of which I have already drawn attention.

[Sonata No. 10.]

One more sonata (in C major, common time, allegro) was composed during this period, but is for some reason not contained in the Breitkopf and Härtel Edition. This is to be regretted, as in it we find the addition of two trumpets to our previous instruments.

Mozart, in his letter to Padre Martini, September 4, 1776, writes:—

"I live in a place where music prospers but little, although we have some good musicians, and some especially good composers of thorough knowledge and taste. The theatre suffers from want of singers; we have few male sopranos, and are not likely to have more, for they require high pay, and over liberality is not our weak point. I busy myself with writing Church and chamber music, and we have two capital contrapuntists, Haydn and Adlgarrer. My father is Capellmeister at the Cathedral, which gives me the opportunity of writing as much as I like for the Church. But as my father has been thirty-six years in the service of the Court, and knows that the Archbishop does not care to have people of an advanced age about him, he takes things quietly, and devotes himself chiefly to literature, which has always been his favourite study. Our Church music differs widely and increasingly from that of Italy. A Mass with Kyrie, Gloria, Credo, the Sonata at the Epistle, the Offertorium or Motet, Sanctus and Agnus Dei, must not last longer than three-quarters of an hour, even in festivals, when the Archbishop himself officiates. This kind of composition requires special study."

Hence we again find from Mozart's own pen that these sonatas formed part of the service itself. One other point I would wish to mention. I remember to have read on several occasions that concertos were not performed in church; this is erroneous, as Burney even mentions them, while Jahn (vol. 1, page 286), says:—"Distinguished instrumental performers also were allowed to add their share to the attractions of Divine worship. Instrumental concertos were played at the conclusion of the Service, without any regard to an ecclesiastical character." This, therefore, would settle the point.

Digitized by Google

The following Sonata, No. 11 in the Breitkopf Edition, has only a figured bass line, though the figuring is copious. It is in G major, and opens with a unison theme. This was composed in 1777, together with No. 12 in major. Here again the organ part is restricted to a figured bass line, but the sonata becomes, by the addition to the score of two oboes, two trumpets and drums, virtually a small concerto. It contains so many points of interest, that I greatly regret that adequate means are not possible to-night for a complete rendition. The opening theme is bold and healthy in vigour. From the fulness of the figured bass line, it is evident that the organ part when performed was far more full than the scanty organ parts of Sonatas 9 and 10 would lead one to suppose. Hence I felt justified in filling up the bareness occasionally met with.

The following year, 1777, saw Mozart's meeting with the first of those unpleasantnesses that seem so to have embittered his life. To quote from Herr Pohl:—"All that teaching could do for him had been done in Salzburg; the time had now come for him to go out into the world and let the discipline of life complete the work. His existence at Salzburg had long become intolerable to him; beyond a few intimate friends, he had no society; he was disgusted at the want of appreciation for art, and his position with regard to the Archbishop Hieronymus became daily more critical." The father asked for leave to accompany his son on a professional tour. The Archbishop refused, saying that "he could not bear to see people going about begging in that fashion." Mozart applied for his discharge, and on September 23, 1777, set out with his mother—first to Munich, then to Augsburg.

In the latter place he made the acquaintance of Stein, the instrument maker. One scene of their meeting Mozart shall narrate in his own words:—"When I told Herr Stein that I should like to play upon his organ (in the Barfüserkirche), for that I had a passion for the organ, he was greatly astonished, and said: 'What! a man like you, a clavier player, willing to play on an instrument with no douceur, no expression; which allows of neither piano nor forte, but goes on always the same!' 'All that has nothing to do with it. To my mind, the organ is the king of all instruments.' 'Well, do as you like.' So we went together. I could guess from his way of talking that he did not expect me to do his organ much credit; he thought I should play clavier-fashion. He told me how he had taken Choberl to the organ, according to his request. 'And I was sorry,' said he, 'for Choberl had told everybody, and the church was full. I had imagined the fellow would be full of spirit, fire, and rapidity, and that would tell on the organ; but as soon as he began I changed my opinion.' I only said, 'What do you think, Herr Stein? are you afraid that I shall come to grief on the organ?' 'Ah, you! that is quite different.' We went into the choir; I began to prelude, at which he laughed with delight; then followed a fugue. 'I can well believe,' said he, 'that you enjoy playing the organ, when you play like that.' At first I did not quite understand the pedal, because it was not divided. It began C, then D E in a row. With us D and E are above where E flat and F sharp are here. But I soon got accustomed to it."

The latter remarks evidently refer to a short octave pedal board. Again, he took the monks of St. Ulrich and of the Monastery of the Holy Cross by storm. The Dean, who, he says, is "a jolly good fellow," was quite beside himself.

It is stated that Franz Liszt is at present in Weimar, where he is hard at work upon the composition of a new oratorio, "St. Stanislas."

Musical Intelligence.

OPERA AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.

Mr. Manns is carrying on an active campaign at Sydenham in the general operatic line of action. He began on Tuesday afternoon, August 21, with Wallace's "Maritana," first heard at Drury Lane theatre in 1846, and ever since a "trump card" for theatrical managers. The performance was a very successful one, chiefly on account of Mr. J. W. Turner's rendering of the part of Don Cæsar. Mr. Turner sang in splendid voice, and was honoured with encores of most of the popular tenor airs.

On Saturday (August 25), "Il Barbiere di Siviglia" was performed, when Mr. W. Bolton appeared to great advantage as Figaro, both in a musical and a dramatic sense; and Mr. Griffin, a basso profundo, made a successful début in the part of Don Basilio, singing the famous air "La Calunnia" with great effect. Mr. Griffin has a voice of great power and compass; his concert was recently noticed in these columns. Signor Zoboli did well as old Bartolo. Mr. Faulkner Leigh cannot be complimented for his impersonation of the Count Almaviva, in the (rather disgusting) drunken scene; his odd attitudes provoked the mirth of some experienced operagoers, who sat near the reporter. The Helots of Sparta could hardly have done more to make folks laugh. Madame Rose Hersee carried off the honours of the day. Her charmingly sweet and flexible voice was displayed to perfection in Rode's air, but Mdme. Hersee might have chosen a better and less hackneyed piece.

On Thursday (August 23), appeared a truly fascinating Margherita in Gounod's "Faust." Madame Marian Hood looks the interesting girl, so exquisitely pourtrayed by Goethe, to the very life, and as "to the manner born;" Mdme. Christine Nilsson alone stands on a loftier level. Mdme. Hood has a beautiful, delicately feminine physiognomy, and a most winning manner. Every heart must have been moved by her pathos and passion. The voice is a pure, liquid, silvery, and "sympathetic" soprano, superexcellent in the higher register, and very even throughout; the execution facile, unconstrained, and exact: the production admirable. Mdme. Hood made a great point in the "Jewel song" and the "King of Thule" ballad, which Hector Berlioz, unlike Gounod, writes in the major (F) mode. The action in the Cathedral scene—always a severe test of histrionic talents—denoted close study and intuitive conception; but the Prayer-book was made rather too much of. The dying scene constituted a fine climax to a magnificent performance. Faust might have thought of Phœbus Apollo, in pursuit of Daphne, as he regarded Margaret's flowing hair and other charms.

> "Spectat inornatos collo pendere capillos,
> Et, Quid? Si comantur, ait. Videt igne micantes,
> Sidenbus similes oculos; videt oscula . . . . .
> . . . . . Laudat digitosque, manusque,
> Brachiaque . . . . . "

Of the other artists, only Mr. W. Bolton, the Valentine of the opera, can be commended. Mr. Faulkner Leigh's Faust is ineffective, and his physique fails to realize the mouldy old philosopher in his state of magical rejuvenescence. One pitied Gretchen at having to be wooed by such a lover. Mr. Lansmere, as the fiend Mephistopheles, left out a portion of his music in a certain scene, and sang, in the Cathedral situation, behind a wall instead of in view of the audience! "Don Giovanni" and "Figaro" were down for the week; and Auber's "Fra Diavolo" should not be deferred.

The Saturday evening concerts are going on prosperously, and deserve public patronage if only for the excellence of the programmes.

On Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, August 23rd, 24th, and 25th, a Swiss Bazaar was held in the Town Hall, Folkestone, in aid of the funds for the completion of St. Michael's Church, the Incumbent of which, the Rev. E. Husband, is a well-known musical man, the Services at whose church are much admired. During the bazaar, Viscountess Folkestone gave a series of concerts to crowded audiences, and her Ladyship (whose singing was loudly applauded) was assisted by the Hon. Wilma Pleydell Bouverie, the Hon. Jacob Pleydell Bouverie, Mr. Robert J. Pitt, and the Rev. E. Husband. The amount realized was about £250, and much of this gratifying result was due to the great kindness of Lady Folkestone and her friends.

Digitized by Google

AVENUE THEATRE.

On August 25th, a farcical extravagance, called "A Bunch of Keys," was here presented as a "musical comedy," by the Anglo-American company now in possession of this theatre. Neither the words, by Mr. C. Hoyt, or the music, by Mr. G. L. Gordon, pretend to any exaltation. The main object of the piece, as regards the literary department, is to make people laugh; musically, the presence of catching tunes and pretty dance measures, with occasional effective touches of orchestration, are the paramount features of the work, which only pretends to be a "musical comedy." A number of eccentric people, including a good stage lawyer, at cross purposes, and now and then disguised, with an admirably constructed bar scene in an American hotel, form the ingredients of the dramatic action. The leading parts were admirably played by Mr. Willie Edouin (who sustained the lawyer's part with capital spirit), Mr. J. S. Powers (an actor possessing an abundant sense of broad humour), Miss Alice Atherton (who sings and dances with much piquancy and grace). The other clever performers included Mr. F. Desmond, Mr. C. B. Stevens, Mr. A. Sims, Miss J. Verona, Miss H. Chapman, and Miss V. Reynolds. "A Bunch of Keys" wants a little weeding with regard to certain passages not in perfect taste. The piece, however, will be found one of real laughter-provoking power, with some pleasant, tuneful music, and it will most likely hit the public taste.

THE GLOUCESTER FESTIVAL.

The full rehearsals for this the 160th meeting of the three choirs will begin in earnest on Monday next. The scheme of the Festival is one of remarkable interest, both as regards the number of novelties to be given, and the wide historical basis of the programme, including standard works of all schools of the past 300 years, from Bird and Orlando Gibbons to our own day. Such a selection reflects the highest credit upon the authorities concerned; and with the proved skill of an excellent conductor, Mr. C. L. Williams, and a capital staff of skilled executants, including some 65 instrumentalists, a very successful meeting seems to be a foregone conclusion. Cathedral Services: Choral Service each morning in the Cathedral, by the three choirs; Tuesday morning at ten o'clock, the other three mornings at eight o'clock. Usual choral services on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday evenings at 5 o'clock. Special nave service on Friday evening, at 6.30, with full band and chorus. On Tuesday morning, a sermon will be preached by the Very Rev. C. J. Vaughan, D.D., the Dean of Llandaff, in aid of the widows and orphans of the poorer Clergy within the Diocese of Gloucester, Worcester, and Hereford. All the Services, except that of Friday evening, will be held in the choir. Service music: Tuesday morning, Service, Smart in F; Anthem, "This is the day" (Oakeley). Wednesday morning, Service, Walmisley in D; Anthem, "Thou Judge of quick and dead" (Wesley). Thursday morning, Service, Garrett in E; Anthem, "Blessed be the God" (Wesley). Friday morning, Service, Travers in F; Anthem, "O Saviour of the world" (Goss). Organ, Mr. W. Done. Tuesday morning, September 4th, "Elijah" (Mendelssohn). The programme on Tuesday evening, September 4th, includes "Symphony in G minor" (Mozart); violin solo, "Concerto in D," 1st movement (Beethoven), Mr. Carrodus; new choral work, "The glories of our blood and state" (Parry), composed for this concert; overture, "Anacreon" (Cherubini); chorus, "I wish to tune my quivering lyre" (Dyer); pianoforte solo, "Ballade in G minor," Op. 23, No. 1 (Chopin), Miss Amy Hare, and "Allan a Dale" (Lloyd). Wednesday morning, September 5th, "St. Mary Magdalen" (Stainer), composed for this Festival, conducted by the composer; part 2, "Bow thine ear" (Bird, 1560); "Hosanna to the son of David (Gibbons, 1604); and, "Mass in C" (Beethoven). Wednesday evening, September 5th, part 1, "Sennacherib" (Arnold); composed for this Festival, conducted by the composer; part 2, "Hymn of Praise" (Mendelssohn). Thursday morning, September 6th, "Elegiac Symphony" (Stanford), conducted by the composer; "Redemption" (Gounod). The programme, on Thursday evening includes: overture, "Jessonda" (Spohr); "Song of the heart" (Tennant), Miss Hilda Wilson; "The First Walpurgis night" (Mendelssohn); overture, "Prometheus" (Beethoven); madrigal, "Why weeps, alas! my lady love?" (Pearsall); and march, "Tannhäuser" (Wagner). Friday morning, September 7th, "The Messiah" (Handel). Friday evening, special nave Service, organ voluntary; overture, "Last Judgment" (Spohr); Magnificat, Walmisley in D minor; Nunc Dimittis, Walmisley in D minor; Anthem, "Blessed is the man that considereth the poor and needy" (Lloyd), and, "Hallelujah" Beethoven). Doubtless such a scheme will be duly appreciated.

THE CHURCH CONGRESS.

The brief article of last week's issue, calling attention to the poverty (from the musical point of view) of the scheme for the Reading meeting, has given rise to further accusations of neglect, and to some explanations. It appears that the want of a thorough, painstaking consideration of the position of music in the Church has not only been felt, but urged, and the blame of the neglect would seem to lie at the door of the Subject Committee. It is thought by some that the members of that committee are either anxious to promote the consideration of questions of more burning and personal interest to the clergy, or desirous of securing topics upon which they can best talk about themselves. Thinking people agree that the studied neglect of musical questions at these meetings is a blind, wilful, and foolish policy it is high time now to reverse.

SWANSEA MUSICAL EISTEDDFOD.

On the 21st of August, an interesting Musical Eisteddfod was held in the grounds of Oystermouth Castle; there were about 7,000 visitors. Mr. Charles Gold presided, and the adjudications were given by Eos Morlais and Mr. W. T. Samuels; the Rev. E. Edwards was the conductor. The chief competitions and results were as follows:—£10 to a choir of not less than 60 voices, for the best rendering of "I was tossed by the winds." Five competed, and the successful choir was declared to be the California (Clydach). To the choir of not less than 30 voices for the best rendering of "Jerusalem, my glorious home," Cwmbwrla was successful. Duet, "Maying," Mr. J. Edwards and Miss Mary Charles. Tenor solo, "If with all your hearts" (Elijah). G. T. Davies, Morriston. Bass solo, "Honour and Arms" (Samson), Hy. Rees, London. Prize for sight-singing divided between W. Thomas, Cwmbwrla, and D. Lloyd, Crossland. There was a successful concert in the evening.

FESTIVAL OF ASSOCIATED CHOIRS AT WHITBY.

For some time past there has been evinced in more than one quarter of the Whitby Rural Deanery, over which the Rector of Whitby presides, a desire to bring together at one grand service all, or at any rate a large proportion, of the choirs connected with the churches within the limits of the Deanery. The idea has been brought about, and the success which attended the festival given in St. Michael's Church augurs well for the construction of a most useful association on a wide and firm basis, whose annual festival may be looked forward to with positive pleasure. The festival was held on August 21st., and St. Michael's was crowded in every part, the large congregation including many of the visitors now sojourning at this charming resort. The choirs which took part in the service were:—Grosmont, 26; Lythe, 24; Fylingdales, 20; St. Michaels, 25; St. Ninian's, 16; Iron Church, 20; Parish Church and St. John's, 8; Ruswarp, 14; total, 133. These were under the direction of Mr. Henry Hallgate, the conductor, to whom praise is justly due for the very indefatigable manner in which he performed the arduous task of training the scattered choirs for this service. A word of praise is also due to Mr. Carr, choirmaster. The organ accompaniment was rendered in the most efficient manner possible by Mr. H. R. Bird, organist of the Parish Church, Kensington. The prayers were intoned by the Rev. S. Flood Jones, precentor of Westminster Abbey, who shewed a laudable desire to render valuable help in preparing for the service. Special psalms were sung to chants by Elvey and Jones, and the Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis were Lloyd's. The anthem was "From all that dwell below the skies," by Dr. Walmisley. Hymns were also sung before the sermon, and while the offertory was being taken. The musical portion of the service was rendered with much taste and judgment throughout, and reflected the greatest possible credit upon all who took an active part in it; and this remark applies with all the more force, when it is considered that there were necessarily many drawbacks to encounter in connection with this, the first festival given by these associated choirs.

Digitized by Google

GLASGOW.

The musical season is once more at hand, and evidences are not wanting to show that a considerable amount of stir and activity already exists. The Choral Union will perform, among other works, Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Night," Gounod's "Redemption," Berlioz's "Messe des Morts," Felicien David's "The Desert," and Handel's "Messiah" and "Acis and Galatea." Mr. Manns will again act as conductor, and M. Victor Buziau as leader. The orchestral works and leading performers will be announced in due course. The City Hall concerts in connection with the Abstainers' Union will commence on September 15th. The Musical Union, under the new conductor, Mr. William Moodie, is going to study three Handelian works, the "Messiah," "Acis and Galatea," and the "Dettingen Te Deum." The Glasgow and South-Western Railway Musical Association will study Van Bree's "St. Cecilia's Day," and other works. Dr. A. L. Peace is giving organ recitals in the Cathedral; and Mr. John Fulcher, a well-known Glasgow professor of music, has announced concerts in the City Hall. The Royal Italian Opera company is coming to the Royalty theatre on September 10th.

WHITBY.—On Sunday August 12th, at St. Michael's Church the Services were of a remarkably bright and hearty character. They were fully choral, and were rendered in the most effective manner. Mr. Bird, the organist of the parish church, Kensington, presided at the organ in the absence of Mr. Clark. At the evening Service the prayers were intoned by the Rev. S. Flood Jones, precentor of Westminster Abbey, and the Rev. A. G. Austen; the anthem was "O how amiable," by Mr. John Storer, Mus.Bac., a former organist of the church, and now organist of the Parish Church, Scarborough.

OLDHAM.—At the Exhibition now being held here the organ recitals recently given have been very successful, larger audiences attending every day. Upon one occasion Mr. C. Bloomfield Bumstead performed Weber's overture, "Preciosa;" Mendelssohn's "Sonata No. 2"; etc. Mr. Bumstead is a very highly-finished player and reflects credit on the eminent masters under whom he has studied. Mr. Joseph Clafton, who gave an organ recital upon another occasion and in the evening of the same day a concert assisted by his son, Mr. William Clafton, on the violin, and Miss Johnson and Mr. R. L. Whittaker as vocalists, needed no introduction to an Oldham audience. Mr. William Clafton's mastery of the violin in the difficult solos he rendered was pleasurably evident to all; and the singing of Miss Johnson, and Mr. R. L. Whittaker was all that could be desired. Mr. Clafton has also conducted a grand concert given by the members of the Oldham Vocal Society.—On August 22nd, at the Exhibition, a short organ recital was given by Mr. Herbert Chadwick, who displayed considerable taste and skill in his performance.—A concert was given by the Vocal Society recently to a large and appreciative audience. The most striking feature of the concert was undoubtedly the excellent part-singing of the choir. In consequence of the absence of a number of members, the effect at times was not quite satisfactory, this being noticeable more especially in the last movement of Hill's "Hushed in Death"; but in the passages requiring soft, delicate, and expressive singing the effect was admirable in every way. The selection of the choral pieces was admirable, containing pieces by Macfarren, Hatton, Stewart, &c. The programme contained Cowen's "Unfinished song." This is a charming song, and was sung by one of the contraltos with great taste and expression. Mr. Clafton conducted and accompanied with much skill and judgment.

F. Townsend Southwick, organist of the Congregational Church, Oswego, N.Y., recently gave three organ recitals in that church. His programmes were very interesting, and according to all accounts, well rendered. Some of the pieces played were Rheinberger's "Pastoral Sonata," Bach's Fugue in C minor and Dorian Toccata, Eugene Thayer's variations on "Pleyel's Hymn" and "Ave Maria"; Gustav Merkel's three grand Choral Preludes; Handel's Concerto in F, Mendelssohn's Organ Sonata in C minor, No. 2; Thiele's "Chromatic Fantasie," and Hesse's Fantasie for two performers, in D minor. In the interpretation of the latter work, Mr. Southwick had the assistance of Prof. H. B. Huerter, organist of St. Mary's Church. These recitals have interested the public, have had their influence for good, and have furnished evidence of the advance of organ playing in America, where indeed many excellent organists are to be found.

Foreign Musical Intelligence.

Lortzing's "Ordine" is to inaugurate the season at Berlin.

Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini" has been successful in Leipzig.

"Mazeppa," Tschaïkowsky's new opera will be shortly performed in St. Petersburg.

Herr A. Thierfelder's new opera, "Der Trentdjäger," has been given in Brandenburg.

Dr. Hugo Riemann, of Hamburg, announces a supplement to his "Musik-Lexicon."

M. Lavastre, the decorator of the Paris Opera House, died recently at the age of 56.

Giuseppe Del-Maino, a distinguished professor of the violin and viola, died on August 14, at Parma.

That Rubinstein's "Sulamite" will be given at Hamburgh in the autumn, seems to be accepted as a certainty.

A concert is to be given at Aix-les-Bains for the benefit of the sufferers by the catastrophe at Casamicciola.

Popular concerts are being successfully given in Marseilles after the manner of our promenade concerts.

Mr. F. Besson has obtained a diploma of honour for the construction of brass instruments at the Exhibition at Amsterdam.

The Choral Society of Dijon, together with the local Musical Union, announced a concert in the wood of the park there, the other day.

Flotow, it is said, besides the opera "Count of San Megrin," has also left a comic opera in three acts, called "The Miller of Meunier."

O Mundo Artistico is the title of a new journal published in Lisbon and dedicated to art matters. The paper is excellently got up, with admirably lithographed front page.

Ferdinand Hiller has requested the editor of Le Ménestrel to deny the report of his retirement from the direction of the Conservatoire at Cologne and the Gürzenich concerts given in the same city.

At Sondershausen lately a concert was given under Herr Schröder, at which Tschaïkowsky's overture to "Romeo and Juliet" was performed.

An out-door concert upon a large scale was given in Venice on the 15th of August, in aid of the sufferers at Isehia. Some 300 performers assisted.

M. Benjamin Godard is reported to be engaged upon the composition of an opera, "Don Pedro de Zalamea," which will be first produced at Antwerp. The libretto is by Messrs. Sylvestre and Detroyat.

A new Mass in F, by Mdlle. Angelina Henn, was given at Bonne-Nouvelle on August 15. The "Kyrie," "Benedictus," and "Agnus Dei" are specially commended, though the whole work is much praised.

The new Conservatoire opened only last April in Sondershausen, under the direction of Herr Carl Schröder, has, it is said, made a very successful commencement, eighty-five pupils having already entered it.

An excellent new organ has been built by the Brothers Lingiardi, of Pavia, for the parish church of Saint Eulalia, Cagliari. The tone of each department is spoken of by the Italian local press as very admirable.

M. Jules Blüthner, of Leipzig, has obtained a diploma of honour for his pianofortes at the Amsterdam Exhibition; and a gold medal has been awarded at the same place to MM. Th. Mann and Co., of Bielfefeld for their iron pianofortes.

On August 24th a concert was to be given in Milan in aid of sufferers at Ischia. The chorus of 350 voices was under the direction of Signor Cairati, the orchestra consisted of 100 performers, and the conductor was Signor Raffaele Kuon.

It is authoritively stated that Herr Angelo Neumann has undertaken the direction of the Bremen Opera, and will during the coming season produce there, in addition to the standard classical works of the répertoire, the "Rheingold," "Walküre," and "Tristan und Isolde." Herr Anton Seidl is engaged to conduct Wagner's works.

Digitized by Google

Organ News.

LIVERPOOL.

An organ recital was given in St. George's Hall, by Mr. W. T. Best, on Thursday, August 23rd. The following was the programme :—

Overture, "Regenella"	Braga.
Adagio from the Sestet for Horns and Stringed Instruments	Beethoven.
Introduction and Fugue in G major	Best.
Allegretto and Adagio Religioso, from the Symphony to the "Lobgesang"	Mendelssohn.
March for the Organ in E flat major	Salomé.

And on Saturday, August 25th :—

Organ Sonata, No. 2 in A minor	Capocci.
Andante Cantabile in G major	Wesley.
Selection from the music to "A Midsummer's Night's Dream"	Mendelssohn.
Prelude and Fugue in C major	Bach.
Overture, "L'Ombra"	Flotow.

FISHERIES EXHIBITION.

The following organ recitals have been given during the last week.

Mr. Loaring's programmes included the following :—

Overture, "La Gazza Ladra"	Rossini.
Gavotte	Bach.
Prelude and Fugue	Baumgarten.
Selection from "Le Prophète"	Meyerbeer.
"Let the bright Seraphim," and "Let their celestial concerts"	Handel.
Grand March, "La Festa"	Westbrook.
Overture, "The Poet and the Peasant"	Suppé.

Overture, "Sophonisbe"	Paer.
Gavotte in D	Loaring.
Fugue in E flat	Bach.
Selection from "H.M.S. Pinafore"	Sullivan.
Organ Concerto, No. 6	Handel.
March "Placida"	Carter.
Overture, "Il Tancredi"	Rossini.

The programme of the recitals by Mr. H. C. Tonking, on Wednesday, August 22nd, were :—

Overture, "Occasional Oratorio"	Handel.
Offertoire in G	Batiste.
Fugue in E major	Best.
Festal March in D	Smart.
"Hercules" March	Trembath.

On Friday, August 24th :—

Andante in F, No. 2	Smart.
Concert Fugue in G	Krebs.
Postlude in D	Smart.
Canon in A	Salomé.
Fantasia on a Welsh March	Best.

On Saturday, August 25th :—

March in B flat	Silas.
Fanfare	Lemmens.
Andante in F	Wely.

The programme of the recital by Mr. Clough, on Thursday, August 23rd, included :—

Offertoire in F major	Wely.
Toccata in D minor, and Fugue in B flat major	Bach.
"March Triomphale"	Clough.
Audante, with variations	Batiste.
Fanfare and Final	Lemmens.

And by Mr. J. Loaring :—

Overture, "Il Tancredi"	Rossini.
Organ Concerto, No. 2	Handel.
Andante from 1st Symphony	Haydn.
Offertoire in F	Clarke.
Grand March, "La Festa"	Westbrook.

And by Mr. Theo. Ward :—

Grand March	Clarke.
Prelude and Fugue	Bach.
"Improvisation"

And by Mr. E. H. Sügg :—

Grand Chorus	Guilmant.
Andante, with variations	Haydn.
Grand March	Sügg.
Prelude and Fugue, No. 2	Mendelssohn.
Offertoire in A	Clarke.
Gavotte	Sügg.
Offertoire in E major	Batiste.

WARE.

An organ recital was given at the Parish Church on Thursday, August 23rd, by Mr. Geo. Herbert Gregory, Mus.Bac., F.C.O., Mr. James L. Gregory, F.C.O., and Mr. Alfred E. Gregory, A.Mus. T.C.L. The programme included :—

Concerto in A	Handel.
Grave—Allegro—Minuet e Trio—Fuga.
Andante in A (Posthumous)	Smart.
Larghetto from the 2nd Symphony	Beethoven.
Romanza from Symphony in E flat	Haydn.
Two Nocturnes in E flat and F minor	Chopin.
Minuet and Trio	Calkin.

DEVONPORT.

An organ recital was given in the Albert Road Chapel, Morice Town, on the new organ, erected by Messrs. Hele and Co., Plymouth, by Mr. John Pardew, on Friday, August 24th. The following was the programme :—

Offertoire	Wely.
Andante	Guilmant.
Chorus, "Sing unto God"	Handel.
Cavatina	Raff.
Allegro	Lemmens.
Gavotte	Ghys.
"Waft her, Angels"	Handel.
March	Mendelssohn.

BERKELEY SQUARE.

The following pieces were played by Mr. P. de Sorpis, the hon. organist of St. Mary's, after service on Sunday evening, the 5th inst., on the occasion of the completion of the organ, by Bryceson Brothers :—

March, "Abraham"	Molique.
Offertoire, in D minor	Batiste.
Andante in A	Smart.
March, "Cornelius"	Mendelssohn.

GLASGOW.

An organ recital was given on Monday, August 6th, in the Cathedral, by Dr. A. L. Peace. The following was the programme :—

Organ Concerto, "Cuckoo and Nightingale"	Handel
Meditation in F sharp minor	Guilmant.
Cantilène Pastorale in D minor
Grand Choeur in D major
Grand Prelude and Fugue in D major	Bach.
Cantique Religieuse, "Notre Dame des Petits Enfants"	Gounod.
Rondo, "Con L'Imitazione de Campanelli"	Morandi.
March, "King David"	Horsley.

And on Monday, Aug. 20th :—

Organ Sonata, No. 2	Guilmant.
Allegro—Andante con espressione—Rondo
Adagio (Quartet in B flat, No. 3)	Mozart.
Prelude and Fugue in D major	Mendelssohn.
Song, "Ave Maria"	Schubert.
"Post Communion," por Organo	Morandi.
Marche Héroique	Saint-Saens

FRIERN BARNET.

A fine organ of 3 manuals and pedal, with 29 sounding stops, and the usual number of couplers and accessory movements, has just been erected at All Saints' Church, by Messrs. Bryceson, Bros. It was opened with a special service and recital, on Thursday evening, August 23rd, Mr. J. C. B. Tirbutt, organist of All Saints', Reading, being the organist. The following was the programme:—

Introduction and Air, varied	Hesse.
Two Andantes	Batiste.
Fugue in E Flat, "St. Ann"	Bach.
Fantasia, "O Sanctissima"	Lux.
Air, "Let the Bright Seraphim"	Handel.
Andante Cantabile, from 4th Concerto	Bennett.
"Romance sans Paroles"	Guilmant.
Festival March in D	Smart.
Hallelujah Chorus ("Messiah")	Handel.

HARWICH, ESSEX.

On Wednesday, August 22nd, Mr. Joseph White, of Teignmouth, gave an organ recital, at the Wesleyan Church here, before a large and appreciative audience, who listened throughout with the greatest attention. The organ has two manuals and pedals and was built by Mr. George Tucker, of Plymouth. The following was the programme :—

March Militaire	Gounod.
Allegretto Villereccio	Fumagelli.
Fugue in G major	Bach.
Air, with variations	Carter.
Offertoire in C minor	Batiste.
Air, with variations	Haydn.
Cantiléne	Salomé.
Overture in E	Morandi.

HOLLOWAY.

On Sunday, August 12th, special services were held in the united Methodist Free Church, for the purpose of opening a new organ, which has been given to the church by Mr. R. Wildgoose. Mr. F. G. Painter, of London, presided at the organ, and played several pieces, bringing out the good points of the instrument with success. For the anthems, the choir selected two pieces from Mozart's 12th mass, that in the morning being "Gloria in Excelsis," and in the evening, "I will call upon the Lord." Messrs. C. Lloyd & Co., of Nottingham, are the builders of the organ. On the following Monday evening, in the same place, a musical festival was given, when selections of music were rendered by the choir, interspersed with organ solos by Mr. F. G. Painter.—Nottingham Guardian.

Digitized by Google

PELYNT, CORNWALL.

On August 8th, the new organ was opened. The instrument has been built by Mr. George Tucker, of the Octagon Organ Works, Plymouth, and there was a general expression of opinion on the part of those present that the vicar and committee were to be congratulated on securing such an excellent instrument. It has two manuals, the Swell and the Great, each consisting of 56 notes, CC to G, and pedals. The general tone of the instrument is very full and sweet, the Clarabella stop being especially good. After a brief dedicatory service, Mrs. R. H. Carter, of Kenwyn, who had kindly consented to act as organist for the day, opened the recital with Mendelssohn's march "Cornelius," in which she was accompanied by the string band of the Royal Marines. This was followed by an organ solo, the Adagio from Beethoven's 6th quartet, Op. 18; the Allegretto and Adagio, from Sinfonia of "Lobesang," given by the organ and band. The march from Schiller, "Meyerbeer," was the next item, and this was followed by Sullivan's "Lost chord," arranged for organ and band, and in which Mr. Elford's cornet part was most effective. The recital closed with the hymn "Hark! hark! the organ loudly peals." There was full evening Service at 7.30, when the church was crowded by an attentive congregation. In every respect save the weather the day's proceedings were a success.

HELENSBURGH.

The new and artistically constructed organ for the Episcopal Church, built by Mr. August Gern, was opened on the 18th and 19th inst., by Dr. W. Spark. The recital of the 18th had a capital programme carefully executed. The organ has two manals and pedals, with 28 stops. It is constructed upon the tubular system, and the workmanship reflects high credit upon the builder, who is a truly artistic and painstaking maker of organs.

REMINISCENCES OF AN OLD REPORTER.

As continuity is one law of music (not always observed, by the way), let me proceed to speak of Miss Shirreff. After making a great hit as Oscar the page, in "Gustavus III." (A.D. 1833—34), she assumed the higher position of prima donna at Covent Garden Theatre, four years afterwards (A.D. 1838), in an opera called "Amilie, or the Love Test," composed by one M. W. Rooke, of the Royal Academy, and the instructor of William Harrison, the tenor singer. The music of "Amilie" was very pretty, and the opera well mounted, but its term of life did not endure beyond the season. I heard the work on Friday, April 20th, 1838; the name of the tenor vocalist, a young soldier who tests the love of Amilie in disguise—no "new thing," I unfortunately forget; and indeed, only remember one sparkling soprano song, "To the Vine Feast," allotted to a "second lady." It appears that Rooke was much surprised at his success; he wrote very slowly, and took a long time to bring forth his ideas, like the old parliamentary speaker who "conceived" three times, to produce—nothing!

Henry Westrop, for many years "second fiddle" at the opera and the Philharmonic concerts, had a very good MS. opera on the stocks for some years, but although the "Harrison and Pyne" company looked at the score with favour in 1861, the work was never produced—a great pity. One heard "elegant extracts" in the salon: and Westrop composed admirable music for the Chamber.

English opera, however, has not always been kept out in the cold. John Barnett scored a splendid success with "The Mountain Sylph" in 1834; and in 1837, another triumphal entry took place at old Drury on the shoulders of his "Fair Rosamond."

Edward Loder, junior, opened the new Lyceum Theatre in July, 1834 (under Arnold's management), with "Nourjahad," an oriental tale; Miss Romer, Henry Phillips, and a Miss Fanny Healey were principals. Henry Phillips, always fortunate, took the town with a song, "There's a light in her laughing eye," but "Nourjahad's" life could not, as it is in the story, be prolonged. Mr. Loder did better, in 1846, at the Princess's Theatre with the "Night Dancers," an opera highly extolled by the critics of the daily press, particularly Mr. Jas. Davison and Mr. Grüneisen. In this opera, poor Leffler, the bass singer, was engaged to take the part of a foolish and besotted beadle. At the end of the last act, somebody on the stage expressed a fear (according to "copy") that he had been drowned! "Then it must have been in gin, brandy, or whiskey" (retorted a saucy girl), "for he never allows any water to come near him." The audience broke out into roars of laughter, and poor Leffler—(I witnessed the scene on October 24th, 1846)—looked uncommonly sheepish. It was too bad; but Leffler had become notorious as a lover of strong waters. One night, he wrote a short note to the (then) manager of the Lyceum, enriched with expletives, (usually printed with hyphens), to the effect that he had drunk so much claret that he could not possibly sing. The letter was read aloud to the audience, who sympathized with the manager, but hissed poor Leffler to the ceiling. Talking of expletives, I have always longed to hug the inimitable humourist who, when in Holland, carefully dated his epistles to friends in England from "Rotterd——!" Pious, reverent, prudent soul, with a nice appreciation of the proprieties!

Leffler had a pretty daughter who sang at concerts for a short time, attired in deep mourning, about the year 1846—7.

I heard the once great Grisi sing a ballad in the course of a concert held by Mdme. Rudersdorff at St. James's Hall in May, 1865. The poor prima donna looked ghastly pale and could not sing even the simple English music in perfect tune. Alas! Mrs. Alfred Shaw, who, at Covent Garden in 1841 achieved a triumphant success as Azsace in "Semiramide," was another melancholy instance of rapid decline, after a most successful début, and one or two brilliant seasons. When Grisi lost her temper, the opera had to be changed I was present at a morning performance of the Royal Italian in 1849, when, to the horror and indignation of classical people who had come from the suburbs expressly to hear "Don Giovanni," Rossini's "La Cenerentola" was substituted, at a "short notice." Alboni, however, must have compensated the disappointed ones in a degree: she sang splendidly, and in "Non più mesta," dropped a double octave—no easy feat!

On Easter Tuesday, April 10th, 1849, a "row" occurred at the Royal Italian Opera. Mr. Delafield had allowed a number of professional persons, critics, and others, to gain access to the stalls, (then all, or mostly, *un*reserved), through the saloon, so as to anticipate ordinary outsiders. The suspension of this privilege provoked a noise; one pertinacious gentleman had his coat torn to pieces in the struggle, and made a speech to "Messrs. Delafield and Webster" from the upper boxes: he was mollified, or at least removed, before the opera began, and Mr. Delafield, wisely withdrew the ill-advised suspension. The opera that night was "Linda di Chamouni," and served to introduce Miss Catherine Hayes in the title-part.

"La Donna del Lago" was a successful revival in 1849; the mise en scene magnificent. "La Muette di Portici," or "Masaniello," made the fortune of the theatre the same year. In "Lucrezia Borgia," Alboni, when she sang the famous "Brindisi" in C, shook on the high G, at the end, and of course raised loud cries of brava! An old aunt used to say that she must be careful to know what word to use at the opera, whether bravo, brava, or bravi! It is certainly an adjective, and must therefore be declined.

When Jenny Lind made her début at Her Majesty's Theatre, in May, 1847, the House of Lords actually adjourned at an earlier hour, in order to hear her. The Lords never, as a rule, sit very late. Lind chose "Robert le Diable," as her opera d'intrata, taking the part of Alice. A weak Bishop of Norwich, one Dr. Hinds, afterwards made her go into another line, and she appeared in "Die Zauberflöte" with concert costume; the opera was mounted on the stage as a Cantata! A dead failure soon stopped this nonsence. The Jenny Lind mania ruined Lumley in the sequel. The public were so eager for "new things" and terrestial "stars," that they cried, like the horse-leech, "give, give," and Lumley could give no more. In June, 1850, he introduced a lady of colour, who played trumpery tunes on a guitar between the acts, but the exhibition proved a woful failure; the audience only laughed. "Florinda," Thalberg's opera, produced in 1851, fell flatly. The managers, in that (the Exhibition) year thought to make fortunes—but no; the vast crowd that flocked to Hyde Park in the day-time were too tired to do more, at six o'clock, than go home to supper and bed!

A. M.

Digitized by Google

Academical Intelligence.

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

EXAMINATION FOR ASSOCIATESHIP, JULY 10, 1883.

PAPER WORK AT ORGAN.

The candidates commence at the organ by the performance of an organ piece, or a selection of not more than two movements from a composition written for the instrument, with a pedal obbligato part. The organ works of Bach and Mendelssohn afford the best examples for the candidates' selection. The examiners reserve to themselves the power to stop any candidate as soon as their judgment is formed.

The first six verses of the "Venite" were to be accompanied to the music of a given chant.

A hymn-tune was to be given out, and one verse accompanied.

A given passage was to be transposed at sight, the new keys being named by the examiners :—

An example of vocal score-reading was to be played at sight on the two diapasons of the Great organ only, and without the use of the pedals.

And a figured bass to be filled up at sight in four parts.

PAPER WORK AWAY FROM ORGAN.

A melody was to be harmonisd in four parts in vocal score, with proper clefs.

A bass to be harmonised in four parts in vocal score, from the figures, with proper clefs.

The candidates was to write out the bass of a given passage, figure it according to the harmonies given, and name the root notes of the different chords employed.

To add two simultaneous counterpoints of first species, and above and one below, to a given canto fermo.

To add three simultaneous counterpoints of any species, two above and one below, to another canto fermo.

To give answers to two fugue subjects.

AND TO ANSWER AS MANY OF THE SUCCEEDING QUESTIONS AS POSSIBLE.

1. What are combinational or resultant tones ?

2. How is the pressure of organ wind estimated? and what does the expression three inches of wind mean?

3. About what date did the orthodox compass or organ manuals and pedals begin to prevail in England?

4. Describe the chord known as the Neapolitan sixth, and say on which degree of the scale it is commonly used.

5. Say which individual species of counterpoint most frequently supplies the beginning and ending of examples of florid counterpoint.

6. Show the structure of a double chant, giving the bar divisions and indicating the position of the several reciting notes.

7. Name the pitch of the open strings of the violin, viola, and violoncello.

8. Give the name of the first Italian opera composed by Handel in England, and the date of its composition.

9. Give a list of Mendelssohn's chief sacred choral works, with dates of composition.

(To be continued).

Messrs. Wilkinson and Sons, of Kendal, re-opened two of their organs, after enlargement, on Sunday, August 26th. One at Cautley Church, Yorkshire, containing one manual, with general swell ; and the other at Skelsmergh Church, Westmoreland, with great and swell, 14 stops.

Messrs. G. R. Sims and F. Clay's new opera "The White Queen," forms the opening piece at the re-built Alhambra on October 22nd.

MUSIC STRINGS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF ALL KINDS OF

STRINGS FOR VIOLIN, VIOLA, VIOLONCELLO, DOUBLE BASS HARP, ZITHER, GUITAR, BANJO, &c., &c.,

Have always in Stock the Largest Assortment of Music Strings of any House in the World.

39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

All Kinds of Strings covered in a superior manner by powerful machines, made on the best principle with all modern improvements.

A BACHELOR OF MUSIC (Cambridge) desires an Appointment as PROFESSOR OF MUSIC in some COLLEGE or SCHOOL in the Midland Counties. A Liberal Honorarium will be given to any one through whose introduction such an appointment may be obtained.—Address, Cantab., care of Messrs. Novello, Ewer & Co., I, Berners Street, London.

WANTED, Preparation by Correspondence for PRELIMINARY LITERARY EXAMINATION for MUS.BAC. Degree (Oxford Senior Local). Please state Terms to G., care of Weekes and Co., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

MOZART'S ORGAN WORKS. By Frank J. Sawyer, B.Mus. Oxon, F.C.O.

MUSICAL INTELLIGENCE :—Opera at the Crystal Palace—Avenue Theatre—The Gloucester Festival—The Church Congress—Swansea Musical Eisteddfod—Festival of Associated Choirs at Whitby—Glasgow, etc.

FOREIGN MUSICAL INTELLIGENCE.

ORGAN NEWS :—Liverpool—Fisheries Exhibition—Ware—Devonport—Berkeley Square—Glasgow—Friern Barnet—Harwich, Essex—Holloway—Pelynt, Cornwall—Helensburgh.

REMINISCENCES OF AN OLD REPORTER.

ACADEMICAL INTELLIGENCE :—College of Organists.

EDITORIAL :—Purpose in the Composition of Music—Music Not an Amusement—The Logic of Counterpoint.

THE VOICE MUSICALLY AND MEDICALLY CONSIDERED. By Armand Semple, B.A., M.B., Cantab., M.R.C.P., Lond.

SIR G. A. MACFARREN ON THE CARDIFF EISTEDDFOD.

TRADE PROSPECTS IN AMERICA.

CORRESPONDENCE :—The Second Inversion of the Dominant Seventh.

PASSING EVENTS. The Querist, Service Lists, &c.

THE MUSICAL STANDARD

LONDON : SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 1, 1883.

PURPOSE IN THE COMPOSITION OF MUSIC.

I.

THAT "purpose in art may supersede technical law," would seem to be an undisputed axiom ; and this is but allowing that the object to be attained must be superior to the means employed. The courageous opening up of the questions concerning the contrapuntal laws by Mr. H. J. STARK in his paper recently read before the College of Organists, and the consequent valuable letters from Dr. H. HILES, Mr. H. C. BANISTER, and Mr. C. E. STEPHENS, will, it is hoped, lead to a further timely discussion upon a subject of much importance with respect to the future best interests of the art. Such a discussion could be widened out with advantage into the consideration of the broad question, "Can "purpose in art justifiably supersede technical law?" A modern poet makes one of his characters say philosophy is an enemy of the State, weakening faith and converting the people into a nation of talkers. Now, without wasting space in these columns by diving into polemics, it may be safely asserted that in music we do want philosophy rather than theories; and prolonged discussions on matters in which the due expression of thought is to be considered as against the strict observance of the technicalities of the art, cannot fail to be beneficial to the future of music. As in literature and in all the arts, so in music, there are undoubtedly times when the strong tide of thought will bear down the barriers which are none the less of general utility in the shaping, assertion, expression, and even restraining of exuberant ideality. The whole question of law versus license seems to include the following subdivisions. Under what circumstances may rules be temporarily disregarded? What class of art-producers may be considered to be entitled to so disregard technical laws? and what is the position of the student with regard to such liberty of action? It would seem, indeed, that the whole question hinges upon the word "purpose." I propose to offer a typical passage as an illustration, which involves in the natural form of its enunciation a repeated violence of the rule musicians most universally elect to abide by the law which directs the avoidance of consecutive perfect concords in part-writing.

Digitized by Google

In the version A the eye of the musician will at once detect decided purposes, such as are often found in the compositions of men of high genius, writing skill and decided thoughts. The scale sentences in the lower parts are harmless when taken apart from the shake figure of the upper tone stratum; it is the persistent purpose of this upper part which introduces the illegal element; and such results from the use of the common ornament, the shake, are frequent enough, though but little noticed, as they usually do not actually appear on paper. Now, the question arises. Which of the three strata—all having decided "purpose" in their lines—is to give way in order to secure the customary respect for a truly essential law? or, on the other hand, are the outlines so truly decisive in their naturalness as to justify the repeated breach of an obviously good rule? or, again, is it, or is it not, a wise policy on the part of the writer to here permit such a patent disregard of a strong law, lest by shrinking from the sternly natural character of the combined tone actions, he will not only hopelessly weaken the general idea of the sentence (which is as nothing without "purpose"), but will also show up by such studied avoidance of a plain course the very stumbling blocks he does not desire the listener to observe? The straightforwardness of the first version of the passage carries honest, decided "purpose" in its courageous, unbroken lines with such a decided strength of will as seems to make the undoubted weakness of certain points of the sentence all but logically imperceptible. To put the matter in other words, the irregularities of the road have not stood in the way of the strong-built vehicle passing over it.

Now, in version B, the material, without being actually altered, has lost much by the dodging delays and—what may be dignified as tact, but hardly spoken of as "purpose"—an obvious cringing from decision of outline in order to secure the respectability which is presumed to arise to the gain of the law-abiding writer. On the other side, arguments could be presented to show that version B, to the educated ear, presents an unbroken, harmonious continuity which cannot be claimed for version A, and this very harmonic integrity is after all a strength of its kind of a very high character. The arrival at any decision in the contemplation of such a passage must, to some extent, depend upon the temperament, will, or sensitiveness of the writer. I venture to think the student may ponder over this and similar sentences to be found in the more freely written works of the great masters of the art with some advantage as regards the building-up of his own musical mind and will.

E. H. TURPIN.

MUSIC NOT AN AMUSEMENT.

INDULGENT readers will not pass over the "Reminiscences of an Old Reporter," printed in this and the last edition of the Musical Standard, and to be continued, as some people would say, if the fates will. The facts recorded by the writer have suggested the title of this article and the few remarks that follow. Ignorant and superficial people with minds—if they have minds—incapable of reflection, indulge in a notion that music is merely a pastime, and that musical reporters have rather a gala time of it. Idiotic simplicity! Beautified innocence of green-sick girlhood! The "Old Reporter" tells a very different tale, and his colleagues on the press would be ready, if asked, to corroborate his evidence.

That learned etymologist the (Protestant) Archbishop of Dublin, Dr. TRENCH, has shewn that to call anyone of the fine arts an "a-musement" is a stupid contradiction in terms. Ex vi termini, "a-musement signifies to be away, or absent from the MUSES, who preside individually over particular departments of Art and Science. It follows, therefore, that if music be an *a*musement, the devotee to the pursuit must run away from and dispense with the aid of EUTERPE and POLYHYMNIA. The ancients knew better. Life with them, as with us, was short, but art was long. They laboured like slaves at the arts, and amusement was the unbending of that bow which PHŒBUS himself cannot venture to keep in rigid tension at all times. SOCRATES gave his lectures, and then amused himself with a game at marbles!

The professor, of course, is too well aware that music, like painting and sculpture, is a tremendous toil, and exacts the assiduous devotion of an anchorite. Slip-slop boarding-school and "bread-and-butter" girls hammer at a few flimsy tunes to please papa and mamma or may be a côterie of flirting "mashers," but the regular student must practise his instrument seven or eight hours a day; study the theory of the art, know all the mysteries of harmony and counterpoint; and if he be worth his salt, be ready to extemporise on a figured bass at a moment's notice. The greatest geniuses are not exempt from this toil and trouble. Their ideas are inspired, but the development and "working out" of those ideas is a climbing of the steepest Parnassus. MOZART shortened his life by the severity of his studies, and BEETHOVEN would note pages of music before he adopted the precise form of thought.

Digitized by Google

Then with respect to the musical reporter. He must not only be well versed in the theory of the art, have some knowledge of all the technique, and be deeply read in classical texts, but also work hard outside in the public service. LORD LYNDHURST, at a dinner of the Newspaper Press Association in 1839, gave a faithful representation of the Parliamentary reporter, who, apparently at his ease in the gallery of the House, was "obliged to sit for hours afterwards "in a close office, lighted with gas, writing out his "hieroglyphics for the printer." So the musical critic, as our "Old Reporter" testifies, was compelled, not so many years ago, to write a column or two of minion type after midnight, in order that the public might have on their breakfast tables, at nine the next morning, a full account of some new opera or oratorio, with careful criticism and minute analysis of details. Punch, in 1850, had a skit on some city clerk, envious of a friend who often went to the opera as a reporter for the press, and found the task anything but an amusement. It is fair to say that a man must and does like the duty, and of course enjoys great pleasure, of the highest kind, on hearing fine compositions, but then the alloy! The ordinary auditor listens, applauds, goes home to supper humming the haunting airs of the new work, and there an end. The reporter, on the contrary, takes copious notes, like a judge on the bench, and if not obliged to pen his lengthy notice the same night, must keep his memory green, and not lose the impressions made upon the ear, and through the ear upon the mind. ALBERT SMITH used to say that the pleasure of seeing a pantomime was spoiled by his foreknowledge of the "notice" to be written thereafter for the press; and what is a Christmas pantomime in comparison with a grand opera like "Lohengrin," or an oratorio such as "Elijah"?

The mention of oratorio reminds one that at the provincial festivals, reporters must needs scribble their column of notice off-hand, and send the copy up to London by an afternoon train. No time to be lost; even on a hasty plate of soup! It is news of the day and hour. In London, as already stated, a brief summary usually suffices on the actual night; in fact, a long notice, if written at once, runs a great risk, especially during the session, of being "crowded out." This occurred many years ago, in the Times office, when the editor gave the substance of a long notice by Mr. J. W. DAVISON in a few lines, apologizing for the necessity—want of space. The full notice appeared next day. Some editors used to be very exacting, and the complaints of "old re-"porters" on the daily press have been deep, if not so loud as the roar of Niagara. Music, then, the reader may now admit, is certainly not an amusement, but a very serious business to all who are earnestly concerned.

A. M.

THE LOGIC OF COUNTERPOINT.

THIRD SERIES.

XII.

THE combination of second, third, and fourth species counterpoint in a four-part score affords the student one of the best possible forms of exercise, not only as regards the practical mastery of the art from the scholastic point of sight, but as a valuable means of enlarging the mental resources of the future composer, called upon to be prepared to face part-complications and knotty fugal points. This contrapuntal drill should of course be practised with every possible variety of position; but the best models of distribution are those in which the contrapuntal activity is most equally spread throughout the score. The following scheme of arrangements will be found to embrace all the necessary scoring plans. The canto fermo is distinguished, as before, by the short horizontal line, and the figures denote the several species by their cardinal numerals.

2	3	4	—	4	2
3	2	—	2	3	4
4	—,	3	3	2	—
—,	4,	2,	4,	—,	3,

3	—	4	2	3	—
—	4	2	3	—	2
4	3	3	—	4	4
2,	2,	—,	4,	2	3

3	—
4,	3
2	2
—	4

In practising the different scoring schemes the student will, as in similar previous drill with mixed counterpoints, speedily find a special aptitude for given arrangements. The plans placing the third and fourth species in the inner parts will most likely give the student the most trouble, from the cramped melodic action of the middle parts and because both active movement and suspended action are perhaps more liable to disturb the chord progressions when employed internally than when used externally. There seems to be no objection in the writing of mixed counterpoints to the introduction of rests, but these should not exceed a bar and a-half, or two bars in a given part at a time.

CHERUBINI suggests that in beginning the third species we may commence with a crotchet rest, and the start of the second species counterpoint be delayed until the end of the second bar. There could be no logical objection to the commencement of the fourth species counterpoint in the second instead of in the first measure. Still, as the activity of the third species and the piquancy of the fourth species lend so much character, not to say vitality, to a group of mixed counterpoints, it does seem reasonable to regard the second species counterpoint as the one least to be missed from the general movement, and therefore, the part to which rests may be best assigned without damage to the general interest of the structure. Such considerations as these must depend, however, upon the comparative brevity or length of the examples being worked out. With regard to the cadence point, the fourth species would naturally seem to be the one kind claiming the retention of its accustomed cadence figure in either of the suspensions seven-six or two-three according to the position of part carrying this type of counterpoint. When the fourth species counterpoint is in the lowest part this practice may be perhaps best departed from; and it may be a convenient device in the case of such a departure, to temporarily convert the second species which is being conducted in one of the three upper parts, into a bearer of the fourth species cadence, by the introduction of a suspended note into the second contrapuntal order in the last bar but one. The point of this suggestion lies in the fact that suspended harmony has a special value at a cadence point, and should be retained at such a point, even if it is found convenient—in order to secure more solid dominant harmony by giving the root to the lowest tone stratum—to transfer the suspension for the moment from the fourth species line to the part carrying the second contrapuntal order.

Digitized by Google

E. H. Turpin.

THE VOICE
MUSICALLY AND MEDICALLY CONSIDERED.

BY

Armand Semple, B.A., M.B., Cantab., M.R.C.P., Lond.,
Physician to the Royal Society of Musicians.

(Continued from page 119.)

Intensity or Volume.

The voice exhibits different characters, such as dulness or brightness, and also different degrees of intensity or volume.

Timbre or Quality.

The sound is modified by the pharynx or reflecting organ, and by it are produced the various qualities of the voice. The term Timbre implies the peculiar and variable quality which each register can assume, even the forming of the different vowels.

Difference of timbre is caused by the various methods of vibration of which the larynx is capable, and by the modifications produced upon the issuing sounds through the reflecting capacity of the pharynx.

Timbres are due to two Conditions.

1st. Those of which the nature is fixed, and which characterise every individual voice, viz.: form, volume, capacity, firmness, and the healthy or unhealthy condition of the organ.

2ndly. Variable conditions, viz.: The direction taken by the sounds during their emission, whether through the mouth or nose; the capacity or shape of the vocal organ; the tension of the sides; the width between the lower and upper jaws; the action of the soft palate; the position of the lips; and the extent to which they can be opened, and finally the depression or elevation of the tongue.

Timbres may be divided into two leading Classes.

1. The Open, Clear, or Bright Timbre.
2. The Closed, Muffled, or Sombre Timbre.

Every sound emitted must belong to one of these classes, the whole compass of the voice being impressed with its character.

Much brilliancy is given to the voice by the open timbre, but if exaggerated it renders the voice shrill and shrieky; roundness and breadth are imparted by the closed timbre by which alone can the voice attain rich quality. If the closed timbre is exaggerated, the sounds become muffled, dull, and hoarse, an effect more observable in the high than in the low part of the register. In the falsetto the close timbre is well defined, although not so strikingly as in the chest voice. In the head voice it occasionally produces a very remarkable effect, imparting a pure and limpid character to this register, resembling the tones of the harmonica.

The Formation of Sounds.

The mechanical actions by which "voice" is solely formed are by periodical compressions and expansions of air during its passage from the glottis. The two lips (vocal cords) in the interior of the larynx, which constitute the glottis or breath-passage close one upon the other, creating beneath them an accumulation of air, and this, in consequence of the pressure which it undergoes in that situation, becoming elastic, and by the sudden expansion of the glottis, escapes through the lips. By the alternate dilatations and contraction, which produce regular and successive expansions of air, the voice originates. The height or lowness of a sound is dependent upon the rapidity with which the glottis opens and closes. It must also be noticed, that the rapidity of the alternations increases in the inverse ratio to the length of the vibratory aperture.

The Do$_1$ (C_1)	requires per second	132	vibrations.
Do$_2$ (C_2)	"	264	"
Do$_3$ (C_3)	"	528	"
Do$_4$ (C_4)	"	1056	"
Do$_5$ (C_5)	"	2112	"

It will thus be seen that each octave takes double the number of vibrations to that immediately below it.

The dimensions of the glottis are shortened by the following process:—

During tranquil breathing the shape of the glottis is triangular, but the moment that sound is emitted it changes its shape for a linear form which is assumed during phonation; its sides being fixed, and the vocal cords meeting at both their extremes, a space is left at the centre only for air to escape when required. The anterior extremities are always fixed, the posterior, the substance of which is cartilaginous, alone are capable of motion, the glottis being opened by their separation, and closed by their collapsing.

During the production of the deepest note of the voice the vocal cords are in action throughout their entire length; both the ligamentous and cartilaginous parts are set in motion. As the voice commences its ascent in the scale the cartilaginous parts progressively come into contact from behind forwards until they approximate throughout their whole length. By this movement the length of the glottis is, of course, gradually diminished, and it is reduced to the dimensions which can be afforded by the ligamentous parts only. By these latter parts being acted upon from behind, the length of the vibratory aperture is still further diminished.

THE TESTIMONIAL TO SIR MICHAEL COSTA.

The form which the testimonial in contemplation is to assume, says the Musical World, has not yet been decided on; but at a second meeting opinions may coincide, and unanimous consent be awarded to one or other scheme proposed. Meanwhile the names of those who have taken upon themselves the responsibilities involved will suffice to show that the work in hand will earnestly and intelligently carried out.

Julius Benedict, Joseph Bennett, Francesco Berger, Hume Burnley, T. Chappell, W. G. Cusins, J. W. Davison, J. W. Dow, A. Durlacher, John Ella, L. Engel, George Grove, M. Hanhart, H. B. Heath, Rev. Thomas Helmore, D. Hill, H. W. Hill, W. H. Husk, H. Lazarus, Henry Leslie, J. M. Levy, Henry Littleton, Stanley Lucas, G. A. Macfarren, E. H. Mannering, A. Manns, W. Mitchell, J. M. P. Montague, Costantino Perugini, Captain Philips, A. Randegger, P. Sainton, C. Santley, F. Schira, T. Sherrard, G. M. Smith, John Stainer, Arthur Sullivan, F. W. Willocks, and C. E. Willing ("with power to add to their number").

In the course of the official statement prefixed to the foregoing, the following words occur:—"Sir Michael Costa came to England in 1829, and made his first appearance in this country at the Birmingham Musical Festival of that year. By a curious coincidence his last appearance in public was as conductor of the Birmingham Musical Festival of 1882. He therefore continuously pursued his profession in England for the long period of fifty-three years. The committee solicit subscriptions from Sir Michael Costa's friends and admirers for carrying it into effect. The desire of the committee is to procure the contributions of as large a number of persons as possible, in order to testify to the wide esteem in which Sir Michael Costa's services are held."

Digitized by Google

SIR G. A. MACFARREN ON THE CARDIFF EISTEDDFOD.

Professor Macfarren has addressed a letter to the Western Mail, which appeared on the 18th inst. with an explanation from the editor, in which occur the following words :—"It will be remembered that full adjudication was delivered on the great Choral Competition at the National Eisteddfod of Wales, which was held in Cardiff during last week. The excitement and noise which followed the announcement of the names of the successful choirs was so great that Sir George Macfarren could not make himself heard, and was, therefore, compelled to withhold the remarks which it was his intention to make. This was much regretted by everyone who had an interest in music in Wales, inasmuch as it was felt that a criticism upon Welsh choral singing would have been of immense value." In answer to a request for his opinion Sir G. A. Macfarren replied in a letter in which are to be found the following important and valuable sentences :—

"SIR,—In compliance with your request, I will state, more or less, what I might have said had it been possible to speak through the tumult of the enthusiastic audience when I announced the adjudication on the choral contest at the Cardiff Eisteddfod last Thursday. The grounds whereon the unanimous verdict of the seven judges was founded, and which, in their estimation, raised the Penrhyn Choir far above all its competitors, were purity of tone, correctness of time, precision in the taking up of points, musicianliness of phrasing, and just variety of power. The Llanelly United Choir, though remote in merit from that which honourably won the first prize, was, in the particulars that have been named, deemed superior to the others. The tendency, whether resulting from excessive ardour or from whatever cause, to force the voice, induced always harshness of quality, and often falseness of intonation—the last sometimes to such an extent as to change the key that should prevail—and this tendency was manifest occasionally to an extent that disabled the instrumental accompanist from continuance, and that was painful to the hearers. Too much praise cannot be awarded to those conductors of choirs who, without special musical education, had educed from their singers good points which must not be ignored even in the least meritorious of the six performances. An obvious conclusion from the morning's experience is, however, that a trained musician is in all likelihood the ablest teacher of music, and that the excellence of a performance is in most instances commensurate with the technical skill of its director.

"It will not be irrelevant to remark generally on the musical proceedings of the very important and highly-interesting meeting at which it has been my happy privilege to be present. First, then, let it be said in the face of the whole world that the allegation is totally false which denies the musical capacity as a possession of the natives of this island. The long roll of names of singers of the present generation who have come from Wales, and who command the admiration of the whole country, gives living proof that the vocal faculty is strong in the ancient British race—the faculty that comprises sweetness of the voice, distinctness of enunciation, intelligence of declamation, and, above all, the power of sympathy which magnetises the hearers and holds their attention enchained to the executant and to the music he animates. Lovers of art must rejoice in the valuable sign of progress evinced in the exhibition of instrumental skill that has of late been witnessed. It is not to speak of individual merit, examples of which may be found here, or there, or everywhere, when nature has been generous and study assiduous ; but of the highly-important advance displayed in the performance of orchestral music in which many a talent is united to produce one effect. Science reveals not a sublimer or more wonderful phenomenon than the rhythmical unity of multitudinous performers who join in time and in tune with such accurate exactness as proves the dominion of a single all-pervading will. The marvel is the greater when the diverse qualities of tone that characterize the several instruments which constitute a complete band are combined, and musical executancy reaches its highest perfection in this combination. In declaring the award for orchestral performance mention was made of the historical order of instrumental development—a conception, nay more, a discovery that is due to Mr. J. F. Rowbotham, a writer now engaged on a new history of music—this is, that instruments are struck, such as drums and cymbals, which mark measure but not pitch, are the earliest inventions of barbarous nations ; that instruments which are blown, such as pipes with or without reeds, next follow ; and that instruments which are bowed, such as the whole of the viol series, are the latest fruit of musical civilization. All these classes are combined in the modern orchestra. The composer who can employ them consentaneously must have large knowledge and keen sight, and the band comprising them that can play unanimously presents in itself an epitomized chronology of instrumental art. Applause is due, then, to the bands that competed, much for what was accomplished, and very far more for what is promised by the fact of the competition, since this fact points more directly to musical proficiency in Wales than does any other incident of the Eisteddfod. Bearing on this point is the acceptance by the unaccustomed audiences who were present of the classical works that were rendered in full completeness by an adequate number of the best masters of their respective instruments ; this acceptance proved interest in the performance such as is apt for cultivation and probable of yielding richest fruit. In the department of composition, Welshmen generally have not taken such high ground as in executancy, but there are two who have taken university degrees and two who have attained to widest popularity, and the deserved success of these proves that the land has ore ready for refining.

"The absence of competitors for a sight-singing prize is the least favourable sign in the whole course of the proceedings. In all the choral competitions many of the singers were without copies, and many looked not at those they held. This implies memory, but memory is not musicianship. It is a ludicrous mistake in many of our elementary schools for a teacher to play a part in a musical composition again and again till the pupils know it by ear, and can sing it by heart, or—as Cobbett derides the last term—'by hear it.' Thus bullfinches are taught, and thus parrots learn to shriek fragments of melody. As sensible would it be to pretend to teach children to read by frequently reciting to them a sentence until they could repeat it by memory ; but they would be ignorant of the look of the letters or the principles of joining them into words. Oh ! Welshwomen and Welshmen, you of the beautiful voices and the strong musical instinct, believe that if there be truth this is one of the truest, namely, that to be able to read music as easily as words will largely augment your power of pleasing others, of joining in harmony with one another, and of deriving delight to yourselves through the mind's ear from the written characters which are the types of unuttered sounds. The master will render you more real service who will teach you to read one phrase from the musical staff, the staff which was in use in England before ever it was known in Italy, than he who parrots you into singing a whole oratorio by rote.

"The thoughtful must deprecate a wish, strongly expressed by one or two persons, that the obsolete Welsh harp may be perpetuated, not for its musicality, but for its nationality. As reasonably might be desired the restoration of the crwth which has been supplanted by the violin. In like manner the pedal harp has superseded the triple-string harp of Wales, as this did the harp without the fore-pillar of primitive Ireland, which was in its day a modernization of the Hebrew harp, and so on in backward line with the harps of Egypt and Assyria. Jealousy of other branches of our united nation, and the desire to keep Welsh honours for the Welsh, and Wales itself exclusively for Welshmen, betoken a spirit adverse to progress, and uncongenial to that which, on the other side of the mountains, is ready to welcome the worth of the Welsh wherever it is proved. It will be the better for us all if we regard each other as brethren of one nation, and if we feel and act with a patriotism common to us all. Truly, the Cymric race ruled here prior to the Saxon, but the Finnish is shown to have preceded the Cymric. Antecedent history, which is written by the glacier on the living mountains, proves that time was when earlier races than humanity itself solely populated the island. It could scarcely be contemplated on archæological grounds to re-establish the sway of the ichthyosaurus and plesiosaurus over the contemporary subordinate population of Britain. Let the Welsh preserve their leek, which renews itself from spring to spring, and, fresh as the glistening sunbeam, will twine with the rose and the thistle to form a single emblem of an undivided people.

"Some persons say—and they say much other than their prayers—that musical culture is in a bad state in this country. The fallacy of the saying is proved by the musical advances in our public schools, by the musical advances in our private families, and—most remarkable of all—by the musical advances in the mining and quarrying districts that have sent their toilers to the recent competitions. The circumstance which alone may seem to render this denial equivocal is the preference often shown for foreigners to our land, as composers, singers, and players, over musicians of our own breeding ; and the persons who say what has been cited of our musical culture are they who do the most to promote this preference. The same persons say that hundreds of Englishmen go yearly to Leipsic for musical education because none is to be obtained here ; but statistics disprove this by showing that the number of English musical students in foreign countries may be counted by tens or units, instead of by hundreds, and evidence could be adduced of other reasons for their self-exile than the want of educational means at home. The same persons say that England owns no school wherein music can be taught ; but the advantages adduced above date from the institution of the Royal Academy of Music sixty-one years since, which has trained the best talent of all England, including those distinguished musicians of Welsh birth or parentage whose praises are familiar on every lip, and whose presence as performers, and still more as adjudicators, has been the brightest ornament of the Cardiff Eisteddfod.—I am, &c.

"August, 16th. G. A. MACFARREN."

The Western Mail sensibly calls attention to the chief points of Sir G. A. Macfarren's letter in a leader containing the following words:—"Unquestionably the most important part of the whole letter is that wherein the writer touches upon the sore point of Welsh jealousy and exclusiveness. Art must be first in the affections of her devotees, let who or what will be second. And Art has a right to her place, for Art, being Truth, is Divine. Love of country even must not be allowed to stand between her worshippers and her glorious self, and this, we take it, is the occult meaning of the President of the Royal Academy herein. Lord Bute had before this told the Welsh nation that its individuality need not stand between it and excellence; Sir George Macfarren now says it must not."

Digitized by Google

The Musical World adds the comment now given:—"Thus it may be seen how Welshmen can receive admonishment and advice with the same cordiality as that with which they welcome praise, when addressed to them by competent authority and clothed in sympathetic language. This event alone would suffice to perpetuate the remembrance of the Cardiff Eisteddfod of 1883. Every one of the appointed judges gave his opinion impartially, heedless of what might or not be said; and the judgment of the combined tribunal was respected and acclaimed. Sic itur ad astra."

TRADE PROSPECTS IN AMERICA.

I contend that the piano and organ trade is in its infancy; that more musical instruments will be manufactured in this country during the next five years than have been manufactured during the last ten. At the Music Teachers' National Convention, held a few weeks ago, several of the teachers were telling me their estimates of the number of persons engaged directly in the profession. "There are more than 100,000 music teachers in this country," said a Western teacher, and he was correct. I take it that there are about 150,000, and their number is rapidly increasing. This is only one basis for a calculation of the number of persons engaged in giving piano, organ, and singing lessons. We can easily understand that there must be many pupils, and these pupils all use instruments to play upon. But I have something more definite to prove that the business is prospectively much greater than it has been in the past. According to an estimate made after a searching examination, there are not 1,000,000 pianos in this country; there are only about 800,000 pianos in use. Many of these were imported forty to eighty years ago, before any number of pianos were made here. From 1840 to 1860 the industry began to assume large dimensions; but the bulk of American pianos were made since 1855—say during the past thirty years. The production last year was greater than for the preceding year; in fact, more than twelve times as many pianos were made than in any one year thirty or so years ago. Now let us see. Many of the 800,000 pianos in use now are very old, and are being replaced constantly by new ones. The exchange of old for new pianos is a daily occurrence with large houses all over the country, and makes a large item. But the chief business is done in sales to families who are about to have children taught, or pianos sold to young people just married, or going to housekeeping. There are about 52,000,000 people in this country. It is difficult to get at the number of families; but say, there are only 2,500,000 that are or will be able to buy pianos, including amongst these 2,500,000 also the many single men and women who will purchase pianos. A part of this number is only supplied new. That is enough to keep business booming. It will keep the manufacturer busy to supply the annual number of purchasers who are comprised in this class, not taking into consideration the rapid increase of the population, which alone creates a large part of the piano purchasers every year. I have not said a word about the export of pianos, but this branch of the business has been gradually increasing, and many instruments made here are annually exported, and this export will continue to expand. From all this we can gather, as I said before, that the pianoforte business is in its infancy. The younger members of the trade will come into handsome business properties, and if they manage with discretion their future is assured.—Musical Courier.

A sister of Offenbach, now Mrs. Maas, has lived, says an American journal, in Galveston, Texas, for many years.

Correspondence.

THE SECOND INVERSION OF THE DOMINANT SEVENTH.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "MUSICAL STANDARD."

SIR,—I quite agree with Mr. Stark and Mr. Hiles about the fingering and treatment of the second inversion of the dominant seventh, commonly called the chord of the 6-4-3. The fourth or root of the chord, ought not, I contend, to be omitted; the only reason for the required omission appears to be an old prejudice on the part of pig-tail "contrapuntists" against the use of the 4th, which is treated by them as a discord.

When, 40 years ago, I first studied harmony or "thorough-bass," the "Thorough Bass Primer" of the late Mr. J. T. Burrowes was put into my hands as a text book, and an excellent manual it is. But poor old Burrowes, alas! supports the old notion of the pig-tailed and pig-headed, that in the discord of the 6-4-3 "the octave of the root should be omitted," ex gra.:—

Omitting the root-note (G), he is obliged to make the discord (F) ascend, relying on the license of resolving it on the E (or mediant) in the bass.

My first master, Mr. Stenson Major, never insisted on this absurd restriction. Many years afterwards, when helping a full-grown sister in her "through-class" exercises, I came across the old "Burrowes," and recorded (August, 1861), the following remark on the page of the book itself:—"This I deny; the root IS generally doubled." A few minutes afterwards I casually took up a score of Mendelssohn—no authority, of course—and found a full chord of the 6-4-3, (D, F, G, and B, in the key of C) at the very outset. But such instances of doubling the root might be multiplied a hundredfold. If the fourth is to be omitted, why figure the chord 6-4-3? The contrapuntists find a hole of escape in the way so justly derided by Mr. Stark; they figure the chord a 6-3! Where is the root? G, of course, as B natural, bears an imperfect fifth, and cannot, therefore, be a "radical" or bass of B minor. Mr. J. A. Hamilton, in his "Catechism of Harmony," allows the full chord of a 6 = 4 = 3, and offers no objection to the doubling of the root. A reductio ad absurdum has been made by doubling the fifth for bass, which is monotonous, or even the discord (F) which is monstrous.

I can never forget the "frivolous and vexatious" rules of counterpoint, with its tiresome "species" in several parts. Take up any ordinary duet and what do you find? "Two-part writing" in thirds and sixths, the thirds and sixths being often consecutive five or six times, not according to rule! Rossini's duet in E "Quis est homo," is a case in point, and George Hogarth of the Morning Chronicle and the Daily News, once pointed out that the composer had blown the trumpet so loudly (and literally) in order "to conceal the poverty of his counterpoint." Mr. Hastings of the Morning Herald, criticising the defunct opera of Verdi "I Masnadieri" (the Robbers), in 1850, caustically reported that in the duets there were "plenty of thirds and sixths." It is high time to knock off the fetters of this false "counterpoint," as all masters of the art do and have done for ages past.

It occurs to me, on glancing over "Hamilton's Catechism" and other manuals, that some of our musical terminology is grossly absurd. For instance, why call an augmented interval a superfluous sixth? If "superfluous," it ought surely to be struck out of the staff. Then the pupil is puzzled by "minor and major semitones," elsewhere called "chromatic and diatonic"! The fifths are regular puzzle-monkeys, that beat the araucarias by "chalks." "Perfect, imperfect, minor, major, augmented, and diminished"—who is to decide? Only the practical "fifth-catchers," I trow! My own plan would be to classify the fifth thus:—

Perfect. Imperfect. Diminished. Augmented.

(Rationale) No. 2 is naturally imperfect from the scale, but in No, 3 the interval is reduced by a sharp, and from below. No. 4, Mendelssohn's "Pet" speaks for itself. I hardly know whether to call the F flat, which so deliciously colours the melody at the outset of Rossini's air in A flat, "Sombre forêt" ("Guillaume Tell"), a minor or a diminished fifth; it is diminished, but not like the other fifth of my example (No. 3) from below, or after the cognate example of the diminished seventh, where (key of A minor) the lower note is G sharp and the upper one F natural.

Your obedient Servant,
ALFONSO MATTHEY.

Foggy Lane, Far West, Aug. 15th.

Digitized by Google

Passing Events.

Mr. Eugene d'Albert is to compose, or is now writing, a new symphony for the Festival at Birmingham in 1885.

It is said Mr. Joseph Bennett spoke at the recent festival at Harlech. His remarks, which would undoubtedly be valuable, have not come to hand.

The late Dean Boyd, of Exeter, amongst other benevolent bequests, left £5,000 towards a fund for apprenticing the cathedral chorister boys and boys of the cathedral school.

Readers will regret to hear of the death of Mayer Randegger, elder brother of the well-known composer and conductor, Alberto Randegger, for so many years a resident of this country.

Upon the occasion of the visit of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught to Norwich Cathedral on the 22nd inst., Bennett's "God is a Spirit" was sung by the choir, though it was not Service time.

The reconstruction of Verdi's "Don Carlos" by the composer includes its condensation from 5 to 4 acts, the omission of the interpolated ballet, and an extensive alteration of some of the movements.

It is stated that the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishops of London, St. Albans, and Rochester have become patrons of the London Church Choir Association. The annual Festival in St. Paul's Cathedral is announced for November 8.

From Lincoln comes the intelligence of the death of Edwin Aspa, the composer of "Endymion," "The Gipsies," and other works. He died on the 17th inst., at the early age of 47, and his loss will be regretted by a wide circle of friends in the Midland Counties.

An American contemporary tells the world that there are 9,600 bands in the United States. Perhaps the number given includes military bands, etc. The test question is, in any country, how many properly balanced and complete orchestral bands are there to be found?

Says the Athenæum: The performances of "Parsifal" announced for next year at Beyreuth are to be given in August, instead of in July as this year. It is stated that King Ludwig of Bavaria intends to have a private performance of the work at Munich in the course of next May.

The lamented death of Mr. J. Wallis, of 135, Euston Road, has made no difference in the arrangements and conduct of the well-known musical instrument business carried on at the above address under the title of J. Wallis and Son. The members of the family of the late Mr. Wallis have received much wide spread sympathy in their recent loss.

H. Clarence Eddy and Frederick Grant Gleason's "Church and Concert Organist," published by Ed. Schuberth and Co., of New York, has reached its second edition. These well known and able musicians are now compiling a second volume, which is to appear about Christmas. They both bring experience to their work, and the two volumes should become as valuable as they are interesting.

The Weekly Dispatch seems to be sceptical about the new Italian Opera house on the Thames Embankment, but Mr. Mapleson is not a man to disappoint the public. The doubt is suggested by the existence of a (supposed) agreement between Mr. Mapleson and Mr. Gye, which would, greatly to the public detriment, ensure a continued monopoly of the Italian opera: impossible, after all, with Mr. Carl Rosa and Drury Lane theatre as derniers ressorts. The Weekly Dispatch is not alone however in its exception with regard to to this scheme.

At the dedication of a new stained-glass window lately at Beetham, Milnthorpe, an excellent and carefully rendered choral service was held. On a following day an organ recital was given, in which the "Andante" from Mendelssohn's violin concerto, "Meditation of Bach's First Prelude" by Gounod, and "Cavatina" (Raff), were admirably played on the organ and violin by Mr. Randolph Hall, formerly deputy organist, Ely Cathedral, and Mr. G. Robinson the organist of the Church.

Ambroise Thomas has been indisposed, but recent accounts, it is said, represent him as now convalescent.

A reception was held last Saturday afternoon at the residence of Mrs. Stretton, Edwardes Square, Kensington, when Mrs. Hitchcock and Miss Constance Hitchcock played a tarantelle of Raff's in splendid style, also other pianoforte pieces. Mrs. Stretton sang one or two English songs with great sweetness and expression, and Miss Annie Baldwin gave an excellent "reading" from the text of Shakespeare. Some of the Kensington clergy were present.

An important sale of musical property, including pianofortes by Broadwood, Collard, Erard, Hermann, and others, harmoniums, harps, Italian and other violins, violas, violoncellos and double basses, the remainder of the library of music of the late William Laidlaw, Esq., of Liverpool, chiefly comprising manuscript scores and parts (many being original and bearing autographs), also the excellent library of Wm. Lennare, Esq., of Brixton, were to be sold by auction, by Messrs. Puttick and Simpson, on August 22nd.

Max Strakosch has been making extensive preparations at the Twenty-third Street Theatre New York, for the production of S. G. Pratt's opera "Zenobia," which took place on August 20th. The opera was rehearsed under the direction of Signor de Novellis. The chorus numbered some sixty voices. The soloists were Miss Henninges, Miss Rosalba Beecher, Miss Bertha Ricci, Signor Montegriffo, Brignoli, Mr. Stoddard, John Gilbert and Mr. Bordemann. After "Zenobia" the "Bohemian Girl" was produced, then "Martha" in English. Signor Operti's new opera, "A Merry Prince," will probably be represented at this theatre some time next season.

The Querist.

QUERY.

CIPHERING.—We—myself and some professional friends—appeal to you to settle a much disputed question, viz:—"What is the correct way of spelling the word Ciphering, known to all having much to do with cheap organs? What's its origin? Does it come from Siphon?"—AN OLD SUBSCRIBER.

To an "OLD SUBSCRIBER": I regret that I cannot offer any decisive information. The word sipho, or siphon, from the Greek, and incorporated into the Latin language, was one of quite universal use, and frequent application anciently in connection with tubes, etc. And as the organ grew up in the church where the Latin language prevailed, the idea of "An Old Subscriber" is one of much shrewdness. Perhaps some one learned in organ-building matters will kindly come forward and throw some definite light upon a subject of some interest. ED.—Mus. Stan.

Service Lists.

FIFTEENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

SEPTEMBER 2nd.

London.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Tours in F; Introit, Then we adore; Holy Communion, Tours in F. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Garrett in D; Anthem, Ye people, If with all your hearts, Cast thy burden on the Lord (Mendelssohn).

FOUNDLING CHAPEL.—Morn.: Service, Sullivan in D; Anthem, Send out Thy light (Gounod). Aft.: Children's Service.

ST. JAMES'S PRIVATE EPISCOPAL CHAPEL, SOUTHWARK.—Morn.: Service, Introit, I am not worthy, holy Lord; Communion Service, Hummel in B flat. Even.: Service, Prout in F; Anthem, Save me, O God (Balfe).

ST. MAGNUS, LONDON BRIDGE.—Morn.: Service, Opening Anthem, I will arise (Creyton); Te Deum and Jubilate, Goss in A; Kyrie (Nares). Even.: Service, Cantate and Deus Misereatur, Goss in C; Anthem, Awake, awake (Wise).

ST. MARGARET PATTENS, ROOD LANE, FENCHURCH STREET.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Sullivan in D; Benedictus, Dykes in F; Communion Service; Offertory Anthem, Whosoever drinketh (Bennett); Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus,

Digitized by Google

Benedictus, Agnus Dei, and Gloria, Schubert in F. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Stark in D; Anthem, Praise the Lord, O my soul (Goss).

ST. PAUL'S, AVENUE ROAD, SOUTH HAMPSTEAD.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Dykes in F; Benedictus (Garrett); Kyrie, Mendelssohn in G; Offertory Sentences (Barnby). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Arnold in A; Anthem, Behold now praise (Calkin).

ST. PETER'S, VERE STREET, W.—Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Tuckermann in F; Anthem, O come, let us worship (Mendelssohn).

ST. AGNES, KENNINGTON PARK, S.E.—Morn.: Service, Holy Communion, Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Gloria in excelsis, Distin in C; Benedictus and Agnus Dei, Eyre in E. flat.

ST AUGUSTINE AND ST. FAITH, WATLING STREET.—Morn.: Service, Calkin in B flat; Introit, Be merciful (South); Communion Service, Calkin in B flat. Even.: Service, Calkin in B flat; Anthem, Blessing, glory, honour, power (Spohr).

ST. SEPULCHRE'S, HOLBORN. — Morn: Service, Nares in F; Anthem, In Thee (Weldon). Even.: Service, Cooke in G; Anthem, If with all your hearts (Mendelssohn).

Country.

ST. ASAPH CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Garrett in D; Anthem, O give thanks (Sydenham). Even.: Service, The Litany; Anthem, Blessed is the man (Goss).

ASHBURNE CHURCH, DERBYSHIRE. — Morn.: Service, Kempton in B flat; Kyrie, Credo, Gloria, Woodward in E flat. Even.: Service, Arnold in B flat; Anthem, Turn thee again (Attwood).

BIRMINGHAM (S. ALBAN THE MARTYR).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Dykes in F; Holy Communion; Woodward in E flat. Evensong: Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Tours in F.

BIRMINGHAM (ST. CYPRIAN'S, HAY MILLS).—Morn.: Service, Cobb in G; Anthem, Praise the Lord (Elvey). Even.: Even.: Service, Clarke-Whitfield in E; Anthem, O come, let us worship (Mendelssohn).

CANTERBURY CATHEDRAL. — Morn.: Service, Dykes in F; Anthem, Above all praise (Mendelssohn); Communion, Dykes in F. Even.: Service, Dykes in F; Anthem, He shall feed his flock, and His yoke is easy (Handel).

CARLISLE CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Walmisley in F Introit, God is my helper (Stainer); Kyrie, Walmisley in F; Nicene Creed, Harmonised Monotone. Even.: Service, Garrett in E flat; Anthem, Plead Thou my cause (Mozart).

DUBLIN, ST. PATRICK'S (NATIONAL) CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Stainer in E flat; Holy Communion, Kyrie, Creed, Sanctus, Gloria, Stewart in G; Anthem, Grant us Thy peace (Mendelssohn). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Stainer in E flat; Anthems, Holy, holy, holy (Mendelssohn), and O Lord our Governor (Stevenson).

ELY CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Chipp in E; Benedictus, Plain Song; Kyrie and Credo, Ross in G; Gloria, Ouseley in E flat; Anthem, Pray for the peace (Novello). Even.: Service, O sing unto the Lord, No. 15 (Greene).

HARROGATE (ST. PETER'S CHURCH). — Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Dykes in F; Anthem, Turn Thy face (Attwood); Kyrie Credo, Sursum Corda, Gloria in excelsis, Woodward in E flat. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Ebdon in C; Anthem, They have taken away my Lord (Stainer).

LICHFIELD CATHEDRAL. — Morn.: Service, Hopkins in F; Communion Service, Dykes in F; Anthem, O, come let us worship (Mendelssohn). Even.: Service, Elvey in A; Anthem, O clap your hands (Stainer).

LIVERPOOL CATHEDRAL.—Aft.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Burstall in C; Anthem, I will extol Thee (Hatton).

LIVERPOOL (ST. CUTHBERT'S, EVERTON).—Morn.: Service, and Communion, Tours in F. Even.: Service, Tours in F; Anthem, The wilderness (Wesley).

MANCHESTER CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Hopkins in F; Holy Communion Service, Cobb in G; Anthem, Then round about the starry throne (Handel). Aft.: Service, Hopkins in F; Anthem, O hadst thou hearkened (Sullivan).

MANCHESTER (ST. BENEDICT'S).—Morn.: Service, Credo and Gloria in excelsis, Williams in D; Kyrie, Sanctus, Benedictus, and Agnus Dei, Mozart in B flat, No. 7. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Tours in F.

MANCHESTER (ST. JOHN BAPTIST, HULME).—Morn.: Service, Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei and Gloria Gloria in excelsis, Sutton in F. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Wesley in F.

SALISBURY CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Lloyd in E flat; Offertory (Lloyd). Aft.: Service, Lloyd in E flat; Anthem, In that day (Elvey).

SHERBORNE ABBEY. — Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Chants; Kyrie, Smallwood in F; Offertory (Barnby). Even.: Service, Anthem, Sing unto God (Lyle).

SHEFFIELD PARISH CHURCH. — Morn.: Service, Kyrie, Weber in E. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Barnby in C; Anthem, The glory of the Lord (Goss).

WELLS CATHEDRAL. — Morn.: Service, Boyce and Hayes in G; Continuation, Travers in F. Even.: Service, Hayes in E flat; Anthem, Awake, awake put on thy strength (Wise).

WORCESTER CATHEDRAL. — Morn.: Service, Dykes in F; Anthem, The Lord is in His holy temple (Thorne). Even. Service, Dykes in F. In that day (Oakeley).

 Post-cards must be sent to the Editor, 6, Argyle Square, W.C., by Wednesday. Lists are frequently omitted in consequence of not being received in time.

NOTICE.—All communications intended for the Editor are to be sent to his private address. Business communications to be addressed to 185, Fleet Street, E.C.

NEWSPAPERS sent should have distinct marks opposite to the matter to which attention is required.

ERRATA.

"A few words on Registering on the Organ" should have been the title of the first leaderette in last week's issue on page 117.

Read lines 9, 10, and 11 of leader, "Some account of an Ancient Institution" (page 116), as follows:—"has a passage in which the word occurs in the Latin plural, and in which one of the most common of bardic functions is pourtrayed."

In line 7 of Mr. H. C. Banister's letter in Musical Standard of last week, for "notes" read "rules."

APPOINTMENT.

Mr. J. J. LISHMAN, has been appointed organist and choirmaster to Christ Church, Bermondsey.

HELE & COMPANY,

ORGAN BUILDERS,

WYNDHAM STREET, PLYMOUTH.

London Agency: Mr. W. H. HELE, 59, Gresham St., E.C.

Organs of any magnitude contracted for. Professional attendance when desired.

Extract from testimony by E. H. Turpin, Esq., of College of Organists, referring to organ at St. John's Church, Waterloo Road, S.E.:—

"To Messrs. Hele and Co. very high praise is due for the judgment and skill with which they have accomplished the rebuilding of the instrument. All the foundation work I noticed to be round, even, and admirably voiced. The 'chorus' struck me as being well balanced and decisive, without being intrusive or too pronounced above the 8-feet work. The reeds are of very high quality, at once rich and characteristic in tone. The solo registers I found to be after their several types—delicate and finished in quality of tone and in their voicing. The mechanism throughout a trying night's work never failed me, and it is everywhere true, reliable, and admirable. My impressions were so pleasant, that I feel it is a duty to express an unqualified approval of the labours of the very able organ builders."

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts, excepting under exceptional circumstances.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit, at Three per cent. interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables, the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons, and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares, and Annuities.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

The Birkbeck Building Society's Annual Receipts exceed Five Millions.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with immediate Possession, and no Rent to Pay.—Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate Possession, either for Building or Gardening purposes.—Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

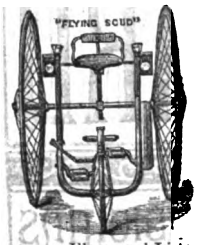
A pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

Digitized by Google

BICYCLES AND TRICYCLES.
NEW AND SECOND-HAND.



"FLYING SCUD" and "ECLECTIC" TRICYCLES, are the Machines for 1883. Spoken of by the Daily News of January 30th as "Splendid machines." "NANCY LEE," Weldless Steel," and "NONSUCH" Steel Bicycles, from £5 5s. Any machine at maker's price for twelve or less equal monthly payments, or for £5 down and 20s. per month, or large discount and carriage paid for cash. Can be seen and tried before purchasing in our school (60 by 40, concrete floor, tuition free), adjoining Show-rooms, the largest in London, with over 400 new and second-hand on View. Machines bought, sold, cleaned, repaired (estimates given), warehoused, advanced upon, and exchanged. Illustrated Lists post free. Hours 9 till 7; Saturdays till 4.

Repairs of all kinds neatly, cheaply, and promptly executed. Cheapest house in the trade for fittings. Parts and sundries of all descriptions kept in stock.

Machines Let on Hire with Option of Purchase.

SOUTH LONDON MACHINISTS' COMPANY.

STEAM WORKS: Suffolk Works, Suffolk Grove, Great Suffolk Street, S.E. Show Rooms and Offices: 28 and 29, Suffolk Grove. Bicycle and Tricycle School: 28, Suffolk Grove. City Depot, Show Rooms, and School: Tower Chambers, Moorgate Street, E.C. (Nearly opposite Moorgate Street Station.) PERAMBULATORS and all Domestic Machines at lowest prices for cash, or on easy terms without extra charge. Lists free. State kind required.

ESTABLISHED 1872.

When writing please say where you saw this advertisement.

T. R. WILLIS,
Organ Builder, Metal & Wood Pipe Maker and Voicer,
TOWER ORGAN WORKS, 29, MINORIES, LONDON.

AN ORGAN KEPT FOR PRACTICE.
REBUILDING, TUNING, AND REPAIRING.

E. & W. SNELL,
Manufacturers of Harmoniums, and Reed Pedal Organs,
KING STREET NORTH, CAMDEN TOWN, LONDON, N.W.

NOTE.—These are the only Instruments at which an Organist can really find himself "at home," as all Scales, Positions, and Measurements are adopted strictly in accordance with the Resolutions of the Council of the College of Organists. Estimates free.

MALEY, YOUNG & OLDKNOW,
ORGAN BUILDERS,
KING'S ROAD, ST. PANCRAS, LONDON, N.W.

Specifications, Estimates, and Designs for Church, Chamber, Concert, and all Descriptions of Organs.
Materials, Workmanship, and Tone guaranteed to be First Class.
Organs rebuilt to suit any position, enlarged, and Revoiced at very moderate charges.
Tunings in all parts of the Kingdom.

PROSPECTUS FREE ON APPLICATION.

HENRY SPEECHLY,
CAMDEN ORGAN STEAM FACTORY,
KING'S ROAD, ST. PANCRAS, LONDON, N.W.
ESTABLISHED 1860.

Specifications and Estimates for Organs of any Magnitude, also for Reconstructions, Repairs, and Re-voicing.
Tunings contracted for, and Tuners sent to all parts of the Country at regular intervals or when required.
ORGANS ON HIRE WITH OPTION OF PURCHASE.
 Church, Chamber, and Chancel Organs for Sale or Hire; One or Two Manuals. Ready for immediate use. Easy Terms if required.
All Pipes and other Parts manufactured on the Premises.

CANTATA:
"SENNACHERIB" ..... Price 1s. 6d.
(Composed for the Gloucester Festival, 1883.)
ORATORIO:
"AHAB" ..... Price 3s. od.
(First performed by the National Choral Society, Exeter Hall, April, 1864.)
MOTET:
23RD PSALM, "The Lord is my Shepherd"..... Price 1s. od.
MOTET:
43RD PSALM, "Give sentence" ..... Price 0s. 6d.
By GEORGE B. ARNOLD, Mus. Doc., Oxon.

WEEKES & CO.: 14, Hanover Street,
Orchestral Parts may be obtained from the Publishers.

WITH 25 PER CENT DISCOUNT FOR CASH,
OR 15/- PER MONTH,
SECOND HAND 10/6 Per Month
ON THE 3 YEARS' SYSTEM.
BORD'S PIANOS
PIANOS EXCHANGED
LISTS FREE OF
C. STILES & Co. 42 SOUTHAMPTON ROW. W.C.

CONSTANT LAURENT, HARMONIUM and ANGLO-ORGAN MANUFACTURER, Established in 1859 at 85, HIGH STREET, MARYLEBONE, LONDON, W.—Repairing and Tuning Executed Promptly. Price List on Application.—Intending Purchasers are respectfully solicited to inspect my Instruments and Factory.

EUSTACE INGRAM, Organ Builder,
Combines excellence of Tone and Workmanship with Economy.
INSPECTION INVITED.
WORKS:—Burnard Place, Eden Grove, Holloway, London, N.

MUSIC SENT ON SALE OR RETURN on highly advantageous terms by
B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster-row, London.

MUSIC of EVERY PUBLISHER supplied to Dealers, Teachers, and Schools. Having the largest varied Stock Europe. The terms, which are highly advantageous, sent on application London: B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster-row.

ALL WHO POSSESS A PIANOFORTE and cannot play it, may now play at once, without any previous knowledge of Music, by ROYLANCE'S NUMERICAL SYSTEM, which contains a FIGURED DIAGRAM to fit on the Keyboard of any Pianoforte (or Harmonium, and a choice selection of forty SACRED and SECULAR MELODIES, composed for the use of those who have no time to study Music. Thousands are now able to play who did not believe such a thing possible. The diagram alone will be found most useful to Professors for teaching purposes. 6d. nett.—Price 2s. 6d. nett; post free 33 stamps.—C. ROYLANCE, 184, Tottenham Court-road; and all Music Sellers.

THE YOUNG ARTIST.
A selection of Classical Works for the
PIANOFORTE.

1. SONATA in C, Op. 20, No. 2	L. Kozeluch	4 0
2. SONATA in G, Op. 4, No. 1	G. F. Pinto	4 0
3. SONATA in G, Op. 23, No. 3	J. B. Cramer	4 0
4. SONATA in C, Op. 8, No. 1	L. Kozeluch	4 0
5. SONATA in B flat, Op. 60	J. Woelfl	4 0
6. SONATA in C flat, Op. 37, No. 3	D. Steibelt	4 0
7. SONATA in E flat, Op. unknown	L. Kozeluch	4 0
8. SONATA in C, Op. 37, No. 1	D. Steibelt	4 0
9. SONATA in C, Op. 9, No. 3	J. B. Cramer	4 0
10. SONATA in G, Op. 8, No. 2	L. Kozeluch	4 0
11. SONATA in C, Op. 4, No. 3	G. F. Pinto	4 0
12. SONATA in G, Op. unknown	J. B. Cramer	4 0

EDITED AND FINGERED BY
W. J. WESTBROOK, Mus. Doc., Cantab.
London: EDWIN ASHDOWN, Hanover Square, W.

SYDNEY SMITH'S
FOUR NEW PIANOFORTE PIECES.

LA FEE DES ONDES. Morceau brilliant ...	4 0
LE DOMINO NOIR. Fantaisie brillante sur l'opéra d'Auber	4 0
MARGUERITE. Chanson d'une fileuse	4 0
STYRIENNE	4 0

SYDNEY SMITH'S
FOUR NEW PIANOFORTE DUETS.

GAVOTTE ET MUSETTE	5 0
I PIFFERARI. Musette moderne	5 0
LOHENGRIN. Grande Fantaisie sur l'opéra de R. Wagner	6 0
NONCHALANCE. Caprice de Concert	5 0

LONDON:
EDWIN ASHDOWN, Hanover-square.

Printed for the Proprietor by BOWDEN, HUDSON & Co., at 23, Red Lion Street, Holborn, London, W.C.; and Published by WILLIAM REEVES, at the Office, 185, Fleet Street, E.C. West End Agents:—WEEKES & CO., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W. Subscriptions and Advertisements are received either by the Publisher or West End Agents.—Communications for the EDITOR are to be forwarded to his private address, 6, Argyle Square, W.C.
SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 1, 1883.—Entered at the General Post Office as a Newspaper.

Digitized by Google

THE MUSICAL STANDARD

A NEWSPAPER FOR MUSICIANS PROFESSIONAL AND AMATEUR

No. 997. Vol. XXV. FOURTH SERIES. SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 1883. Weekly: Price 3d.

WOLVERHAMPTON TRIENNIAL MUSICAL FESTIVAL.—In Aid of the Funds of the Wolverhampton and South Staffordshire Hospital.

President—The EARL of DARTMOUTH.

THURSDAY and FRIDAY, September 13th and 14th, 1883.

THURSDAY MORNING.—Mendelssohn's "Elijah."

THURSDAY EVENING.—Macfarren's "Lady of the Lake," and Miscellaneous Selection.

FRIDAY MORNING.—Beethoven's "Mount of Olives"; Hummel's "Alma Virgo"; Gounod's "Messe Solennelle"; and Mozart's "Jupiter" Symphony.

FRIDAY EVENING.—Mackenzie's "Jason," and Miscellaneous Selection, including Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto in E minor (Mr. Carrodus); Songs by Miss Anna Williams, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Signor Foli, &c.

Principal Vocalists: Miss Anna Williams, Miss Mary Davies, Miss Eleanor Farnoll, Madame Patey, Miss Emilie Lloyd, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Joseph Maas, Mr. Frederick King, and Signor Foli.

Principal and Solo Violin: Mr. Carrodus.

BAND AND CHORUS OF 300 Performers.

Conductor—DR. SWINNERTON HEAP.

ADMISSION:—

	Morning Performances.	Evening Performances.	Series of four Perfomances. (Transferable).
	£ s. d.	s. d.	£ s. d.
First Reserved	0 15 0 ..	10 6 ..	2 2 0
Second do.	0 7 6 ..	5 0 ..	1 1 0
Unreserved	0 3 6 ..	2 6 ..	0 10 0
Family Tickets, admitting 4 persons to 1st Reserved Seats ..	2 12 6 ..	1 15 0

Ballots for priority of choice of seats, Sept. 3rd and 4th.

Remittances to be made payable to the Hon. Financial Secretary, W. C. Sheldon, 7, Rupert Street, Wolverhampton, to whom applications for seats, accompanied by remittance, are to be addressed.

Detailed Prospectuses, with particulars of special railway arrangements, and other information, on application to the Honorary Secretaries gratis and post free.

R. T. LAWRENCE } Darlington Street,
JAS. WELLS PAGE } Wolverhampton.

LEEDS TRIENNIAL MUSICAL FESTIVAL, October 10th, 11th, 12th, and 13th, 1883.

President—THE DUKE OF ALBANY.

Conductor—SIR ARTHUR SULLIVAN.

BAND AND CHORUS of 420 Performers.

Leader of the Band—Mr. J. T. CARRODUS.

PRINCIPAL VOCALISTS:—Mdme Alwina Valleria, Miss Annie Marriott, and Miss Anna Williams; Mdme. Patey, Miss Damian, and Miss Hilda Wilson; Mr. Edward Lloyd and Mr. Joseph Maas; Mr. Frederick King, Mr. Henry Blower, and Mr. Santley.

ORGANISTS:—Dr. Wm. Spark and Mr. Walter Parratt, Mus. Bac.

CHORUS MASTER—Mr. J. Broughton. ACCOMPANIST—Mr. A. Broughton.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.—Mendelssohn's "Elijah."

WEDNESDAY EVENING.—"Gray's Elegy," a Cantata (written for this Festival), by Alfred Cellier; Beethoven's Symphony in D (No. 2), &c.

THURSDAY MORNING.—Raff's Oratorio, "The World's End." (First performance in England.) Selection from the Works of Handel.

THURSDAY EVENING.—97th Psalm (written for this Festival), by Joseph Barnby; Third Motet (Mozart); Cantata (Bach); Rossini's "Stabat Mater."

FRIDAY MORNING.—"King David," an Oratorio (written for this Festival), by Sir George Macfarren.

FRIDAY EVENING.—"The Crusaders," by Niels Gade; Overture, "Genoveva," by Schumann; March and Chorus from "Tannhäuser," &c.

SATURDAY MORNING.—Grand Mass in D (Beethoven); "Hymn of Praise" (Mendelssohn).

FIRST SEATS—Single Ticket (Reserved), Morning .. £1 1s. 0d. each.
" " " " " Evening .. 0 15 0 "
SECOND SEATS—Single Ticket (Reserved), Morning 0 10 6 "
" " " " " Evening.. 0 7 6 "

Tickets may now be had daily at the Festival Office, from 10 a.m. till 5 p.m. (Saturdays till 1 a.m.).

No application for Tickets, either personally or by letter, will be noticed unless accompanied by a remittance for the full amount of tickets required, and stating also the number of tickets wanted. Detailed Programmes are now ready.

Cheques and Orders are payable to E. B. FABER, Hon. Treasurer, or to the Hon. Sec.

All communications to be addressed to

FRED. R. SPARK, Hon. Sec.

Festival Office (near the Town Hall), Leeds,
September 7th, 1883.

MAKERS AND REPAIRERS.

GEORGE WITHERS & CO.

(Late of Coventry Street),

WHOLESALE IMPORTERS OF

MUSICAL STRINGS,

From Rome, Padua, and Naples.

A FINE COLLECTION OF ITALIAN INSTRUMENTS.

Bows, Cases, Music Stands, &c. See Price Lists.

51, ST. MARTIN'S LANE, LONDON.

MUSICAL INTERNATIONAL COLLEGE, LONDON.

Founded for Examining purposes only.

Principal—EDWIN M. LOTT.

PRACTICAL EXAMINATIONS in INSTRUMENTAL and VOCAL MUSIC throughout the kingdom, conducted personally by the Principal. Next LOCAL THEORETICAL EXAMINATION, DECEMBER 6, 1883.

For particulars, address SECRETARY, Musical International College, 270, Cornwall Road, Notting Hill, W.

THE ORPHAN SCHOOL FOR DAUGHTERS OF MUSICIANS will be opened SEPTEMBER 17TH. Boarders and Day Pupils also received on moderate terms. Special musical advantages.—Address, Miss Helen Kenway, 10, Darnley Road, Notting Hill, W.

EXPERIENCED ORGANIST & CHOIRMASTER, with high Testimonials and References, open to engagement.—Oxon., 14, Hanover Street, W.

MR. BRINLEY RICHARDS will return to Town, September 18th.. Letters to be sent to his Residence, 25, St. Mary Abbott's Terrace, Kensington, W.

CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS in Literary Subjects for Mus. Bac. Degree, by one who has passed. Four for One Guinea.—Oxoniensis, 27, Clyde Road, Croydon.

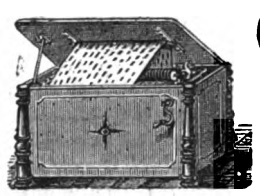
ORGANIST WANTED for ST. MICHAEL and ALL ANGELS' CHURCH, WALSALL. Good Services. Salary —Address, The Rev. J. Fenwick Laing, Vicar.

NEW HARVEST ANTHEM.

"THOU VISITEST THE EARTH," composed by by E. H. Turpin. Price 6d.

WEEKES & CO.: 14, Hanover Street.

ORGAN MUSIC WANTED, by Modern Writers preferred. What offers for 10s. 6d.? carriage paid.—G., Abbey Lodge, Abbey Wood.



ORCHESTRIONETTES,

Ehrlich's Patent.

Are the greatest invention of modern times in the sphere of mechanical Music Works! It is only necessary to put in a note, made of fine pasteboard, in order to play a new piece. The smaller instruments suffice as accompaniment to dance music. The larger ones can be used IN PLACE OF AN ORGAN.

Preparatory knowledge not necessary; therefore the instruments can be sent to any part of the world. Large number of Notes, suitable for all countries, always on hand. Extra Notes made to order, after supplied originals, at any time. Please send orders to any dealer in musical instruments.

Commission allowed to Dealers.

FABRIK LEIPZIGER MUSIKWERKE VORM. PAUL EHRLICH & CO., ZU GOHLIS BEI LEIPZIG (GERMANY).

Digitized by Google

MOZART'S ORGAN WORKS.

BY FRANK J. SAWYER, B.MUS. OXON., F.C.O.

[A Lecture delivered at the College of Organists.]

(Concluded from page 127).

From Augsburg, Mozart's journey led him to Mannheim; here, while content with the secular music, the Church music seems to have disgusted him. Of the choir he writes:—

"Six soprani, six alti, six tenore, six bassi to twenty violins, and twelve basses, stand just in the proportion of 0 to 1!" Of the organists: "They have two organists here, for whose sake alone it would be worth taking the journey to Mannheim. I had a good opportunity of hearing them, for it is the custom here to omit the Benedictus, and for the organist to go on playing instead. The first time I heard the second organist, and the next time the first; but I have a better opinion of the second than of the first. When I heard him I asked, 'Who is at the organ?' 'Our second organist.' 'He plays wretchedly.' When I heard the other I asked, 'Who is that?' 'Our first organist.' 'He plays more wretchedly still.' I suppose if they were shaken up together the result would be something still worse. It makes one die of laughter to see them. The second goes to the organ like a child to the mud; he shows his trade in his face. The first wears spectacles. I stood at the organ and watched him for the sake of instruction."

Again he gives a humorous account in a letter to his father of the effect of his organ playing, soon after his arrival (Nov. 13, 1777):—

"Last Sunday I played the organ in the chapel for a joke. I came in during the Kyrie, played the end of it, and, after the priest had given out the Gloria, I made a cadenza. Nothing like it had ever been heard here before, so that everybody looked round, especially Holzbauer. . . . The people were inclined to laugh, because every now and then, when I wanted a pizzicato effect, I gave little bangs to the notes. I was in my best humour. A voluntary is always played here instead of the Benedictus; I took the idea from the Sanctus, and carried it out as a fugue. There they all stood and made faces."

On the opening of a new organ, Dec. 18th, at the Lutheran Church, he again played, but greatly disliked the Abbé Vogler, who performed also on it.

From Mannheim, after falling in love with Aloysia Weber, he journeyed to Paris, where his poor mother breathed her last. In the French capital we find no organ playing, but at length, by his father's careful management, Wolfgang is appointed Organist and Deputy Capellmeister at Salzburg Cathedral, by the Archbishop, at a salary of 500 florins. Thither he therefore returned, though with a strong dislike to the town, its authorities, and its inhabitants. To quote again from Jahn (vol. ii., 92):—

"As organist, Mozart was under the necessity of playing the organ at festivals, but as a rule only for accompaniments and for interludes at set places, which gave him opportunity for improvising—his special delight. We have some organ sonatas with orchestral accompaniments belonging to this time (Nos. 13, 14, and 15), quite in the style of those already noticed; compositions after the fashion of the first movement of a sonata, without a trace of ecclesiastical severity either in the technical construction, which is very light, or in the style, which is brilliant and cheerful. The organ occurs as an obbligato instrument only in one of these sonatas (the last, No. 15), which is the most elaborated, but still very moderate in style, and without any florid passages."

It will be my next pleasant duty, having now traced Mozart from the last period, to place before you, with the help of my friends, these three concluding sonatas of the series.

No. 13 opens (in C major allegro) with a quaint theme alternately staccato and legato. The form is perhaps least clear in this of all that have come before us to-night. Immediately after the fourth bar a forte passage of four bars' length enters, which gives way to a third phrase of a soft, melodious character, forming thus three separate sections to the first theme. This latter phrase then appears at once in E major on the 'cello, ultimately leading by a passage derived from a part of the second phrase to a pedal on the super-tonic C of the key, thus reintroducing E major with the second theme, forte; but after eight bars still another pretty little passage occurs in the same key. A pedal phrase on E leads to the cadence and double bar. From this it will be seen that the form is not so distinct in this movement.

After the double bar comes the most interesting section. The development opening boldly leads to a strain where the sustained organ part, blending with the short light phrases of the strings, forms an exquisite piece of tone colour. The third section contains the usual repetitions of the first.

[Sonata No. 13.]

As we have thus traced Mozart to his appointment as organist of Salzburg Cathedral, it may not be uninteresting to us to see what sort of instrument he had to play on. Marpurg describes it thus:—"The cathedral contains a large organ at the back of the entrance, four side organs in front of the choir, and a little choir organ below the choir, where the choristers sit. The large organ is only used on grand occasions, and for preludes; during the performance one of the four side organs is played, generally that next to the altar on the right side, where the solo singers and basses are. Opposite, by the left side of the organ, are the violinists, &c., and on the other two sides are two choruses of trumpets and drums. The lower choir organ and double bass join in when required." Mattheson gives a similar description.

Sonata No. 14, to which we now turn our attention, was composed soon after his return from Paris and introduces us for the first and only time to a somewhat full orchestral accompaniment. It is scored for 2 oboes, 2 horns in C, 2 trumpets in C, 1st and 2nd violin, organ, 'cello and bass. Röchel remarks, that this is longest and most developed of all the organ movements, but without any special thematic development.

We cannot have the means to-night of representing this sonata as intended, but as the horn and trumpet parts are all contained in the organ part, if you will permit me to weave in the oboe parts into my own, while our two violinists and 'cellist give the string parts, your fertile imaginations can picture the drums, and thus a mutilated, but nevertheless slight idea, can be given you of Sonata 14.

The opening theme is one of those bold yet simple strains that Mozart so often made out of the tonic triad.

The second theme, reached after some development of the first by the 'cello, is given out by first violin, replied to by the oboes; the organ joins in in imitation of the oboes, and there succeeds to a bold passage, forte in E major, an exquisite phrase for the reeds and violins, still in the key of the second subject, the organ pedals strengthening the bass. Six bars' modulation reintroduces the first theme, repeated as usual with the second theme and episode in its transposed key. The effect as written with brass, reeds, drums, strings, and organ, must be undoubtedly grand.

[Sonata No. 14.]

Digitized by Google

Before playing to you the last example that we have to bring before you to-night, two other interesting little stories of Mozart as an organist should be related.

In 1789 he made his sixth professional tour, visiting Berlin, Dresden, and Leipzig. At the latter place, to give an eye-witness's account, "On April 22, he played the organ in the Thomas Kirche, without previous notice, and gratuitously. He played finely for an hour to a large audience. The then organist, Görner, and the cantor, Doles, sat near him and pulled out the stops. I saw him well; a young, well-dressed man of middle height. Doles was quite delighted with the performance, and declared that his old master, Sebastian Bach, had risen again. Mozart brought to bear all the arts of harmony with the greatest ease and discrimination, and improvised magnificently on every theme given—among others on the chorale, "Jesu, meine Zuversicht."

Lastly, Hesse became acquainted in Frankfort, as he tells us, with an old superannuated organist of the Katharinenkirche, who in 1790 had been the pupil of his predecessor; the old man said:—"On Sunday, after service, Mozart came into the choir of S. Catharine's, and begged the old organist to allow him to play something. He seated himself on the stool and gave the reins to his fancy, when the organist suddenly pushed him off the stool in the rudest manner, and said to his pupil standing by: 'Mark that last modulation which Herr Mozart made; how can he profess to be a musician and commit such grave offences against correct composition?' The pupil did mark the modulation, and Hesse thought it a fine one, and by no means unusual."

Turning now to the last sonata, we find, undoubtedly from the organ point of view, the most interesting of the whole series. The accompaniment is once more for two violins and bassi, but the organ part is written out in full, and is here and there only a solo instrument, with accessories. Kochel notes:—"Probably Mozart wrote this sonata for himself, it being composed during the time of his Court organistship at Salzburg."

That the organ part bears a strong resemblance to to Mozart's piano style, becomes evident at once.

To describe the form. The first ten bars given to the strings announce the theme piano—an elegant and smoothly written cantabile. At the eleventh bar the organ enters and takes it up, the other instruments simply following in accompanying passages of the pure concerto style. The second subject is given out by the upper notes of the organ, the first and second violins playing to it in thirds below. The section in the dominant is of long duration, and introduces beside the theme two other delightful phrases—one before, one after a tutti. The latter, thirds on the organ with detached string chords and long sustained notes alternating between organ and violins, leads to the resumption of the first subject, and consequent repetition of the first part, the organ passages being made slightly more florid.

[No. 15.]

And now, in making a resumé of what has been before us to-night, we find, firstly, that Mozart was as great an organist as pianist. He was so great an extemporaneous performer on the organ that Doles said his old master, Bach, had risen again.

It is then plainly evident that his own playing must have been widely different from the organ parts of the sonatas which have been before us to-night. To extemporise fugues on any subject given him, seems to have been but child's play, while his performances of chorales in Lutheran Leipzig resembled those of Bach himself. In Mozart the learned and the passionate meet; what grandeur must there then have been in his unfettered phantasy on the king of instruments. Yet, strange to say, the latter part of his life he seems entirely to have neglected the organ; for in his Vienna life we find no allusion to it.

Finally, the question will naturally be asked, how have these excellent organ sonatas or miniature concertos remained in oblivion so long? After Mozart had left Salzburg, Archbishop Colloredo or Heironymus—the same who had been such a thorn in the side of the composer during his residence in the town, took a dislike to all pure orchestral music in the Church, and consequently ordered the discontinuance of the organ sonatas, ordering Michael Hadyn to compose choral movements to ecclesiastical text to be used in their stead. Hence arose, says Köchel, the many graduales of that composer.

Though they have rested now in oblivion for nearly a century, I feel that their resurrection to-night may bring a fresh period of life to them, of which your applause has shown them worthy.

The score is not expensive—only 4s. 6d.—and to all those—and there are many who for a relief against the pure organ music, and glad for variety to combine other instruments with it—I heartily commend these sonatas as a source of much pleasure to all concerned.

Finally, in thanking you for the patient hearing you have accorded me, I would ask you to accord with me your warmest thanks to Mr. Crapps, F.C.O., Mr. Gray, and Mr. Parks, for so kindly giving up so much time and labour to the rehearsals and performance of the sonatas, which have proved the relieving, if not indeed the redeeming feature, of what would otherwise have been, I fear, a dry discourse.

ANOTHER CRITICISM BY SIR GEO. MACFARREN.

It will be recollected that some considerable local disappointment was occasioned at the Cardiff Eisteddfod several weeks since, by the brevity with which Sir George Macfarren expressed the verdict of the adjudicators in the great choral competition. Sir George has now offered a supplementary statement in response to the conductor of one of the choirs, and speaking for himself only, he says, under date of August 23:—"The point most to blame in some of the performances was a tendency to force the voices, especially among the boy singers. That boys may sing with beautiful effect, is proved daily in our cathedral Services; but this effect is produced by an easy emission of tone, without tightening of the throat and with natural effortless management of the breath, which should be impelled from the diaphragm, and never influenced by the rising of the shoulders. Disregard of these principles by female and male adults, as much as by boys, induces hardness of tone to the extent of harshness, and causes the rising of the pitch, which in some instances at Cardiff proceeded into strange keys, and rendered the singing impossible of instrumental accompaniment. Noise is not power, and the best quality attained is with the least physical exertion. The fault I have named, and certainly not an incorrect knowledge of the music, was the cause of the singing being out of tune on the occasion. By musically phrasing, I mean the taking of breath at the natural reading places in the musical sentences—analogous to observing the punctuation of words—the giving more or less emphasis to words according to their significance in the musical sense. By just variety of power, I mean regard to the directions for loudness and softness, and the gradations between the extremes, avoiding to sink in pitch with the diminution of tone, and beginning every phrase with distinct firmness, whether it be soft or loud." The writer concludes with a testimony to the musical aptitude of the Welsh.

Digitized by Google

Musical Intelligence.

GLOUCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

The one hundred and sixtieth meeting of the rotatory festivals of the three choirs of Gloucester, Worcester, and Hereford, is by this time an accomplished fact. Originating in meetings of the three cathedral choirs only, these festivals, as our readers well know, have arisen to a large artistic importance, with a benevolent purpose, an orchestra and solo singers being engaged, the performances of sacred music being given in the Cathedral, and miscellaneous concerts of secular music in the Town Halls—collections being made after the Cathedral services and the oratorios, the proceeds of which are applied in aid of the widows and orphans of the poorer clergy of the three dioceses. These purposes have been largely served by the three-choir festivals.

The list of stewards for this year's festival gives the names of upwards of 200 gentlemen so acting, headed by that of the Earl of Ducie, the Lord-Lieutenant of the county, and including those of many of the neighbouring gentry.

The band upon the present occasion consisted of some 65 players and comprised many of the most eminent members of the best London orchestras, led by Mr. Carrodus. The nucleus of the chorus was formed by the associated Cathedral choirs of the three cities, these singers being reinforced by choristers from various other quarters. The solo singers engaged were Misses A. Williams and M. Davies, Mdlle. Avigliana, Mdme. Patey, Miss H. Wilson, Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. B. Newth, Mr. F. King, Mr. Brereton, and Mr. Santley.

Monday was devoted to the serious hard work of rehearsing in the Cathedral and Shire Hall. The proceedings, as far as the public were concerned, commenced on Tuesday morning with the Service which was held in the choir of the Cathedral, at 10 o'clock, the members of the three choirs joining in the choral portions. The Service was intoned by the Revs. B. K. Foster (Precentor), and J. P. Bowen. The anthem was Oakeley's "This is the day," and after the sermon and during the offertory a new setting of the hymn, "Crown him with many crowns," by Mr. Williams, the able organist of Gloucester Cathedral, was sung. The Deputy Mayor and Corporation attended in state. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. Vaughan, Dean of Landaff, who took for his text, Psalm lxxxvii. 7, "As well the singers as the players on instruments shall be there; all my springs are in Thee."

Next followed a luncheon, given by the Mayor of Gloucester. At half-past one on Tuesday Mendelssohn's "Elijah" was admirably performed, and those who now heard an oratorio in a Cathedral for the first time experienced a sensation never to be forgotten, and realised that noblest triumph of art, "a musical sermon."

The music of the Prophet was sung by Mr. Santley, its finest living exponent; the tenor solos by Mr. E. Lloyd; the soprano music was divided between Miss M. Davies and Miss A. Williams, as was that for contralto between Miss H. Wilson and Madame Patey. Noteworthy solo and soli pieces were the duet, "Zion spreadeth her Hands"—Misses M. Davies and H. Wilson; the air, "If with all your Hearts"—Mr. E. Lloyd; the declamatory bass solo, "Is not His Word like a Fire"—Mr. Santley; the soprano air, "Hear ye, Israel"—Miss A. Williams; "O Rest in the Lord"—Madame Patey; and the trio, "Lift thine Eyes"—Misses A. Williams and H. Wilson, and Madame Patey. Some of the concerted pieces claimed the help of Mdlle. Avigliana, Mrs. Whitaker, Mr. B. Newth, Mr. F. King, and Mr. Brereton. "Thanks be to God," the chorus "Be not afraid," "And then shall your light," and other choral passages were finely sung. Mr. C. L. Williams was the conductor; leading with remarkable forethought and skill, though at times choosing somewhat feverish tempi considering the acoustic properties of a building with an aptitude for the preservation, or rather prolongation, of sound. Mr. Williams has already proved himself to be an excellent and trustworthy conductor, and Gloucester must be congratulated upon the presence of so gifted, complete, and useful an artist. The orchestral detail and the contrapuntal overture, a masterpiece of its kind, were admirably produced. The evening concert in the Shire Hall contained one novelty of interest, Dr. C. Hubert Parry's setting for chorus and orchestra of James Shirley's poem, "Death's Final Conquest," a fine, thoughtful poem, admired even by that worthless monarch, Charles II. The music by Dr. Hubert Parry is large in its thoughtfulness, gloomy in its general complexion, but orchestrated with a rare mastery. One passage is of great beauty and grace—this is the setting of the oft-quoted words, "Only the actions of the just smell sweet and blossom in the dust." The piece was conducted by the composer, and was received, it need not be said, with applause. Further particulars must be reserved for next week.

EASTBOURNE.—The cause of the overwhelming success attending the Devonshire Park concerts is not far to seek. It does not consist in the simple gratification of a desire among visitors to assemble where others in the same social grade are wont to meet together, nor can it be said to have its origin in the circumstance that other and counter attractions are wanting; it may be safely concluded that the pre-eminent reason of such highly satisfactory results as are placed on record in our columns week after week—and this, be it remembered, in the height of summer—is the really superior character of the entertainment provided. While the daily performances of Mr. Adams's orchestra are listened to with exceeding pleasure by admiring and critical assemblies, the Saturday evening special vocal and instrumental concerts have up to the present not unnaturally enlisted the highest degree of public patronage. It is now no uncommon thing to find the Floral Hall crowded to its fullest capacity on the occasion of these weekly concerts. The other Saturday, so great was the crush that many had to content themselves with standing-room, while not a few were unable to gain admission at all. The principal orchestral number was Mozart's Symphony, No. 3 in E flat, which closed the first part of a very excellent programme. This was the first occasion of the production of this classical work in Eastbourne. A prominent feature in the programme was the performance of two numbers from F. H. Cowen's "Language of Flowers," which was received with manifest tokens of appreciation, and among the other orchestral numbers to which Julien Adams's band did full justice, were the march, "Tannhäuser" (Wagner), Rossini's overture, "Semiramide," and the overture by Weber, "Oberon." Each of these was played with that verve and precision characteristic of this orchestra under its able conductor, who directed the entire programme from memory.—Eastbourne Chronicle.

A NEW AMERICAN MUSICAL PITCH.

It has long been known that the present pitch in America is too high, and affects particularly European singers; we, therefore, quote with pleasure the following as a movement in the right direction:—

Some time ago several members of the musical profession held a meeting in Boston, to consider the subject of the present high and constantly rising pitch. In proof of the need of some immediate effort being made to adopt a standard pitch or fundamental keynote, it was stated that the celebrated Music Hall orchestra in that city, under the leadership of Carl Zerrahn, in the last year had risen a quarter of a tone above the already high pitch of the Great organ. Accordingly, a committee of seven of the best known musicians was appointed to arrange for another and more public public gathering of the Profession and the manufacturers of musical instruments, to agree upon a common standard. The first two members of this important committee were Carl Zerrahn and Lyman W. Wheeler, both of whom are well known in Detroit. In the circular which was issued by the committee, the following interesting figures were given, showing the present variations in pitch, or keynote—the number of vibrations per second for middle C.

Boston Great organ	271·2
Chickering pianos	278·2
Hook and Hastings' organs	270
New York highest	273·9
Steinway pianos	272·2

At the final meeting of all persons interested, held at the New England Conservatory of Music, a resolution was adopted to lower the pitch and to make 260·2 vibrations a second the standard for middle C. This is not so low as the standard in many parts of Europe. The Konig pitch is but 256·1. This is a movement, therefore, in the right direction, and if this standard becomes general in the United States, it will be of very great value and convenience to American vocalists.—Music and Drama (New York).

Lecocq's newest work, "Le Grain de Sable," will, it is stated, be first produced at the Theatre des Galeries Saint-Hubert, Brussels.

Digitized by Google

Foreign Musical Intelligence.

Peter Benoit's "Lucifer" is to be brought out at La Scala, Milan, next month.

In Luttich, died recently, aged 84, Victor Massart, a highly-esteemed teacher of the double bass and a pupil of Cherubini.

A monument to the memory of Theodore Kullah, erected by his friends and pupils, is to be unveiled in Berlin on September 12th.

New Italian operas are "King Lear," by Cagnoni; "Edmea," by Giuseppe Anteri; "Salambo," by Nicolo Massa; "Baldassare," by Villate.

Hans von Bülow has returned to Meiningen in excellent health, and is expected to resume his artistic activity as a pianist and conductor next winter.

The King of Saxony has conferred upon Herr Capellmeister Carl Reinecke, of Leipzig, the order of Ritterkreuz erster Classe des Albrechtsordens.

Victor Nessler, composer of the "Rattenfanger des Hameln," is now engaged on a new opera to be produced at the Leipsic Town Theatre in November.

New German operas are "Der Trompeter von Sackingen," by Victor Nessler, and "Eine Nacht in Venedig," by Johann Strauss to be first produced at the Friedrich-Wilhelmstadtischen Theater, Berlin.

The Eastern Express of August 7th announces that M. Adolphe Terschak, the Hungarian flautist, lately played before his Majesty the Sultan; the latter was so pleased with the performance that he conferred upon M. Terschak the order of the third class of the Médjidié.

Berlin is to have a month of Italian opera, from 16th September to 16th October. Bimboni will be the conductor. The répertoire includes Rossini's "Semiramide" and "Othello," Ambroise Thomas's "Hamlet," Halévy's "La Juive," and several of Verdi's operas.

Neue Zeitschrift für Musik tells that the new Concert Hall at Leipzig is advancing towards completion. Statues of Mozart and Beethoven are to adorn the front, statues of Bach, Handel, Haydn, and Schubert the sides, and probably statues of Mendelssohn and Schumann the foyer.

The Musical Institute of Florence offers prizes for Church music, for a setting of the Antiphon "Hosanna! Filio David" in five parts, the last sentence, "Hosanna in excelsis," to be set as a Fugue for five voices. The competition is to be open until the end of next June. The first prize is 200 lire.

Among the unpublished works of the late Joachim Raff are said to be four operas; two of these are "Die Eifersüchtigen," a comic opera in four acts, and "Benedetto Marcello," a lyric opera. An orchestral work, an Italian Suite, entitled "Im Süden" (In the South), which consists of a Barcarolle, Policinella, Notturno, and Tarantella, will be performed, it is said, at Professor Wüllner's concerts in Berlin.

It is announced that the Bach Choir will give two concerts next season, on March 19 and May 14. Palestrina's Mass, "Assumpta est Maria," for six voices; S. Wesley's motet, "Exultate Deo;" a hymn, "Awake, my heart," for bass solo, chorus, and organ, by Mr. C. V. Stanford; and works by Bach, Mozart, and Schumann, are to be given. Mr. Otto Goldschmidt will be musical director, as usual.

At Belzig, a small town in the Wittenberg district, a memorial tablet was lately placed on the house in which the composer Reissiger was born. The following words are inscribed on it with golden letters: "Hoffcapellmeister C. G. Reissiger, geb. den 31 Juli, 1798, gest den 7 Nov., 1859." Vocal performances, in which 300 singers took part, a banquet, and a festive procession, celebrated the memory of the estimable musician.

The Royal Orchestra of Kalakawa, King of the Sandwich Islands, is at present giving concerts at San Francisco. It is said that the orchestra, numbering about forty performers, proposes to visit Europe. The musicians are natives, but their conductor, Heinrich Berger, is a German, who was formerly an oboist in a regiment of the Prussian Guard, but who has devoted some years now to the cultivation of music and the formation of bands in the Sandwich Islands.

Two distinguished flute players and composers for that instrument have been lost to the world lately. Joseph Fahrbach died on the 7th of June, aged seventy-nine; Franz Doppler on the 27th of July, aged sixty-one. The latter made himself a name as a composer of several popular operas and ballets. His most successful works of this description are the operas "Ilka" and "Wanda," and his ballets, "In Versailles" and "Melusine."

Between August 23, 1882, and June 13, 1883, 237 performances of operas have been given at the Berlin Court Opera House. The works performed numbered 56, and were by 29 composers. 32 evenings were devoted to Wagner, who was represented by 6 works. Next came Mozart, with 21 performances and 5 works; after him Meyerbeer, with 18 and 5; Lortzing, with 18 and 2; Bizet, with 18 and 1; Weber, with 16 and 3; Gluck, with 11 and 4; Auber, with 11 and 4; Verdi, with 9 and 3; Nicolai, with 7 and 1; Beethoven, with 6 and 1; Perfall, with 6 and 1; Nessler, with 6 and 1; Rossini, with 6 and 1; Donizetti, with 6 and 2; Klughardt, with 5 and 1; Brüll, with 5 and 1; Ambroise Thomas, with 5 and 2; Goldmark, with 4 and 1; Flotow, with 4 and 2; Conradin Kreutzer, with 3 and 1; Halévy, with 3 and 1; Spontini, with 2 and 1; Boïeldieu, with 2 and 1; and Spohr, Marschner, and Cherubini each represented by one work.

THE ANNUAL MUSICAL FESTIVAL OF THE NORTH AMERICAN SÆNGERBUND.

The twenty-third Sängerfest of the North American Sængerbund, took place in the city of Buffalo, N.Y., from Monday, July 16th, to Wednesday 18th. It excited unusual interest, and called forth great enthusiasm. There were no great novelties given among the musical compositions, nor great or prominent works executed, but the festive tone given to the meeting, the good general musical choice, the large choruses, and Dr. Damrosch's orchestra, gave the whole "Fest" a character of unity, which will do much to still increase a desire for musical improvement.

Buffalo, with its decorations, its triumphal arches, its flags and banners, looked like a German city; and its festive appearance was enhanced by the presence of a host of visitors, estimated at from 50,000 to 75,000, most of whom were Germans. The new hall accommodates in its main room about 5,000 people, and the spacious corridors easily contain 3,000 more. The stage accommodates 2,000 singers and an orchestra of 100 instruments. The building is in the French renaissance style of architecture, and is at present gay with all sorts of flags and mottoes. The legend that appears on all sides is "Wilkommen Sænger."

The association have reason to feel proud of this festival, and what they have attained since their organization. The first "Sängerfest" known in America was held in Cincinnati in June, 1849. At that time there were five singing societies, with 118 singers, representing the cities of Cincinnati, Louisville, and Madison, Ind. On June 2nd of that festival, the association was formally organized. From 1849 to 1860 a festival was held each year. The festival of 1860 was held at Buffalo, and was both artistically and popularly one of the greatest festivals of the association.

The continuity of these festivals was broken by our civil war, and five years elapsed before the next festival, which was held at Louisville, Ky. From this time the association became national both in its scope and its representation. In Chicago, in 1869, fifty-eight societies were represented, with 1,200 singers. In Cincinnati, the following year, 1,800 singers, representing sixty-one societies, were present. For a few years after this, owing principally to the sudden popularity of the May festival, interest in the "Sængerbund" declined.

The artistic merits of the association have, however, greatly advanced of late years, owing to a rule adopted in '75, excluding from the "Bund" societies of less than twelve voices, and admitting none whose musical fitness was not certified by the festival director. The festivals have been again growing in popularity for the last few years, and the last one held in Chicago two years ago was remarkable for its artistic success. Nothing had been left undone to make the festival a great success and a memorable meeting of the "Saengers," or "Singers."

The soloists engaged for the festival were Mme. Gabriella Boema, Mme. Marie Schell-Graham, Mrs. Wells B. Tanner, Joseph Benedict, Christian Fritsch and Max Heinrich.

The directors of the various special concerts were Carl Adam, (Monday evening) Joseph Mischka (Tuesday afternoon and Wednesday evening), Frederick Federlein, (Tuesday evening and Wednesday afternoon.)

The societies present were from Cincinnati, Cleveland, Columbus, Dayton and Tiffin, O.; New York, Dunkirk, Rochester, Elmira, of this State; Allegheny, Erie and Philadelphia, Penn.; Chicago, Ill., Indianapolis, Ind.; Louisville, Ky.; Detroit, Mich.; St. Louis, Mo.; Milwaukee, Wis.; Wheeling, W. Va.; Newark, N.J.; Hamilton and Waterloo, Ontario.—Music and Drama (New York).

Digitized by Google

Organ News.

FISHERIES EXHIBITION.

The following organ recitals have been given during the last week.

Organ recitals were given by Mr. J. Loaring, F.C.O., on August 27th, 29th, and September 1st. The following were the programmes :—

Overture, "L' Italiana"	Rossini.
Adagio, from "Sonata Pathétique"	Beethoven.
"So shall the lute," and "Sing unto God"	Handel.
Selection from 1st Rondo	Mendelssohn.
March, "Heroique" in D	Schubert.

Overture, "Masaniello"	Auber.
Andante from Quartet in D minor	Mozart.
"Gipsy" Rondo	Haydn.
Selection from the opera, "Cymbia"	Pascal.
"The Bride's March"	Loaring.

Overture, "Zampa"	Hérold.
Gavotte	Corelli.
Organ Concerto, No. 3	Handel.
"Gloria in excelsis" ("12th Mass")	Mozart.
March, "Heroique" in C	Schubert.

The programme of the recital by Mr. Hedgecock, on Tuesday, August 28th, was :—

March of the Crusaders	Liszt.
Slow Movement, from a Trio	Hummel.
Postlude in D	Smart.
Pastorale	Kullak.
Chorus, "Fixed in His everlasting seat" ("Sampson")	Handel.
Fantasia in F	Best.
Theme in A	Hird.
March in B flat	Silas.

The programme of the recital by Mr. H. C. Tonking, R.A.M., on Wednesday, August 29th, was :—

Organ Concerto, No. 2	Handel.
Offertoire in G	Batiste.
Fanfare in D	Lemmens.
Andante in F	Smart.
Fantasia on a Welsh March	Best.
"Hercules" March	Trembath.
Grand Chorus in D	Guilmant.

And on Thursday, August 30th :—

Fugue in D	Bach.
Andante in F	Wely.
Offertoire in G	"
Postlude in C minor, introducing "Jerusalem on High"	Steggall.
Fantasia on a Welsh March	Best.

Grand Chorus	Guilmant.
Offertoire in G	Wely.
En Forme d'Ouverture in D minor	Smart.
Postlude in D	Smart.

And on Friday, August 24th, by Master Henry J. Wood, whose programme included :—

Offertoire in B minor	Lott.
Trio, Moderato, Theme var., No. 4	Beethoven.
Movement from a Sonata	Beethoven.
Chorus from "Harvest Cantata"	Weber.

An organ recital was given on September 4th, by Mr. E. Taunton. The programme included :—

War March, "Athalie"	Mendelssohn.
Andante (P. F. Sonata)	Mozart.

And by Mr. H. E. Warner :—

Offertoire in F	Batiste.
Chorus, "Worthy is the Lamb"	Handel.
Gavotte in G	Warner.

And by Mr. Percy H. Fell :—

Andante in F minor	Batiste.
Largo	Handel.
Gavotte in F	Fell.
Prelude and Fugue, No. 8	Bach.

NORTH BERWICK.

An organ recital was given in St. Baldred's Church, by Mr. T. S. Guyer, on Wednesday, August 22nd. The programme included :—

Overture, "Samson"	Handel.
Largo in C	Handel.
Toccata and Fugue in D minor	Bach.
Largo in D	Haydn.
March in G	Smart.

GLASGOW.

An organ recital was given on Saturday, September 1st, in the Cathedral, by Dr. A. L. Peace. The following was the programme :—

Overture, "The Last Judgment"	Spohr.
Andante—Grave—Allegro.
Adagio from the Septet	Beethoven.
"Faith, Hope, and Charity"—three sacred choruses	Rossini.
"Allegretto Villereccio"	Fumagalli.
"March to Cavalry" ("Redemption")	Gounod.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

Mr. Cedric Bucknall, Mus.Bac., played the following programme on Saturday week :—

March Cortège, "Irene"	Gounod.
Andante from 10th Trio	Reissiger.
Sonata, No. 3, in A	Mendelssohn.
Con moto maestoso—Andante tranquillo.
Prelude and Fugue in E minor	Bach.
"Impromptu"
Offertoire in F	Batiste.
"Invocation"	Guilmant.
Choruses, "He spake the word," and "But the waters"	Handel.

WATERLOO ROAD, S.E.

An organ and trombone recital was given in the Church of St. John the Evangelist, by Messrs Henry J. B. Dart, and Samuel Millar, on Tuesday, August 18th. The following was the programme :—

*Fantasia in C minor	Behrens.
Marche Funebre, from Concerto	David.
*Romanza	Beethoven.
Grand Fantasia on Chorale, "Ein feste burg"	Braüer.
*Air and variations in A	Hesse.
Prayer	Michael.
*Sonata, No. 6	Mendelssohn.
Chorale and variations—Fuga—Andante.
Polonaise in A	Chopin.

Pieces marked with an asterisk for organ solo.

MALVERN.

An organ recital was given at the Priory Church, by W. H. Speer, Esq., on Wednesday, August 29th. The following was the programme :—

Toccata and Fugue in D minor	Bach.
Minuet and Trio (Symphony in G minor)	Bennett.
"My heart, ever faithful"	Bach.
Sonata in D	Guilmant.
Andante in A flat	Hoyte.
Andante in F, Op. 35	Beethoven.
"Let their celestial concerts"	Handel.

OLDHAM.

On the 1st inst., an organ recital was given by Mr. W. A. Wrigley (organist of Holy Innocents', Fallowfield, Manchester) in the concert room attached to the Fine Art Exhibition. The room was crowded in every part. The programme included :—

March and Chorus, "Ruins of Athens"	Beethoven.
Prelude and Fugue in B flat	Bach.
Andante Cantabile in E flat	Weber.
Grand Chœur in D	Guilmant.
Allegretto in B minor	"
"Heroic" March in D, No. 3	Schubert.

LEEDS.

The organ of St. George's Church, after being silent for nearly two months, undergoing extensive repairs, was re-opened by Dr. Spark, the organist, the other Sunday, when special music was performed. The organ was built by Holt Brothers, in 1850, and was opened by Dr. Samuel Sebastian Wesley. A few years afterwards, at the suggestion of the present organist, the instrument was entirely rebuilt, and several new and beautiful stops were added by Messrs. Gray and Davison, the builders of the Town Hall organ. The new work, including nearly all new action, three new sets of ivory keys, thorough cleaning, and general repairs, has been executed by Messrs. Wordsworth and Maskell, Leeds, and so far as can be ascertained from a couple of days' experience and trial, with much credit to them, and with satisfaction to Dr. Spark. In the morning the Te Deum was Smart in F, and Kyrie and Credo (Wesley). The voluntaries were by Silas, Smart, and Dr. Spark. In the evening there were Wesley's Service in F, and Goss's anthem, "Praise the Lord." The voluntaries were, andante, sonata (Bach), the organist; and for the collection, Handel's Coronation Anthem, "Zadok the Priest." The organ opening proper was followed with a recital of "organ music," by Mr. Walter Parratt, Mus.Bac., organist of St. George's Chapel Royal, Windsor. The following was the programme :—

Organ Concerto in A major	Handel.
Fantasia in E flat	Saint-Saëns.
Overture in C major	Adams.
Canon in B minor	Schubert.
Fugue in D major	Mozart.
Passacaglia	Bach.
Pastorale in G major	Widor.

In all the pieces Mr. Parratt showed himself an able and accurate exponent of the works of others. The finest specimen of Mr. Parratt's playing was in the last piece, the sublime "Passacaglia," by Bach.

Digitized by Google

SCHOLES.

The new organ, in the Church of SS. Philip and James, was opened on August 24th, by Dr. Creser (Leeds Parish Church), who performed the following selection :—

Musette	Turpin.
Barcarolle	Bennett.
Variations on a Theme by Handel	Creser
Grand Chorus	Guilmant.
Andante	Archer.
"War March of the Priests" ("Athalie")	Mendelssohn.

The organ, built by Messrs. Booth and Hepworth, has two manuals and pedals.

ROTHERHAM.

An organ recital was given by Mr. S. W. Pilling, of Bolton, in the Congregational Church, on Wednesday, August 21st. The following was the programme :—

Prelude	Hird.
Sonatine	Bogaert.
Pastorale Offertoire in C major	Wely.
Air, with variations	Haydn.
Andante from Violin Concerto	Mendelssohn.
Allegro maestoso—Fuga.
Introduction and Offertoire	Hewlett.
Andante Grazioso March in D major	Smart.

The above church, after having been closed for eleven weeks, for repairs, and for the enlargement and completion of the organ, was re-opened for divine worship August 29th. The interior arrangements of the organ have been altered, and the mechanism improved, besides some important additions. The work has been very satisfactorily carried out by the makers, Messrs. Brindley and Foster, of Sheffield. The specification is as follows, the asterisks indicating the additional parts :—

GREAT ORGAN. CC TO G 3.

1.Double Diapason	16 ft.	6. Twelfth	3 ft.
2. Open Diapason	8 „	Fifteenth	2 „
3. Rohr Gedact	8 „	7.*Mixture (4 ranks)
4. Viola di Gamba	8 „	8.* Trumpet	8 „
5. Principal	4 „

SWELL ORGAN. CC TO G 3.

9. Bourdon	16 ft.	13.*Mixture (3 ranks)
10. Gemshorn	8 „	14. Oboe	8 ft.
11.*Vox Angelica	8 „	15*Trumpet	8 „
12. Principal	4 „

CHOIR ORGAN. CC TO G 3.

16 Leiblich Gedact	8 ft.	19. Lieblich Flöte	4 ft.
17.*Dulciana	8 „	20.*Clarionet	8 „
18. Gemshorn	4 „

PEDAL ORGAN. CCC TO E.

21.*Open Diapason	16 ft.	22. Bourdon	16 ft.

COUPLERS.

23. Swell to Great.	25. Swell to Pedal.
24. Swell to Choir.	26. Great to Pedal.

Three composition Pedals to Great Organ.

The re-opening services commenced yesterday afternoon, when an organ recital was given by Mr. S. W. Pilling, an eminent organist, of Bolton. An admirable plan for bringing out the different qualities of the organ had been prepared, and was gone through with exquisite taste. Mr. Pilling rendered the various works selected with great effect. In the evening divine service was held in the church, when Mr. C. H. Perrott presided at the organ.

Nearly a quarter of a century ago, says a recent number of the Halifax Mail, Canada, at the urgent request of the clergymen and a number of leading citizens of Halifax, Gen. Sir Hastings Doyle, then in command of the garrison at that city, made an order by which the military bands were relieved of the duty of entertaining the crowds while marching to the garrison on Sundays. On a certain Sunday, Gen. Russell, now in command, who always worships at the bishop's chapel, attended the garrison church for a change, and he was shocked at the small attendance of officers and men, and the want of discipline exhibited. What was still worse, the garrison chaplain, Rev. Mr. Townsend, was absent without leave, having gone fishing on that day. The general has now made an order, revoking that of Doyle issued so long ago, and in future all troops not absolutely employed must attend Church. Guards will not be mounted until 2.30 p.m., and two bands will play on the way to and from service. The new order has taken the garrison by surprise, and is the principal subject of gossip about the city and in the barracks.

Academical Intelligence.

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

(Continued from page 132.)

EXAMINATION FOR ASSOCIATESHIP, JULY 11, 1883.

PAPER WORK AT ORGAN.

The first six verses of the "Venite" were to be accompanied to the music of a given chant.

A hymn-tune to be given out, and one verse accompanied.

A given passage to be transposed at sight, the new keys being named by the examiners.

A given example of vocal score-reading was to be played at sight on the two diapasons of the Great organ only, and without the use of the pedals.

A figured bass was to be filled up at sight in four parts.

PAPER WORK AWAY FROM ORGAN.

A melody was to be harmonised in four parts in vocal score, with proper clefs.

A bass to be harmonised in four parts in vocal score, from the figures, with proper clefs.

The bass of the following passage to be figured according to the harmonies given, and name the root notes of the different chords employed.

The candidates were to add two simultaneous counterpoints of first species, one above and one below, to a given canto fermo.

To add three simultaneous counterpoints of any species, two above and one below, to a given canto fermo.

To give answers to two fugue subjects.

AND TO ANSWER AS MANY OF THE SUCCEEDING QUESTIONS AS POSSIBLE.

1. Describe the tones said to have been discovered by Sorge and made generally known by Tartini.

2. Describe the pneumatic action ; give the name of the inventor, and date of invention.

3. Distinguish between the nature and use of ventils and sound-board pallets.

4. What is a ground bass? Name any example.

5. On which degree of the scale is the chord of the augmented sixth most frequently placed? and under what circumstance is the degree on which it is so placed chromatically altered?

6. Say which of the first four species of counterpoint may be said to be chiefly used in forming the figures of florid counterpoint.

7. Explain the following metres, L.M., S.M., C.M.; say, are they iambic or trochaic in their several methods of accentuation?

8. Say how the strings of the double bass are tuned in England, Germany, Italy, and France, and which string is sometimes lowered in pitch in England.

9. Give the name of Handel's last oratorio, and the date of its composition.

Digitized by Google

EXAMINATION FOR FELLOWSHIP, JULY 12, 1883.

PAPER WORK AT ORGAN.

The first six verses of the "Venite" were to be accompanied to the music of one of two given chants.

A choral was to be given out, and one verse accompanied.

A given passage was to be transposed at sight, the new keys being named by the Examiners.

An example of vocal score-reading was to be played at sight on the two diapasons of the Great organ only, and without the use of the pedals.

Candidates were desired to extemporise upon a given phrase for about sixteen bars.

The candidates were to harmonise a given melody.

A figured bass was to be filled up at sight in four parts.

PAPER WORK AWAY FROM ORGAN.

A melody was to be harmonised in four parts in vocal score, with proper clefs.

A bass to be harmonised in four parts in vocal score, with proper clefs.

1. The candidates were to add two simultaneous counterpoints to a given Canto Fermo in F in the second and fourth species respectively.

2. Transpose the Canto Fermo into C, place it in the bass, and add three upper parts in florid counterpoint.

Counterpoint of various kinds and in any number of parts were to be added to a given canto.

The candidates were asked to write a fugal exposition on a given subject in four vocal parts, with proper clefs.

The candidates were asked to score a passage, from an Andante by S. S. Wesley in G, for 2 flutes, 2 oboes, 2 clarionets, 2 bassoons, 4 horns, 2 trumpets, 3 trombones, drums, and the usual stringed instruments.

AND TO ANSWER AS MANY OF THE SUCCEEDING QUESTIONS AS POSSIBLE.

1. What is the difference between a major and a minor tone called? Show relative value by figures.

2. What is the difference between a diatonic and a chromatic semitone called? Show relative value by figures.

3. What practical difference would it make in organ pipes and orchestral instruments (other conditions remaining as at present) if the velocity of sound in air were three times as rapid as it is?

4. Say upon what principle the organ stops tuned above the unison registers are employed.

5. Describe the several kinds of discords, and the general methods adopted in their treatment.

6. Name some particular use for the chords $\frac{6}{4}$ and $\frac{5}{4}$.

7. Say what harmonic successions are to be avoided in double counterpoint of the tenth.

8. Say how triple and quadruple counterpoints are formed.

9. Explain the differences between the oboe and corno di bassetto, and between the clarionet and cor Anglais.

10. State what symphony the trombones were first used in; and say what composer sometimes used two instead of three of those instruments.

11. Give the names of composers of following oratorios, and approximate date of their composition: "Samson," "Mount of Olives," and "Last Judgment."

12. Give the names of composers and approximate dates of composition of following operas: "Die Zauberflöte," "Der Freischütz," "Jessonda," and "Guillaume Tell."

Edgar S. Kelley is an American composer of some promise, according to reports. Thomas was to have played an overture of his, "Macbeth," at his series of concerts in Chicago. Mr. Kelley had a string quartet performed in Stuttgart which was much praised. He is a native of Wisconsin, and was formerly a pupil of H. Clarence Eddy and afterwards of Seifritz, Rheinberger, and other German musicians.

MUSIC STRINGS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF ALL KINDS OF STRINGS FOR VIOLIN, VIOLA, VIOLONCELLO, DOUBLE BASS, HARP, ZITHER, GUITAR, BANJO, &c., &c.,

Have always in Stock the Largest Assortment of Music Strings of any House in the World.

39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

All Kinds of Strings covered in a superior manner by powerful machines, made on the best principle with all modern improvements.

A BACHELOR OF MUSIC (Cambridge) desires an Appointment as PROFESSOR OF MUSIC in some COLLEGE or SCHOOL in the Midland Counties. A Liberal Honorarium will be given to any one through whose introduction such an appointment may be obtained.—Address, Cantab., care of Messrs. Novello, Ewer & Co., 1, Berners Street, London.

JUST PUBLISHED.—Full Anthem, "BE NOT DRUNK WITH WINE, WHEREIN IS EXCESS." For Temperance Services, etc., by E. H. TURPIN. Price 4d. net.—Messrs. WEEKES & CO., 14, Hanover-street, W.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

MOZART'S ORGAN WORKS. By Frank J. Sawyer, B.Mus. Oxon, F.C.O.
ANOTHER CRITICISM BY SIR GEO. MACFARREN.
MUSICAL INTELLIGENCE:—Gloucester Musical Festival—Eastbourne.
A NEW AMERICAN MUSICAL PITCH.
FOREIGN MUSICAL INTELLIGENCE.
THE ANNUAL MUSICAL FESTIVAL OF THE NORTH AMERICAN SCHÜTZENBUND.
ORGAN NEWS:—Fisheries Exhibition—North Berwick—Glasgow—Crystal Palace—Waterloo Road, S.E.—Malvern—Oldham—Leeds—Scholes—Rotherham.
ACADEMICAL INTELLIGENCE:—College of Organists.
EDITORIAL:—Form in Vocal Music—The Triple-Stringed Harp—Musical Festivals and their Fruits.
THE VOICE MUSICALLY AND MEDICALLY CONSIDERED. By Armand Semple, B.A., M.B., Cantab., M.R.C.P., Lond.
CORRESPONDENCE:—"Counterpoint."—Dr Tuckerman—Cyphering—The Windsor Organ.
PASSING EVENTS: The Querist, Service Lists, &c.

LONDON: SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 1883.

FORM IN VOCAL MUSIC.

VII.

AS before observed, the examination of the mutual action between instrumental architectural development and the application of form to vocal music affords a deeply interesting study. Historically, it is a matter of astonishment to note how very soon "form," as we understand the word, begins to appear in the sacred department of the art, even though its growth was a matter extending over so long a period. The student will, perhaps, find the greatest profit from a consideration of the development of "form" in the sacred music—to take only one large department of the art—of the great transition period beginning with the Italian Church writers of the end of the seventeenth century, then advancing onwards through the great choral works of BACH and HANDEL on to our own day! Through this long growth, there has been a marked gravitation to the episodical outline as being generally more plastic and convenient in its application to vocal music than any other type of structural method. Thus, we find in the sacred choral works of MEN-

Digitized by Google

DELSSOHN, SPOHR, and still more recent writers, a large proportion of choruses written according to this pattern. In the setting of sacred words, the composer is undoubtedly pledged by a due sense of earnestness and propriety to primarily regard the meaning and expression of the words. This is a matter of the highest importance, and the student must not allow himself to be misled by the fascinating laxity to be observed in the Church music of the Viennese school, extending from HAYDN and MOZART to the "Masses" and Motets of HUMMEL and others of less note. It may be, that the splendid development of the same school and period in instrumental music furnished the temptation to apply in too wholesale a fashion the general principles of "form" to the requirements of sacred vocal music; and most probably the habit of employing given structural types grew to be so strong, and was found so convenient as saving much thought in the use of the ready-to-hand "forms" even to the skilled composer, that the abuse of "form" in the Church music of the time was a natural outcome of its almost slavish adoption by both writers and listeners. It may be safely asserted that we are now actuated in these matters by better taste, and a modified judgment. In all save the fugal forms—which, as I have shown, are also expressive in their way of the general principles of musical architecture—the composer is called upon to carefully examine the doctrinal and expressive outlines of the words forming the sacred text to be set. To do this thoughtfully is not so easy a task as it might appear to be at the first sight. Take one case in point, the setting of the "Nicene Creed." The just expression of the passage referring to the Incarnation of our Lord, breaks up the doctrinal division theoretically, though it actually in practice assists in deepening the theological statement. This instance alone seems to show that in dealing with sacred text an earnest desire to express the words must take precedence over any proposal to consult too exclusively either doctrinal divisions or musical form outlines. Still, this theory of a careful verbal expression seems liable to a kind of abuse. Take the constant habit of the "Mass" composers of the Viennese school and, it must be added, their predecessors and followers who, treating the "Gloria in excelsis Deo" episodically, persist in dividing the words most illogically in the middle of a doctrinal sentence, by commencing the episode—generally a slow movement of distinct style and tempo—with the words, "Qui tollis peccata mundi"; and often aggravating this violation of good sense and judgment by the intersection of a symphony between the two musical divisions. The proper management of the words in this case would be—and one rejoices to add this is the method adopted by M. GOUNOD and often by our common sense English composers—that of commencing the episode at the words "Domine Fili unigenite." By this means the essential doctrinal divisions will be alone duly regarded. This remark I have applied to the Latin of the "Mass"; of course, it has the same application in the case of the treatment of the same words in English in our Anglican Communion Service.

E. H. TURPIN.

THE TRIPLE-STRINGED HARP.

TRULY, those who either desire to stand still or to look back in matters artistic or mechanical have no solid ground for the soles of their feet to rest upon. Just now there is, on the part of a few devoted lovers of Welsh archæology, an evident hope that the so-called national or triple-stringed harp of the Principality may be saved from the wreckage of time, and to this end an attempt is being made to revive the all but departed interest in this instrument. Now, those who read the history of music aright are well aware, as thinking people are concerning all other things of this changeable world, that no musical instrument can exist without such development as will secure its permanent usefulness in a rapidly advancing art. "The survival of the fittest" is an essential law in the story of instrumental music; those instruments alone remain which by their powers of expression and convenience of manipulation may duly enunciate the musical idioms of the time; and as judiciously pointed out in a Welsh paper lately, one may as well hope to revive the spinet and harpsichord as to preserve the Welsh harp. So it came to pass that at the recent Cardiff Eisteddfodd, candidates for performance on that now bygone instrument were not forthcoming. Earnest patriotic zeal, even when misguided by reason of its very devotion to a given cause, commands respect; still, it is a positive duty to point out that this very zeal may, by being judiciously and thoughtfully corrected to the requirements of the age we live in, become a real, living, and precious faculty. These remarks are called for by the following advertisement extracted from the Cambrian and forwarded by a distinguished artist and esteemed correspondent:—

"WELSH HARP COMPETITION.—Prizes to the "amount of £40 will be given by the Most Noble "Marquis of BUTE and the Right Hon. Lady LLANOVER, for competition on the triple-stringed harp, "the national instrument of Wales, at the Musical "College of Wales, Swansea, on October 25th, under "the presidency of Sir HUSSEY VIVIAN, Bart., M.P.—"No one will be qualified to compete who has been a "player on the pedal harp,—the object of these prizes "being to restore to its proper position the National "(Portable) Instrument of the Principality, and to "encourage the cultivation of the pure and simple "style in which ancient Welsh music ought to be "played. All Welsh harpers intending to compete "will be required to send in their names and addresses to the Right Hon. Lady LLANOVER, Llan-"over, Abergavenny, South Wales, on or before the "25th September, 1883, from whom correct copies of "the Welsh airs may be obtained, gratis, on application by post.—Adjudicator: Dr. Joseph Parry, "Principal of the Musical College of Wales, Swansea."

The sentence restricting the competitors to those who have not played the pedal harp, was surely not sufficiently thought over. It could not be the design of so amiable and worthy a lover of her country as Lady LLANOVER is, or the wish of such an enlightened nobleman as the Marquis of BUTE, to so cramp the harp playing talents of the Welsh by confinement to an all but obsolete instrument, that they would be reduced to living upon stray halfpence gained by performances in the streets or public-houses! With the eminent example of Mr. John Thomas before them, who by his artistic skill on the now only possible harp has not only gained for himself a high position in the world of art, but founded a useful Welsh scholarship at the R.A.M., with other instances of the development of the national talent to high positions and fame, as in the case of Mr. Brinley Richards, it cannot be seriously intended to discourage the direction of Welsh instrumental ability to any channel, save one from which the tide of artistic life has ebbed away never more to flow into. That Handel once wrote for Powell, a Welsh harpist, says nothing, for the pedal harp, to begin with, was not known in his day; and, again, the most sanguine of patriots would never dream now of the possible adoption of the Welsh harp in London, and the composer of to-day expects his harp music to be played as it is played by Mr. John Thomas, a Welsh artist, on the pedal harp. There is no question about the antiquity of the harp as a Welsh national instrument. Jones's "Relics of the Welsh Bards," the "Leges "Wallicæ," and Pennant alike offer testimony to the effect, that the instrument is not only ancient, but has probably borne its present outward form for a thousand or even fifteen hundred years. At the same time, be it remembered, the triple-stringed harp now fast passing away is after all not a very ancient instrument, so that to push this archaic idea to its reasonable limits, the advertisers of the approaching competition should insist upon a restoration of a still more ancient form of the instrument; for to accept one development in the triple-stringed harp is logically to justify the adoption of a further development, the invention of the pedal harp. When the enthusiastic devotees of the Welsh harp are prepared to return to the most ancient form of the instrument, with, as an authority asserts, probably only nine strings, then alone will reason be fairly displayed in this matter from their point of sight. Of course, there can be but one consistent method of giving encouragement to the undoubtedly gifted Welsh musicians: they must be placed in the ranks of the artistic army, armed to do their work with the most improved and fully developed instruments of their several kinds.

Digitized by Google

E. H. Turpin.

MUSICAL FESTIVALS AND THEIR FRUITS.

This year the public are invited to two Musical Festivals, at Gloucester and Leeds. The meeting in the Cathedral city will be at an end by the time that these remarks attract the reader's eye; the more important réunion in the smoky town where "sharp blades" have ceased to be manufactured, as the writer knows to his cost, is fixed for next month.

Musical Festivals in the so-called "provinces" have been materially modified, like most other sublunary institutions, by the "chances and changes of this "mortal life."

Half a century ago, at Birmingham, the triennial "meeting" held for the benefit of the General Hospital was an event of great æsthetical importance; not so much on account of the actual performances, then held (the sacred portion at least) in the parish church of St. Philip, but because London had lagged behind, and possessed no regular societies, as now, for the production and execution of oratorios, always the great feature of the country "Festivals." Birmingham, moreover, has always been a musical focus, and of late years the absolutely first performance of "Elijah," under Mendelssohn's own direction (A.D. 1846) has naturally made the manufacturing town especially famous. Leeds and Bradford have since entered the lists; the discontinuance of the excellent festival at the latter town is merely owing to its contiguity to Leeds. Dr. Spark, in the large west Yorkshire emporium, renders the same service to the art, by his talents and indefatigable labours in the cause, as old Joseph Moore, the master of the ceremonies at Birmingham did some sixty years ago.

The Festivals of the Three Choirs, as before said, drag on a dwindling existence, and do little for music in the highest sense. They hardly pay their way, although last year at Hereford it is understood that the treasurer had rather less reason to complain, but it must be remembered that a "guarantee fund" exists at the expense of persons rich enough or foolish enough to lend their names. The "widows and "orphans" dependent on the Three Choirs have very little to be thankful for. The Worcester Festival was suspended in 1875, by the bigotry of the Dean and some of the local clergy; its revival in 1878 and 1881 was rather in an ecclesiastical or "Church Service" direction. Norwich appeared to be doomed as a musical institution in 1875, when the petty "Jacks-in-office" disgusted the gentlemen of the London press by their stupid arrogance and gross incivility; but two years ago a revival was reported—whether by natural causes or by some sort of artificial galvanic action, such as makes a dead frog jump about as before, the writer avows that he is ignorant.

And now for the fruits of these festivals, not from a banker's point of view but with respect to art. The great standard works continue to be performed; the "Messiah" and "Elijah" are stereotyped on the schemes, and a clever writer in the Daily Telegraph offered strong objections to this incessant repetition of familiar oratorios, to the exclusion of other not necessarily new works, when reporting the two festivals of 1872. People can now hear the standard oratorios in St. James's and the Albert Halls, whilst country folks come to London so often and remain there so long, that to perform the "Messiah" or the "Crea- "tion" in the rural districts seems like "taking coals "to Newcastle" or "oysters to Whitstable." It may be replied that Handel, Haydn, and Mendelssohn pay, and thus the "main chance" is not missed. On the other hand, the truth must be told, that most of the new works, even compositions on a large scale such as oratorios and cantatas, either fall still-born to the earth or die a natural death within the twelvemonth. "Elijah" and Professor G. A. Macfarren's "St. John the Baptist," produced at the first Bristol Meeting in 1873, are two grand and noble exceptions. Yet the world has not since heard too much of the Professor's second oratorio, "Joseph," which the writer rejoiced to report well of at the Leeds festival of 1877. A third essay in oratorio is about to be made by the Professor at Leeds, and the result is anxiously awaited. Dr. STAINER's fate is already decided at Gloucester this week. Sir ARTHUR SULLIVAN's oratorios, "The Light of the World" and "The Resurrection," owe their occasional repetition, it is suspected, to the "flukes" of fashion and a popular name. Sir JULIUS BENEDICT, does not find any eager demand for his "St. Peter," produced at Norwich some eleven years ago, and heard once by the writer the same autumn at St. James's Hall. The "Redemption" of GOUNOD has been severely criticised by learned musicians who do not admire or even understand its eccentricities, but GOUNOD has a great name and his oratorio is sure to be on the "stock" list for half a generation at least. Then, alas! for the cantatas—"our cantatas, where are they?" In MILTON's "Paradise of Fools" or in the waste-paper cupboard? Some of these cantatas are really clever compositions, notably the recent works (all written for festivals) of M. RANDEGGER, Signor SCHIRA, Mr. J. F. BARNETT, not to omit Mrs. MEADOWS-WHITE, so successful at Hereford last year. The "May Queen" of Sir STERNDALE BENNETT, and Professor MACFARREN's "May Day," are exceptionally excellent, hors de la ligne, as the French say, and therefore likely to be permanent. The cantata, all the same, is an anomalous affair in point of form, neither dramatic nor concert music "pure and "simple." The cantatas are usually very long, and the subjects uninteresting. They come before the public at the festivals, obtain a succès d'estime, and are forgotten! Such will no doubt be the case this year, at Gloucester and Leeds.

Digitized by Google

To sum up: the provincial meetings in the cathedral cities exist on sufferance and live from hand to mouth. They have had their day and are effete. Birmingham and Leeds do well, for two reasons: they secure composers, as a rule, of the first order; they provide great variety, and, above all, they can rely on a larger popular inrush of paying visitors. May they go on and prosper! A. M.

Mdme. Minnie Hauck received an official request from the committee of the great Aix-la-Chapelle competitions, asking her to act as one of the musical judges. Mdme. Hauck declining, sent a large medal of Handel surrounded by a laurel wreath of gold as a prize for the best singing of Handelian choruses. She was invited by the burgomaster to be the honorary guest of the city during the festival. It is said that upwards of forty choirs, comprising about 7,000 choristers, make up the strong list of competitors.

The Evening Standard says:—"A praiseworthily emphatic announcement has been made by the Manager of Drury Lane Theatre, to the effect that the sale of programmes is in future prohibited in his establishment. Hitherto notices to the effect that "No Fees" are to be inflicted upon visitors to many of the London Theatres have been issued; but, in defiance of this loosely-worded edict, black mail has been generally levied by the attendants who show the audience to their seats and attend them in the cloak-rooms. Mr. Harris has, however, given strict orders that the attendants in the front of his house are to receive no donations; and if the habitués of Drury Lane only second the manager's efforts, the system, which is not only unfair, but irritating as well, will speedily come to an end. Other managers, it is to be hoped, will follow Mr. Harris's energetic example." It is to be hoped too, that Mr. Harris's forethought for the interests of the public will produce good fruit in the concert-room as well as in the theatre.

THE VOICE
MUSICALLY AND MEDICALLY CONSIDERED.

BY
ARMAND SEMPLE, B.A., M.B., Cantab., M.R.C.P., Lond.,
Physician to the Royal Society of Musicians.

(Continued from page 135.)

Registers.

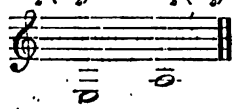
The term Register implies a series of homogeneous and consecutive sounds which take their origin from the same mechanical means, but which essentially differ from other sounds produced by mechanical agencies of a different nature; hence, all sounds of the same register are similar in their nature and quality, no matter what modifications of power or quality they may undergo.

The Chest Voice (Voce di Petto) Register.

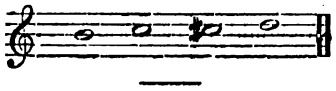
In the Male Voice, this is the principal Register and is of the following extent, viz.: from Re flat$_1$ (D flat$_1$), Re$_1$ (D$_1$), or Mi flat$_3$ (E flat$_3$), to Si$_3$ (B$_3$), Do$_4$ (C$_4$), or D sharp$_1$ (C sharp$_4$)

Within this gamut of 3 octaves the compass of every individual voice may be found; this is generally from a twelfth to two octaves.

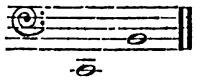
In the Female Voice the chest register commences according to the character of the organ, with one of the sounds between Mi$_2$ (E$_2$) and La$_2$ (A$_2$)



Extending to Si$_3$ (B$_3$) Do$_4$ (C$_4$) Do sharp$_4$ (C sharp$_4$) or Re$_4$ (D$_4$)



Every octave in Acoustics is designated by a number; to the octave from Do (C) to Si (B)



the number 1 is applied, thus Do$_1$ Si$_1$; to the octave above the number 2 is given thus, Do$_2$, Si$_2$ the octave above this 3, Do$_3$, Si$_3$, as below, and so on.

The Falsetto (Voce di Falsetto) Register.

This register commences in both sexes at about Sol$_2$ (G$_2$)

Ascending to Do sharp$_4$ (C sharp$_4$), or Re$_4$ (D$_4$) and extending to a twelfth on the same notes as in the chest register. This latter register alone is able to descend below Sol$_2$ (G$_2$).

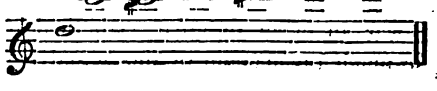
The Head Voice (Voce di Testa) Register.

The sounds of the head voice are the next to the falsetto, and range from Re$_4$ (D$_4$), to Do$_5$ (C$_5$), Do sharp$_5$ (C sharp$_5$), Re$_5$ (D$_5$), Re sharp$_5$ (D sharp$_5$), Mi$_5$ (E$_5$), Fa$_5$ (F$_5$)

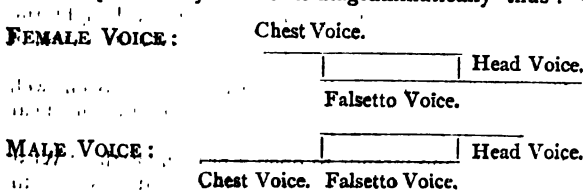


Digitized by Google

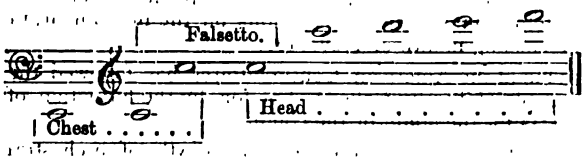
In the Male, these sounds are but the remains of the boys' voice; they can only be used by very high tenors, and then very exceptionally, or by the so-called Buffi Caricati singers.

It may be observed that the chest register descends lower in the male than in the female, that the falsetto is common to both voices, and that in the female the extent of the head voice is greater than in the male.

These points may be shown diagrammatically thus :—



The following is the general scale of the 3 registers :—



Two or three notes are here given as the possible limits in each register, since, on account of the elasticity of the organ, it is by nature subject to fluctuation.

The illustrations above given are of course merely intended to indicate the possible degree to which human voices may be extended, but in the cultivation of any individual singing voice it is never of that compass in practice, since all voices do not use all the registers indiscriminately, and to employ the extremes of each register is always fatiguing to a singer.

Correspondence.

"COUNTERPOINT."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "MUSICAL STANDARD."

Sir,—Absence from home has prevented me from replying to Mr. H. C. Banister's letter in your issue of the 25th ult. Whilst fully admitting that the quotations which Mr. Banister gives from his own work are on some points considerably in advance of the laws of Fux and Cherubini, I fail to see that they fairly "cover the ground of discussion." Mr. Banister's contrapuntal rules are in the main those of Cherubini—although some useful and sensible modifications are introduced; so that, if the laws of Cherubini are shown to be defective or erroneous, it stands to reason that a modern reproduction must share the same condemnation. The chief defects of the Cherubini school are (i) unnecessary restrictions as to chords; (ii) absence of any proper recognition of implied harmony in two-part exercises; (iii) construction of exercises upon canti fermi, which are "melodies" in name only, and upon which no student can be expected to write satisfactory studies. It will be seen that Mr. Banister's quotations touch only on the first of these matters, and I have searched his book in vain for any indications of advance as regards the second and third points, without which a "wider range of harmonies" would be of no practical use to the student. It is true, on page xiv (preface to the 7th edition), we find the following:—"In connection with this branch of study, I may give it as a strong recommendation that students should figure the lowest part of their counterpoint exercises: especially those in only two parts, where the harmony is less clearly or completely defined." This, however, is clearly an afterthought; for the rules given in the body of the work contain no reference to the subject of contrapuntal chord figuring, nor do we find that the more advanced views embodied in the preface are turned to any practical account. The "unsubmissive erraticism" of which Mr. Banister complains, might be reasonably condemned if the laws to which submission is invited were founded on principles of artistic truth; but the errors and contradictions of the lawgivers are so self-evident that no person of ordinary intelligence can be expected to accept without question the theories which are so complacently enunciated. Mr. Banister's remedy appears to be "more restrictiveness on the part of watchful teachers." This reminds one of the Israelites, who justly complained to Pharaoh of the hardness of their tasks, and were immediately commanded to produce the same work under conditions of increased hardship and difficulty. "Progressive conservatism" is highly desirable, provided there is anything really worth conserving; but text-book Counterpoint presents very little that will stand the test of careful enquiry and research.

Mr. Banister agrees with me in condemning the examination system as applied to Counterpoint, but he refers only to "certain" examinations, as though there are some systems wherein the subject is treated satisfactorily. May I ask where these examinations are to be found? I make a point of studying the papers issued from time to time by the Universities, and other institutions, and I confess I have never been able to discover a trace of even the "progressive conservatism" advocated by Mr. Banister. If an intelligent and reasonable system of contrapuntal examination really exists, Mr. Banister will confer a favour on musicians by making the fact more generally known.

Under the present system of text-books, progress of any kind is impossible, as I endeavoured to show in my remarks upon the work issued by the Cambridge professor; for the system fetters the examiner equally with the student. An examiner setting a paper is bound, in fairness to the candidates, to restrict his questions to the matter contained in the books authorized for study; and to judge of the work submitted by the rules therein laid down. Thus it comes to pass that exercises containing progressions of inconceivable barbarity—such as may be found in the books—are accepted and passed as "good Counterpoint"; whilst passages which might be fully justified by the writings of the great masters would be unhesitatingly condemned.

Every teacher knows the importance of instructing a pupil in the proper use of the various chord formations, commencing of course with the simplest combinations, and gradually introducing those demanding greater care and experience for their proper and effective employment. There is, however, no reason why the principles inculcated in a final lesson should be inconsistent with those taught at the commencement of a course of study; and it is because I find this unnecessary and objectionable feature in the more generally recognized Counterpoint text-books, that I have been compelled to condemn the whole system as illogical and absurd.

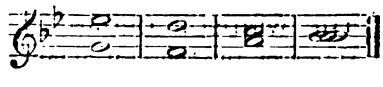
It would be a great pity if the interest which has been excited on this important subject were allowed to die out without the attainment of some practical result. I therefore venture to suggest that the Council of the College of Organists should take steps to organize a series of meetings—on the plan of those held in connection with the Organ Conference—with the object of formulating some really sound rules for contrapuntal study. I feel sure our leading musicians would gladly aid in such an undertaking, and the result of their deliberations would probably be accepted as a satisfactory settlement of the question, even by those who shrink from committing themselves to theories opposed to the established text-books. I need scarcely say that I shall be glad to aid in the work, and to promote its success by every means in my power. I take this opportunity of expressing my gratification at the discussion which has been provoked by the publication of my paper in your columns. So far, professional opinion appears unanimously in favour of reform; for no one has ventured to defend the existing contrapuntal system. There is, therefore, every encouragement to press forward; and although it may take some time to overcome the prejudice of centuries, yet in the end success is certain. Magna est veritas, et prævalebit.

I am, Sir, yours faithfully,

HUMPHREY J. STARK.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "MUSICAL STANDARD."

Sir,—I note with satisfaction that you have opened your columns to correspondence on the subject of Mr. Stark's paper on Counterpoint, read at the College of Organists in May last, when I regretted my inability to attend. I learnt that in the discussion which ensued there was considerable diversity of opinion. Had I been present, I should most certainly have ranged myself on the side of the lecturer. It seems to me a grievous error to teach counterpoint solely in view of bygone periods of musical art, and to pertinaciously adhere to the exclusion of certain things now, solely because they were excluded in those bygone periods. Mr. Stark has ably exposed this as it applies to "second inversions." In University or College examinations in Music, any candidate who would presume to write as follows would probably fare ill at the hands of most examiners :—



It would doubtless be said, firstly, that in the second bar above there is an implied $\frac{4}{2}$, which is "forbidden"; and, secondly, that even if this chord could be tolerated in Counterpoint, as its fourth should descend to A, the F must not proceed to that note, as this would be an implied doubling of the leading note. To this I would reply, firstly, that I consider the implied $\frac{4}{2}$ wholly unobjectionable; and, secondly, that as the A is not doubled (and no amount of argument can show that it is), there is no error whatever.

Mr. Stark's animadversions on the figuring, $\frac{6}{5}$, in certain examples which he quotes, are all to the purpose. This figuring is transparently disingenuous in those examples—it does not there fulfil its profession of setting forth the chords of which the actual notes employed form only a part; and, taking advantage of general usage to omit the figure 3 in denoting chords of $\frac{5}{3}$, it slyly evades the real point at issue. I also agree with Mr. Stark that the following are not necessarily instances of two chords in a bar (though, if they were so, I certainly should not object on that account):— and not only that it is not "fanciful" to assume that the second inversion of a chord is implied on the first note of each of these examples, but, again, that such second inversion, whether implied or actual, is quite unobjectionable, if introduced in a proper manner. We must, of course, guard against a similar scanning throughout, in such an example as the following:—

Digitized by Google

Scholastic discipline is one thing, but the prohibition of what is perfectly good is another, and may involve the serious evil of inculcating narrow and prejudiced views of art. I therefore think that much praise is due to Mr. Stark and Dr. Hiles for their bold attack on a system which has so long "held its own," in defiance of rational progress, and it is eminently satisfactory to find a sympathizer in so excellent an authority as Mr. Banister.

I am, Sir, faithfully yours.

CHARLES E. STEPHENS.

37, Howley Place, Maida Hill, W.
August 25th, 1883.

DR. TUCKERMAN.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "MUSICAL STANDARD."

SIR,—In your issue for August 25th, under the heading of "Passing Events," is a misstatement regarding myself, which, for the present moment, at least, calls for the most unqualified denial. The article in question, speaking of the private musical libraries of Boston, U.S., refers to my own collection of full scores, and other valuable works connected with the art, as being now in the possession of Dr. Eben Tourjée, principal of "The New England Conservatory of Music." This fact is beyond all question; but the writer of the article in the "Home Journal" is mistaken in speaking of me as "the late Dr. Tuckerman;" therefore, in my anxiety to avoid causing unnecessary alarm to relatives and friends by a premature announcement of my decease, I desire to contradict this report under my own signature. It may be remembered that Byron's definition of fame was to be killed in battle, and have one's name misspelt in the newspapers, but my case is far more serious, inasmuch as I have been killed before my decease, though I feel grateful to the slayer, for at least spelling my name correctly in the article under notice.

Yours faithfully,

S. PARKMAN TUCKERMAN.

[Dr. Tuckerman's correction is inserted with very great pleasure and every apology.—ED. Mus. Stand.]

"CYPHERING."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "MUSICAL STANDARD."

SIR,—In reference to notes sticking in organs, to which the term "cyphering," or "ciphering" is generally applied, I shall be glad to know how this expression came in use. The suggestion of the word put forth by your correspondent last week, I think is most likely, but how it is in anyway applicable to denote stickings I cannot make out. As to the mode of spelling "cyphering" in the organ trade, it is generally spelt as just given. Hoping to see this question determined in your valuable paper (as I think it is a matter that should be settled),

I remain, Sir, yours faithfully,

A. C. A.

Sept. 3rd, 1883.

THE WINDSOR ORGAN.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "MUSICAL STANDARD."

SIR,—I fully endorse your note (in issue of Aug. 11th) respecting the absence of a 32-ft. in the organ at St. George's, Windsor, recently re-constructed. Having been acquainted with the organ for some years, I was greatly astonished at the removal of the large pedal pipes, which went down to FFFF. I can only assume that want of funds is the cause, and that when an opportunity occurs it is the intention of the authorities to insert a complete set of 32-ft. pipes in this noble instrument.

I am, Sir, yours faithfully,

A. A.

Aug. 30th, 1883.

Passing Events.

The "Reminiscences of an Old Reporter," will be continued next week, and from time to time.

Figaro has an appreciative account of Mr. A. C. Mackenzie as one of the "coming men."

Mr. E. Aguilar will probably resume his pianoforte recitals at Christmas. He remains in London.

It is said that Mr. Carrodus has recently bought the Stradivarius violin once owned by Paganini at a cost of £680.

Suppé's new opera, "Africa-Reise," has been well received, it is said, at the Stadttheater, Baden, near Vienna.

Signor Casano intends to open a branch of the "West London College of Music" at Ealing, and possibly in other suburbs of London.

Mr. Viard-Louis proposes to hold public lectures on pianoforte music, with illustrations on the instrument, in the ensuing month of November.

One of the American Conservatoires has followed the example of Trinity College, London, by the formation of a class for the study of the conductor's art.

Another token of the healthy growth of orchestral music is the scheme for four concerts at Birmingham arranged for by Messrs. Harrison and Harrison, which includes Mr. C. Hallé's orchestra.

Miss Florence St. John, Miss C. Merivale, M. Marius, and the members of the Avenue Theatre Company, have appeared with success at the Grand Theatre, Leeds, in "Madame Favart" and "Lurette."

Mr. H. Lazarus, since his professional visit to Cardiff, has been visiting at Castle Cary (Torquay), and at Rhyl (North Wales). During the Gloucester Festival Mr. Lazarus has been the guest of the Bishop and Mrs. Ellicott.

Lord and Lady Clarence Paget, both accomplished amateurs, have been entertaining guests on board their steam-yacht the "Miranda" at Ryde, Isle of Wight. Among the party last week were Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, Prince William of Hesse, Maria, Marchioness of Aylesbury, Mr. Kemp, and Mr. Brinley Richards.

People's Concerts are given at the Victoria Hall, Exeter, on Saturday evenings. The first of the series took place on Sept. 1st. The vocal artists were Miss Marian McKenzie, Miss Ambler, Mr. Harper Kearton, Mr. W. H. Brereton. Instrumental artists: Miss Annie Williams, Miss Marie Schumann, violin; Dr. Hillier, clarionet; and Mr. Harold Ryder, pianoforte.

Herr J. B. Bonawitz intends to give a series of four "Historical Pianoforte Recitals," at the Blüthner Rooms, Kensington Gardens Square, on Oct. 17, Nov. 7 and 21, and Dec. 5, Herr Bonawitz will review deceased, as well as living, composers at every recital. He begins a long list with Frescobaldi (1591—1654), and concludes with Brahms, F. Hiller, Zopff, Sgambati, and the Abbé Lisst.

At the recent Carnarvon Eisteddfod, Mr. Henry Leslie, in delivering his adjudication on the rendering of "'Twas then, ye Sons of God," from the cantata "David and Saul," by Mr. D. Jenkins, Mus. Bac., of Aberystwith, said, he was bound to pay great tribute to the Principality for the learned and classical composition that had been rendered by the choirs. He had been greatly pleased by it, and it was a credit to the country that it possessed such an excellent composer.

Sir Michael Costa has presented to the Naples Royal College of Music the manuscript score of four operas and four ballets. The operas are "L'Imagine," "Il Sospetto Funesto," "Il Delitto Punito," and "Don Carlos," of which the first was performed for the first time in 1825 and the second in 1826 by the pupils of the College of St. Sebastian. The ballets are "Il Castello di Kenilworth," "Un'ora a Napola," "Sir Huon," and "Alma." On the first page of each score Sir Michael has written: "To the famous archives of the Naples Royal College of Music. In memory of M. Costa. London, August 15, 1883." At the same time the illustrious director presented the bâton used by him for ten years. It is of ebony, with a coral pommel, and at the tip has an effigy of Garibaldi, also in coral.

Digitized by Google

A musical contemporary of authority has it that the result of the twelve performances of Wagner's "Parsifal," at Bayreuth, seems to have been financially as well as artistically satisfactory. At any rate, the reopening of the theatre next summer has been decided upon. The artists, who have formed a society under the presidency of Liszt, will give their services, as heretofore, most disinterestedly.

The new comic opera which Mr. Desmond L. Ryan has written, and Signor Schira has set to music, has been in hand for some months. It is entitled "The Isle of Beauty," and it includes a good deal of the humorous and the serious elements. These two gentlemen have already collaborated for an important musical work the clever cantata "The Lord of Burleigh," produced some years ago at a Birmingham Festival.

The Times, as duly expected by musical men, has a characteristic, not to say vicious, notice of the new works produced at Gloucester, on Wednesday. The writer is good enough to use the expression, "organists' music," as a happy medium for politely stigmatising music as at once ambitious, pedantic, and valueless. Possibly he forgets that Gibbons, Purcell, Bach, Handel, Mozart, Mendelssohn, and in our own day, Smart, Saint-Saëns, Guilmant, Hopkins, Best, Stainer, Ouseley, Sullivan, Stanford, etc., were—and are—organ players, and wrote, and one is glad to add, some are still writing, "organists' music."

A rumour has been extensively circulated to the effect that Mr. Horatio Chipp is about to retire from his profession. There is no truth in the report, which Mr. Chipp asks us to deny. The following is a copy of a letter bearing on the subject which he has received from Sir Arthur Sullivan:—"Mr. Spark, of Leeds, has forwarded me a note from you which I read with surprise and regret. It is my fault that you were not offered an engagement at the forthcoming Leeds Festival, as I was told that you had retired from the active pursuit of your profession. It is too late now, I fear, to remedy the matter, but I write you these few lines to show you my great regret that I shall not have the pleasure of seeing you at Leeds, and so explain to you why your name was omitted."

The United States Music Teachers' National Association will hold its eighth annual session in Boston next year, the recent convention at Providence having so decided. Another important result of the recent meeting was the appointment of a committee of five persons as follows:—E. W. Bowman, of St. Louis, N. Coe Stewart, of Cleveland, Wm. H. Sherwood, Carlysle Petersilea, and S. B. Whitney, of Boston, to consult with other eminent musicians of the country at large as to the advisability of establishing a College of Musicians much upon the plan of the English College of Organists; to be incorporated and impowered to examine candidates for the position of teachers of theory, voice, piano and organ, enabling the public to know that any person holding a certificate from the college is qualified and entitled to confidence. An additional duty of this committee is to formulate a plan for the establishment of State and district boards of examiners, that all sections and all branches of the music profession may be reached.

The Querist.

QUERY.

THE HALT OF THE CARAVAN.—Can any of your readers inform me whether Sir H. R. Bishop's glee, "The Halt of the Caravan," appeared in either of his operas, or merely as a separate piece.—C. T. JOHNSON.

REPLY TO G. L.

DUTIES OF A CHOIRMASTER.—I am unaware of the existence of any work dealing with the duties of a Choirmaster, and his relations with the other officials. When the organist is choirmaster, then the choirmaster should undoubtedly have full control over the choir, but under other circumstances, choirmastership must be based upon considerations of an exceptional character. The dual arrangement rarely works well, for unlike the conductor of an orchestra dealing with fixed orchestration, the choirmaster has no power over the accompaniments. A full consideration of this subject would be a real gain to the profession.—ED. Mus. Stand.

Service Lists.

SIXTEENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

SEPTEMBER 9th.

London.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Stainer in E flat; Introit, O saving victim; Holy Communion, Stainer in E flat. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Stainer in E flat; Anthem, Ascribe unto the Lord (Wesley).

FOUNDLING CHAPEL. — Morn.: Service, Smart in F; Anthem, Remember, O Lord (Hummel). Aft.: Children's Service.

HOLY TRINITY, GRAY'S INN ROAD. — Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Chanted.; Jubilate, Best in A. Even.: Service, Magnificat, Chanted; Nunc Dimittis, Tours in F; Anthem, Incline Thine ear (Himmel).

HOLY TRINITY, TULSE HILL. — Morn.: Chant Service. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Gadsby in C; Anthem, Consider the lilies, and Doth not wisdom cry (Haking).

ST. JAMES'S PRIVATE EPISCOPAL CHAPEL, SOUTHWARK.—Morn.: Service, Introit, He is blessed that cometh "Requiem" (Mozart); Communion Service, Schubert in B flat. Even.: Service, Tours in B flat; Anthem, The earth is the Lord's (Spohr).

ST. MAGNUS, LONDON BRIDGE.—Morn.: Service, Opening Anthem, I will arise (Creyton); Te Deum and Jubilate, Goss in A; Kyrie (Goss). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Ebdon in C; Anthem, Out of the deep (Mozart).

ST. MARGARET PATTENS, ROOD LANE, FENCHURCH STREET.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Smart in F; Benedictus (Stainer); Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei, and Gloria, Schubert in C; Offertory Anthem, O rest in the Lord (Mendelssohn). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Stark in A; Anthem, Blessed be the God and Father (Wesley).

ST. PAUL'S, AVENUE ROAD, SOUTH HAMPSTEAD.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Tilleard in F; Benedictus (Goss); Kyrie, Nares in F. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Bunnett in F; Anthem, I am Alpha and Omega (Stainer).

ST. PETER'S (EATON SQUARE).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Garrett in F. Even.: Service, Calkin in B flat; Anthem, Comfort ye, my people (Handel).

ST. PETER'S, VERE STREET, W.—Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Wood in F; Anthem, O come let us worship (Mendelssohn).

ST. AGNES, KENNINGTON PARK, S.E.—Morn.: Service, Holy Communion, Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Gloria, Armes in A; Benedictus and Agnus Dei, Monk in C.

ST AUGUSTINE AND ST. FAITH, WATLING STREET.—Morn.: Service, Barnby in E; Introit, The Lord is my light (South); Communion Service, Garrett in E flat. Even.: Service, Barnby in E; Anthem, Praise the Lord (Goss).

ST. SAVIOUR'S, HOXTON. — Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Goss in F; Holy Communion; Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, and Gloria in excelsis, Ouseley in C. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Bunnett in F; Anthem, O love the Lord (Sullivan).

ST. SEPULCHRE'S, HOLBORN.—Morn: Service, Rogers in D. Even.: Service, Arnold in A; Anthem, We will rejoice (Croft).

Country.

ST. ASAPH CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Walmisley in F; Anthem, O rest in the Lord (Mendelssohn). Even.: Service, Hall in C; Anthem, Hearken unto my voice (Sydenham).

ASHBURNE CHURCH, DERBYSHIRE. — Morn.: Service, throughout (Dykes in F). Even.: Service, Musgrave in F; Anthem, Give peace, O Lord (Calcott).

BELFAST (ST. GEORGE'S).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Chipp in D, No. 80; Jubilate, Stewart in G; Apostles' Creed, Harmonized Monotone; Full Communion Service, "Celebration Choral," Tours in F; Offertory, Let your Light (Monk). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Stanford in B flat; Apostles' Creed, Harmonized Monotone, Anthem, O give thanks (Elvey).

BIRMINGHAM (S. ALBAN THE MARTYR).—Morn.: Service Te Deum and Benedictus, Dykes in F; Holy Communion; Woodward in E flat. Evensong: Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Barnby in E.

BIRMINGHAM (ST. CYPRIAN'S, HAY MILLS).—Morn.: Service, Cobb in G; Anthem, Daughters of Jerusalem, and Yea, though I walk (Sullivan). Even.: Service, Cobb in G; Anthem, Hear my prayer (Mendelssohn).

CANTERBURY CATHEDRAL. — Morn.: Service, Goss in F; Te Deum, Oakeley in F; Anthem, O Lord, give Thy Holy Spirit (Buck); Communion, Whyley in D. Even.: Service, Longhurst in E; Anthem, The Lord is my Light (Boyce).

Digitized by Google

CARLISLE CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Lloyd in E flat; Introit, We wait for (Armes); Kyrie and Creed, Lloyd in E flat. Even.: Service, Stainer in E flat; Anthem, Praise His awful name (Spohr).

DONCASTER (PARISH CHURCH).—Morn.: Service, Calkin in B flat; Kyrie and Creed (Hopkins); Introit, O Lord, my God (Wesley). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Hopkins in F; Anthem, The wilderness (Goss).

DUBLIN, ST. PATRICK'S (NATIONAL) CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, King in C; Holy Communion, Kyrie, Creed, Sanctus, King in C; Anthem, O God, Lord God (Mozart). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Stainer in B flat; Anthems, Cast thy burden (Mendelssohn), and I will love Thee (Clarke).

ELY CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Roberts in D; Kyrie and Credo, Roberts in D; Gloria, Monk in A; Harvest Thanksgiving, Special Sermon, Hymn, Benedicte; Anthem, Give unto the Lord (Bridge). Even.: Service, Songs of gladness, &c., from "Naomi" (Chipp).

HARROGATE (ST. PETER'S CHURCH). — Morn.: Service, Te Deum Harvey in G; Benedictus, Chant; Anthem, Arise, Shine (Elvey); Kyrie and Credo, Wesley in E. Even.: Service, Magnificat, Peregrine Tone, Harmony by Bach; Nunc Dimittis, Haynes in G; Anthem, Comfort ye (Handel).

LEEDS PARISH CHURCH.—Morn.: Service, Hatton in E; Anthem, Send out Thy light (Gounod); Introit, Blessed is He (Gounod); Kyrie and Creed, Walmisley in F. Even.: Service, Gounod in D; Anthem, The Lord is righteous (Handel).

LICHFIELD CATHEDRAL. — Morn.: Service, Cooke in G; Anthem, As pants the hart (Spohr). Even.: Service, Cooke in G; Anthem, Stand up and bless (Goss).

LIVERPOOL CATHEDRAL.—Aft.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Stainer in E flat; Anthem, Hear my prayer (Mendelssohn).

LIVERPOOL (ST. CUTHBERT'S, EVERTON).—Morn.: Service, Turle in D (unaccompanied). Even.: Service Bridge in C (Festal Service) Anthem, In that day (Elvey).

MANCHESTER CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Benedictus, Kyrie and Creed, Goss in D; Gloria, Hopkins in D; Anthem, Like as a father (Hatton). Aft.: Service, Goss in E; Anthem, Lift Thine eyes (Mendelssohn).

MANCHESTER (ST. BENEDICT'S).—Morn.: Service, Kyrie (Elvey); Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei, and Gloria in excelsis, Farmer in B flat. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Tours in F.

MANCHESTER (ST. JOHN BAPTIST, HULME).—Morn.: Service, Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, and Gloria in excelsis, Williams in D; Benedictus and Agnus Dei, Anguter in B flat. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, (Willing).

NORTH BERWICK, N.B. (S. BALDRED'S).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Garrett in F; Anthem, If ye love me (Mark); Kyrie (Stainer). Even.: Service, Chants; Anthem, Thou that killest, and To Thee, O Lord "St. Paul" (Mendelssohn).

ROCHESTER CATHEDRAL. — Morn.: Service, Dean in A; Anthem, Come unto me (Smith). Even.: Service, Ebdon in C; Anthem, Be not afraid (Mendelssohn).

SHERBORNE ABBEY. — Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Jackson in F. Even.: Service, Chants; Anthem, God is gone up (Croft).

SOUTHAMPTON (ST. MARY'S CHURCH).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Woodward in D; Holy Communion, Introit, Like as the hart (Hoyte); Service, Woodward in A; Offertory, Not every one (Barnby); Paternoster (Hoyte). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Walmisley in D minor; Apostles' Creed, Harmonized Monotone.

WELLS CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Wesley in F; Introit, Behold to obey (Macfarren). Even.: Service, Arnold in D; Anthem) I will love Thee (Clarke).

WOLVERHAMPTON (ST. PETER'S COLLEGIATE CHURCH).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Stainer in E flat; Benedictus, Gauntlett in E; Anthem, Send out Thy Light (Gounod). Even. Service, Responses, Tallis; Magnificat, Hopkins in G; Nunc Dimittis, Barnby in E; Anthem, Blessed be the God and Father (Wesley).

WORCESTER CATHEDRAL. — Morn.: Service, Smart in G; Anthem, O worship the Lord (Thorne). Even. Service, Smart in G; Anthem, Sing ye praise (Mendelssohn).

 Post-cards must be sent to the Editor, 6, Argyle Square, W.C., by Wednesday. Lists are frequently omitted in consequence of not being received in time.

NEWSPAPERS sent should have distinct marks opposite to the matter to which attention is required.

APPOINTMENT.

Mr. A. S. ROUND, A.C.O., has been appointed Organist of the Parish Church, Wick.

HELE & COMPANY,

ORGAN BUILDERS,

WYNDHAM STREET, PLYMOUTH.

London Agency: Mr. W. H. HELE, 59, Gresham St., E.C.

Organs of any magnitude contracted for. Professional attendance when desired.

Extract from testimony by E. H. Turpin, Esq., of College of Organists, referring to organ at St. John's Church, Waterloo Road, S.E.:—

"To Messrs. Hele and Co. very high praise is due for the judgment and skill with which they have accomplished the rebuilding of the instrument. All the foundation work I noticed to be round, even, and admirably voiced. The 'chorus' struck me as being well balanced and decisive, without being intrusive or too pronounced above the 8-feet work. The reeds are of very high quality, at once rich and characteristic in tone. The solo registers I found to be after their several types—delicate and finished in quality of tone and in their voicing. The mechanism throughout a trying night's work never failed me, and it is everywhere true, reliable, and admirable. My impressions were so pleasant, that I feel it is a duty to express an unqualified approval of the labours of the very able organ builders."

NEW ORGAN PIECE, by M. GUILMANT.—SPOHR'S 24th PSALM (English words), 9d. and 1s. Ditto arranged for Organ Solo by M. GUILMANT, 1s. 6d.
London: NOVELLO, EWER & CO.

TE DEUM LAUDAMUS in A, for Congregational Use, by W. de M. SERGISON.
London: NOVELLO, EWER & CO.

THEORY OF MUSIC, BOOKS I., II., III., by LOUISA GIBSON. FIRST BOOK Revised (not Catechetical), Popular Edition, price 1s.
London: WEEKES & CO.; NOVELLO & CO.

Just Published.

HARVEST ANTHEM, "BLESSED BE THOU, LORD GOD OF ISRAEL." In Four Voices, by E. BUNNETT, Mus.D., Cantab. Octavo, Price Threepence.
London: NOVELLO, EWER & CO.

PLAYING FROM SCORE.—The Celebrated Treatise on Playing from Score (a Clear Introduction to the Art of making Arrangements for the Organ, Pianoforte, &c.), translated into English, is now appearing in the Orchestra. Monthly, price 3d.; Annual Subscription, 3s. 6d.
W. REEVES 185, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

MUSICAL COMPETITIONS, MONTHLY.—Four NEW SONGS, by F. E. Weatherly, to be Set to Music. See the Orchestra for August and September. Post Free, 3½d. each.
W. REEVES, 185, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged, cloth, 3s. 6d.

BEETHOVEN'S PIANOFORTE SONATAS, explained by ERNST von ELTERLEIN, translated by E. Hill. Preface by E. Paner.
W. REEVES, 185, FLEET STREET, LONDON.

THE STUDENT'S HELMHOLTZ.

MUSICAL ACOUSTICS,

OR

THE PHENOMENA OF SOUND AS CONNECTED WITH MUSIC,

With Examination Questions and over 100 Illustrations,

BY JOHN BROADHOUSE.

Price 7s. 6d. net.

London: WILLIAM REEVES, 185, Fleet-street.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts, excepting under exceptional circumstances.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit, at Three per cent. interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables, the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons, and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares, and Annuities.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

The Birkbeck Building Society's Annual Receipts exceed Five Millions.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with immediate Possession, and no Rent to Pay.—Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate Possession, either for Building or Gardening purposes.—Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

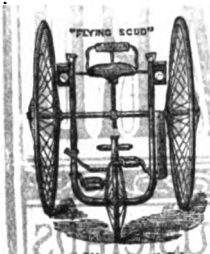
A pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

Digitized by Google

BICYCLES AND TRICYCLES.
NEW AND SECOND-HAND.



"FLYING SCUD" and "ECLECTIC" TRICYCLES, are the Machines for 1883. Spoken of by the Daily News of January 30th as "Splendid machines." "NANCY LEE," Weldless Steel," and "NONSUCH" Steel Bicycles, from £5 5s. Any machine at maker's price for twelve or less equal monthly payments, or for £5 down and 10s. per month, or large discount and carriage paid for cash. Can be seen and tried before purchasing in our school (60 by 40, concrete floor, tuition free), adjoining Show-rooms, the largest in London, with over 400 new and second-hand on View. Machines bought, sold, cleaned, repaired (estimates given), warehoused, advanced upon and exchanged.

Illustrated Lists post free. Hours 9 till 7; Saturdays till 4.

Repairs of all kinds neatly, cheaply, and promptly executed. Cheapest house in the trade for fittings. Parts and sundries of all descriptions kept in stock.

Machines Let on Hire with Option of Purchase.

SOUTH LONDON MACHINISTS' COMPANY.

STEAM WORKS: Suffolk Works, Suffolk Grove, 42 Great Suffolk Street, S.E. Show Rooms and Offices: 28 and 29, Suffolk Grove. Bicycle and Tricycle School: 18, Suffolk Grove. City Depot, Show Rooms, and School: Tower Chambers, Moorgate Street, E.C. (Nearly opposite Moorgate Street Station.) PERAMBULATORS and all Domestic Machines at lowest prices for cash, or on easy terms without extra charge. Lists free. State kind required.

ESTABLISHED 1872.

When writing please say where you saw this advertisement.

BEETHOVEN'S SYMPHONIES CRITICALLY DISCUSSED. By A. T. TEETGEN. 3s. 6d.

FREDERIC CHOPIN; His Life, Letters, and Works. By M. KARASOWSKI. Translated by E. HILL. 2 vols., 12s. 6d.

ELEMENTARY MUSIC. By Dr. WESTBROOK. 1s. cloth, 1s. 6d.

TO ORGANISTS and CHOIRMASTERS.—VOCAL EXERCISES for CHOIRS and SCHOOLS, by Dr. WESTBROOK, in neat cover, 2d.

WOMAN AS A MUSICIAN, an Art Historical Study. By F. RAYMOND RITTER. Price One Shilling.

TO PIANOFORTE TEACHERS.—Plaidy's (professor at Leipzig Conservatory) PIANOFORTE TEACHER'S GUIDE can be had in boards, price 1s.

W. REEVES Fleet Street, London.

T. R. WILLIS,
Organ Builder, Metal & Wood Pipe Maker and Voicer,
TOWER ORGAN WORKS, 29, MINORIES, LONDON.

AN ORGAN KEPT FOR PRACTICE.
REBUILDING, TUNING, AND REPAIRING.

E & W. SNELL,
Manufacturers of Harmoniums, and Reed Pedal Organs,
KING STREET NORTH, CAMDEN TOWN, LONDON, N.W.

NOTE.—These are the only Instruments at which an Organist can really find himself "at home," as all Scales, Positions, and Measurements are adopted strictly in accordance with the Resolutions of the Council of the College of Organists. Estimates free.

MALEY, YOUNG & OLDKNOW,
ORGAN BUILDERS,
KING'S ROAD, ST. PANCRAS, LONDON, N.W.

Specifications, Estimates, and Designs for Church, Chamber, Concert, and all Descriptions of Organs.
Materials, Workmanship, and Tone guaranteed to be First Class.
Organs rebuilt to suit any position, enlarged, and Revoiced at very moderate charges.
Tunings in all parts of the Kingdom.

PROSPECTUS FREE ON APPLICATION.

HENRY SPEECHLY,
CAMDEN ORGAN STEAM FACTORY,
KING'S ROAD, ST. PANCRAS, LONDON, N.W.
ESTABLISHED 1860.

Specifications and Estimates for Organs of any Magnitude, also for Re constructions, Repairs, and Re-voicing.

Tunings contracted for, and Tuners sent to all parts of the Country at regular intervals or when required.

ORGANS ON HIRE WITH OPTION OF PURCHASE.

 Church, Chamber, and Chancel Organs for Sale or Hire; One or Two Manuals. Ready for immediate use. Easy Terms if required.

All Pipes and other Parts manufactured on the Premises.

WITH 25 PER CENT DISCOUNT FOR CASH, OR 15/- PER MONTH, (SECOND HAND) 10/- Per Month ON THE 3 YEARS' SYSTEM.

BORD'S PIANOS

PIANOS EXCHANGED. LISTS FREE OF

C. STILES & Co., 42 SOUTHAMPTON ROW, W.C.

CONSTANT LAURENT, HARMONIUM and ANGLO-ORGAN MANUFACTURER, Established in 1859 at 85, HIGH STREET, MARYLEBONE, LONDON, W.—Repairing and Tuning Executed Promptly. Price List on Application.—Intending Purchasers are respectfully solicited to inspect my Instruments and Factory.

EUSTACE INGRAM, Organ Builder,
Combines excellence of Tone and Workmanship with Economy.
INSPECTION INVITED.
WORKS:—Burnard Place, Eden Grove, Holloway, London, N.

MUSIC SENT ON SALE OR RETURN on highly advantageous terms by B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster-row, London.

MUSIC of EVERY PUBLISHER supplied to Dealers, Teachers, and Schools. Having the largest varied Stock Europe. The terms, which are highly advantageous, sent on application London: B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster-row.

ALL WHO POSSESS A PIANOFORTE and cannot play it, may now play at once, without any previous knowledge of Music, by ROYLANCE'S NUMERICAL SYSTEM, which contains a FIGURED DIAGRAM to fit on the Keyboard of any Pianoforte (or Harmonium, and a choice selection of forty SACRED and SECULAR MELODIES, composed for the use of those who have no time to study Music. Thousands are now able to play who did not believe such a thing possible. The diagram alone will be found most useful to Professors for teaching purposes. 6d. nett.—Price 2s. 6d. nett; post free 33 stamps.—C. ROYLANCE, 184, Tottenham Court-road; and all Music Sellers.

THE YOUNG ARTIST.
A selection of Classical Works for the
PIANOFORTE.

1. SONATA in C, Op. 20, No. 2	L. Kozeluch	4	0
2. SONATA in G, Op. 4, No. 1	G. F. Pinto	4	0
3. SONATA in G, Op. 23, No. 3	J. B. Cramer	4	0
4. SONATA in C, Op. 8, No. 1	L. Kozeluch	4	0
5. SONATA in B flat, Op. 60	J. Woelfl	4	0
6. SONATA in C flat, Op. 37, No. 3	D. Steibelt	4	0
7. SONATA in E flat, Op. unknown	L. Kozeluch	4	0
8. SONATA in C, Op. 37, No. 1	D. Steibelt	4	0
9. SONATA in C, Op. 9, No. 3	J. B. Cramer	4	0
10. SONATA in G, Op. 8, No. 2	L. Kozeluch	4	0
11. SONATA in C, Op. 4, No. 3	G. F. Pinto	4	0
12. SONATA in G, Op. unknown	J. B. Cramer	4	0

EDITED AND FINGERED BY
W. J. WESTBROOK, Mus.Doc., Cantab.
London: EDWIN ASHDOWN, Hanover Square, W.

SYDNEY SMITH'S
FOUR NEW PIANOFORTE PIECES.

LA FEE DES ONDES. Morceau brilliant ...	4 0
LE DOMINO NOIR. Fantaisie brillante sur l'opéra d'Auber	4 0
MARGUERITE. Chanson d'une fileuse	4 0
STYRIENNE	4 0

SYDNEY SMITH'S
FOUR NEW PIANOFORTE DUETS.

GAVOTTE ET MUSETTE	5 0
I PIFFERARI. Musette moderne	5 0
LOHENGRIN. Grande Fantaisie sur l'opéra de R. Wagner	6 0
NONCHALANCE. Caprice de Concert	5 0

LONDON:
EDWIN ASHDOWN, Hanover-square.

Printed for the Proprietor by BOWDEN, HUDSON & Co., at 23, Red Lion Street, Holborn, London, W.C.; and Published by WILLIAM REEVES, at the Office, 185, Fleet Street, E.C. West End Agents:—WEEKES & CO., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W. Subscriptions and Advertisements are received either by the Publisher or West End Agents.—Communications for the EDITOR are to be forwarded to his private address, 6, Argyle Square, W.C.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 1883.—Entered at the General Post Office as a Newspaper.

Digitized by Google

The Musical Standard

A NEWSPAPER FOR MUSICIANS PROFESSIONAL AND AMATEUR

No. 998. Vol. XXV. FOURTH SERIES. SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 1883. WEEKLY: PRICE 5D.

THE MUSICAL STANDARD is published every Saturday, price 3*d.*, by post, 3½*d.*; and may be had of any bookseller or newsagent by ordering its regular supply.

SUBSCRIPTION.—The Musical Standard is posted to subscribers at 15*s.* a year; half a year, 7*s.* 6*d.*, payable in advance.

The rate is the same to France, Belgium, Germany, Italy, United States, and Canada.

Post Office Orders to be made payable to the Publisher, William Reeves, 185, Fleet Street, London, or to the West-end Agents, Messrs. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W.

ADVERTISEMENTS.—The charge for ordinary advertisements in The Musical Standard is 2*s.* 6*d.* for three lines or less; and 6*d.* for each line (10 words) in addition. "Organist wanted," 3*s.* 6*d.* for 3 lines or less. A reduction is made for a series.

FRONT PAGE.—Concert and auction advertisements, &c., are inserted in the front page of The Musical Standard, and charged one-third in addition to the ordinary rates. Other advertisements will be inserted on the front page, or in the leader page, if desired, at the same terms.

LEEDS MUSICAL FESTIVAL, 1883.
October 10th, 11th, 12th, and 13th.

FIRST SEATS	(Reserved) Morning	£1 1s. 0d.	each.
"	Evening	0 15 0	"
SECOND SEATS	(Reserved) Morning	0 10 6	"
"	Evening	0 7 6	"

No application attended to without a remittance for the full amount of the Tickets required.

Detailed Programmes may be had on application.

FRED. R. SPARK, Hon. Sec.

Festival Office (close to the Town Hall), Leeds.

MUSICAL INTERNATIONAL COLLEGE, LONDON.
Founded for Examining purposes only.
Principal—EDWIN M. LOTT.
PRACTICAL EXAMINATIONS in INSTRUMENTAL and VOCAL MUSIC throughout the Kingdom, conducted personally by the Principal. Next LOCAL THEORETICAL EXAMINATION, DECEMBER 6, 1883.
For particulars, address SECRETARY, Musical International College, 270, Cornwall Road, Notting Hill, W.

THE ORPHAN SCHOOL FOR DAUGHTERS OF MUSICIANS will be opened SEPTEMBER 17TH. Boarders and Day Pupils also received on moderate terms. Special musical advantages.—Address, Miss Helen Kenway, 10, Darnley Road, Notting Hill, W.

LESSONS IN HARMONY, COUNTERPOINT, and COMPOSITION, with Thoro' Bass.—"Oxon," 14, Hanover Street, W.

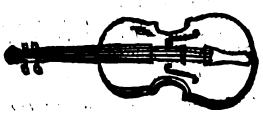
YOUTH will give Services as ORGANIST, &c., in return for HOME and TUITION.—"Youth," 14, Hanover Street, W.

MUS.DOC. and MUS.BAC., OXON. and CANTAB., L.R.A.M., F.C.O., &c. ANALYSIS of RESULTS of DR. ALLISON'S PREPARATION LESSONS (Postal and Personal), for above, and for R.A.M. Local and other Musical Examinations sent to Applicants.—CAMBRIDGE HOUSE, 68, Nelson Street, Manchester.

THEORY OF MUSIC, BOOKS I., II., III., by LOUISA GIBSON. "FIRST BOOK" Revised (not Catechetical). Popular Edition, 1s.; A. B. C., 6d.; "Musical Examiner" shortly.
London: WEEKES & CO.; NOVELLO & CO.

For Sale.
COSTA'S "ELI": an ORATORIO, FULL SCORE, folio, Beautiful Copy, in olive morocco, gilt edges, for £1 12s. (pub. £3 3s. unbound, the binding worth about £1 18s.), £1 12s.—W. Reeves, 185, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

TE DEUM LAUDAMUS in A, for Congregational Use, by W. de M. SERGISON.
London: NOVELLO, EWER & CO.



MAKERS AND REPAIRERS,
GEORGE WITHERS & CO.
(Late of Coventry Street),
WHOLESALE IMPORTERS OF
MUSICAL STRINGS,
From Rome, Padua, and Naples.
A FINE COLLECTION OF ITALIAN INSTRUMENTS.
Bows, Cases, Music Stands, &c. See Price Lists.
51, ST. MARTIN'S LANE, LONDON.

Ready on Nov. 1, medium 8vo, about 300 pages, with 50 original illustrations, consisting of Woodcuts and Photographs, price 15s.
VOICE, SONG, AND SPEECH, a Practical Guide for SINGERS and SPEAKERS, containing the combined experience of Vocal Surgeon and of Voice Trainer, by LENNOX BROWNE, F.R.C.S.Ed., Senior Surgeon to the Central London Throat and Ear Hospital, and EMIL BEHNKE, Lecturer on Vocal Physiology, and Teacher of Voice Production.
SAMPSON LOW & Co., 188, Fleet Street, E.C.

NEW HARVEST ANTHEM.
"THOU VISITEST THE EARTH," composed by E. H. Turpin. Price 6d.
WEEKES & CO.; 14, Hanover Street.

CHRISTMAS HYMNS AND CAROLS.—New Edition. One Penny each.
"RING OUT, GLAD CHIMES, AT CHRISTMAS TIME."
"CHILDREN'S VOICES."
"CHRIST IS BORN IN BETHLEHEM."
"LULLABY."
"GATHER THE HOLLY BOUGH."
"CHRISTMAS MORNING."
"GLORY TO JESUS."
"HARK! WE HEAR THE CHILDREN SINGING."
Words by Mrs. Gaskell. Music by Edwin Lemare.
WEEKES & CO., 14, Hanover Street, London, W.

JUST PUBLISHED.—Full Anthem, "BE NOT DRUNK WITH WINE, WHEREIN IS EXCESS." For Temperance Services, etc., by E. H. TURPIN. Price 4d. net.—Messrs. WEEKES & CO., 14, Hanover-street W

NEW ORGAN PIECE, by M. GUILMANT.—SPOHR'S 24th PSALM (English words), 9d. and 2s. Ditto arranged for Organ Solo by M. GUILMANT, 1s. 6d.
London: NOVELLO, EWER & CO.

Just Published.
HARVEST ANTHEM, "BLESSED BE THOU, LORD GOD OF ISRAEL." In Four Voices, by E. BENNETT, Mus.D., Cantab. Octavo, Price Threepence.
London: NOVELLO, EWER & CO.

PLAYING FROM SCORE.—The Celebrated Treatise on Playing from Score (a Clear Introduction to the Art of making Arrangements for the Organ, Pianoforte, &c.), translated into English, is now appearing in the Orchestra. Monthly, price 3d.; Annual Subscription, 3s. 6d.
W. REEVES, 185, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged, cloth, 3s. 6d.
BEETHOVEN'S PIANOFORTE SONATAS, explained by ERNST von ELTERLEIN, translated by E. Hill. Preface by E. Pauer.
W. REEVES, 185, FLEET STREET, LONDON.

HOW TO PLAY CHOPIN. The Works of Frederic Chopin, and their Proper Interpretation. Three Lectures delivered at Varsovia by Jean Kleczynski. Translated by Alfred Whittingham. With several Illustrations. Post 8vo, boards, 2s. 6d.; cloth, bevelled boards, 3s. 6d.
W. REEVES: 185, Fleet Street, London E.C.

Digitized by Google

SOME MUSICAL ETHICS AND ANALOGIES.

[A Paper read before the College of Organists, June 5th, 1883.]

By Henry C. Banister.

In announcing, as the subject of my Paper, "Some Musical Ethics and Analogies," I have proposed to myself some treatment of our beautiful art other than technical: some considerations concerning it which shall be a relief from that theoretical method of speaking about it to which our professional habits render us so liable; and, moreover, some way of looking at and treatment of it which shall not lead us into the region of pure æsthetics—whatever that may be—any more than into the technical region, which we know only too well. I have thought that the terms Ethics and Analogies may be sufficiently elastic to include such informal and untechnical considerations as those which I propose submitting to you.

By Ethics, we understand, speaking generally, moral laws: by the Ethics of any subject, the moral laws affecting, or exemplified by that subject. By Analogy, we understand the resemblances between any two matters, or rather, between their relationships, bearings, influences, and the like.* By Musical Ethics and Analogies, or, better still, the Ethics and Analogies of Music, then, it is implied that, in certain important senses, Music does not stand alone, isolated, independent: moral considerations affect it, as they do other matters; and that, on the other hand, although it is in some respects unique, it has counterparts and analogies which may serve to illustrate it, clear our perceptions about it, and increase our interest in it. For I have always found that my acquaintance with Musical Art has enhanced my enjoyment of all else that is imaginative, ideal, and artistically structural. And there may be a vice versâ: a reflex process.

All of you musicians are familiar enough with, and know what I mean when I talk of the German 6th, the French 6th, the Italian 6th, the Neapolitan 6th, the Major and Minor Triads, the Diminished Triad, the Augmented Triad. I doubt, however, whether you will feel quite so much at home if I venture to refer to the Welsh Triads. Pardon me if I do you injustice: but of course you do not all come from the Principality, nor have you all been to an Eisteddfod. These Welsh Triads are, I understand, a collection of poetical histories, mythologies, ethical and legal maxims, &c., tersely expressed, and all in groups of three: hence their name. Now one of these Triads enunciates "the three excellencies of Poetry: simplicity of language, simplicity of subject, and simplicity of invention." And it strikes me that musicians should be the last to decline to accept, in the form of a Triad, and appropriate to their own Art, the terse enunciation of one of the first foundation principles of all true Art. Simplicity in character and life all right-minded men approve: simplicity of purpose, manner, and speech: whether as opposed to obscurity, mystery, or to duplicity: not at all to profundity. For the man of true simplicity, in character and life, has principles so profound, so deep down, that the waves of fashion, and the gusts of passion, do not disturb the consistent stedfastness of his career. It is a mistake, and an offence against the morality of words, to speak of a certain sort of bad man as deep, and cunning. The man of ken, the knowing man, in the right sense of the word, is really deep and profound. And yet the man with deep knowledge, and profound principles and character, is, in the truest sense, superficial: that is, there is nothing that need be buried and concealed: therefore it comes to the surface: you see, by and on the surface, what there is deep down. For when we characterise a life as marked by "simplicity and godly sincerity," we use two words which mean, respectively, without fold, and without wax. Duplicity, double-foldedness, which we all abhor—in others, at least—stands opposed to simplicity: and sincerity just expresses what the finest honey is: no residuum of wax: all sweet and pure.

And this simplicity is a moral quality: therefore it finds its place in this treatment of ethics. For if there is to be simplicity of language, subject, invention, there is to be, of course, definiteness of aim: and this must be, clearly to express a pure idea. A pure idea: no attempt to invest the impure with interest. "To be for ever true is the Science of Poetry."* Mendelssohn detested the having to write an overture to that which he designated the "odious play" of "Ruy Blas." And yet, quite recently, in an able journal, distinguished for its high tone, it has been declared that "music is neither good nor bad, any more than poetry or eloquence, but is a method of expression which to many organisations is capable of conveying higher, more delicate, and, above all, more exact meanings than any other. But it can convey any meaning, and does very often convey a sensual one."† That it should have been possible to write this, may well be laid to the charge of certain composers who have debased the art by vile associations. But it has yet to be proved, I venture to submit, that music can, with definiteness or otherwise, "convey a sensual meaning." More of this, anon.

But, "simplicity of invention": does it exist in music? Yes. Bach could, with the honesty and conscience which characterised the simple-minded man, call his two-part, and three-part movements for the clavichord, Inventions. Not Transcriptions: oh! no. Not "Pensées fugitives": no! These pieces were not mere transient, unworked, unthought effervescences, or off-shoots: they were inventions. He came upon these pieces:—discovered them, in the inventory of his marvellous mind. They were his own. And there was "simplicity of subject": merely a few notes,—perhaps a section of the scale. And, further, "simplicity of Language." Not, indeed, without folds: these two part, three-part, double-contrapuntal Inventions. But it was the many-sidedness, not the evasiveness of thought: manifold beauty: beauties to be unfolded.

For this simplicity, it is not paradoxical to assert, by no means excludes the complex, or complicated. The very mention of Bach brings the two elements to one's mind: he being such an exemplification of the union of true, honest simplicity with the utmost, profoundest complicatedness. It has been well said, "True simplicity does not consist in what is trite, bald, or commonplace. So far as regards the thought, it means, not what is already obvious to everybody, but what, though not obvious, is immediately recognised, as soon as propounded, to be true and striking. As regards the expression, it means, that thoughts worth hearing are expressed in language that every one can understand. In the first point of view, it is opposed to what is abstruse; in the second, to what is obscure. It is not what some men take it to mean, threadbare commonplace, expressed in insipid language. . . . . True simplicity is the last and most excellent grace which can belong to a speaker, and is certainly not to be attained without much effort."‡ And for "speaker," here, one may substitute "musician," or any other productive artist. And all this agrees with the Welsh Triad: "simplicity of language, subject, invention."

* "Analogy does not mean the similarity of two things, but the similarity, or sameness of two relations. There must be more than two things to give rise to two relations: there must be at least three; and in most cases there are four." (Copleston's Four Discourses: note to Disc. iii.)

* Hunt's Poetry of Science. Introd. p. xi.

† Spectator, May 12th, 1883, p. 606.

‡ Edinburgh Review, Oct. 1840, pp. 94-98.

Digitized by Google

Of course, then, no one supposes that objection is here raised to that complexity which may be inevitably associated with elaboration. It goes without saying that in a Fugue, or other developed contrapuntal work, there will be the involvements proper to such work. But, amidst all these, that which is pleaded for is simplicity in the subject: definiteness: and, above all, non-ambiguity, non-evasiveness: non-requirement of justificatory explanation. This is a matter which, I am persuaded, from constant experience, needs impressing upon musical students, and young composers, just now. Students seem to be liable to two extremes of danger: that of thinking that knowledge alone will stand them instead of genius: and that of thinking that imagination must not be curbed by pedantic rules. Some come to us to be taught, with the charmingly naïve ingenuousness so quaintly expressed by the old poet—

"O! my dear master, cannot you" (quoth I)
"Make me a poet? do it if you can,
"And you shall see I'll quickly be a man."*

This really is hardly an exaggeration of the sanguineness of some who come expecting that, though unable to put two chords together, a few months' easy study are to thoroughly equip them for their Bachelor's degree. On the other hand, some are so impatient of restraint, or so marvellously well-read in all the exceptions to rules, and in all just possible, though rare, progressions, that every bar exemplifies a rarity or a license: and, moreover, brings into play all the student's capacity for exceptional justification, often by equivocation: theoretical equivocation. All springs from the lack of simplicity: simplicity of thought, plan, purpose, design, language or mode of expression: the poverty or ambiguity of the thought being disguised by eccentric, unsimple presentation,—so often the refuge of poor, or confused, or shallow thinkers, in literature, and in music.

What do we mean by Classical, as applied to music? With what does it stand in contrast? In scholarly pursuits, of course, the term has defined application to certain languages and productions, which are in a class by themselves, needing no other specification. But, in modern use of the term, is not the contrast between two manners or styles of writing, the Classical and the Romantic? Speaking of the difference, with regard to literature, and with the view to enunciate that it need not be merely an essential characterisation of the Classical and Romanesque languages and ages, respectively, one well endowed with the faculty to pronounce, says—

"The classical, like the heroic age,
"Is past; but poetry may re-assume
"That glorious name with Tartar and with Turk,
"With Goth or Arab, Sheik or Paladin,
"And not with Roman or with Greek alone.
"The name is graven on the workmanship."†

On which, an eminent critic remarks - "To define for our present purpose the difference between the classical and the romantic modes of workmanship: in classical writing every idea is called up to the mind as nakedly as possible, and at the same time as distinctly: it is exhibited in white light, and left to produce its effect by its own unaided power. In romantic writing, on the other hand, all objects are exhibited as it were through a coloured and iridescent atmosphere. Round about every central idea the romantic writer summons up a cloud of accessory and subordinate ideas for the sake of enhancing its effect, if at the risk of confusing its outlines. The temper, again, of the romantic writer is one of excitement, while the temper of the classical writer is one of self-possession. No matter what the power of his subject, the classical writer does not fail to assert his mastery over it and over himself, while the romantic writer seems as though his subject were ever on the point of dazzling and carrying him away. On the one hand, there is calm, on the other hand enthusiasm: the virtues of the one style are strength of grasp, with clearness and justice of presentment: the virtues of the other style are glow of spirit, with magic and richness of suggestion."*

(To be continued).

* Michael Drayton. Epistle to Henry Reynolds.
† W. S. Landor. Epistle to Author of "Festus."

Musical Intelligence.

GLOUCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

Before proceeding from the notice of last week, one must praise a natural and effective chorus by Dr. A. E. Dyer, "I wish to tune my quivering lyre." Miss A. Hare's rendering of Chopin's "Ballade" for pianoforte was an admirable piece of tasteful and artistic playing. Mr. Carrodus gave an exceptionally good reading of the first movement of Beethoven's "violin concerto," with Molique's cadenza, rendered with perfect skill and fine tone. Mozart's G minor Symphony, played with the composer's additional clarionet parts, and Cherubini's "Anacreon" overture, were well played, with perhaps a little more enthusiasm than with due regard for light and shade. Dr. J. Stainer's cantata, "St. Mary Magdalen," was produced on Wednesday morning. The words were compiled by the Rev. J. Sparrow Simpson, who tells us in a prefatory note that "it would be out of place in a work of this character to discuss the identity of the woman who anointed the feet of Christ in the house of the Pharisee with St. Mary Magdalen. The ancient opinion of the Church was that they were one and the same, and this opinion has been followed in the present work. It is an opinion not only the most ancient, but also dear to the Church, and consecrated by the belief of many teachers, including St. Ambrose, St. Jerome, St. Augustine, St. Gregory Magnus, St. Bonaventura, and the great body of the Fathers and saintly writers down to the sixteenth century. It has "impressed itself upon the very language" of the Church, and has further been advocated by the writers of the Acta Sanctorum," &c. Opportunity will doubtless come in which to review the work fully. It is satisfactory to note that the cantata is thoughtful and scholarly without being dry, and effective. As in the case of many other modern works, there is a manifest desire to strike the listener by little innovations and dramatic surprises, although these are, as might be expected, in the work of so well trained and thoughtful a writer as Dr. Stainer, managed with extreme care and good taste. Nevertheless, in "St. Mary Magdalen" there are points when these efforts in search of effect somewhat interfere with the musical continuity. The interspersed recitative passages of the overture are cases in point. One can understand the prologue before the overture to "Elijah" as a preparation by announcement, but it is not so easy to endorse the insertion in a piece of one form of ideas of another type. One may speak at the wrong time, and "there is a time and place" for everything; or to run some distance for a metaphor, "there is no use for a locomotive engine on the deck of a steamship." This spirit of innovation and departure from accepted types, although evidently controlled by the strong hand of a clever composer, mars much of Dr. Stainer's good work. The overture is, however, admirable in its general musicianship and judicious orchestration. The solo for Mary Magdalen, "Ah! woe is me," is touching. The choruses, "This man if he were a prophet," and "Let Christ the King," are instances of a want of more continuous treatment, and the tendency shown here and there to sacrifice art to the exigencies of dramatic realism. An excellent and better sustained chorus, on the other hand, is "For none of us liveth to himself." In the second part there are some charming and natural movements, as "O Jesu Lord, Jesu behold me," as the tenor solo "O thou that weepest." The chorus of combined effects sung by Roman soldiers and christians (female voices) is clever, but disappointing in general effect. A feature of much beauty is the solo, "They have taken away," which is full of natural,

* Prof. Sidney Colvin. Preface to "Selections from Landor."

Digitized by Google

pathetic expression, heightened by a truly charming accompaniment. The work concludes with some fine choral writing and effective vocal points. Dr. Stainer has in this cantata distinctly added to his position as a composer, and given a valuable work to our limited stores of the kind, even though it is not perhaps a landmark in the annals of the art. On the whole, the work is a distinct advance upon any preceding composition by Dr. Stainer; it has signs of increased earnestness, decision of purpose, and increased writing experience; so it is a welcome addition to the stores of sacred music already accumulated.

Another new work was Dr. G. B. Arnold's "Sennacherib." Without proposing to notice this at length here, it is necessary to convey some impressions of the work upon its production. The contemplation of this new oratorio calls for a few words as to the attitude of the composer of the day. It is quite natural that a commission to write a large choral work for a Festival will stimulate the composer to special exertions. Unfortunately, however, this very anxiety to make the most of an opportunity is very apt to induce an overwhelming ambition to produce as many striking effects as possible. Now, the result of composing under the pressure of putting one's best leg foremost, especially when one is not engaged in daily composition, is the loss of a certain naturalness, without which music has no real value. Rossini was wise when he stated that his success was rather owing to his determination to be natural than from any desire to be original. The wish to attain originality rather than write naturally is the ignis fatuus of every producing artist not possessing the strong, balanced mind, which comes of special and daily devotion to a given task. There are but few specially written Festival works to which these words do not apply with more or less force. With the application of this thought, it seems comparatively easy to understand why an accomplished musician, and, certainly experienced writer, like Dr. Arnold, should overreach himself in his very earnestness to do his best. People in art do not, beyond a slight impetus arising from healthy excitement, rise to any special occasion; the artistic growth is ever a slow and gradual advance. "Sennacherib" opens with a slow introduction, with the programme title of "The besieged city." Herein Dr. Arnold has displayed at once the keynote of what disappoints one in "Sennacherib." The thoughts are in themselves nervous and excellent, but they are overstrained and made uncomfortable by needless and unnatural modulations and harmonic surprises. The "March of the Assyrians," which follows, is in some respects one of the best movements of the work, and one which may attain to some popularity; though it is over-orchestrated. A chorus, "Behold the Assyrians," has purpose in it, and some dramatic power. The succeeding solos, with good points, are somewhat ungainly from the vocal point of sight. The duet, "O House of Jacob," has tuneful figures. "O Lord, Thou art great," is an effective chorus on the whole. There is a vigorous though somewhat overwritten bass solo; then the introductory symphony is in part resumed. The trio, "O Lord God of Hosts," has effective choral sentences interspersed. The chorus, "The proud are robbed," opens with a needless and melo-dramatic symphony, which much weakens the piece as a whole. The final chorus has a fugal movement of interest, and contains some clear contrapruntal writing. Dr. Arnold has undoubted power as a writer, and the present work has specimens of natural writing and some well laid out contrapuntal work, which justifies a hope that he will give to the world still more attractive works than the one under notice. The new works were, considering all things, well rendered, the composers conducting. Beethoven's Mass in C was, on the whole, excellently given. Byrd's Anthem, "Bow thine ear," and Orlando Gibbon's magnificent "Hosanna," were admirably sung, as they should be, without accompaniment, and finely testified to the real life of the early English Church school. It should be noted that Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" stood out gloriously as "A thing of beauty and a joy for ever." Dr. C. V. Stanford's "Elegiac Symphony," a work of four divisions, is an admirable production. There is undeniable earnestness and beauty in the "Lento," and some passionate sentences in the opening "Allegro," though the work has an evident tendency to display too much effort and a restlessness at times from the use of broken rhythm here and there. The work is artistically scored, and it was conducted, in the absence of the composer, by Mr. C. H. Lloyd. M. Gounod's "Redemption" proved the greatest attraction of the Festival; and the music gained upon one with singular force. The excellent performance of this work was ably and carefully conducted by Mr. C. L. Williams. Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Night" was excellently rendered, the fine overture being in every way admirably played. The selection of songs for the miscellaneous concerts was, on the whole, an unworthy one. However, a few classical vocal pieces were included in the list. On Friday morning the "Messiah" was given. In the evening at the Special Service, with orchestra and chorus, a new Anthem, "Blessed is he that considereth the poor," by Mr. C. H. Lloyd was given. The first movement is of well-sustained interest, and the final chorus, with fugal termination, has many evidences of strong contrapuntal thought and sound musicianship. T. A. Walmisley's Evening Service, the overture to Spohr's "Last Judgment," and Beethoven's "Hallelujah Chorus," were features of this grand service, wherein a noble use of a great cathedral was fully illustrated. Mr. L. Colborne, Mr. Done, and Mr. Lloyd rendered valuable aid at the organ and pianoforte during the Festival, and Mr. C. L. Williams proved himself to be an admirable musical director. Mr. Gardom, the Hon. Sec., deserves much praise for his administrative care and labours.

A meeting of the stewards of the late Gloucester Festival was held at Gloucester on Sept. 8th, at which a rough debtor and creditor account was laid before them by the secretary. The total amount received for the charity was only £490 against £600 at the previous festival in 1880. At the 1880 gathering, however, the stewards each contributed £5, which with subsequent receipts from other sources made a total of £1,656. If, as is anticipated, the present stewards follow the example of their predecessors it will add £1,000 to the amount already secured; and as a few sums always drop in after the close of the festival it may be expected that the total amount realised for the Clergyman's Widow and Orphan Charity will fall little short of that of 1880. The amount collected at the closing special church service at the Cathedral on Friday night was £53 15s. 8d., which exceeded the amount collected after Wednesday morning's oratorio. The amounts received for the clergy charity in the last six years have been—At Worcester in 1878, £1,504 10s.; at Hereford in 1879, £971 6s. 1d.; at Gloucester in 1880, £1,656 9s. 10d.; at Worcester in 1881, £1,116 7s. 5d.; at Hereford in 1882, £867 5s. 2d.; and at Gloucester last week up to the close of the festival, £490 12s. 7d. The largest amount ever derived from any of these meetings was at Gloucester in 1877, when £1,885 10s. was received.

THE CRYSTAL PALACE

Saturday Evening Concerts.

The concerts on Saturday evening continue their course successfully. Last Saturday Mr. Manns provided a programme of capital quality. He performed the overture to "Der Freischütz"; the introduction to Act III. of "Lohengrin;" "Dreams, a Study to Tristan and Isolde;" the gavotte, "Yellow Jasmine," from Mr. F. H. Cowen's "Language of the Flowers;" the march movement from Raff's "Lenora;" and the ballet, "Spring," from Verdi's "I Vespri Siciliani." Mdme. Marian Hood, recently so successful at the Crystal Palace opera, in "Faust," was one of the vocalists on Saturday, and sang splendidly—a more flattering reception could not have been recorded. Mdme. Marian Hood was in fine voice; Mr. J. W. Turner sang his pieces well; Miss Mary M'Clean has a fine complete voice, of much power and volume, but the quality rather coarse.

Mr. Manns may be congratulated on his autumnal career; the winter season, alas! is not afar off. Sydenham has no outside attractions in October and November, and the train service being so inefficient entails a sad loss of time.

Mrs. Marion Hood had a good choice of matériel. She sang Dr. Arne's popular air, "The Soldier tired of War's Alarms" and Pinsuti's "Heaven and Earth." Miss McClean sang Gluck's "Che faro' senza Euridice," and Mr. J. W. Turner, "Lend me your aid" from Gounod's "Irene." The scheme, comprising sixteen numbers, was rather too long. A. M.

Offenbach's "La Vie" is to be produced next month at the Avenue Theatre, with a splendid mounting, it is said.

Digitized by Google

BIRMINGHAM.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Once more the concert-managers in Birmingham plan their campaign of the coming season. Though we have no such splendid feast spread for us as we had last year—no "opus vitæ meæ" to adjudicate upon, among other things—yet as the following outline of the different schemes will perhaps sufficiently show, in musical as well as in general doings, we are still going "forward" in obedience to the municipal motto.

The Festival Choral Society will give again four concerts this season. Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" is a welcome announcement for the first performance, to take place Oct. 4th. At the next concert, in November, Mr. Cowen's cantata, "St. Ursula," will be performed for the first time in Birmingham; and a selection —"Spring and Summer"—from Haydn's "Seasons." In accordance with a general desire, Gounod's "Redemption" will be again repeated this season. The greatest novelty on the list is Dvorak's "Stabat Mater;" this, together with Schubert's "Song of Miriam" (another pleasing selection), and Mendelssohn's "As the Hart pants," will be given at the final concert of the series, March, 1884. As heretofore, the conductor will be Mr. Stockley. To give a list of the principal vocalists would be simply to print the names of pretty well all the leading singers of the day.

The Philharmonic Union will enter into close rivalry this time with the elder society, as both "St. Paul" and the "Redemption" are also to be performed under Dr. Swinnerton Heap's conductorship. They have the start in this, however, of the Festival Choral Society, the "St. Paul" performance being announced for the 27th of this month, and that of Gounod's oratorio for the 27th of December. Schumann's "Paradise and the Peri" (which has not been heard here for some years) will, along with an extract from Max Bruch's "Odysseus"—the banquet scene—be presented at the concert of the series in April next, on which occasion Ferdinand Hiller's Concerto in F sharp minor will be performed, with Mr. G. Halford as pianist. At a miscellaneous concert, to be given in the month of February, a very notable novelty will be introduced—Spohr's "Nonette"—a work only rarely heard, indeed, in this country; and for this performance the services of some of the leading instrumentalists of the day have been enlisted. On this occasion the programme will also include Leslie's "Resurgam," Wesley's "In exitu Israel," a pianoforte solo by Dr. Heap, and various part-songs, glees, instrumental selections, &c.

Mr. Stockley's Orchestral Concerts, which have become, by this time, well established in the favour of the public, will be continued on the same plan as hitherto. Instrumental works will form the chief items of the programme of each concert, these, however, being agreeably varied by vocal solos. Two eminent vocalists are, as before, engaged for each concert. The instrumental selections already announced are as follow: Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony (to be viewed quite as a musical "revival," in Birmingham); Schuman's B flat symphony; Mendelssohn's "Scotch" Symphony; Dr. Stanford's "Serenade;" Mackenzie's Scotch Rhapsody; and Svendsen's Norwegian Rhapsody; Sullivan's "Tempest" Music; a new overture by Mr. Herbert Wareing, Two Sketches by Mr. Anderton, and an Intermezzo by Edward Elgar. The instrumental soloists engaged are Miss Agnes Miller (piano), Mr. Carrodus (violin), and Mr. Reynolds (contrabasso). Undoubtedly the director is justified in his remark that "he may now fairly consider that the reproach to the town—of not having an efficient orchestra—has been removed."

Messrs. Harrison's programme as usual offers great attraction. In the lengthy list of artistes d'élite appears again the name of Mdme. Adelini Patti, who will be the bright particular star at the opening Concert, Oct. 2nd. Mdme. Albani appears at the next performance of the series. To Messrs. Harrison we shall be indebted for the pleasure of hearing M. Pachmann (who has not yet been heard in Birmingham. Mr. Charles Hallé and his orchestra, as customary, will make the grand feature of one out of the four concerts of this series.

Mr. Stratton has issued the prospectus for the fifth season of his popular Chamber Concerts. Six concerts are announced to take place, the subscription for the series being almost too-absurdly low—ten shillings and five shillings, namely, seats being numbered and reserved throughout. As well known, one great feature of these concerts is the introduction on each occasion of a work by some British composer. The selections made this time for this department will be most interesting. The MS. composition by the Birmingham composer, F. E. Bache (which was postponed from last season), will be performed; a Pianoforte Trio by Cowen; a Sonata for piano and 'cello, by Mr. Edward Sharp (who will take part in the performance); a Sonata for piano and violin, by Dr. Heap; Mackenzie's pianoforte Quartet in B flat; and a new string Quartet by Mr. Thomas Anderton. Among the classic works to be produced are Haydn's Quartet in D (Op. 64, No. 5); Beethoven's Quartet in C (Op. 59, No. 3); Schubert's Quartet in A minor (Op. 29); Mozart's quintet in G minor, and Mendelssohn's Quintet in B flat; Schumann's Quintet in E flat (Op. 44); and Schubert's Octet (the repetition of this by general desire); while some novelties will be introduced, including a sonata for piano and 'cello, by Mr. F. Praeger, the piano trio, by Fanny Hensel (Mendelssohn's sister), and Raff's Octet for string instruments.

The first concert of the series takes place on Tuesday, Oct. 16th, with Mr. Rowland Winn for pianist. Mr. Winn will be followed by Dr. Heap, Miss Constance Bache (who will perform in the piece of her late brother's), Miss Agnes Miller, Mr. Sharp, and Mr. Stratton. In the other instrumental departments the artistic personnel will remain unchanged, Messrs. Ward and Abbott, as before, alternating as leaders.

The directors of the Musical Section of the Midland Institute offer a most interesting scheme for the coming season. Great stress is laid by the directors upon the educational importance of the programme. To aim at teaching, as well as "amusing," the musical listener is, of course, only in conformity with the character of the institution in connection with which these most enjoyable concerts are given. A madrigal society has lately been formed (under the conductorship of Mr. Stockley), whose performances will add novel interest to these entertainments.

May I just append a little note in reference to the article in the MUSICAL STANDARD of last week, by A.M.? The oratorio "The Resurrection" is by Professor Macfarren, not by Sullivan; and Sir Julius Benedict's "St. Peter" was first heard in Birmingham, not at Norwich. Both being Birmingham Festival works, I am, perhaps, in place in making this correction of my confrère's error.

B. T.

LIVERPOOL.

(From our own Correspondent).

SEPT. 12.

The Carl Rosa Opera Company opened at the Alexandra Theatre here on Monday week. The performances have been eminently successful in every way.

Thomas's "Esmeralda" has been an unqualified success, and has taken the public fancy in a marked manner. "Columba" was produced on Monday evening, but it did not meet with the same enthusiastic reception accorded to "Esmeralda." The other operas given were "Mignon," "Faust" (with Madame Roze as Marguerite), and the inevitable "Bohemian Girl." Mr. Goosens has conducted all through.

A new comic opera by Mr. Fred. Solomon, brother to the composer of "Billee Taylor," was produced for the first time on any stage on Monday evening, at the Prince of Wales Theatre. It is entitled "Captain Kidd, or the Bold Buccaneer," but I am afraid it will not have any success, as it is anything but entertaining, musically or otherwise.

The fifteenth annual children's Festival of Sacred Song was held last evening in St. George's Hall before an audience which entirely filled the large building. The performance was a great success. Mr. J. B. Clarke conducted, and Mr. W. T. Best presided at the organ.

J. J. M.

FOLKESTONE.—A concert was given in the Town Hall on August 30th, by Miss Theresa Beney, A.C.O., organist of Christ Church. Miss Beney was assisted by Miss Clara Ross (soprano), Miss Clara Myers (contralto), Signor Palmieri (tenor), Mr. Bicknell Young (baritone), Mr. Ernest Crooke (violin), and the well known, able accompanist, Mr. Chas. Marshall. Among the more successful items of a most interesting programme may be mentioned the Trio "Il desiderio" (Gordigiani), sung by Miss Ross, Messrs. Palmieri and Young—a new song, "The Mower and the Lass" (Milton Wellings), sung for the first time and with great taste by Miss Clara Myers—Signor Palmieri's excellent rendering of "Questà Quella" (Verdi)—"The Harbour lights" (Pinsuti), splendidly sung by Mr. Young—and a new song by Theresa Beney (words by Kinloch Cooke), entitled "Farewell, for ever," well sung by Miss Clara Ross—all of which were re-demanded. The excellent violin playing of Mr. Ernest Crooke was deservedly appreciated, his solos being "Zigeunerweisen" (Sarasate), and Léonard's "Souvenir de Haydn." As an encore he played Gounod's charming little lullaby, "Peacefully slumbering." Miss Theresa Beney's pianoforte solos "Ballade in A flat" (Chopin), "Novelette in E" (Schumann), and the "Norwegian Bridal March" (Grieg), were well received, the pianiste being twice recalled. Gounod's "Ave Maria" and "La Colombe," for violin, pianoforte, and harmonium, formed a pleasing contrast, and the quartet from "Rigoletto," "Un di si ben" (Verdi), sung with great effect by Misses Ross and Myers, Messrs. Palmieri and Young, brought to conclusion a most successful concert.

Mr. Alex. Henderson has entered into an arrangement to bring out, at the Avenue Theatre, on or about the 1st October, "La Vie," a comic opera in three acts, written by Mr. H. B. Farnie, the music composed by Offenbach. The opera will be previously played at Brighton on the 17th inst. Report says the costumes are to exceed in taste and costliness anything hitherto seen on the London stage.

Digitized by Google

Foreign Musical Intelligence.

MILAN.

An English musician writing from Italy, thus gossips about music in Milan:—Musical doings here are at a standstill just now. The theatres are closed: the Dal Verme opens on the 8th, whilst the Scala is closed until December. Last Friday week, we had a grand concert at La Scala for the Ischia benefit. It was a good performance for a scratch team. The artists all, of course, gave their services; the band was very rough and overweighted the voices. Many good artists sang in the chorus, in pieces from various operas: "Inflammatus" from "Stabat Mater," Rossini, "Chorus of Conspirators" from "Huguenots," etc. The Milanese want "Gioconda" produced. It has been done a good deal in Italy, I think, but I fancy never here. I do not consider musical art in Italy is at a very high standard.

The organ playing in the churches here is poor, and the singing worse. They give some very good little instrumental concerts in the Cafés here; the two principal are the Biffi and the Cova, also Gnocchi; there are small orchestras at each, and the style of music is good and well selected. Perhaps it is hardly fair to criticise a place out of its season.

The operatic artists are here in force, looking for engagements. The Dal Verme opens with "I Promessi Sposi," by Petrella. The musical world here is overstocked as at home. Everything is opera.

The novelty next season at the Teatro Real, Madrid, will very likely be Ponchielli's "Gioconda."

Saint-Saëns has returned to France, having recovered from his recent illness.

"Mazeppa," a new opera by Tschaikowsky so called, will be heard in St. Petersburg before long.

The Quartet Society of Milan have given a prize for a pianoforte Trio to Signor E. F. da Crema.

Signor Benacchia's opera "Ectore Fieramosca," was favourably noticed on its recent production in Padua.

A Conservatorium has been founded in Cordova under the direction of a violinist named Van Mark, a pupil of De Beriot and Léonard.

One of the new operatic successes is Gabais' new opera, "Gilda di Guascogna," which has been well received at the Politeama, Placenza.

The academical course of the Rossini Conservatoire at Pesaro is announced. It includes all branches of solo singing, composition, organ playing, and the study of orchestral instruments.

The well-known English baritone, Mr. Frank Quatremayne, has been for some time in Milan, studying opera with Sangiovanni. Mr. Quatremayne returns to London for an engagement on the 24th.

Anton Rubinstein is expected in Germany by the end of this month. His opera "Die Maccabaer" will be given at Frankfort on October 28th, and the "Sulamite" in Hamburg on November 8th.

These novelties are promised for the forthcoming opera season at Cologne: Goring Thomas's "Esmeralda," Flötow's "Der Graf von St. Megrin" and Delibes' "Lakmé." Schumann's "Genoveva" is also to be revived.

It is said that the right of performing Wagner's "Nibelungen Tetralogy" has been acquired for the Prussian Theatres Royal in Berlin, Hanover, Cassel, and Wiesbaden.

It is announced that Millöcker's "Bettelstudent" is as successful in Hamburgh as elsewhere, having already run upwards of a hundred nights at the Carl Schultze-Theatre.

M. Halévy, a well-known writer of dramatic and other works, has died at St. Germain-en-Laye. He was the brother of the composer of the same name, and father of the scarcely less famous M. Ludovic Halévy, who, chiefly in collaboration with M. Henri Meilhac, has written some of the most successful pieces of modern time. M. Léon Halévy wrote several plays, which were played with success at the leading Paris theatres.

A FEW REMARKS ON DR. STAINER'S CANTATA, "ST. MARY MAGDALENE."

The work of an artist may be said to be but a reproduction of himself, however dexterously he may try to disguise it; a little careful study into the works of a man and the man will show a very striking resemblance: they are sure to bear a tint of the composer's innate character, and there it will remain, irrepressible, never dormant; we examine the work, we behold the man; we love the work, we reverence the artist; our sympathies are with the composition, we feel with the writer; the defects of the work are but symbols of the artist's weakness, while the good qualities are but a portrait of his talent and skill. With the "Messiah," with Handel; and all who have read about the lives of Mendelssohn, Beethoven, and Mozart, must feel that their works are but echoes of the lives of the men themselves. In this cantata, then, Dr. Stainer has written himself, which fact speaks everything in favour of the composition under notice.

It is not my intention to critically expatiate on every number contained therein, but to take a general view without unnecessary signalising. The story of St. Mary Magdalen is so well known as not to need recapitulation here; suffice it to say, that in the hands of the Precentor of St. Paul's Cathedral the libretto is everything that can be desired. The cantata is divided into three scenes, "Magdalen in the house of Simon," "By the Cross," and "At the Tomb." The work opens with an overture, which (although it is broken here and there by the introduction of a recitative for the purpose of explanation) enables us fully to realise the scene: in this it can be at once seen that Dr. Stainer has commenced as he means to go on—viz., whenever he hits upon a theme which treats of a subjective portion of one narrative he still keeps his mind's eye firmly fixed on the objective. In the solos of the Magdalen (soprano), "Ah! woe is me," this is again depicted at the words, "Yet, O Thou Saint." Another beautiful air in the first scene is given to "an angel" (contralto), "Happy art thou." Our Lord's words throughout are entrusted to a tenor, while the narrative and other portions are left in the hands of a bass voice. This scene is dismissed with a really most effective chorus, "For none of us liveth to himself," the change of subject at the words, "And that the Spirit," stands out with due prominence from the bold theme preceding it. Again the first subject returns, and is artistically worked out to a final exultant climax. The second scene, "The Magdalen by the Cross," contains numbers replete with points of musicianly skill and artistic interest. The solo, "O Thou that weepest," doubtless will be hailed with delight by aspiring tenors, though I must remind them of that ambition which is proverbial for o'erleaping itself before they attempt it. This scene closes with a carefully written chorus, "Rest in peace," full of modesty, beauty and tenderness. In the opening chorus, "Awake, awake," of the third scene, we at once recognise Dr. Stainer. This is the commencement of the end—the one object in the cantata—and not until we come to the words of Mary, "I will rise now and go about the city," are we able fully to realise the love which she had for her Divine Saviour; but the only regret which is to be felt is that Dr. Stainer did not deem it necessary to make this passage longer. Shortly after follows a chorus by a choir of angels, with contralto solo. An artistic end is here gained, in spite of the difficulty which must necessarily exist in writing so-called celestial music. It is so essentially conjectural, and at the same time fertile a land, that every new workman has a perfect right to enter its domains. After our Lord has been recognised by the Magdalen, comes the final chorus, splendidly worked out, and which affords ample means both for the chorus and orchestra for displaying their respective powers. The cantata is brought to an original climax by a recitative and closing "Amen."

Although Dr. Stainer has not altogether adhered to the strict and conventional school of Church music with which he has been so much associated, his departure in this instance at once stamps him as being in possession of a creative musical power of a high order. This departure may at first sight appear to the eyes of my more musically conservative contemporaries as a violation of the artistic principles of his school, yet, at the same time, they must admit that successful departure in any form is an artistic gain we should do well to prize. In this cantata the composer excels without being pretentious, and by steadily and modestly aiming at the highest motive he becomes successful in every way, and when I remark that Dr. Stainer has brought this cantata to a successful issue I am only saying that which he has, as an experienced English musician, faithfully earned, and he eminently deserves a full recognition as a genuine composer and artist.

Digitized by Google

GEO. F. GROVER.

Organ News.

FISHERIES EXHIBITION.

The following organ recitals have been given during the last week.

Organ recitals were given by Mr. J. Loaring, F.C.O., last week. The programmes included :—

Overture, "Preciosa"	Weber.
Offertoire in D minor	Batiste.
Andante from the Grand Symphony, No. 1	Haydn.
March Cortege from "Irene"	Gounod.
Overture, "Masaniello"	Auber.
Overture, "Iphigenie en Tauride"	Gluck.
Gavotte Moderne in Ut	Tours.
Overture, "Le Cheval de Bronze"	Auber.

On September 7th, the programme by Mr. Ernest Taunton, included :—

"War March of the Priests" ("Athalie")	Mendelssohn.
Andante	Mozart.

And by Mr. Churchill Sibley :—

"Improvisation"
Offertoire	Batiste.
Cathedral March	Sibley.

And by Master Henry J. Wood :—

March, "Lebanon"	Smallwood.
"Wedding March" ("Midsummer Night's Dream")	Mendelssohn.
Sinfonia, from Opera of "Almira"	Handel.

And on Saturday and Wednesday, September 8th, and 12th, by Mr. Freeman Dovaston, A.C.O. :—

March in B minor	Schubert.
Introduction and Allegro	Wood.
Andante Sostenuto	Batiste.
Danse Gracieuse	Wellings.
Triumphal March	Sainton-Dolby.
Allegro Moderato	Mendelssohn.
Andante in C	Smart.
Postlude in D	Greenish.
Overture, "Saul"	Handel.
Tocata and Fugue in C	Bach.
Sonata in C minor	Mendelssohn.
Andante in C	Smart.
"March Militaire"	Schubert.
Canzone	Guilmant.

LIVERPOOL.

An organ recital was given in St. George's Hall, by Mr. W. T. Best, on Thursday, September 6th. The following was the programme :—

Organ Concerto in D minor (Andante—Aria—Fuga.)	Handel.
Meditation on Bach's 1st Prelude	Gounod.
Sarabande ("Euryanthe")	Weber.
Fugue in A minor (Con moto continuo)	Bach.
Andante con Variazioni, from the "Notturno"	Spohr.
Finale, "Allegro Marziale" in D major	Best.

And on Saturday, September 8th :—

Overture, "I Lituani"	Ponchielli.
Siciliana, and Tema con Variaizone, Op. 60	Weber.
Prelude and Fugue in G major	Wesley.
Romanza, "The wished for land is near"	Curschmann.
Tocata in A flat major	Hesse.
Pastorale (Cor Anglais and Flute) / Military March in G major	Gambini.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

Mr. Eyre's organ recital, on Saturday last, included the following :—

Sixth Organ Sonata (Chorale and variations)	Mendelssohn.
Andante from a Quartet	Rossini.
Canzona in D minor	Bach.
Solo and Chorus, "La Carita"	Rossini.
Offertorium in B flat	Stark.
Selection, "Don Giovanni"	Mozart.

MARGATE.

An organ recital was given at St. Paul's, Cliftonville, by Mr. John C. Ward, on September 10th. The programme included a selection from Handel's works, and a miscellaneous selection, embracing :—

Sonata No. 1	Mendelssohn.
Pastorale in G	Hopkins.
"Homage à Haydn"	Calkin.
March from "Abraham"	Molique.

WELFORD.

A recital of sacred music was given in the Parish Church on September 6th, by Mr. Geo. Herbert Gregory, Mus.B., F.C.O, Mr. Jas. L. Gregory, F.C.O., A.Mus., T.C.L., and Mr. John B. Roberts. The following pieces were included in the programme :—

Postlude	Kettle.
Concerto in A (Largo—Allegro—Minuetto e Trio—Fuga.)	Handel.
Andante from quartet in D minor	Mozart.
"Marche Religieuse"	Guilmant.
Adagio in E	Merkel
"Harvest Thanksgiving" March	Calkin.
Larghetto from 2nd symphony	Beethoven.
"War March of the Priests	Mendelssohn.

A NOVEL ORGAN SCHEME.

It may interest readers to examine the specification of the first organ to be built upon the system of Mr. Thomas Casson, of Denbigh. It has been commenced, and will be ready for exhibition within twelve months. It will be divided and separated from the Console, the Great and Choir with their Pedal organs being grouped separately from the Swell with its Pedal organ. The Great and Choir have only one manual; it is not pretended that this is superior to two, but the object is to show how several manual organs, say six, or eight, with their respective Pedal organs and couplers, may all be perfectly controlled from two or three manual claviers, and one pedal clavier.

GREAT ORGAN.

1. Bourdon	16 ft.	4. Principal	4 ft.
2. Open Diapason	8 „	5. Mixture (3 ranks)
3. Flute Harmonique	8 „	6. Trumpet	8 „

GREAT PEDALIER.

7. Open Diapason	16 ft.	9. Trombone	16 ft.
8. Quint	10⅔ „

Great pedalier coupler, Great to Great pedalier.

ACCESSORIES.

Two combination pedals, giving nine combinations for Great organ, Great pedalier and manual and pedal couplers, one retaining pedal, one attaching and detaching piston.

CHOIR ORGAN.

10. Dulciana	8 ft.	12. Flute Douce	4 ft.
11. Stopt Diapason	8 „

CHOIR PEDALLIER.

13. Bourdon	16 ft.	14. Clarion	4 ft.

Choir pedalier coupler, Choir to Choir pedalier.

ACCESSORY.

One attaching and detaching piston.

SWELL ORGAN.

15. Bourdon	16 ft.	19. Gemshorn	4 ft.
16. Viol di Gamba	8 „	20. Mixture (2 ranks)
17. Voix Celestes	8 „	21. Cornopean	8 „
18. Hohl Flöte	8 „	22. Vox Humana	8 „

SWELL PEDALLIER.

23. Sub-Bass	16 ft.	24. Euphonium	16 ft.

In swell box.

Swell pedalier coupler, Swell to Swell pedalier.

ACCESSORIES.

Two combination Pedals to Swell, Swell pedalier and coupler, giving six combinations, one retaining pedal, one attaching and detaching piston, tremulant to 22.

MANUAL COUPLERS.

25. Swell to Great.	27. Swell to Choir.
26. Choir to Great.

Manuals, CC to G, 56 notes.
Pedals, CCC to A, 34 „

This is merely an illustrative organ, and it contains only one pedal stop "for melodic use."

LEEDS.

The Town Hall organ has been re-opened by Dr. Spark, after partial re-construction and thorough renovation by the builders. The estimated cost of the improvements contemplated in the original contract between the Corporate Property Committee and the builders was £700. The concert took place on Monday last, and the admission was free. The enormous audience evinced perfect satisfaction with the improved quality of the instrument. The programme afforded ample scope for displaying its completeness and power. Dr. Spark gave three organ solos. The first of these, Handel's concerto in G minor. On this occasion the organist added a cadenza, in which the subjects of the concerto were skilfully introduced. A feature of the concert was the second of the organist's contributions, an andante in A flat, and an allegro in F major, from a fantasia in F major, "composed for this occasion by Dr. Spark." The full composition comprises three movements, but the final section was not given on account of its length. The composition, very creditably represents Dr. Spark's fanciful treatment of organ pieces, and the effect which it produced on the audience ought to have gratified him both as a composer and performer. The third of the organ solos was of the French school—Batiste's "Angelic Voices," two andantes in E flat and A flat. It may be added that the concert was attended by the Mayor, the Town Clerk, and other representatives of the Corporation.

Digitized by Google

BOW AND BROMLEY INSTITUTE.

The invaluable work done in the past by the excellent management of this admirable and truly popular institution inclines the public mind to regard with every confidence and satisfaction the proposals for the season now about to commence. The renowned bright recitals, which have long been maintained as the most varied and remarkable performances of the kind in existence, will recommence on Sept. 22nd, and the committee are negotiating with some of our most eminent organists for their appearance during the season. Of special musical arrangements the following may be stated:—On Monday, Sept. 24th, the opening concert will be given. Vocalists: Miss Anna Williams, Miss Grace Damian, Mr. Redfern Hollins, Mr. Chaplin Henry. Solo violin, Signor Erba; conductor, Mr. Fountain Meen.—The Institute Choir and Music Classes are under the direction of Mr. W. G. McNanght, and contribute important services. The pianist will be Mrs. W. G. McNaught, and the organist Mr. Alfred Carder. Dr. Stainer's new oratorio, "St. Mary Magdalen," is in rehearsal, with a view to performance with full orchestra on (probably) Tuesday, October 30th. On October 22nd the Operatic Class of the Royal Academy of Music will perform a selection of standard operas. On Nov. 12 the Royal Albert Hall Amateur Orchestral Society, under the presidency of H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, will give an Orchestral Concert, under the conductorship of Mr. George Mount; and on December 10th the Concluding Concert, will be given by the choir of the Institute, with Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," and Haydn's "Spring;" conductor, Mr. W. G. McNaught. The educational and class arrangements embrace every science and art, are under competent guidance, and would not disgrace one of our universities. Music is judiciously and fairly represented in the scheme. One feature is the tuition, by Mr. Alfred Carder, of pianoforte playing and solo singing. Mr. W. Foster, the energetic hon. secretary, is again at his post, and a strong working committee are engaged in the management, so the hopes of a good and useful season rest upon an experienced controlling power, tried judgment, recognised energy and tact, and upon an established reputation which trained audiences and a well-served public know how to gratefully support.

A Musical Festival is to take place in Quebec on the 3rd and 4th of next month.

The Musical Record, Boston, U.S., has a paragraph showing the extension of the movement for a return to the ecclesiastical style of the sixteenth century:—The American St. Cecilian Society was to hold a convention at Cleveland, Aug. 21st, 22nd, and 23rd, when works of Palestrina, Antonio Lotti, De Witt were to be performed. Professor Singenburger, who was created Knight of St. Gregory by Pope Pius IX., is president of the society and directs the choral work at the Convention. The St. Cecilian Society is labouring earnestly to banish from the services of the Catholic church all popular and unworthy music, and to reinstate the old school compositions of a more devout character, or new music conceived in a similar vein. The movement, though originally a German one, has been joined in by the English speaking churches; it is endorsed by the Pope and has the patronage of all the bishops; and what is equally, or more, important, it has the support of some eminent and influential musicians.

MUSIC STRINGS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF ALL KINDS OF

STRINGS FOR VIOLIN, VIOLA, VIOLONCELLO, DOUBLE BASS HARP, ZITHER, GUITAR, BANJO, &c., &c.,

Have always in Stock the Largest Assortment of Music Strings of any House in the World.

39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

All Kinds of Strings covered in a superior manner by powerful machines, made on the best principle with all modern improvements.

A BACHELOR OF MUSIC (Cambridge) desires an Appointment as PROFESSOR OF MUSIC in some COLLEGE or SCHOOL in the Midland Counties. A Liberal Honorarium will be given to any one through whose introduction such an appointment may be obtained.—Address, Cantab., care of Messrs. Novello, Ewer & Co., 1, Berners Street, London.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

Some Musical Ethics and Analogies. By Henry C. Banister.

Musical Intelligence:—Gloucester Musical Festival—Crystal Palace—Birmingham—Liverpool—Folkestone.

Foreign Musical Intelligence:—Milan.

A Few Remarks on Dr. Stainer's Cantata, "St. Mary Magdalene."

Organ News:—Fisheries Exhibition—Liverpool—Crystal Palace—Margate—Welford—A Novel Organ Scheme—Leeds.

Bow and Bromley Institute.

Editorial:—Purpose in the Composition of Music—Tin-Kettle Pianofortes—A Singular Career.

Reviews of Books and Music.

Correspondence:—On the Teaching of Counterpoint—Dr. Arnold's New Sacred Cantata, "Sennacherib."

Passing Events. The Querist, Service Lists, &c.

LONDON: SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 1883.

PURPOSE IN THE COMPOSITION OF MUSIC.

II.

ALTHOUGH people have little difficulty in deciding the question, "What class of art-"producers may be entitled to disregard "technical laws?" as regards its application to literature, there is a strange general misconception as to the permissible freedom in this respect of the painter, musician, or architect. This arises, no doubt, from the possession on the one hand of a standard of popular judgment attained through the daily and personal use of the verbal language, and on the other side from a general want of knowledge as to the technical requirements of the musician, painter, and architect. Hence it comes about that people sensible enough not to commit themselves to paper from the literary point of sight without some acquaintance with the necessary grammatical rules and practices governing the verbal language, are nevertheless weak enough to suppose they can express their musical thoughts with but little or no technical knowledge. Unfortunately these irreconcilable notions prevail beyond the ranks of the musically ignorant being in part fostered by the deeply engrained vanity which, common to all weak mortals, prompts us to suppose that our inborn, shape-less thoughts, which we nurse with so much self-complacency, may be received as tokens of genius. The vanity of being thought rich in mental gifts is akin to the more vulgar vanity of being esteemed as of good society and well-to-do in the world. So it comes to pass that the most precious lesson the art-producer has to learn is that of gaining the virtue of humility, without which, indeed, the artist has no self-knowledge, no power of selection and rejection as regards the use of his own mental materials, and little faculty for that artistic sympathy with the rest of mankind without which the artist misses the principal function of his career. It was the possession of this very artistic humility which prompted BACH to walk miles to hear the best organ players of his time, to listen with interest to the instrumental compositions of VIVALDI, and to study with intense care and application. This same spirit prompted HANDEL to learn much from the works of CARISSIMI and PURCELL, and made MOZART, BEETHOVEN, and MENDELSSOHN not only diligently examine the works of their predecessors, but studiously drill themselves in the use of the machinery of the art. Such men, it is unnecessary to point out, were certainly entitled to disregard upon occasion the technicalities of their craft; for they knew well how to balance loss and gain, and could discern the difference between a vapoury, deluding fancy, and a real, strong purpose. No master has probably exercised the minds of pedants than has the JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH; and those who have from time to time desired the advance of artistic freedom have turned for justification to the grand Cantor who, writing some hundred and fifty years ago, still stands out as a gigantic figure beckoning us forward. This great man in short presents the most prominent instance of the possession of a splendidly trained and powerful mind, thoroughly in earnest, and fully understanding what is the real position of purpose in the composition of music. A distinguished living authority—adapting in part a saying originally directed to JOSQUIN DES PRES, has told us that "Whilst counterpoint conquers most men, BACH "conquers counterpoint." These words point to the fact, that having become a master of his craft, BACH wrote not without definite purposes and definite thoughts; so his counterpoint is at once objective and subjective. His purpose is ever so decided that he will drive what he duly recognises as a worthy musical thought through every obstacle, and count dissonances most men writing long after his time would shrink from using of as little account as the soldier on the march will heed the stinging nettles which may lie in his pathway. But let us before passing on see how this great and determined contrapuntal thinker practically regarded the more essential rules of the art. With all his courage and decision of purpose, how rarely he admits a brace of consecutive fifths or octaves into the tissue of his musical lace work; and how rarely he permits the presence of a discord he does not either resolve, or use in the act of passing through as it were, or allow merely because he elects not to break up a thought or disarrange a sequence! When therefore the student has attained such a mastery as BACH secured before beginning the great writing tasks of his life, surely he may then claim to be entitled to disregard in the same judicious spirit technical laws when occasion for increased freedom may arise. In other words, when the student can write scores of complicated pages without a single case of ill advised or accidental consecution escaping his eye and full control, when he can lay out a network of parts of cable-like strength and perfect independence, and when he can plan a fugue with all the ramifications of exposition, counter-exposition, stretto and other more minor fugal devices, without finding his hands entangled by any intrusive, obstinate discords, then he is certainly strong enough to deserve as much freedom as the carrying forward of strong purposes may call for; and he is also surely entitled to disregard all those technical laws which only exist for the true artist as the means by which strength and clearness may be created to help in the building up of definite objects.

Digitized by Google

E. H. TURPIN.

TIN-KETTLE PIANOFORTES.

A CORRESPONDENT hailing from a rural rectory complains bitterly that two cottage pianofortes, loudly puffed by the owner, are both so out of tune that the proverbial cow, even with its nine lives of a cat, would be killed without the butcher's assistance. Nor is this an uncommon case in the country. The English laity are not sensitively musical; they are either too ignorant, or too stingy to hire a tuner from the nearest town, and the poor pianoforte consequently degenerates into an acetous quality of tone. JEAN JACQUES ROUSSEAU, in his "Emile" (a work on Education), places his hero in a remote villa, where a pianoforte is found, considerably the worse for wear, and a worthy companion of the tin-kettle in the kitchen. But "Emile" is an adept, able to put his hand to anything; he tunes the instrument, and forthwith sings serenades to his Sophie, or mayhap accompanies her sweet songs with all the sympathy of an adoring lover. Poor BEETHOVEN, in the last year of his life, resided in a village near Vienna. A friend, visiting the great man one wet day, was grieved to hear that his only pianoforte could no longer emit dulcet sounds, but made the strangest "mixture" of sharps and flats. BEETHOVEN, however, suffered from deafness.

Even in London, fashionable folks neglect their pianofortes, and often expose their ignorance or want of acute ear by asking for official information about the state of the grand ERARD or the iron drawing-room COLLARD.

Some have the effrontery to invite their friends to an afternoon tea-fight, or a soirée, "to hear a little "music," and when the guests are assembled, coolly announce, with, or without, apology, that the pianoforte is rather out of tune! Happily, half the company, or may be more, could not for their lives' sake detect the faulty intonation!

How strange it seems that the best tuners do their work empirically, without, as a rule, any knowledge of music itself. Old THOMAS HAYDON, the professor, once asked his tuner, a clever fellow enough, to express an opinion on some new composition; the tuner excused himself on this very ground—that he knew nothing of the art itself. The question of "temperament" has been recently discussed, and much remains to be said; but this is not to the present question. Reserving the theory of keys, and their supposed qualities, the compromise, so much ridiculed by the acoustical doctors, is confessedly indispensable: the pianist, therefore, contents himself with maintaining the accepted and allowable inconsistencies of temperament (erroneous only in a scientific sense), by means of the screw and the fork. The rules for preserving a pianoforte, so far as possible, from the influences of damp, cold draughts, and other atmospheric annoyances, are old as the hills. I would advise that all pianofortes be tuned up to the high "Philharmonic" pitch.

Digitized by Google

One of the tin-kettle pianofortes complained of by my unfortunate friend in the country is a rara avis, one of the old fashioned "six octaves," from F to F; the form is semi-grand, but these six-octave instruments are usually square. We had a cabinet "Rolfe" pianoforte, at home, some forty or fifty years ago, of five five-eighth octaves, to wit, from F to C; it would now, of course, be utterly useless for modern pianoforte music. You rarely find now-a-days the six six-eighth octave pianofortes, from C to A; even the cottage instruments have, usually, the full extension of seven octaves, from A to A; but this extension hardly answers, unless the action be very fine, and the tuner in frequent attendance. The very high notes sound like wood, and merely produce a thud, whilst the deep bass notes are almost invariably out of tune.

The old "square" pianoforte had one advantage over the "cabinet," you could see and sing across it without the obstruction and acoustical absorption of the "upright." I remember how convenient these "squares" proved to be at dances, so far back, alas! as the Christmas of 1826-27. The gentleman quadrille-player, plentifully supplied with hot water, sugar, and brown brandy, sat in a corner, whence he could see the movements. This was very necessary, as the "figures" of the quadrille, then quite new, were not generally known to the dancers. Fancy a man calling out, at intervals, and in a stentorian voice of command: "lady advance"; "gentlemen to the right," "pous-sette"; "chassez-croisez," and so on! Stately minuets and country dances were still the vogue up to the year 1820, or thereabouts. I am shocked, speaking of quadrilles, to remember (in 1825-26) a "first set" on themes from "Der Freischütz," including the famous motif of the scena (for Agnes) in E major (orchestrally enunciated à l'ouverture, in E flat), and the rollicking song of Caspar in B minor (Act I).

A. M.

A SINGULAR CAREER.

The Daily Telegraph has a picturesque leader on the career of the composer of "Kathleen Mavoureen." It may be questioned whether the successful author of only one or two melodious songs can fairly claim much attention from the musical world on the ground of his achieved work. Further, and the present writer speaks alas! from an extensive knowledge of many cases, the life failure of an artist with gifts small or great, almost invariably arises from his own uncorrected faults of temperament or character, and through his indolence, pride, or neglect of work and artistic opportunities. However, the story so neatly told by the Daily Telegraph is interesting and perhaps instructive. Says that journal in the course of the article in question:—

"Mr. F. Nicholls Crouch is seventy-five years of age. "He has been the contemporary of Braham and Cramer, "of Mori and Dragonetti. He may have known "Storace and Catalani, Sapio and Incledon. When "he first became noted as a composer, our favourite "English female vocalists were Miss Paton and Miss "Maria Tree, Madame Vestris, and Mrs. Waylett. "He had reached the maturity of his powers before Miss "Bruce and Miss Birch, Miss Dolby and Miss Louisa "Pyne were known in London concert-rooms. And now "this old-world musician starts up, to the general surprise, from the 'tenebræ' of years, and the individuality "of the writer of 'Kathleen Mavourneen,' which was "growing as dim as that of the composer of "Through "'the wood' and 'I'd be a butterfly,' is revealed very "sharply and picturesquely indeed in the broad light of "the American press.

"The lives of authors and painters, it is commonly said, "are most graphically written in the books which they "have composed, or in the pictures which they have "painted; but the story of the life of the author of "'Kathleen Mavourneen,' must be sought for far beyond "the range of his songs. A highly eventful and deeply "troubled life-journey it would seem to have been. Born "in 1808, and a musician almost from his infancy, it is "said that at the age of nine he was playing the bass in "the orchestra of the Royal Coburg Theatre, afterwards "the Victoria. Then, while still a mere child, he was "attached to the King's Theatre, now Her Majesty's, and "had the honour of playing a solo on the violin in the "presence of Rossini. The conductor of the orchestra, "Bochsa, a well-known harpist, who married one of the "sisters of the notorious Harriette Wilson, recognising "the talent of young Crouch, gave him lessons. and procured his admission to the choir of Westminster Abbey. "When the Royal Academy of Music was founded by "George IV., Crouch, then a boy of fourteen, qualified "himself by the hardest of hard work for a Royal "studentship, and after the death of the king, the young "Academy student attended professionally the coronation of William IV. and Queen Adelaide, and was subsequently appointed a member of the Queen's private "band. He had already become a composer, and had "written his first ballad, 'Zephyrs of Love' for Miss "Tree, and a 'Swiss Song' for Madame Malibran. All "at once Mr. Crouch deserted his art for the most prosaic "of metallic industries, and, in conjunction with other "speculators, set up some large rolling mills for zinc in "the county of Kent. The concern collapsed, and Mr. "Crouch found himself ruined. He returned to London "and to the pursuit of his profession, and, to some very "pretty words sent to him by Mrs. Crawford, he set the "delightful melody of 'Kathleen Mavourneen.' The "success of this song woke the dormant fires within him, "and in rapid succession he produced many more ballads, "the most popular of which was 'Would I were with "'thee,' written to words by Caroline Norton. Then he "accepted a seven years' engagement, at an annual "salary, with a firm of music publishers, Dalmaine & Co., "in Soho Square, who, in consideration of the stipend "which they paid him, were to have the benefit of all "the compositions which he produced. He continued to "write not for seven but for nine years, and, in addition to twelve 'volumes' of songs, composed two "operas, 'Sir Roger de Coverley' and 'The Fifth of "November.' In 1849 it occurred to Mr. Crouch to visit "the United States, the well-known 'impresario,' Max

Digitized by Google

"Maretzek, having offered him the post of conductor of "the orchestra at the New York Opera House.

"The venture proved a failure, and Max Maretzek's "troupe was scattered to the winds. The next appear- "ance of Mr. Crouch was as a lecturer on music at Port- "land, in the State of Maine. Subsequently he became "conductor to the concerts of the Portland Sacred Har- "monic Society; produced for the first time in the Eastern "State the 'Stabat Mater' of Rossini; composed glees "and madrigals; sang in a church choir on Sundays; "and gave music lessons during the week. He made "some money in Portland; but, when the gold mines "of California were discovered, imprudently realized all "he had amassed by the toilsome practice of his pro- "fession, and set sail for the land of El Dorado. He "failed to obtain any nuggets on the Pacific slope, and "was fain to retrace his steps, first to Washington, "where he was master of the choir of a Roman Catholic "church, and next to Richmond, in Virginia. On the "breaking out of the Civil War, the composer, although "long past the age of military service, volunteered in "the ranks of the Southern army, giving up, it is "said, an income of four thousand dollars a year for "the promise of twelve dollars a month as a private "'Grayback.' He carried a musket from the beginning "of the war till the battle of Appomattox, and then, hav- "ing apparently got into very low water, he took service "with a Mr. Perkins as 'a gardener and farm hand' at "Buckingham Court House. Thence, broken in health "and pocket, he found his way back to Richmond, and "afterwards to Baltimore, in Maryland, in which last- "named city for nearly twenty years he struggled pain- "fully to obtain a livelihood for himself, his wife, and five "children. No later than the 7th of June last came a "remarkable epilogue to the poor worn-out composer's "weary life-drama. On the date mentioned a petition "was filed in the Circuit Court of Baltimore by an indi- "vidual styling himself James Marion Roche Crouch. "The petitioner prayed that his change of surname from "Marion to Crouch might be sanctioned on the ground "that he had become attached to the composer of 'Kath- "leen Mavourneen' and his family in their adversity, and "that he felt 'that by adopting the name of Crouch he "could the better look after and care for his adopted "father in his declining years, and after he was gone his "children could have a brother to look up to, and call "upon for aid and protection.' The gentleman who, with "exceptionally sympathetic munificence, has thus en- "larged on that principle of adoption so curiously and so "beautifully interwoven with the manners of the Ameri- "can people is, it is stated, an officer in the United States "Navy Yard. So there is an end to the indigence of Mr. "Frederick Nicholls Crouch; and the veteran composer, "naturally exhilarated by the prospect of better fortune, "is about to make a tour through the Sothern States, and "to publish his biography."

"The sorrows of popular song writers have come to be as "familiar in our mouths as household words. Sometimes "it is the poet and sometimes the musician whom the world "unconsciously elects shall starve; sometimes the writers "both of the words and of the melody who come to grief; "occasionally it is the poet who gets the oyster-shell, and "the composer the oyster. The 'poet' Bunn did not do so "very badly by his 'libretti.' They were laughed at, but "they sold wonderfully well, whereas the great composers "of the 'Bohemian Girl' and 'Maritana' were remunerated "at a rate which, in these days, would be thought simply "wretched. Vincent Wallace died weighed down by the "icy hand of poverty; and the competence which shed "sunshine over the closing years of the life of Michael "William Balfe was certainly not the result of his profes- "sional earnings. George Linley, the author and composer "of 'Constance' and the 'Spirit of Love,' was glad to get "twenty pounds for a ballad, words and music to boot; "the author of 'Home, Sweet Home,' John Howard Payne, "led a struggling and precarious life until, in his old age, "the Government of the United States made him a consul "in North Africa; while the writer of the music of the "sweet, natural, and pathetic ditty in question, Henry R. "Bishop, was 'stock' composer to a London theatre; "and when in his declining years he received the honour "of knighthood might almost have said 'ditto' to Oliver "Goldsmith à propos of giving ruffles to a man who had "no shirt. In the case of the fascinating English opera "of 'The Night Dancers,' the poet and the musician "were both equally and desperately impecunious. The "latter, Edward Loder, was almost as shabbily treated "by his contemporaries as Wallace had been; while the "author of the libretto, Mr. George Soane, a scholar of "high attainments, had been literally 'cut off with a shil- "ling' by his father, the celebrated architect Sir John "Soane, and condemned to the life-long misery of a lite- "rary hack for the dire offence of having written disparag- "ing criticisms of his sire's architectural performances. "Not much more fortunate was the career of a song writer "whose lays had brought thousands upon thousands of re- "cruits to the British Navy, and whose patriotic verse stirred "the whole heart of the country when our very national "existence was threatened. When Charles Dibdin could "be no longer of service to the Government, the meagre "pension of two hundred pounds per annum, which he "had enjoyed for a few years, was ungraciously with- "drawn, and he was left to struggle with poverty and to "die in mean lodgings in Camden Town in the year of "Waterloo, 1815. The lives of English composers in "times past—never, it is to be hoped, to return—form, it "must be admitted, a long and mournful chronicle of "neglected genius and unrewarded merit; yet the gloomy "calendar may be marked with at least one white stone, "when we find an enthusiastic young American claiming "the composer of 'Kathleen Mavourneen' as his adopted "father, assuming his name, and undertaking to provide "not only for his declining years but for the loved ones "whom he may leave behind him."

It is only just to the world to add the comments of an esteemed and reliable veteran artist upon the subject matter of the above notice. "My early recol- "lection of him (CROUCH)" says this gentleman in a letter, "is that he was an indifferent musician and a "very ordinary violoncello player. He allowed such "grammatical errors as the presence of objectionable "consecutive fifths to remain without correction in the "many editions of his celebrated song 'Kathleen "'Mavourneen' for many years. He disappeared "from this country, and it is even believed allowed "himself to be announced in the obituary notices of "the newspapers soon afterwards as a dead man. "No one ever heard of him for a long time, until the "singing of his chief song by TITIENS some years ago "at Boston, U.S., once more brought him forward as "in the act of thanking the singer personally."

The story should be a warning to young composers who may dream of that delusive hope, making a hit and may be a fortune, by a song which will take but little thought and trouble to write. No one could be so unkind as to wish to upbraid the composer of "Kathleen Mavourneen" for not being able to secure the professional success his talents are presumed to have deserved. Still, he himself would doubtless be one of the first to desire to warn students against hoping to build up reputations upon adventitous successes, and to earnestly urge the persistent persevering cultivation of art from the highest point of sight. "Excelsior" should ever be the artist's only watch-word. Further, it is important to bear in mind that small efforts, even if crowned with such hardly to be explained success as has attended certain modern songs, cannot lead in themselves to any really great and lasting artistic positions. Such a success may indeed equally with a complete absence of reward, delude and ruin the producing artist; who must be something of a pioneer, or he is not a true artist; and who must exercise a far-sighted wisdom, self-knowledge, and self-respect, which will stand out in due proportion with his genius, talent, and artistic skill.

Digitized by Google

E. H. Turpin.

Reviews.

King David. By G. A. Macfarren. (Stanley, Lucas, Weber & Co.)—Surely no finer example of earnest, thoughtful, dutiful, artistic labour can be presented for the student's contemplation, than that of Prof. Sir G. A. Macfarren, who, burdened with large responsibilities, and all but overwhelmed by routine labours, contrives to think out and to produce important contributions of various kinds to the literature of the art he has magnificently served so long. To his oratorios (to speak of only one type of work), "St. John the Baptist," "The Resurrection," and "Joseph," he has now added "King David," composed for the approaching Leeds Festival. The title chosen, "King David," is a fitting one, for we have placed before us the great man, the chosen king from the beginning of his kingly career. Samuel once pointed out to the people the consequences of having an earthly king of tyrannical greed, who would take their sons and rob them of their hard-earned wealth; still, they would have a king. Saul, the son of "a mighty man of power," an aristocrat and "a choice young man and a goodly" reigned disastrously over them. Then God chose for Israel a king after His own heart, selecting the man of humble origin and position, the simple shepherd, but withal the man of real governing power, the man of genius, mental strength and eloquence, born to rule by force of heavenly gifts, and not the mere apex of existing society and the royal puppet of circumstances. Such is the grand figure of Prof. Macfarren's new work, and the composer has felt the dignity of his task in pourtraying such a stately character. The composer starts his subject after the death of Saul, and continues the work rather as a series of detached scenes, than as the unrefined action of one and the same recital. The first scene opens with the acclamations of the people, after which the ceremony is performed of bringing in the ark. Then follows the prophecy of Nathan. The choruses are much used in a declamatory sense. A large part of the first section of the work recounts the story of David's sin with the wife of Uriah, the Hittite, as it is told by the narrator, while the chorus sings, "Remember not, Lord, our offences," from the Litany. Then Nathan recounts the parable of the one ewe lamb, and in a duet the parable is applied to David, who is sorrowing for his sin. A contralto solo, "What is a man profited?" and a chorus, which declares the vengeance of God upon sinners, close the first part. The second part is taken up with the story of the rebellion of Absalom, the son of David. This comprises a scene between the widow Tekoah and David; a solo voice and chorus describe the forces of Absalom, and after a contralto song, the retreat of David's army across the Jordan is narrated. The defeat of Absalom is told by dialogue, and the oratorio ends with a pathetic lamentation of David, his prayer for mercy, and the doxology.

One notes with thankfulness that Prof. Macfarren adds in the prelude to "King David" another fully planned overture to the limited list of sacred compositions of that type. This is built upon well-defined subjects and according to the orthodox lines, and it contains some musicianly development. The overture in its chief subjects and development expresses forcibly a musical description of David's shepherd life, the summons to battle, David playing before Saul, the King's envy and his death, a musical process introducing the listener to the immediate period of the action of the oratorio. The first chorus opens with Mozartean dignity and has a pastoral movement with an effective accompaniment. In the succeeding recitative, David appears as a bass or baritone rather. The song "I will not suffer mine eyelids" has a broad and vigorous melody. The following chorus, a "Psalm at the bringing in of the Ark," opens dramatically with trumpet phrases, and is characterised by much grandeur of a healthy diatonic character. Taking the keynote of this chorus C, as the mediant of A flat, we are led straight into the succeeding graceful soprano song, "The path of the just." "The Prophecy" with recitative for Nathan (tenor) and chorus is finely conceived, striking in effect, and contains fragments of previously heard thoughts. The next chorus, "The seed of David is great," has some dignified sentences and a clearly written fugal movement. In the succeeding "Narration" begins the story of Uriah's wife. In the treatment of narrative passages of this type, the composer shows much aptitude for a refined dramatic power, great powers of expression, and a large skill in intermingling sentences of great variety in style. "Remember not, Lord, our offences," the next movement, is an unaccompanied chorus of the smooth vocal type of Bennett's "God is a Spirit." The borrowing of the words from the Anglican Litany most likely suggested the adoption of one of the musical responses as a subordinate subject to the words "Spare us, good Lord." Now comes Nathan's parable, a duet for David and Nathan, and a contralto solo, "What is a man profited?" all characteristic pieces; "Vengeance belongeth to the Lord," a fine dramatic and vigorous chorus terminates the first part. The second part opens with a narration beginning the story of Absalom; then comes a long dramatic duet between David and the widow of Tekoah. "Absalom prepareth" is the next piece, a fine chorus written in a clearly outlined form with two episodes. A recitative and song for Absalom, and a new but not dissimilar choral treatment of the words "Absalom prepareth," bring us to the highly picturesque chorus, "Give ear, all ye tribes." An important and characteristic solo, "Woe unto them that call evil good," offers an unusually dramatic employment of the contralto voice. There is much life and activity in the succeeding chorus, "Arise, and let us flee." The following brief narration has, as is usually the case in this work, some effective instrumental passages. The chorus, "Thou, a king, shall not go forth into battle," is expressive and tuneful. "What seemeth you best, I will do," are the opening words of the next recitative and song for David, containing a strong individuality and dramatic element. A pleasing duet for female voices, "Like as a father," succeeds this scene. The next dialogue for David and the chorus of female voices is admirably thought out, and its closing sentences for male chorus announcing that the battle is won but Absalom is lost, are strikingly earnest. "O Absalom, my son," is David's following pathetic lamentation; this is continued in the chorus (with solo) "Behold, he weepeth," which has some charmingly expressive harmonies. "Despise not thou the chastening of the Lord" is a gracefully accompanied and effective soprano solo in two movements with a brief return to the first idea by way of coda. The chorus, "Arise, come forth," opens like the first chorus. David's highly expressive prayer, "Have mercy upon me," follows this, ending with a ray of strong hope in the fine setting of the words, "And my tongue shall sing." A graceful chorus and quartet, "Joy is in Heaven," now follows. The doxology which closes the oratorio opens fugally. As the movement proceeds, many passages of great power and dignity are disclosed, and the final coda is formed of pure church-like harmonies, which most effectively terminate the work. Though it is perhaps proper to await the verdict of the first public performance in Leeds of "King David," it is the duty of the reviewer to announce the fact that Professor Macfarren has indeed produced a really fine, ripe, and scholarly work in this oratorio. There are abundant signs of rare naturalness in its figures, which show how much the composer has learnt after a long experience to trust—as all true composers must learn to trust—in the simplest resources for the production of the greatest effects. The details are everywhere of a remarkable and thoughtfully sustained interest, without being too laboured in manner. The work will add much to the well earned renown of the veteran and nobly in earnest composer, theorist, writer, and affectionately regarded teacher and artist.

Digitized by Google

Correspondence.

ON THE TEACHING OF COUNTERPOINT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "MUSICAL STANDARD."

DEAR SIR,—It was not my intention to trouble you with any further remarks upon this subject; but some observations in Mr. Stark's letter in your last issue seem to invite some reply, and I am unwilling to ignore that invitation. No less unwilling, however, am I to prolong any discussion on any such matter, in connection with any personal references to myself or my book. I will only say, firstly, that in my preliminary chapter (xxxvii.) on Counterpoint, I expressly say—"It is considered advisable, as a mental discipline, for a musical student to pursue, in the first instance, a course of SIMPLE or PLAIN COUNTERPOINT, in the STRICT STYLE" (p. 118). My object was not to inaugurate a revolution, but to summarise and elucidate the generally accepted views. Therefore the three chapters that follow treat of strict Counterpoint; the advantages of the study of which, as "adapted to cultivate a pure and solid manner of writing," I remark on (p. 119). But even in that introductory chapter I briefly expound Free Counterpoint, as including "Chromatic progressions and combinations, as well as Essential Discords;" and, at page 149, I again refer to that style, advise the student to exercise himself therein, "subject to principles," previously laid down: not reiterating rules, such as that essential discords should be resolved, &c. And I also add: "he [the student] may write Counterpoint, not only, as hitherto, to a Canto Fermo, but, likewise, to subjects consisting of notes of unequal length:" a point referred to by Mr. Stark, if I rightly understand his remarks upon Canti Fermi.

Moreover, though Mr. Stark says that he has "searched [my] book in vain for any indication of advance as regards the second and third points," mentioned by him,—the second point being the "defect of the Cherubini school" in the "absence of any proper recognition of implied harmony in two-part exercises,"—yet, at p. 120, occurs the following paragraph: "In all two-part writing, the two notes in combination must be considered as representing, in incomplete form, a complete and defined harmony. And the harmonies so represented must succeed one another according to the various principles which have been explained in connection with the different chords. There should be no ambiguity as to the harmony intended; but it should be understood how it should be filled up, were the complementary parts added. And there should be no False Relation between successive combinations."

Rest assured, Mr. Editor, that I make these references and quotations solely in order to show that the "sympathy" with "rational progress," which Mr. Stephens justly credits me with, has been felt for many years; and, I may add, has been acted upon in professional work. My object in addressing you at all has not been controversial: rather suggestive as to the line of reform, which line should be parallel with that of Chord and Harmony study. I regret the implied distinction: Harmony and Counterpoint are two phases of Music.

I observe that all references, now-a-days, are to Cherubini. I believe that it is pretty certain that Cherubini himself did not write the book which bears his name; but let that pass. Cipriani Potter told me that, in the early days of the Royal Academy of Music, a conference of the Professors was held, at which, after examination, it was declared that Albrechtsberger's book should be the authorised manual for the students in that institution, Cherubini's being considered a less safe or orthodox guide. And yet the present Oxford Professor's book is, avowedly, "on the basis of Cherubini." How is this? The two books already mentioned were, I suppose, "on the basis of Fuchs," and so on, backwards. The fact appears to be that, gradually, the need of enlargement, to meet growing perceptions of the art, has been felt; and so fresh books have been written, advancing a little, somewhat timidly, perhaps. I think that the feeling and the practice of musicians has been increasingly progressive of late years; but this progressive instinct has hardly found much expression or exposition in the text-books. Indeed, the most recent book on Counterpoint, to which much reference has been made in this discussion, is rather retrogressive so far as rules and restrictions are concerned; though marked by much power, as need hardly be said.

After all, the matter is one of teaching policy; and I reiterate that I think competent teachers will enlarge their basis of instruction, and adapt their counsels to their pupils' requirements, undeterred by any books, and, most assuredly, uninfluenced by any "Conference." If preparing a candidate for an examination, of course regard must be had to the known proclivities of the Examiner. Will any Conference undertake to reform the Examiners?

Many other points might be touched upon, did time and space permit.

Yours faithfully,

HENRY CHAS. BANISTER.

Sept. 10th, 1883.

DR. ARNOLD'S NEW SACRED CANTATA "SENNACHERIB."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "MUSICAL STANDARD."

SIR,—Referring to the very severe criticism of the London press on Dr. G. B. Arnold's Cantata, "Sennacherib," permit me, as a casual observer at the recent Gloucester Festival, to say that I dissent from the view taken by the London critics. There were two distinct opinions expressed in Gloucester at the time, eminent professors of music (whose names I can give) declaring that the work was not only original, but that in point of merit it was above the average. None of the critics have analyzed the music. The work will, I think, compare favourably with most productions of the same class and length that have appeared of late years. I may specify three "numbers"—"The soul in anguish" (worthy almost of Spohr), "O House of Jacob," and "God breaketh the battles." Dr. Arnold conducted his work, it struck me, with exceptionable ability. The organist of Winchester Cathedral has proved that he is capable of undertaking one of the most difficult forms of composition. See his eight-part fugue, which closes his oratorio of "Ahab."

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

CHARLES T. GRINFIELD, R.A.M.

Weston-super-Mare, Sept. 11, 1883.

Passing Events.

Herr Engel is daily expected in town from Vienna.

Dr. John Hullah has returned to London, one is glad to add, in better health; though he is still something of an invalid and requiring rest.

Messrs. Hueffer and Mackenzie's "Colomba" has been successfully produced in Liverpool by the Carl Rosa Opera Company.

Saturday Evening Concerts at the Glasgow City and St. Andrew's Halls commence to-night. These are admirably managed by the local caterers. Popular Saturday concerts are spreading everywhere apparently.

The Committee of the Glasgow Choral Union have been actively engaged in negotiations with vocal and instrumental artists for the forthcoming season.

Music and charity ever go hand in hand. Numerous concerts have been given in Glasgow in aid of the Daphne disaster fund, and with marked pecuniary success.

Mr. Edward J. Spark announces his Subscription Concerts at Worcester, on Oct. 30th, Nov. 27th, and Feb. 4th, with a list of eminent artists which promises well for the success of his scheme.

Messrs. Boosey and Co., writes to the Musical World to say that Balfe's "Come into the Garden Maud" was first printed on the royalty system, and the royalty was afterwards sold to them for £100.

Messrs. Cassell and Co's long list of new and forthcoming books includes among other works of interest, Dr. J. S. Bristowe, F.R.S., "On the Throat and Voice," as part of the "Book of Health."

Mr. Carrodus proposes to conduct a string quartet party during the winter season through the provinces; accepting engagements for chamber, drawing-room, miscellaneous concerts, and oratorio performances.

The sale of tickets for the Leeds Festival has been unprecedently large. Sir Arthur Sullivan has conducted another choral rehearsal, and Mr. J. Barnby conducted a practice of his 27th Psalm on Tuesday last.

The Princess Mary Adelaide, Duchess of Teck, has transmitted to the honorary secretary of the Kew Church Enlargement Fund the sum of £1,062, being the net proceeds of the concert organized a few months ago by her.

The performances of "Rip Van Winkle" at the Comedy Theatre have been suspended during the past week, during which the theatre was closed for redecoration. The company will return on the 17th, and in the meantime they have been giving performances of Mr. Planquette's popular opera at Brighton.

Sir M. Costa is understood to have sustained the money losses before alluded to through unfortunate investments in Spanish and Egyptian affairs. Sir M. Costa is now living at the Hove end of Brighton, where it is hoped he will find benefit from the rest gained. He has furnished a villa taken on lease, for a permanent abode.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Edwin M. Lott held examinations in Liverpool in behalf of the International College of Music on Sept. 5th and 6th. The pass list gives a goodly array of successful candidates, some having specially distinguished themselves. Dec. 6th and Feb. 13th are, according to the Liverpool Mercury, fixed for forthcoming examination days.

Mr. Stephen S. Stratton has issued the prospectus of his admirable Birmingham Chamber Concerts. The scheme refers to one of the most important and art serving institutions of its kind in the kingdom. Mr. Stratton has rendered invaluable services too, locally, by making known standard and new works, and by bringing forward local artists of merit.

On Sunday, August 26th, Mr. Henry Farmer's Mass in B flat was given with orchestra at St. Barnabas (Roman Catholic Cathedral) Nottingham, with admirable effect, upon the occasion of the Anniversary Festival of the church. The composer himself conducted. The church, a large and stately building, has a fine organ, and orchestral use prevails there at the great Festival Services.

The Musical Lectureship of the New South Wales and Monmouthshire University at Cardiff has been assigned to Mr. Clement Templeton, M.A., Secretary of the Harrow Music School. There were 11 candidates. Mr. Templeton has a rare field in musical Wales for the exercise of his talents and learning; that he may have a full meed of success will be the wish of all lovers of the art. Mr. Clement Templeton, M.A., who is a gentleman of large culture and experience, gained honours at Cambridge and the Leipzig Conservatoire, and has been engaged for some time with Mr. John Farmer in the musical department of the Harrow school.

The 176th monthly concert of the St. George's Glee Union was held at the Pimlico Rooms on the 7th inst. The soloists were Miss Annie Matthews, Miss Nellie Watts, Miss Jeanie Rosse, Mr. Reginald Groome, and Mr. Theodore Distin. The part-singing by the choir, included—"O my love's like a red red rose" (Garrett), "When the sun sinks to rest" (Bridge), "All among the barley" (Stirling), "The sea hath its pearls" (Pinsuti), "Love you for beauty" (Clarke), and "The shepherd's lament" (Smart). The pianoforte accompaniments were played by Miss C. Ogilvie, Miss Louisa Distin, and Mr. F. R. Kinkee. Mr. Joseph Monday conducted.

The prospectus of the thirteenth season of the Albert Hall Choral Society, which will shortly be issued, contains a feature of more than common interest. Mr. Barnby, the energetic and skilful conductor of the society, intends to produce as an oratorio Wagner's "Parsifal," which has never been heard out of Bayreuth. The experiment is a bold one, and will, no doubt, attract all the more attention, as there is at present little chance of Wagner's sacred drama being seen on the London stage. Beethoven's great mass in D will also be included in the scheme. From the appearance of this statement, it may be concluded that legal and local difficulties with regard to the English performance have been removed.—Times.

Prof. John Ella is remaining in town. He bears his years gallantly, entertaining his friends from time to time. It is gratifying to add that Prof. Ella is in the enjoyment of excellent health, and continues to relate with extraordinary vigour and clearness the varied details of his exceptionally large artistic experience. A man who has taken an active part in the advancement of art in England, who has with keen powers of observation carefully watched the unexampled growth of music during the past 60 years, and has personally known every great musician from the time of Rossini and Weber, to our own days, has something to say, and Prof. Ella does say that something to those who enjoy his friendship, with shrewdness and effect.

The Wolverhampton Musical Festival took place during the past week. There were four performances—Thursday and Friday, morning and evening, the works chosen being Mendelssohn's "Elijah," Gounod's "Messe Solennelle," Beethoven's "Mount of Olives," and an offertorium by Hummel, "Alma Virgo." The chief secular pieces were Mackenzie's cantata "Jason," and Macfarren's "Lady of the Lake." The leading vocalists were Miss Anna Williams, Miss Mary Davies, Madame Patey; Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. Maas, and Signor Foli. Dr. Swinnerton Heap was conductor. The band was under the leadership of Mr. Carrodus, and the chorus numbered about 250 voices. Earl Dartmouth was the President. An account of the Festival will be duly presented.

The Querist.

Query.

Cantatas.—Can any of your readers give me the titles of any cantatas within the compass of an ordinary Parish Church Choir? We have already sung Stainer's "Daughter of Jairus," Spohr's "God, Thou art great," the greater part of Gaul's "Holy City," and Mendelssohn's, "Lauda Sion." I have looked through other works, but they either make too great a demand upon the soloists (especially the boys, who of course, sing the soprano solos), or else the choir is sub-divided so much for double choruses, or quartets and chorus, that all good effect is lost, as the total number of singers is not more than about thirty. Stainer's "Daughter of Jairus," was exactly the style of thing for us, and my desire is to find something equally "taking," and at the same time equally good music. For any suggestions I shall be very grateful.—F.C.O.

Replies.

H. E. S.—The outside cover of your communication came to hand by post without the contents.

The Orchestra, Choir, and Musical Education has a capital translation by Mr. Whittingham, of Fótis's "Treatise on Accompaniment from Score," and other valuable articles.—Ed. Mus. Stand.

C. T. Johnson.—The following, from Professor Macfarren's papers and Bishop's "Glees," Musical Times, (1864-5) may be of service to your correspondent, Mr. C. T. Johnson. It is all the information I am able to give on the subject:—"'The halt of the Caravan,' a chorus for two female and three male voices, interspersed with solos with accompaniments, is from some dramatic work, of which I cannot ascertain the name. It is gay and not without melodic prettiness, but it can have little or no effect away from the stage."—S. S. S.

Service Lists.

SEVENTEENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY. SEPTEMBER 16th.

London.

Foundling Chapel. — Morn.: Service, Garrett in D; Anthem, O come, let us worship (Mendelssohn). Aft.: Children's Service.

Christ Church, Clapham.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Plain-song; Kyrie, and Credo, Schubert in B flat; Offertory, Anthem, Grant, O Lord, we beseech Thee (Mozart); Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei and Gloria in excelsis (Schubert). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Hoyte in B flat; Anthem, Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem (Hayes).

Holy Trinity, Tulse Hill. — Morn.: Chant Service. Even.: Service, Cantate Domino, and Deus Misereatur, Attwood in D; Anthem, Blessed be the God and Father (Wesley).

St. James's Private Episcopal Chapel, Southwark. —Morn.: Service, Introit, Blessed is he that cometh (Hummel); Communion Service, Weber in G. Even.: Service, Hopkins in F; Anthem, Sanctus, sanctus, Osanna in excelsis (Bach).

St. Magnus, London Bridge.—Morn.: Service, Opening Anthem, I will arise (Creyton); Te Deum and Jubilate, Goss in A; Kyrie (Goss). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Ebdon in C; Anthem, I will lift up mine eyes (Clarke).

St. Margaret Pattens, Rood Lane, Fenchurch Street.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Tuckermann in F; Communion Service, Offertory Anthem, He in tears (Hiller); Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei, and Gloria, Schubert in C. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Hopkins in F; Anthem, O give thanks (Elvey).

St. Paul's, Avenue Road, South Hampstead.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Calkin in B flat; Benedictus (Havergal); Kyrie, Tours in F; Offertory (Barnby); Credo, Sanctus, and Gloria in excelsis, Tours in F. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Gounod in D; Anthem, Ascribe unto the Lord (Wesley).

St. Peter's (Eaton Square).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Garrett in F. Even.: Service, Dykes in F; Anthem, Awake, awake (Stainer).

St. Peter's, Vere Street, W.—Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Wood in F; Anthem, Ye shall dwell in the land (Stainer).

St. Agnes, Kennington Park, S.E.—Morn.: Service, Holy Communion, Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, and Gloria, in excelsis, Distin in C; Benedictus and Agnus Dei, Eyre in E flat.

St. Augustine and St. Faith, Watling Street.—Morn.: Service, Stainer in A; Introit, The Lord is the strength (South); Communion Service, Stainer in A. Even.: Service, Walmisley in D major; Anthem, Lead kindly light (Stainer).

Digitized by Google

ST. SEPULCHRE'S, HOLBORN.—Morn: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Nares in F; Credo, Agutter in B flat. Even.: Service, Nares in F; Anthem, Lord, we pray Thee (Haydn).

Country.

ST. ASAPH CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, King in C; Anthem, Be merciful unto me (Sydenham). Even.: Service, The Litany; Judge me, O God (Mendelssohn).

ASHBURNE CHURCH, DERBYSHIRE. — Morn.: Service, Laurence in D; Kyrie, Credo, and Gloria, Wesley in E. Even.: Service, Garrett in E flat (Cantate); Anthem, Blessing, honour, glory (Spohr).

BELFAST (ST. GEORGE'S).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, and Benedictus, Woodward in E flat; Apostles' Creed, Harmonized Monotone: Litany (Helmore); Offertory (Barnby). Even. Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Chipp in A; Apostles' Creed, Harmonized Monotone, Anthem, I will always give thanks (Calkin).

BIRMINGHAM (S. ALBAN THE MARTYR).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Boyce in C; Benedictus, Steggall in G; Holy Communion, Kyrie, Credo, Sursum Corda, Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei and Gloria, Redman in F throughout. Evensong.: Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Redman in F.

BIRMINGHAM (ST. CYPRIAN'S, HAY MILLS).—Morn.: Service, Cobb in G; Anthem, All ye that cried, and I waited for the Lord (Mendelssohn). Even.: Service, Smart in F; Anthem, I know that my Redeemer liveth, and Since by man (Handel).

BRISTOL CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Mendelssohn in A; Even.: Service, Goss in E; Anthem, Hear, O Thou Shepherd (Walmisley).

CARLISLE CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Chipp in A; Introit, Blessed is the man (Stainer); Kyrie, Chipp in A; Nicene Creed, Harmonized Monotone. Even.: Service, Stainer in A; Anthem, The wilderness (Goss).

DONCASTER (PARISH CHURCH).—Morn.: Service, Wesley in F. Even.: Service, Hopkins in F; Anthem, I will mention (Sullivan).

DUBLIN, ST. PATRICK'S (NATIONAL) CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Dykes in F; Holy Communion, Kyrie, Creed, Sanctus, Dykes in F; Anthem, Judge me, O God (Mendelssohn). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Dykes in F; Anthem, O come everyone (Mendelssohn), and O where shall wisdom (Boyce).

EDINBURGH (ST. JOHN'S).—Morn.: Service, Anthem, By the waters of Babylon (Boyce). Even.: Service, Rejoice in the Lord (Purcell),

ELY CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Hopkins in E flat; Benedictus, Plain-song; Kyrie, Credo, and Gloria, Jackman in E flat; Anthem, from the rising of the sun (Ouseley). Even.: Service, Jackman in E flat; Anthem, The righteous shall flourish (Calkin).

FOLKESTONE (ST. MICHAEL'S).—Morn.: Service, Holy Communion, Introit, Bread of Heaven; Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Gloria, &c. (Mozart). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Garrett in F; Anthem, But as for His people (Handel).

LICHFIELD CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Stainer in E flat; Communion Service, Stainer in E flat; Anthem, Come unto Him (Gounod). Even.: Service, Stainer in E flat; Anthem, These are they (Dykes).

LIVERPOOL CATHEDRAL.—Aft.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Gadsby in C; Anthem, The Lord will comfort Zion (Hiles).

LIVERPOOL (ST. CUTHBERT'S, EVERTON).—Morn.: Service, Holy Communion, Calkin in B flat. Even.: Service, Stanford in B flat; Anthem, as pants the hart (Spohr).

MANCHESTER CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Jubilate and Full Communion, Barnby in E; Anthem, The Lord is my Shepherd (Macfarren). Aft.: Service, Barnby in E; Anthem, Praise the Lord, O my soul (Goss).

MANCHESTER (ST. BENEDICT'S).—Morn.: Service, Kyrie (Elvey); Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei, and Gloria in excelsis, Farmer in B flat. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Bunnett in F.

MANCHESTER (ST. JOHN BAPTIST, HULME).—Morn.: Service, Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, and Gloria in excelsis, Williams in D; Benedictus and Agnus Dei, Agutter in B flat. Even.: Service, Magnificat (Bradford); Nunc Dimittis (Monk).

PETERBOROUGH CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Mendelssohn in A; Anthem, Come unto him (Gounod); Communion Service, Thorne in E flat. Even.: Service, Stainer in E flat; Anthem, This is the day (Elvey).

ROCHESTER CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Walmisley in C; Anthem, The earth is the Lord's (Hopkins). Even.: Service, Walmisley in C; Anthem, O Lord, how manifold (Handel).

SHEFFIELD PARISH CHURCH. — Morn.: Service, Kyrie, Hayne in G. Even.: Service, Trimnell in D; Anthem, O Lord, our Governor (Marcello).

SHERBORNE ABBEY. — Morn.: Service, Kyrie, Roe in E flat; Offertories (Barnby). Even.: Service, Chants; Anthem, reat is the Lord (Lyle).

SALISBURY CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Barnby in E; Offertory (Barnby). Aft.: Service, Barnby in E; Anthem, The Lord hath done great things (Smart).

SOUTHAMPTON (ST. MARY'S CHURCH).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Tours in F; Holy Communion, Introit, Like as the hart (Hoyte); Service, Tours in F; Offertory, Zacheus stood forth (Barnby); Paternoster (Hoyte). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Tours in F; Apostles' Creed, Harmonized Monotone; Anthem, O Lord how manifold (Macfarren).

WELLS CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Hall and Hine in E flat; Introit, Let us not be weary (Macfarren); Kyrie, Aldrich in G. Even.: Service, Ebdon in C; Anthem, Behold how good (Battishill).

WOLVERHAMPTON (ST. PETER'S COLLEGIATE CHURCH).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Smart in F; Benedictus, Matthews in E; Communion Service, Stainer in E flat. Even.: Service, Responses, Tallis; Magnificat, Camidge in E flat; Nunc Dimittis, Wickes in G; Anthem, Lord of all power (Mason).

WORCESTER CATHEDRAL. — Morn.: Service, Stainer in E flat; Anthem, O that I knew (Bennett). Even. Service, Stainer in E flat; Anthem, Hear, O Thou Shepherd of Israel (Walmisley).

 Post-cards must be sent to the Editor, 6, Argyle Square, W.C., by Wednesday. Lists are frequently omitted in consequence of not being received in time.

NEWSPAPERS sent should have distinct marks opposite to the matter to which attention is required.

APPOINTMENT.

Mr. C. E. MELVILLE, of Leeds, Associate of the College of Organists, has been appointed Organist and Choirmaster to St. Mary's Church, Harrogate.

HELE & COMPANY,

ORGAN BUILDERS,

WYNDHAM STREET, PLYMOUTH.

London Agency: Mr. W. H. HELE, 69, Gresham St., E.C.

Organs of any magnitude contracted for. Professional attendance when desired.

Extract from testimony by E. H. Turpin, Esq., of College of Organists, referring to organ at St. John's Church, Waterloo Road, S.E.:—

"To Messrs. Hele and Co. very high praise is due for the judgment and skill with which they have accomplished the rebuilding of the instrument. All the foundation work I noticed to be round, even, and admirably voiced. The 'chorus' struck me as being well balanced and decisive, without being intrusive or too pronounced above the 8-feet work. The reeds are of very high quality, at once rich and characteristic in tone. The solo registers I found to be after their several types—delicate and finished in quality of tone and in their voicing. The mechanism throughout a trying night's work never failed me, and it is everywhere true, reliable, and admirable. My impressions were so pleasant, that I feel it is a duty to express an unqualified approval of the labours of the very able organ builders."

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts, excepting under exceptional circumstances.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit, at Three per cent. interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables, the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons, and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares, and Annuities.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

The Birkbeck Building Society's Annual Receipts exceed Five Millions.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with immediate Possession, and no Rent to Pay.—Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate Possession, either for Building or Gardening purposes.—Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

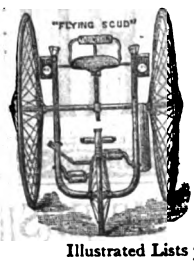
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

MUSICAL COMPETITIONS, MONTHLY.—Four NEW SONGS, by F. E. Weatherly, to be Set to Music. See the Orchestra for August and September. Post Free, 3½d. each.

W. REEVES, 185, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

BICYCLES AND TRICYCLES.
NEW AND SECOND-HAND.



"FLYING SCUD" and "ECLECTIC" TRICYCLES, are the Machines for 1883. Spoken of by the Daily News of January 30th as "Splendid machines." "NANCY LEE," Weldless Steel," and "NONSUCH" Steel Bicycles, from £5 5s. Any machine at maker's price for twelve or less equal monthly payments, or for £5 down and 20s. per month, or large discount and carriage paid for cash. Can be seen and tried before purchasing in our school (60 by 40, concrete floor, tuition free), adjoining Show-rooms, the largest in London, with over 400 new and second-hand on view. Machines bought, sold, cleaned, repaired (estimates given), warehoused, advanced upon and exchanged.

Illustrated Lists post free. Hours 9 till 7; Saturdays till 4.

Repairs of all kinds neatly, cheaply, and promptly executed. Cheapest house in the trade for fittings. Parts and sundries of all descriptions kept in stock.

Machines Let on Hire with Option of Purchase.

SOUTH LONDON MACHINISTS' COMPANY.

STEAM WORKS: Suffolk Works, Suffolk Grove, Great Suffolk Street, S.E. Show Rooms and Offices: 28 and 29, Suffolk Grove. Bicycle and Tricycle School: 18, Suffolk Grove. City Depot, Show Rooms, and School: Tower Chambers, Moorgate Street, E.C. (Nearly opposite Moorgate Street Station.) PERAMBULATORS and all Domestic Machines at lowest prices for cash, or on easy terms without extra charge. Lists free. State kind required.

ESTABLISHED 1872.

When writing please say where you saw this advertisement.

BEETHOVEN'S SYMPHONIES CRITICALLY DISCUSSED. By A. T. TEETGEN. 3s. 6d.

FREDERIC CHOPIN; His Life, Letters, and Works. By M. KARASOWSKI. Translated by E. HILL. 2 vols., 12s. 6d.

ELEMENTARY MUSIC. By Dr. WESTBROOK. 1s. cloth, 1s. 6d.

TO ORGANISTS and CHOIRMASTERS.—VOCAL EXERCISES for CHOIRS and SCHOOLS, by Dr. WESTBROOK, in neat cover, 2d.

WOMAN AS A MUSICIAN, an Art Historical Study. By F. RAYMOND RITTER. Price One Shilling.

TO PIANOFORTE TEACHERS.—Plaidy's (professor at Leipzig Conservatory) PIANOFORTE TEACHERS GUIDE can be had in boards, price 1s.

W. REEVES Fleet Street, London.

T. R. WILLIS,
Organ Builder, Metal & Wood Pipe Maker and Voicer,
TOWER ORGAN WORKS, 29, MINORIES, LONDON.

AN ORGAN KEPT FOR PRACTICE.
REBUILDING, TUNING, AND REPAIRING.

E & W. SNELL,
Manufacturers of Harmoniums, and Reed Pedal Organs,
KING STREET NORTH, CAMDEN TOWN, LONDON, N.W.

NOTE.—These are the only Instruments at which an Organist can really find himself "at home," as all Scales, Positions, and Measurements are adopted strictly in accordance with the Resolutions of the Council of the College of Organists. Estimates free.

MALEY, YOUNG & OLDKNOW,
ORGAN BUILDERS,
KING'S ROAD, ST. PANCRAS, LONDON, N.W.

Specifications, Estimates, and Designs for Church, Chamber, Concert, and all Descriptions of Organs.
Materials, Workmanship, and Tone guaranteed to be First Class.
Organs rebuilt to suit any position, enlarged, and Revoiced at very moderate charges.
Tunings in all parts of the Kingdom.

PROSPECTUS FREE ON APPLICATION.

HENRY SPEECHLY,
CAMDEN ORGAN STEAM FACTORY,
KING'S ROAD, ST. PANCRAS, LONDON, N.W.
ESTABLISHED 1860.

Specifications and Estimates for Organs of any Magnitude, also for Re constructions, Repairs, and Re-voicing.

Tunings contracted for, and Tuners sent to all parts of the Country at regular intervals or when required.

ORGANS ON HIRE WITH OPTION OF PURCHASE.

 Church, Chamber, and Chancel Organs for Sale or Hire; One or Two Manuals. Ready for immediate use. Easy Terms if required.

All Pipes and other Parts manufactured on the Premises.

WITH 25 PER CENT DISCOUNT FOR CASH
OR 15/- PER MONTH
SECOND HAND 10/- Per Month
ON THE 3 YEARS SYSTEM
BORD'S PIANOS
PIANOS EXCHANGED
LISTS FREE OF
CSTILES&Co. 42 SOUTHAMPTON ROW W.C.

CONSTANT LAURENT, HARMONIUM and ANGLO-ORGAN MANUFACTURER, Established in 1859 at 85, HIGH STREET, MARYLEBONE, LONDON, W.—Repairing and Tuning Executed Promptly. Price List on Application.—Intending Purchasers are respectfully solicited to inspect my Instruments and Factory.

EUSTACE INGRAM, Organ Builder,
Combines excellence of Tone and Workmanship with Economy.
INSPECTION INVITED.
WORKS:—Burnard Place, Eden Grove, Holloway, London, N.

MUSIC SENT ON SALE OR RETURN on highly advantageous terms by B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster-row, London.

MUSIC of EVERY PUBLISHER supplied to Dealers, Teachers, and Schools. Having the largest varied Stock Europe. The terms, which are highly advantageous, sent on application London: B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster-row.

ALL WHO POSSESS A PIANOFORTE and cannot play it, may now play at once, without any previous knowledge of Music, by ROYLANCE'S NUMERICAL SYSTEM, which contains a FIGURED DIAGRAM to fit on the Keyboard of any Pianoforte (or Harmonium, and a choice selection of forty SACRED and SECULAR MELODIES, composed for the use of those who have no time to study Music. Thousands are now able to play who did not believe such a thing possible. The diagram alone will be found most useful to Professors for teaching purposes. 6d. nett.—Price 2s. 6d. nett; post free 33 stamps.—C. ROYLANCE, 184, Tottenham Court-road; and all Music Sellers.

THE YOUNG ARTIST.
A selection of Classical Works for the
PIANOFORTE.

1.	SONATA in C, Op. 20, No. 2	L. Kozeluch	4	0
2.	SONATA in G, Op. 4, No. 1	G. F. Pinto	4	0
3.	SONATA in G, Op. 23, No. 3	J. B. Cramer	4	0
4.	SONATA in C, Op. 8, No. 1	L. Kozeluch	4	0
5.	SONATA in B flat, Op. 60	J. Woelfl	4	0
6.	SONATA in C flat, Op. 37, No. 3	D. Steibelt	4	0
7.	SONATA in E flat, Op. unknown	L. Kozeluch	4	0
8.	SONATA in C, Op. 37, No. 1	D. Steibelt	4	0
9.	SONATA in C, Op. 9, No. 3	J. B. Cramer	4
10.	SONATA in G, Op. 8, No. 2	L. Kozeluch	4	0
11.	SONATA in C, Op. 4, No. 3	G. F. Pinto	4	0
12.	SONATA in G, Op. unknown	J. B. Cramer	4	0

EDITED AND FINGERED BY
W. J. WESTBROOK, Mus.Doc., Cantab.
London: EDWIN ASHDOWN, Hanover Square, W.

SYDNEY SMITH'S
FOUR NEW PIANOFORTE PIECES.

LA FÉE DES ONDES.	Morceau brilliant ...	4 0
LE DOMINO NOIR.	Fantaisie brillante sur l'opéra d'Auber	4 0
MARGUERITE.	Chanson d'une fileuse	4 0
STYRIENNE		4 0

SYDNEY SMITH'S
FOUR NEW PIANOFORTE DUETS.

GAVOTTE ET MUSETTE		5 0
I PIFFERARI.	Musette moderne	5 0
LOHENGRIN.	Grande Fantaisie sur l'opéra de R. Wagner	6 0
NONCHALANCE.	Caprice de Concert	5 0

LONDON:
EDWIN ASHDOWN, Hanover-square.

Printed for the Proprietor by BOWDEN, HUDSON & Co., at 23, Red Lion Street, Holborn, London, W.C.; and Published by WILLIAM REEVES, at the Office, 185, Fleet Street, E.C. West End Agents:—WEEKES & CO., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W. Subscriptions and Advertisements are received either by the Publisher or West End Agents.—Communications for the EDITOR are to be forwarded to his private address, 6, Argyle Square, W.C

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 1883.—Entered at the General Post Office as a Newspaper.

Digitized by Google

The Musical Standard

A NEWSPAPER FOR MUSICIANS PROFESSIONAL AND AMATEUR

No. 999. Vol. XXV. FOURTH SERIES. SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 1883. WEEKLY: PRICE 3D.

THE MUSICAL STANDARD is published every Saturday, price 3*d.*, by post, 3½*d.*; and may be had of any bookseller or newsagent by ordering its regular supply.

SUBSCRIPTION.—The Musical Standard is posted to subscribers at 15*s.* a year; half a year, 7*s.* 6*d.*, payable in advance.

The rate is the same to France, Belgium, Germany, Italy, United States, and Canada.

Post Office Orders to be made payable to the Publisher, William Reeves, 185, Fleet Street, London, or to the West-end Agents, Messrs. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W.

ADVERTISEMENTS.—The charge for ordinary advertisements in The Musical Standard is 2*s.* 6*d.* for three lines or less; and 6*d.* for each line (10 words) in addition. "Organist wanted," 3*s.* 6*d.* for 3 lines or less. A reduction is made for a series.

FRONT PAGE.—Concert and auction advertisements, &c., are inserted in the front page of The Musical Standard, and charged one-third in addition to the ordinary rates. Other advertisements will be inserted on the front page, or in the leader page, if desired, at the same terms.

LEEDS MUSICAL FESTIVAL, 1883.
October 10th, 11th, 12th, and 13th.

Conductor—SIR ARTHUR SULLIVAN.
BAND AND CHORUS OF 425 PERFORMERS.
Detailed Programmes may be had on application to
FRED. R. SPARK, Hon. Sec.
Festival Office, Leeds.

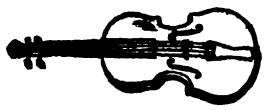
BOROUGH OF HACKNEY CHORAL ASSOCIATION.—Season 1883-4.
Conductor—Mr. EBENEZER PROUT, B.A.
FOUR CONCERTS will be given in the SHOREDITCH TOWN HALL, with Full Band and Chorus, as follows:—

Monday, Oct. 29th,	"Hereward"	E. Prout.
,, Dec. 10th,	"Stabat Mater"	Rossini.
,, ,,	Symphony in D	Mozart.
,, ,,	Selection, "Oberon"	Weber.
,, Feb. 25th,	"Jason"	A. C. Mackenzie.
,, ,,	Selection, "Rosamunde" ..	Schubert.
,, April 28th,	"St. Paul"	Mendelssohn.

Subscription, £1 1s., giving Two Numbered Seats for each concert.
For full copy of Prospectus, and further particulars, apply to the Hon. Secretary, 31, Fountayne Road, Stoke Newington.

SOUTH LONDON CHORAL ASSOCIATION and INSTITUTE OF MUSIC, Camberwell New Road, S.E.
Principal—Mr. LEONARD C. VENABLES.
The Sixteenth Season will be inaugurated on TUESDAY, October 2nd, 1883, with a Lecture by Emil Behnke, Esq., on "SCIENCE and SINGING," Illustrated by Photographs of the Throat in the act of singing, thrown upon the Screen by means of the Oxy-Hydrogen Light.
Dr. JOHN STAINER, M.A., H.M. Inspector of Music, will take the chair at eight o'clock.
Classes are held, and Private Tuition given, in all branches of Musical Education, under competent Professors, for particulars of which see Prospectus, post free on application.
ORCHESTRAL BAND (Conductor, Mr. Leonard C. Venables; Leader, Mr. T. E. Gatehouse). There are vacancies for Clarionets, Bassoons, Horns, and Euphonium.—Apply to Edward Simpson, Hon. Sec.

MUSICAL INTERNATIONAL COLLEGE, LONDON.
Founded for Examining purposes only.
Principal—EDWIN M. LOTT.
PRACTICAL EXAMINATIONS in INSTRUMENTAL and VOCAL MUSIC throughout the kingdom, conducted personally by the Principal. Next LOCAL THEORETICAL EXAMINATION, DECEMBER 6, 1883.
For particulars, address SECRETARY, Musical International College, 270, Cornwall Road, Notting Hill, W.



MAKERS AND REPAIRERS.
GEORGE WITHERS & CO.
(Late of Coventry Street),
WHOLESALE IMPORTERS OF
MUSICAL STRINGS,
From Rome, Padua, and Naples.
A FINE COLLECTION OF ITALIAN INSTRUMENTS.
Bows, Cases, Music Stands, &c. See Price Lists.
51, ST. MARTIN'S LANE, LONDON.

THE ORPHAN SCHOOL FOR DAUGHTERS OF MUSICIANS will be opened SEPTEMBER 17TH. Boarders and Day Pupils also received on moderate terms. Special musical advantages.—Address, Miss Helen Kenway, 10, Darnley Road, Notting Hill, W.

ORGANIST WANTED AT ONCE. Good Churchman. Gregorians used.—Apply and send references to the Vicar, St. Bartholomew's, Dover.

WANTED MUS.BAC. to CORRECT EXERCISES IN COUNTERPOINT, by applicant intending to work hard for a Degree.—Apply to Omega, at the Office of Musical Standard.

ORGAN FOR SALE, suitable for Church, Chapel, or large Chamber, by Hill & Son. In handsome mahogany case, with gilt pipes, 3 Manuals, 11 Stops in Swell, 11 in Great Organ, and 8 in Choir, 4 Stops on the Pedals, 4 Couplers, and 6 Composition Pedals, all modern improvements. Blown by Gas Apparatus, or in the ordinary way, the property of the late S. N. Barber, Esq. May be seen at 174, Denmark Hill, on Tuesdays and Fridays, before one o'clock, or by special appointment, during the months of September and October.

ORGAN FOR SALE (New), Two Manuals, Twenty Stops, suitable for Church or Chapel. Must be Sold.—Ginns Brothers, Organ Builders, Briscoe Road, Merton, London, S.W. Nearest Station, Tooting Junction.

JUST PUBLISHED. NEW HARVEST ANTHEM.
"THOU VISITEST THE EARTH," composed by by E. H. Turpin. Price 6d.
WEEKES & CO.: 14, Hanover Street.

Second Thousand.
W. JOHNSON'S HARVEST ANTHEM, "I WILL MAGNIFY." Easy and effective. Price 3d.
London: NOVELLO, EWER & CO., 1, Berners Street, W.

JUST PUBLISHED.—Full Anthem, "BE NOT DRUNK WITH WINE, WHEREIN IS EXCESS." For Temperance Services, etc., by E. H. TURPIN. Price 4d. net.—Messrs. WEEKES & CO., 14, Hanover-street W

NEW ORGAN PIECE, by M. GUILMANT.—SPOHR'S 24th PSALM (English words), 9d. and 2s. Ditto arranged for Organ Solo by M. GUILMANT, 1s. 6d.
London: NOVELLO, EWER & CO.

THEORY OF MUSIC, BOOKS I., II., III., by LOUISA GIBSON. "FIRST BOOK" Revised (not Catechetical). Popular Edition, 1s.; A. B. C., 6d.; "Musical Examiner" shortly.
London: WEEKES & CO.; NOVELLO & CO.

For Sale.
COSTA'S "ELI": an ORATORIO, FULL SCORE, folio, Beautiful Copy, in olive morocco, gilt edges, for £1 12s. (pub. £3 3s. unbound, the binding worth about £1 18s.), £1 12s.—W. Reeves, 185, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

TE DEUM LAUDAMUS in A, for Congregational Use, by W. de M. SERGISON.
London; NOVELLO, EWER & CO.

Digitized by Google

THE VOICE
MUSICALLY AND MEDICALLY CONSIDERED.

BY

ARMAND SEMPLE, B.A., M.B., Cantab., M.R.C.P., Lond.,

Physician to the Royal Society of Musicians.

(Concluded from page 152).

The Formation of Registers.

The Chest Voice (Voce Di Petto), possessing far greater vibratory power than the Falsetto, (Voce di Fasetto) requires far firmer contraction or "pinching" of the glottis.

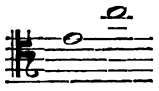
This "pinching" is more easily brought about by the use or enunciation of the Italian I (Anglice E).

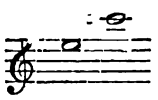
The Falsetto Voice is usually more veiled than the Head Voice (Voce di Testa), and a greater expenditure of air is required in its production.

These last two registers are frequently confounded together; the term falsetto is commonly misapplied. In male singers it is the head voice, to which in them there are many objections, which is usually misnamed the falsetto. In reality the greatest beauty of voice, especially in Tenor Voices, is the union or wedding of the chest and falsetto registers, and by this perfect union some of the greatest operatic singers (notably Rubini and Mario) established a world-wide reputation.

The Chest and Falsetto registers in the emission of their lower notes throw into vibration the whole length of the vocal cords; in gradually ascending the vocal scale, the cartilages are brought more and more into approximation until at last vibration is produced by the ligaments only. By the ligaments, in Tenor Voices, the glottis forms, between Mi_3 (E_3) and Do_4 (C_4)



The notes which have been termed Mixed Voice or Mezzo-Petto; and in Female Voices between Mi_4 (E_4) Do_5 (C_5), an octave higher, those termed the Head Register



When the ligamentous portions only of the vocal cords are occupied in circumscribing the glottis (the summits of the cartilages still vibrating), these portions do not always compress one another with sufficient firmness for the requirements of the beats; as a result, the notes of the Male Voice, between Si_2 (B_2) and Re sharp$_3$ (D sharp$_3$) and in the Female, between Si_3 (B_3) and Re sharp$_4$ (D sharp$_4$)

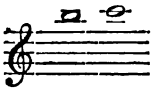
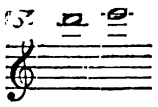
in some cases exhibit tremulousness and weakness on account of the organ being unsteady. Directly the vibrations ceased to be affected by the cartilages—and this event takes place in the voice of the male on reaching Mi_3 (E_3) and that of the female, Mi_4 (E_4)—the sounds usually become pure and quite steady.

To correct this weakness the best method is to contract or "pinch" the glottis firmly.

Occasionally when the Soprano voice attempts the sounds Si_4 (B_4) and Do_5 (C_5)



It rises unintentionally to Re_5 (D_5) and Mi_5 (E_5)



in a pure thin tone, and with less effort than would be required in taking the notes below. The mechanism of such sounds has been explained as follows:—The lips of the glottis are stretched, and perfectly, though gently, touch one another while the space between the vocal cords is considerably lessened. In this condition of the organ the least pressure of air will cause it to rush through a minute aperture of the glottis which, however narrow, serves to produce the most rapid beats with extreme facility. The pressure of the air, however, should be very slight when the aperture of the glottis is to be minute. The above process is also capable of application by the male voice. It will communicate clearness to the high notes of the bass, and enable tenors to extend the compass of the chest register, and sing the high notes in Mezzo-Voce. It is not necessary that perfect closure of the glottis should take place after each partial opening; it is only requisite that an opening shall exist of sufficient smallness to develop the elasticity of the air which is opposed to it. Any rush of air escaping through the half-opened orifice will be very perceptible, and communicate to the sound a veiled or muffled and sometimes exceedingly dull character. This result often happens with the falsetto. Hence it follows that brilliancy of voice depends upon the entire closure of the glottis after each beat, and by this perfect closure the breath is also economised.

Volume and Intensity of Voice.

The intensity of a sound is dependent upon the quantity of breath which is employed to produce a pure vibration—after each vibration the glottis should close perfectly, for if it were continually open, the notes emitted undoubtedly would be weak instead of strong in consequence of the waste of breath. In proportion, therefore, to the pressure upon the breath, must the glottis be contracted or "pinched."

Formation and Characters of Timbres.

The Timbres of the voice may be modified by many different causes.

1. According as the glottis is half-opened or closed, the notes will be either bright or dull.

2. The folds or upper tendons by which the glottis is surrounded may, either by closing, yield a stifled tone, or by retiring, give volume to the sounds.

3. Varied qualities of timbres may be rendered by the pharynx to the sounds during their passage through this situation; the varieties of timbres correspond to the multifold mechanical changes of which this vocal tube is susceptible.

The Pharynx may be regarded as a deep and extremely elastic tube, commencing inferiorly at the larynx, forming a curve at the arch of the palate, and terminating superiorly at the mouth. The Pharynx at its shortest dimension forms only a slight curve, but at its longest dimension almost a right angle; in the former case the larynx rising towards the soft palate which drops to meet it; in the latter case, the larynx dropping and the soft palate rising.

The bright timbre is produced by the short and gently curved condition of the pharynx. The sombre timbre by its elongated, and strongly curved state. The various vowel-sounds and the various forms which the pharynx may assume are closely related.

Every alteration in the method of producing vibration may occasion a difference in timbre, and every modification undergone by a sound whilst passing through the vocal tube changes its quality and character.

A New York paper recently had the following:—"The morning stars sang together," exclaimed a preacher with great emphasis, "And there didn't three or four giggling stars stick themselves up before all the rest and monopolize the music and worship of Heaven! Our next hymn will be 'Coronation'; let everybody sing." By all means let everybody sing when everybody has been taught how to sing. The most prominent, self-seeking, jealous, for the time un-christian as forgetful of decent forethought for his neighbour and probably unconsciously worldly-minded star of the story, was most likely the would-be-witty-at-the-wrong-time preacher himself; who possibly monopolized in his sermon upon the same occasion much more of the time for worship than was assigned to the divinely appointed exposition of praise—music, or was desirable from any point of sight whatever.

Digitized by Google

MUSICAL FESTIVALS.

The remarks on "Musical Festivals and their Fruits" by that worthy contributor, "A. M.," are so pessimist in spirit that one might infer that they were the result of an attack of indigestion. I feel strongly inclined to "break a lance," but have not time to enter at length into details. Let me, however, say that so far as I know provincial matters musical, we need neither the pity nor greatly mind the "lash" of "A. M."

That institutions come into being, flourish, and die, is a truism unnecessary to enlarge upon; that all our provincial music meetings (Birmingham and Leeds excepted) have reached the last stage, is so far from being the case that last week witnessed a remarkable display of vitality at Wolverhampton. A few notes may possibly supplement the report you may present. The Festival was established in 1868, when a performance of the "Messiah" was given in aid of the Wolverhampton and South Staffordshire Hospital, conducted by Signor Randegger, and including Mr. Sims Reeves among the vocal principals, with leading London players in the band. From that time it has been held triennially with gradually augmented artistic resources. A local Festival Choral Society has been created, consisting in a great measure of people of education and cultured feeling, and their singing, for refinement and delicacy, is something not easy to surpass, while they only want numbers to equal the tone and weight of our Birmingham Chorus. To Mr. W. C. Stockley, of Birmingham, belongs the credit of forming and training this admirable body of singers, and much of the success of preceding Festivals. Dr. Heap, who succeeded him as conductor a year ago, has not only maintained the reputation of the Society, but increased it. Last week the number taking part in the Festival was about 250, and the band was nearly 60 strong, made up principally of local performers, led by Mr. Carrodus, with Mr. Hann, viola; Messrs. M. Vieuxtemps, violoncello; Neuwirth, double-bass; Dubrucq, oboe; Trout, bassoon; and Mrs. Priscilla Frost, harp, as the only other "outside" assistants. Sir George Macfarren, who was present at the rehearsal as well as the first day's performances, congratulated his London friends upon being in such excellent company, and called the performers "a magnificent orchestra," besides paying a high compliment to Dr. Heap as a musician and conductor. Well, the committee, without great preliminary fuss, this year ventured upon a two days' Festival with the programme inserted last week. The large Agricultural Hall was well filled at every performance—twice, indeed, being crowded. While everything was well done, the cantata "The Lady of the Lake" received the best treatment it has yet met with—so said its experienced composer. The rendering of "Jason" completely retrieved the Bristol disaster of last year, and enabled us at last to hear a work that will assuredly escape the fate "A. M." seems to predict for all cantatas. Now here is a great artistic triumph achieved with very little aid from the metropolis. The vocal principals London cannot claim as her own. London, in fact, acts as a great magnet, but its productive powers do not equal those of its attraction. The London press gave no attention to this Festival beforehand, but the able critic of the Daily Telegraph enters upon the subject of centralisation and its attendant evils, with both justice and generosity. Again, the London press need not flatter itself that without its approval all things provincial must wither and die. While no words are too strong to express indignation at the blundering and stupidity in the arrangements at times for the accommodation of gentlemen invited to witness and record the provincial celebrations, on the other hand we need not hang our heads in despair because we are told by some of them that many of our institutions are effete, or exist on sufferance. As to the novelties produced, and their fate, I will leave that for another occasion; I hope my present words may provoke a little discussion, for the matter may profitably be considered from both metropolitan and provincial points of view.

STEPHEN S. STRATTON.

Messrs. Henderson and Farnie's version of Offenbach's opera "La Vie," produced at Brighton on the 17th, and subsequently brought out at the Avenue Theatre, has undergone some alterations, including the changing the locality to England, and the representing of one of the principal scenes as taking place at Charing Cross.

A NEW OPERA SCHEME.

Many doubt the realisation of the scheme for the completion of the proposed Opera House on the Thames Embankment, but another proposal is even said to be on the tapis; this one to be under the management of a lady who has some influence in the musical world it is claimed, and who is to be backed and supported by a rich and sanguine man. This new idea proposes the formation of an operatic "School of Music," the training of an exceptionally efficient chorus of 120 selected voices, the formation of an orchestra of 105 players, and the performance annually of Italian opera for four months, and English opera for a like period. The propounders of this new scheme are so much in earnest as to be bent, it is said, upon the engagement of some large existing theatre (the Opera House in the Haymarket has even been named) so that the work may not be delayed by having to wait for a suitable home and training place. The staff of the Opera Conservatoire is, according to rumour, to consist of twenty competent teachers of voice production, singing in Italian and English, acting, etc. It is only necessary to add that a scheme which would employ a capital of some £500,000, involve an expenditure of about £130,000 annually, and counts upon a return in the end, of course of something in excess of that sum annually, must be regarded by those who know anything of operatic and theatrical matters to be chimerical in the extreme. History has scores of schemes to record of this dream-like character which have come to nothing as naturally as rain descends. Seriously, opera, like every other commodity to be created and paid for, does not live satisfactorily upon the exotic basis. Even the operatic establishments in part supported upon State subventions, are by no means at all times healthy institutions; as being in the anomalous position of not always duly considering critical and public tastes, and being, further, now and again too independent of public support, to efficiently provide for changing and exacting tastes. The rich Quixotic gardener, who, as the fable runs, determined upon supplying people solely with his own favourite vegetable, learnt too late that the public appetite must be taken into account, and that the laws of demand and supply must be kept in harmony for success to be attainable. There is no desire here to "throw cold water" upon any reasonable proposal for the advancement of the art in any direction; but hobbies are not to be accepted as schemes fairly claiming support, neither will money unaided by sound judgment and timely action furnish a lasting motive power.

Says the Daily News:—Mr. Gilbert's and Sir Arthur Sullivan's new comic opera in preparation at the Savoy Theatre will probably take the place of "Iolanthe" early in November. It is founded, we understand, like a former piece from the same pen, upon Mr. Tennyson's poem of "The Princess." The earlier work, brought out at the Olympic Theatre in January, 1870, has been described by the author as a "respectful perversion of Mr. Tennyson's poem"; but in the play-bill of the time attention was claimed for it as "an attempt to reform a much-abused branch of dramatic entertainment, not only by the selection of a high-class work for its subject, but by treating it with refinement and elegance." Nor was this claim without substantial foundation. When the history of dramatic fashions in recent times comes to be written Mr. Gilbert's "Princess" will claim a place not only by reason of its intrinsic merits, but also because it marked a very noteworthy departure from the senseless pattern of the burlesques then in full favour with the public. It followed pretty closely the Poet Laureate's story, though it did not employ Mr. Tennyson's lines, nor did it profane or vulgarise the fanciful legend of the college of learned ladies, unless the substitution of a clownish porter for the college portress who in the poem admits Cyril and Florian into the sacred precincts, is open in any degree to that objection. The merriment was, as a rule, derived from heightening the poet's picture of the "sweet girl graduates," their contempt for men, their pedantry, and ignorance of the world, and contrasting these with a stronger dash of the alleged weakness and vanities of the sex. It may perhaps be assumed that the new comic opera will treat the story somewhat in the same vein.

Digitized by Google

Musical Intelligence.

WOLVERHAMPTON.

This last developed festival was held last week under conditions of a most encouraging nature. The excellent orchestra and the capital chorus were under the artistic foresight and musicianly grip of Dr. Swinnerton Heap. At the Thursday night's performance Sir G. A. Macfarren's "Lady of the Lake" was excellently given. This is in every way one of its veteran composer's most picturesque and effective works, and it is gaining that public favour it deserves. At the performance of the work, the author was called for from the orchestral ranks as well as by the audience, and acknowledged the applause by bowing his thanks. On Friday, the morning performance consisted of the following interesting selections, Beethoven's "Mount of Olives," in which Miss Anna Williams and Messrs. Maas and Foli were the chief singers; Hummel's "Alma Virgo" the solo part by Miss Mary Davies, and Gounod's "Messe Solennelle," Miss Mary Davies, Mr. Maas, and Mr. F. King sustaining the beautiful solo sentences. Much has been written with regard to the appropriateness of the chosen text and its setting in Beethoven's "Mount of Olives," but there can be no question as to the rare beauty and even impressiveness of much of the music contained therein. Hummel's motet, an effective piece of showy Church music, which shows the hand of the practised writer, deserves to be heard to advantage from time to time, as it was heard on this occasion. Gounod's "Mass," putting aside certain inventions of questionable taste, always attracts, as it did upon the occasion of its first hearing in England, at a private performance given under the direction of Dr. Hullah, in St. Martin's Hall, some five-and-twenty years ago. The chief feature of the evening performance was Mr. Mackenzie's "Jason," a work of exceptional power and interest. The solo parts were admirably sustained by Miss Davies, Mr. E. Lloyd, and Mr. F. King. The band and chorus did their work for the most part very efficiently, and the work was received with much satisfaction by a greatly interested audience. That the Wolverhampton Festival is now to be regarded as an established and permanent institution, is indeed a matter of much artistic importance, and one upon which the congratulations of the artistic world must be offered to the spirited, hard-working, and musically appreciative town.

LEEDS GRAND THEATRE.

The comic opera "The Merry Duchess" has been performed here during the week, with great success. The libretto is by Mr. G. R. Sims, and as the piece appeals to the English love of horse-racing, and the words are wedded to pretty, tuneful music, it is just the sort of thing to take with the public. "The Merry Duchess" is set to music by Mr. Frederic Clay, who is already known as the composer of "Princess Toto," "Lalla Rookh," and other works. The music altogether is of a decidedly pleasing character, several of the numbers being above the usual average of comic opera. Miss Kate Santley's part of Rowena was taken by Miss Ruby Stuart, who sang and acted in charming style. Her opening song, "A Maiden is like the Bird that's free," was given in a manner that at once made her a favourite with the audience, and this lady deserves praise for her share in the duet with Brabazon, "Love's Memories," which was encored, also for her exquisite rendering of the pretty Spanish love-song, "I'm the gay Chatelaine." Miss Haidee Crofton played the Duchess of Epsom Downs in a bright and intelligent manner, and sang with excellent effect, "A Duchess, I've an easy task," and was heard to advantage in the sestet and chorus "Oh, cruel day!" Mr. Joseph Pierpont as Captain Walker, was encored for his song "Take me a Message, oh, Bird of the Sky!" Mr. Sidney Harcourt was sufficiently amusing as Brabazon, and was very successful in the vocal portions that fell to his share. The choruses and concerted pieces were all rendered in capital style, notably "The Tigers' Chorus," "Love's Memories," the chorus of jockeys and girls, the pretty vocal waltz "Love is a fairy," and others. Altogether, "The Merry Duchess," both as regards words and music, is just the style to suit the public taste, and there is no reason why this opera should not become as popular in the provinces as it has been in London.

BOW AND BROMLEY INSTITUTE.

On Monday, September 17th, a good concert was given in the above Institute, the vocalists being Madame Clara West, Miss Lottie West, Mr. Bevan Jones (in place of Mr. Fredericks), Mr. Frederick Bevan, and the St. Paul's Glee Union; solo pianist, Miss Ettie Wieland; accompanist, Mr. Arthur Dorey. Encores were deservedly scored by Madame and Miss West, Mr. Bevan and Miss Wieland, and the concert was altogether a musical success, although the attendance was not quite so large as could have been desired.

LIVERPOOL.

(From our own Correspondent).

SEPT. 18.

The Carl Rosa English Opera season came to an end on Saturday evening last with a scratch performance of "Mignon" in place of the announced "Maritana," several of the artists being indisposed. Madame Roze scored another triumph in the assumption of Colomba during the engagement. It is a character well suited to her and gives scope for her artistic acting; she also gained golden opinions for her fine conception of Marguerite in Gounod's "Faust." Madame Burns as Esmeralda has also a part in every way fitted to her, and she has also the proud position of being able to count another success among the many already won. Mr. Ben Davies is making rapid progress in his profession; his voice is gaining strength and his acting more finish.

The remaining old members of the troupe still retain all their many excellences. Mr. Goosens is sole conductor now, and thoroughly up to his work. Every opera has been thoroughly well staged, and the season of a fortnight has been a great success in every way. The Company return to Liverpool at Christmas for a six weeks season at the Court Theatre.

The new Philharmonic Choral Society (the old chorus of the Liverpool Philharmonic Society) have secured Mr. A. Randegger for conductor. It is said that the guarantee fund is very large and that the Society has met with much ympathy and support.

J. J. M.

ELY CATHEDRAL.—The mother church of the diocese has set the example of again commemorating the annual in-gathering of the harvest, by special thanksgiving services. A special and appropriate Service was given. The anthem was a selection from Dr. Chipp's oratorio, "Naomi," being three choruses, "Songs of gladness," etc., "To the Lord of the Harvest," etc., and "Blessed be the name," etc. It was very effectively rendered and strongly impressive by its individuality both of conception and treatment. Generally the style is distinctly Mendelssohnian. During the offertory, hymn No. 365, Ancient and Modern, was sung, then followed the benediction, by the Very Rev the Dean. The recessional hymn was No. 386, Ancient and Modern.

BRAY, DUBLIN.—A very pleasant and excellent concert was given in the New Town Hall, Bray, on September 8th. The tasteful and careful performance of the various pieces gave much satisfaction to the audience. The programme included: chorus, "All people that on earth do dwell" (Tallis); solo, recit. "Alas! I find," and aria "If guiltless blood" (Handel), Miss Adelaide Mullen; chorus, "Morning Prayer" (Mendelssohn); solo, "Busslied" (Beethoven), Mr. Walter Bapty; solo, "O trusting heart" (Bach), Mrs. J. Bewley; duet, "Children, pray this love to cherish" (Spohr), Miss Adelaide Mullen, and Mr. Walter Bapty; quartet, "Vintage Song" (Mendelssohn); solo, "Oh! who can guess my emotion" (Mendelssohn), Mrs. J. C. Manley; duet, "When the wind bloweth in from the sea" (Smart), Mrs. J. Bewley, and Mr. R. Blair White; chorus, "Come, Dorothy, come" Swabian volkslied. Miss Ffennell and Miss Barrington were the pianists.

In the Voyage of the Wanderer, a new and interesting book of travels by C. and T. Lambert, a performance on the nose flute, an instrument to be found in the Islands of the Eastern seas, is thus described: "Now we hear a deep whistling sound, varying up and down only two or three notes, and find a lot of natives playing on nose flutes made of bamboo. To perform on these you block up one nostril with your thumb, while the fingers belonging to the same hand extend along the instrument, and with the other nostril you play your tune—if you know how! The effect produced is very like that of the sign of contempt called by boys 'taking a sight.'"

Digitized by Google

Foreign Musical Intelligence.

"PHOSPHOR'S" ACCOUNT OF MUSIC ABROAD.

I have written so many articles about music in the metropolis, that I think I may be allowed now in the off-season to describe familiarly an al fresco concert abroad. In these pages have appeared some remarks on the condition of musical taste in Holland. Let us now turn to Germany, the land of highly classical performances, and see what they give their admirers on warm summer evenings to satisfy their harmonious longings.

The ecstasy of some people when they speak of al fresco entertainments generally, and open-air concerts abroad in particular, is, to say the least of it, embarrassing. Take that well-known pleasure town, Baden-Baden, and let us see what entertainment is afforded, particularly to the tourist who visits there. We recal Campbell's well-known line:—"'Tis distance lends enchantment to the view," and we feel inclined to say that perhaps Baden-Baden round the corner might meet with a more qualified approval.

I had so frequently heard of the charms of these meetings in the open air, not only from those who had visited the place, but from glowing newspaper paragraphs, that the words "enchanting," "fairy-like," somehow came to be associated in my mind with these assemblies. I had heard that the music played in the Kiosk was perfection, the promenade delightful, and the whole thing a scene of intoxicating revelry.

When Baden-Baden was a very haughty place, and visited by very haughty people, we had plenty of evidence to prove that it had its peculiar attractions; but all these have been so eloquently described that I don't think any one would thank me if I tried to repaint an old picture. I want more particularly to speak of Baden-Baden, the sedate, the demure—in a word, the Baden-Baden of the present day, and especially to note its musical attractions.

He must indeed be a barbarian who cannot enjoy its lovely walks, its salubrious atmosphere, and its hundred healthy substantial charms. All this I allow, but these are its daylight amusements, and I would speak of its evening attractions, its al fresco concerts, its lamp-lit promenades, and its lovers' seats. I would write of its thousands of cane-bottom chairs, its hundreds of street lamps, and its interminable winding walks, laid out with tables like an extended tea garden. I would visit its restaurant, drink of its questionable coffee, smoke its bad cigars, and occasionally indulge in its raw ham sandwiches. Baden-Baden is indeed now demure; she is more, she is shy. Walk through the splendid rooms of the "Conversation House," you will hear nothing but the sound of your own footfall. Try to conjure up the perturbed ghosts that perhaps look down upon the scene of their destruction; the gambling tables are empty, the very air of the rooms has a vault-like odour about it, and you half expect to see a mildew gathering on its neglected walls.

But something still remains for those who do not care about perpetually walking, like Vathek, through these halls of Eblis. It has its celebrated orchestra, and we have come expecting to hear a grand concert. Our landlord of the Victoria has prepared us for a treat; besides, the "Badeblatt" has a startling announcement in large type, "Grosses Solisten—concert des Stadtischen Orchesters," under the direction of Kapellmeister Kœnnemann, and Herr Kœnnemann had written a grand symphony (so it was named to me). Great interest was exhibited by the inhabitants of the place and the visitors, and even the members of the orchestra regarded it as a work of some pretensions.

Let me try and describe this novelty. It was divided into four parts, the first, opening with a chorus of huntsmen, a long way off, who, not contented with remaining at a distance, soon made themselves thoroughly heard, and vigorously engaged the attention of every member of the orchestra. This, after a good many modulations, lapsed into a kind of Tyrolese waltz, and so brought the first part to an end. The second seemed to resemble a shepherd's festival, and the oboe had a long solo, then came a chorus with a good many horn passages in it. It was called in the programme Landliche scene, but it can hardly be said to have come to a conclusion peaceably, and I at once felt convinced that a storm was brewing, which proved to be correct, for no sooner had the third part commenced with the waltz-like movement of the first part than it was interupted by a burst of the most startling character. I have heard a good many storms illustrated by music, but they have been mere tea-cup convulsions when compared with this commotion. Not only did the conductor keep his instrumentalists hard at work, but he introduced a lively accompaniment of theatrical wind and pea-pattering rain. The lightning was rather vague, but the thunder made up for it, and seemed to shake the very kiosk. I was only delighted when it was somewhat abated, and a full peal of church bells chimed out their thankfulness, which was evidently shared by some of the audience. But the storm was not fully vanquished until the fourth part commenced, without a pause, and human voices, in conjunction with the orchestra, burst into a grand "Te Deum."

So came to conclusion a work that had not only exhausted the members of the orchestra, but the patience of some of the audience also, many of whom, remembering a celebrated "Pastoral," could not help asking themselves whether the present work was intended as a burlesque. A great deal that would have delighted the Wagnerites was decidedly in it, and much that emulated the genius of Liszt with a strong dash of Jullien's method was there; but, shade of Beethoven! is this the serious music of the great German school? Herr Kœnnemann might repeat the words of an obscure symphony writer, who after waiting ten years, got one of his works produced, and exclaimed joyfully, at the conclusion, "When it was finished the audience said they were delighted."

The maestro Ponchielli has written a new opera with the title "Marion Delorme."

Planquette's "Cloches de Corneville" has been played 900 times at the Folies Dramatiques, Paris.

Méhul's semi-sacred opera "Joseph" has been given lately in Berlin with success, Herr Schott taking part in the performances.

Benjamin Godard is at work on a new opera called "Pedro de Zalamea," which is to be produced in Antwerp in January, 1884.

The late examination of pupils at the Conservatoire in Paris gives promise of vocalists of both sexes likely to prove a valuable acquisition to the lyrical theatres.

The Cologne Town Theatre began a course of opera on August 31st with Meyerbeer's "Huguenots." During the winter Liszt's "St. Elizabeth" will be given.

The Bremen Town Theatre opened its first season this month with a good performance of "Demetrius," directed by Angelo Neumann. The next opera given was Gluck's "Armida."

A new musical and theatrical paper, entitled Frou-Frou, has been started at Buenos-Ayres. It is printed in no less than four languages: English, French, Italian, and Spanish.

Teresina Tua, the violinist, will give two concerts in Leipsic next month in conjunction with the pianist Robert Tischof. The two artists have already accepted eighty-three engagements.

The Hamburg Town Theatre began its tenth season on Sept. 1st, under the direction of Herr Pollini. The subscriptions reached the sum of half-a-million marks. Next month a new opera, "Schloss de l'Orme," by Herr Kleinmichel will be produced.

During the past week, "Lohengrin," "Oberon," and "The Flying Dutchman," have been admirably performed at Frankfurt, attracting many visitors from Homburg, among the latter, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Coleridge and their accomplished daughters.

An obliging friend sends programmes of music performed recently by small orchestras in two of the chief Cafés in Milan. These include overtures "Otello" (Rossini), "La Figlia del Raggimento" (Donizetti); "Polluto," by the same composer "Euryanthe" (Weber); and "Giralda" (Cagnoni); "Dance of Sylphes" (Berlioz); with Marches, etc., from the works of Meyerbeer, Verdi, etc., together with operatic selections and good specimens of the Austrian school of dance music, by Strauss and others.

The life of Tourguénief, the recently departed great Russian novelist, contains one passage which reveals much of the cause of the success of that painstaking littérateur; he was in the habit of writing out his works at great length, then he "boiled them down" by careful weeding and reduction into short stories. Would that our composers might be induced to bestow the same care over their works. Cipriani Potter is said to have been told by Beethoven that he wrote out his Second Symphony six times over before he was satisfied with it. Such examples ought to be of guidance and encouragement to the producing artist.

An American writer says: "In the history of great campaigns we often read of the useless destruction of fine art works, through the mistaken zeal of soldiers. They mean to do their duty and aim to serve their country well, yet who can excuse such vandalism? So critics often injure artists and art-works, meaning, no doubt, well, and desiring to advance the interests of the art they love. Still, theirs is vandalism, only in a different direction." Was this thought evolved after reading the Times?

Digitized by Google

Organ News.

LIVERPOOL.

An organ recital was given in St. George's Hall, by Mr. W. T. Best, on Thursday, September 13th. The following was the programme :—

Military March (Posthumous Work)	Beethoven.
Adagio (F sharp major) } Allegro Maestoso (C minor) }	W. T. Best.
Bourrée (B minor) and Organ Fugue (G major)	Bach.
Romanza—"Spirto Gentil"	Donizetti.
Marche Funèbre (B flat minor)	Eugène Gigout.
Overture, "Zanetta"	Auber.

And on Saturday, September 15th :—

Overture—"Idomeneo"	Mozart.
Pastorale (E major)	C. Franck.
Prelude and Fugue (A minor)	Bach.
March—"La Garde passe"	W. T. Best.
Adagio Solenne (D flat major)	Dussek.
Rondo de' Campanelli	Morandi.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

Mr. Eyre's programme, on Saturday last, included the following :—

Fantasia and variations	Freyer.
Barcarolle, "Ou voulez vous allez"	Gounod.
Overture, "Egmont"	Beethoven.
Fugue in D minor	Bach.
Air, "Nazareth"	Gounod.
Andante from D minor (Concerto)	Mozart.
"Schlummerlied"	Schumann.
Elevation (Romanza and Choral)	Stark.
Gavotte, "Mignon"	Thomas.
Grand Chœur	Salomé.

OLDHAM.

Recent recitals upon the organ built by Conacher and Co., at the Fine Art Exhibition have included :—

By Mr. W. Standsfield :—

Introduction and Double Fugue	Merkel.
"March Triomphale"	Lemmens.

By Mr. Wm. Mullineux, F.C.O.:—

Fantasia de Concert sur "O Sanctissima!"	Lux.
Grand March Triomphale in A flat	Mullineux.
"Improvisation"
Organ Sonata in F minor	Mendelssohn.
Toccata and Fugue in D minor	Bach.
Canzone in A minor	Guilmant.
Grand Fantasia in E minor (representing a storm)	Lemmens.
Overture, "Jubilee"	Weber.

By Mr. Herbert Chadwick :—

Adagio	Best.
Larghetto	Richardson.
March, upon a Theme of Handel	Guilmant.

By Mr. W. A. Wrigley :—

Largo and Allegro (Concerto in D)	Handel.
Allegro in B minor	Guilmant.
Gavotte in C	Tours.
Slow Movement (Symphony in D)	Beethoven.
Air, "In native worth"	Haydn.
Impromptu in G	Hiles.
Air with variations	Lemmens.
Selection, "Pinafore"	Sullivan.

CORNWALL.

The re-opening of the organ and the in-gathering of the harvest were celebrated yesterday in Morval Church. There has been an organ in this church for many years, but some five months ago it was found necessary to entirely reconstruct it. The work was entrusted to Messrs. Hele and Company, of Plymouth, and with most satisfactory results. The old organ has really been absorbed in a new and larger one. The organ is built in a handsome and costly oak case, chastely carved. It is a complete instrument, with two Manuals, the front pipes being of spotted metal.

ABERDARE.

Mr. Alfred Monk, of London, has just built and erected the new organ in Aberaman Church. The organ has two Manuals and Pedals, with some twenty-six stops and six composition pedals. Case of pitch pine, front pipes decorated in gold and colours. The organ is blown by hydraulic engine.

LEEDS.

An organ recital was given in the Town Hall, on Sept. 15th, by Dr. Spark. The programme ran thus :—

Fantasia with a Chorale in G major	Smart.
Andante in C major	Mendelssohn.
Funeral March in B flat minor	Chopin.
Andante, "The hymn of Nuns"	Wely.
New Concert-satz for the organ	Dienel.
"Reminiscences of the Opera" ("Don Giovanni")	Mozart.

FISHERIES EXHIBITION.

The following organ recitals have been given during the last week by Mr. J. Loaring, F.C.O. The programmes included :—

Overture, "Crown Diamonds"	Auber.
Gavotte, "Daphne"	Sturges.
Fugue in G minor	Bach.
"La Carita"	Rossini.
Offertoire in B flat	Callin.
Grand March from "Carmen"	Bizet.

Overture, "Semiramide"	Rossini.
Gavotte, "La Fontaine"	Arnaud.
Fugue in D minor	Bach.
Adagio from 6th quartet	Beethoven.
Minuet	Kontski.
March, "Aux Armes"	Ferrais.

Overture, "Sophonisbe"	Paer.
Danse Antique	Greebe.
Fugue in E	Bach.
Andante in G	Batiste.
Allegro con brio	E. H. Turpin.
March Past	Lamothe.

And on Friday, September 14th, by Mr. Harry Warner:—

Grand Offertoire	Batiste.
Andante in G	"

And by Master Henry J. Wood :—

"Marche des Jacobins"	Scotson-Clark.
Offertoire in G	Lott.
Andante	Beethoven.
March, "Lebanon"	Smallwood.
"March aux Flambeaux"	Scotson-Clark.

And by Mr. Ernest Taunton :—

"The Bride's March"	Loaring.
"March of the Crusaders"	Sibley.

And by Mr. Churchill Sibley :—

Cathedral Melody, "The Reaper"	Mair.
"March of the Crusaders"	Sibley.
"Improvisation"
Cathedral March	Sibley.

And on Saturday, and Tuesday, September 15th and 18th, by Mr. Freeman Dovaston, A.C.O. :—

Festal March	Elvey.
Andante in E minor	Batiste.
Postlude in E flat	Wely.
Organ Voluntary	Heron.
March in C	Grunnen.
Allegro Pomposo	Smart.
Triumphal March	Doll.

Allegro from "P. F. Sonata"	Mozart.
Introduction, air and variations	Glacinae.
Adagio	Beethoven.
March from "Eli"	Costa.
Offertoire in F	Batiste.
Postlude in E flat	Wely.

The programme of the recital by Mr. Edward J. K. Toms, R.A.M., on Wednesday, September 19th, was :—

March in F	Wallis.
Allegro Moderato, in A	Smart.
Air à la Bourree	Handel.
March, "Eroica,"	Hime.
Andante Cantibile, from 4th Concerto	Bennett.
Allegro con Spirito	Gladstone.
March (Festive)	Elvey.

And by Mr. Edwin Barnes :—

Organ Sonata	Mendelssohn.
Adagio in F minor	C. E. Stephens.
Fugue, "St. Anne"	Bach.
Allegretto, from "Lobgesang"	Mendelssohn.
March, "Undine"	Benedict.
Andante, from Symphony	Haydn.
Overture, in E minor	Morandi.

And by Mr. Harold Stidolph :—

Offertoire in F	Batiste.
Finale to 3rd Symphony	Mendelssohn.
Andante	Wely.
Adagio from Quartet in E flat	Schubert.
Offertoire in E	Batiste.
Andante from 3rd Symphony	Haydn.

And by Mr. Churchill Sibley :—

Cathedral March	Sibley.
March of the Crusaders	Sibley.

COPPERHOUSE.

An organ recital was given in the Wesleyan Chapel, on September 14th, by Mr. H. C. Tonking, R.A.M. The programme included :—

Overture, "Occasional Oratorio"	Handel.
Postlude in D	Smart.
Andante in F	Wely.
Postlude in C minor	Stegall.
Fantasia on a Theme by Weber	E. H. Turpin.
Grand Chorus	Guilmant.
"Hallelujah Chorus"	Handel.

Digitized by Google

BECKENHAM, KENT.

Mr. Eustace Ingram has just completed an effective organ for the New Baptist Chapel. The instrument has two manuals and pedals, 22 stops, and five composition pedals.

GLASGOW.

An organ recital was given in the Cathedral, on Sept. 15th, by Dr. A. L. Peace. The following was the programme:

Offertoire in D—minor and major	Wely.
Pastorale and Scherzo (organ symphonies)	Widor.
Aria, "Pietà Signore" ("San Giovanni Batista")	Stradella.
Toccata and Fugue in F major	Bach.
Song without words	Mendelssohn.
March of the Crusaders ("St. Elizabeth")	Liszt.

TOWCESTER.

On Thursday, Sept. 13th, the renovation of the fine old Church was fitly completed by re-opening Services, and an organ recital was given in the afternoon by Mr. E. H. Turpin, with another short recital after the Evening Service. The church-goers of Towcester are numerous and in earnest, making good use of their beautiful, ancient church, which is at last again to be seen to advantage with its fine nave and stately proportions, its old monuments and choice carved wood-work. The choir is under the careful training of the painstaking organist, Mr. Edwin Hunt, who ably presided at the organ during the Services upon this occasion. The organ, which is a truly musical one, with some fine toned and carefully voiced stops, has been rebuilt, and this work has been admirably executed by Mr. W. J. Richardson, of Camberwell Road. The instrument has now 3 Manuals and Pedal organ, with some 37 stops, and the usual array of composition pedals. The exquisitely carved old case has not been thrown aside but utilized to advantage. The instrument now stands on the north side of the chancel, close to the choir seats. The opening Services were continued on Sunday last.

BIRMINGHAM.

Recently a special musical service was held in St. Martin's Church, Bull Ring, in connection with the re-opening of the organ, which has recently been renovated and enlarged, and by the introduction of many modern improvements made a more complete instrument than it formerly was. The attractive nature of the Service, coupled with the announcement that the sermon would be preached by the Very Rev. the Dean of Lichfield, induced the attendance of a crowded congregation. The opening portion of the ordinary form of evening prayer was used, stopping at the third collect, and in place of the anthem, there was substituted Mendelssohn's "Lauda Sion" (Praise Jehovah). This beautiful composition was admirably rendered throughout by the choir. Immediately after the "Lauda Sion," followed the sermon, which was preached, according to announcement, by the Very Rev. the Dean of Lichfield. Many of the congregation remained to hear the organ recital by Mr. W. Brookes, R.A.M., who rendered, among other selections, Macfarren's Religious March, andante con moto (Guilmant) and a piece by Merkel was admirdbly renoered. These compositions were well calculated to test the enhanced capabilities of the organ, and it was admitted to have been made into a really fine instrument. It is a great pity that upon these occasions better arrangements are not made, whereby the people may hear their organists fully employ the resources of the instrument. A long sermon, in a close, hot church, and the wrong-headed closing of the Service, when the clergyman has had his say, disorganizes the congregation, and the music which they came to listen to as part of the Service is not fairly treated.

Organ builders and Church authorities, etc., should read Mr. George H. Birch's interesting Cantor lecture on the "Decorative Treatment of Metal in Architecture," now printed in the Journal of the Society of Arts.

At the Bow and Bromley Institute, to-night, the first organ recital of the season will be given by that accomplished player, Mr. Walter Parratt, with an admirable, classical programme. On Monday next, the opening concert will take place. Vocalists:—Miss Anna Williams, Miss Damain, Mr. Redfern Hollins, and Mr. Chaplin Henry. Solo violin, Signor Erba; piano and organ, Mr. F. Meen.

POINTS IN PIANOFORTE TEACHING.

By HENRY G. HANCHETT.

It can scarcely be maintained that the teaching of musical theory is properly to be expected of those who engage to give piano lessons. Musical theory is a subject by itself, and should be taken up as a separate branch by those who expect to become musicians. Still, there are certain matters of theory that it is necessary for any person to know in order that he should be able to study piano compositions intelligently, and fully comprehend criticisms and the remarks of a good teacher, and the object of the present article is to call attention to some of these points that are too often neglected.

The theoretical distinctions in melodic notes are rarely explained to pupils, but they ought to understand which notes are harmonic, which passing notes, and which appoggiaturas at least, especially as these can be easily defined and easily remembered. An harmonic note is accented and harmonized, a passing note is neither accented nor harmonized, and an appoggiatura is accented but not harmonized. A pupil who can distinguish these notes by their definitions can tell, in studying a composer who wrote in the last century, whether any small notes that may be found are to be regarded as appoggiaturas or grace notes, that is, whether such small notes are to have half the time of the following notes, or to be merely hurried over as embellishments.

Again, this knowledge helps when small notes are written, and it becomes a question whether they are to be played in advance of the whole chord in large notes, or only in advance of one note of that chord, and with all the remaining notes. Scales, too, especially the minor scales, are very poorly understood by the ordinary piano pupil. Why are there three minor scales? Why do they borrow their signatures instead of having one of their own? And why does the same scale consist of two sets of notes, according to some instructors, which are different according as the scale goes up or down?—an arrangement that is in my opinion all nonsense. These questions, perhaps, never occur to the pupil, but they should be suggested and answered by the teacher.

Then in connection with the scales comes the question of embellishments that are founded on a part of the scale, like the turn and trill. Most pupils are guided entirely by their ears in forming these graces, not knowing that they must be formed from the notes of the scale, unless accidentals occur in connection with the signs, indicating that an alteration is desired.

Even the key of some more elaborate compositions is not readily decided by pupils for lack of systematic instruction as to how it is determined. Where there is but one key used in a composition it is an easy matter to decide what it is; but some pieces are in minor and end with a major concord, others begin in one and end in another key, and still others never seem decided. In all such cases it is the last tonic in connection with the signature that must decide the matter. Thus a Bach fugue in minor ending in a major chord always has the tonic and not the relative major concord. This was because the theorists of Bach's time held that the minor chord was imperfect, and not to be used in a final cadence. This use of a single major chord, however, does not make the key of the piece major, but taking the tonic in connection with the signature, the correct key will be found. In pieces like Chopin's Scherzo, Op. 31, which is in different keys, the last key must always govern in giving a name to the piece. This is often called the Scherzo in B flat minor, but it is the Scherzo in D flat major, and I do not know of a single musical authority that does not so make the rule. Some say that the key of a piece is that in which it both begins and ends, but all say that it is that in which it ends. There are a few pieces like Schumann's "Child falling asleep" in the "Kinderscenen," that never end, but simply stop. In such cases the ear must decide the key, which it is not often difficult to do.

Different forms and styles of compositions should be explained as they are met in practice, and in this connection some idea of a composer's nationality and period should be given, and his preference in composition. Moreover, every pupil should know the difference between a concord and discord, at least ought to recognize that the one may be, and the other can never be, a satisfactory concluding chord. The distinction between a resolution and a modulation, and the difference between different kinds of chords would not carry the teacher too far into musical theory, and would be of great service to the pupil.—American Art Journal.

Digitized by Google

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC.

BOSTON, UNITED STATES.

The handsomely got up prospectus says that "The Conservatory System of musical instruction was first introduced by the Director into America in 1853. The Musical Institute in which this advance was made, chartered by the State in 1859, soon developed into the Providence Conservatory of Music, at Providence, R.I. To secure advantages nowhere to be found outside of the largest cities, the institution was, in February, 1867, removed to Boston, where commodious quarters were secured in the famous Music Hall; and in 1870, by a special act of the legislature of Massachusetts, incorporated under the name of the New England Conservatory of Music. Here its growth was such that it soon became the largest music school in the world. In the brief history of the school more than 30,000 have enjoyed its advantages, and gone forth to exert their influence for good, in the refinement of public taste and in the elevation of society. Of its graduates, many are filling responsible and lucrative positions as teachers, organists, etc., while others, as solo artists and professors, have attained a most honorable distinction at home and in foreign countries. So high is the esteem in which the training is held, that even the large numbers graduated from year to year do not suffice to supply the public demand for teachers who have enjoyed it. This growth and the needs and possibilities of the Conservatory System and of the combination of musical with general culture, led to the purchase of its new estate on Franklin Square, forming the New England Conservatory.

"The new building is on Newton and James Streets, fronting on Franklin Square,—a beautiful park adorned with fountains, flowers, trees, etc. The building has seven stories and a dome, is 185 feet on Newton Street and 210 feet on James Street, and has rooms for 550 lady students. The new concert-hall will have a large organ, stage, etc., and seats for 2,500. Besides library, reading-room, parlours, offices, etc., there are steam laundries, bath-rooms, hot and cold water, steam heat, gas, and two elevators, and three broad, easy flights of stairs running from basement to attic. Telephone office is in the building.

"The branches of instruction embrace fifteen separate schools in all; viz.:—

"A school for the piano.

"A school for the organ.

"A school for singing, formation and cultivation of the voice, lyric art and opera.

"A school for the violin, orchestra, quartet, and ensemble playing.

"A school for all orchestral and band instruments, and art of conducting.

"A school for harmony, composition, theory, and orchestration.

"A school for church music, oratorio and chorus practice.

"A school for training music teachers for public schools, etc.

"A school for tuning pianos and organs.

"A school for physical culture.

"A college of music.

"A school for common and higher English branches, and, for those who are fitted for it, a college course in connection with the college of liberal arts of Boston University.

"A school of languages, especially Italian, German, and French.

"A school of elocution and dramatic action—the largest of its kind in America.

"A school of fine arts."

The admirable and educational Orchestral Concerts, 1883-4, given in the Town Hall, Birmingham, under the very able direction of Mr. Stockley, are to be continued this season in a series of four concerts, to take place on Nov. 8th, Dec. 13th, Feb. 7th, and April 24th. The vocalists will be Mdme. Lemmens-Sherrington, Miss Anna Williams, Miss Clara Samuell, Mdme. Patey, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Maas, Mr. Franklin Clive, and Signor Foli. Solo pianoforte, Miss Agnes Miller; solo violin, Mr. Carrodus; solo contrabasso, Mr. Reynolds; solo organ, Mr. Stimpson; duet violin, Messrs. Abbott and Ward. The selections for the season are to include the "Eroica" Symphony (Beethoven); B flat Symphony (Schumann); the "Scotch" Symphony (Mendelssohn); Serenade (Stanford); Scotch Rhapsody (Mackenzie); Rhapsody Norwegienne (Svensden); "Tempest" Music (Sullivan); New Overture (Herbert Wareing); Two Sketches (Anderton); Intermezzo (Edward Edgar); etc.

MUSIC STRINGS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF ALL KINDS OF

STRINGS FOR VIOLIN, VIOLA, VIOLONCELLO, DOUBLE BASS, HARP, ZITHER, GUITAR, BANJO, &c., &c.,

Have always in Stock the Largest Assortment of Music Strings of any House in the World.

39, WARWICK STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

All Kinds of Strings covered in a superior manner by powerful machines, made on the best principle with all modern improvements.

A BACHELOR OF MUSIC (Cambridge) desires an Appointment as PROFESSOR OF MUSIC in some COLLEGE or SCHOOL in the Midland Counties. A Liberal Honorarium will be given to any one through whose introduction such an appointment may be obtained.—Address, Cantab., care of Messrs. Novello, Ewer & Co., 1, Berners Street, London.

PLAYING FROM SCORE.—The Celebrated Treatise on Playing from Score (a Clear Introduction to the Art of making Arrangements for the Organ, Pianoforte, &c.), translated into English, is now appearing in the Orchestra. Monthly, price 3d.; Annual Subscription, 3s. 6d.

W. REEVES 185, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

THE SATURDAY POPULAR ORGAN RECITALS at the BOW and BROMLEY INSTITUTE will be resumed THIS EVENING at 8 o'clock. Organist, Mr. WALTER PARRATT, of St. George's Chapel, Windsor. Vocalist, Miss FLORENCE NORMAN. Accompanist, Mr. FOUNTAIN MEEN.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

THE VOICE MUSICALLY AND MEDICALLY CONSIDERED. By Armand Semple, B.A., M.B., Cantab., M.R.C.P., Lond.

MUSICAL FESTIVALS.

A NEW OPERA SCHEME.

MUSICAL INTELLIGENCE:—Wolverhampton—Leeds Grand Theatre—Bow and Bromley Institute—Liverpool—Ely Cathedral—Bray, Dublin.

FOREIGN MUSICAL INTELLIGENCE:—"Phosphor's" Account of Music Abroad, etc., etc.

ORGAN NEWS:—Liverpool—Crystal Palace—Oldham—Cornwall—Leeds—Aberdare—Fisheries Exhibition—Copperhouse—Beckenham, Kent—Glasgow—Towcester—Birmingham.

POINTS IN PIANOFORTE TEACHING. By Henry G. Hanchett.

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC. Boston, United States.

EDITORIAL:—Form in Vocal Music. VIII.—The Logic of Counterpoint. Third Series. XIII.

REMINISCENCES OF AN OLD REPORTER. The Philharmonic Society.

AN EXPERIENCE IN PIANOFORTE PLAYING IN NEW ORLEANS.

ACADEMICAL INTELLIGENCE:—Trinity College, London.

TWO LETTERS WRITTEN BY WAGNER.

CORRESPONDENCE:—"Counterpoint"—"Sennacherib."

PASSING EVENTS. The Querist, Service Lists, &c.

LONDON: SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 1883.

FORM IN VOCAL MUSIC.

VIII.

THE musical setting of the Canticles is comparatively rarely done in the Roman Church, in the Liturgy of which the Canticles occupy a less prominent position than elsewhere; but this is a constant musical necessity in the Anglican Church, and is a matter calling for much constructive thought and skill.

No greater difficulty in the architectural laying out of Church music can indeed be named probably than the one to be encountered in the construction of the "Te Deum." This fine Canticle, so full of glorious praise and prayerful fervour, has a want of coherent continuity in its construction; and terminating as it does with a prayerful attitude without recovering the glow of thankful praise with which it opens, it presents to the composer a juxtaposition of verbal sentiments which in their proper treatment disarranges the usual musical principles of the presentation, development, and recapitulation of ideas. It has been my privilege to know something of a learned, thoughtful, and masterly analysis of the "Te Deum laudamus" by Mr. H. S. HUME. The author in this essay explains with much clearness the historical development and doctrinal growth of this venerable and precious heritage of the Church. Though commonly ascribed to the time of ST. AMBROSE, its origin must be dated from a much earlier period, when the Christians made their belief in the divinity of their great Master the watchword of their lives, and when the full doctrinal position of the Church was, though acknowledged, not formulated as in after ages. The original fragments of the great hymn of the Church militant forming a post-communion hymn addressed with gladdened hearts to CHRIST, and triumphantly declaring that "we praise Thee, O GOD, "we acknowledge Thee to be the LORD," were incorporated into the complete doctrinal exposition as now in daily use in Church. This growth of the hymn, by the involution of a wide doctrinal scope, and the consequent changed nature of what was in the first instance a fervid, adoring personal address, has undoubtedly complicated the composer's task of treating the words with judgment and effect. It would repay the thoughtful composer, indeed, if he were closely to examine the structure of the hymn as it now stands and compare it with its more primitive outlines. As now read, the "Te Deum laudamus" has several distinct outbursts of praise combined with the doctrinal recognition of the three-fold Unity of the Blessed Trinity. Thus, we have the opening sentences, next the "Ter Sanctus," then the separate acknowledgment of the three persons of the Trinity in Unity; and, lastly, the outburst, "Day by day "we magnify Thee." Here, then, are several distinct and emphatic utterances calling for dignified, grand and praise-full musical periods, and these passages form the bright lights so to speak of the hymn. Then, it is the composer's task to distinguish solemnly the central doctrine of the Incarnation and the prayerful address to the Incarnate One, during the rendering of which in ancient times and still in the Roman Church, the people kneel in solemn meditation. Then there are to be severally treated the general and personal sentiments of prayer which bring the hymn to a close. The simplest and perhaps most obvious method of musically treating the "Te Deum lauda-"mus" is by the adoption of either a modified binary or episodical form. Thus the primary subject of praise may be brought round again at the words "Day by day"; the "Ter Sanctus" naturally receives a distinct treatment, and the setting of prayerful sentences following the declaration of the Incarnation, may with judicious modification be resumed, in manner if not in actual detail, at the pronunciation of the closing sentences. The setting of this great Canticle, the "Te Deum laudamus," may call for some further consideration presently.

Digitized by Google

E. H. TURPIN.

THE LOGIC OF COUNTERPOINT.

THIRD SERIES.

XIII.

NATURALLY CHERUBINI does not find it necessary to give further rules for the conduct of florid or fifth species counterpoint in four parts. His directions for the practice of writing florid counterpoint, however, are judicious, and deserve notice. He proposes that the student shall first write such a counterpoint in one part, then in two parts, and lastly in three parts, occupying, of course, all the voices save the one sustaining the canto fermo. Thus the student is led on to the composition of the only contrapuntal combination of general utility. It may, perhaps, be asked, Why is it necessary to spend so much preliminary thought and labour on the practice of the different species preceding the fifth, when the last-named species is the only one in constant use, and when the other kinds are only exceptionally employed at any sustained length? It would be impossible to answer so wide a question to the satisfaction of all, for no two minds can be measured together as regards their aptitude for unaided production, clear-sightedness, or sense of reliance upon rules or advice. However, the importance of practising the composition of the different contrapuntal species in any number of parts, may surely be realised by the usually stated theoretical truism that florid counterpoint is made up of a mixture of the foregoing species garnished with a modicum of quavers. So that the power acquired by sustained effort and practice in the treatment of notes of any distinct kind or value must be useful and requisite mentally, just as the executant physically requires to have a greater command over the mechanisms of a given musical instrument than may be absolutely called for, to all appearance, in the texture of the music to be performed. Again, the practice of writing the different contrapuntal species exercises an influence over the writer's mind in the production and development of a readiness and alertness of thought which is invaluable to the composer. A well drilled contrapuntal mind—this is said, be it observed, without implying pedantic training—is not only strong in the sense of being able to control with definiteness of purpose and clearness of outline the parts forming the melodic strata of a score, but it is stored with a faculty and aptitude for the utilization of particles of musical ideality which is indeed one of the most necessary functions of the useful composer. The mind of the productive artist has been compared, as regards its fructifying powers and cultivation, to land. It is true that natural power produces trees, herbs, and grass, but the successful growth of corn and fruit, more especially necessary as food for mankind, can only come of a painstaking cultivation under which lies the Divine ordinance, not to say consecration, "labour." The land must be ploughed, and the seed sown before there can be any hope of a harvest. So the composer must cast his ideas into the well prepared and receptive ground of a trained musical mind. The would-be inspired—without effort—genius, may, after a struggle ten times more trying than such an effort would be to a musical and mental athlete, knock together an indifferent royalty song, which, from the hand of an untrained writer, must have its construction revised and its accompanying harmonies made ship-shape by the publisher's musical "reader"; but such a self-satisfied composer is helpless when he thinks of approaching the vocal or orchestral score. Action and re-action are usually close upon each other's heels; so now we have the advance of art by earnestly developed technical training met by the Bohemian spirit of artistic license. The contrapuntist must not be misled into such life-long errors as mistaking training for slavery, license for freedom. So it is well to practise diligently the conduct of the different species ab uno disce omnes, first separately, then mixed together, before working at florid counterpoint in four parts, which forms for the most part the staple commodity of the contrapuntal writer; seeing that its successful handling calls for the strong, ready use of all the species, and that quick apprehension and habitual contrapuntal thought which prompts the appropriate application of the types best suited to express or adorn the thought to be enunciated at the time. E. H. Turpin.

Digitized by Google

REMINISCENCES OF AN OLD REPORTER.

The Philharmonic Society.

The letter of Mr. Charles E. Stephens in your issue for Sept. 8th, reminds me of the "Old Philharmonic" Society, of which this gentleman is now the active and efficient treasurer. My father was a subscriber to the Society for many years, and remembered the meetings in the Argyll Rooms, Regent Street. At that time (1820-40), the subscription for "outsiders" was four guineas for eight concerts, which usually began in March and ended in June. My father was present at a concert when "the finest gentleman in Europe," then Prince Regent, honoured the Society with his presence; one of his black silk stockings, for His Royal Highness appeared in full court dress, had a long "ladder" at the back, but as my father said, "what mattered the unravelled silk with such legs to display!" It is well known that George IV. liked music and was an adept at the violoncello.

The Old Philharmonic went on prosperously, with various conductors, until 1845, when sundry critics of the press made a "dead-set" against the alternate holders of the ivory baton, especially poor Sir Henry Bishop, whose taking of the time was always either too slow or too fast! The directors seem to have been intimidated by the "thunder" of the (no longer leading) "Jupiter," and they appointed Sir Michael Costa as sole conductor in 1846. Even Sir Michael was assailed with fiery bolts and the "rows" were incessant. Sir Michael, however, weathered the storm, and at last retired spontaneously at the end of a long and honourable reign. He became musical director of the new "Royal Italian Opera" in 1847, and had plenty of work on his hands. Sir Michael signalised his first year at the Philharmonic by producing all the nine Symphonies of Beethoven in rotation; a "sensation" was naturally created in the musical world.

I witnessed the début of Vieuxtemps at the Philharmonic concert on Monday, April 19th, 1841, and sat near Mr. Thos. Alsager, then the musical reporter of The Times: he wrote nearly a column of complimentary criticism in favour of the famous Belgian, which appeared on the Tuesday; reporters at that time could not put off their notices. Vieuxtemps, in the ensuing month of June, appeared in the course of a matinée at Her Majesty's Theatre, which then had a regular concert-room with tiers of boxes. In the course of his solo Vieuxtemps broke a string and retired. A vocalist stood forth like "Moses in the gap," and Vieuxtemps afterwards came on again to conclude his piece. He was a fine fiddler, but a dreadfully dry composer.

It was my good fortune, on June 13th, 1842, to see Mendelssohn conduct his Symphony in A minor, yclept the "Scotch"; his organ performances that year have already been referred to. In the spring of 1847, the year of his untimely death, I heard the great master play Beethoven's Fourth Concerto in G; he had composed about half-a-dozen cadenzas at rehearsal, but at the very last moment improvised a new one, and kept Sir Michael Costa waiting, at the end of the first movement, for a space, benignantly smiling at the necessarily passive conductor and his trial of patience.

The Society left the Hanover Square Rooms for St. James's Hall about the year 1859 or 1860, but I was then an absentee. After Sir M. Costa's resignation, Wagner and Sir Sterndale Bennett wielded the stick; Wagner only one season, when he encountered a storm of hostile, and I fear spiteful, criticism.

Thirty or forty years ago, the programme always included two symphonies, two overtures, and two concertos, for violin or pianoforte. The concert was too long, yet it never lasted more than three hours, and was over at about eleven o'clock. Even now, I can never get out of St. James's Hall before that hour, unless I choose to miss some last notable number, a most objectionable proceeding.

Mr. Anderson, the then treasurer, was a very agreeable man, and a fundamental believer in the Old Philharmonic. He had very hard work as conductor of the Queen's private band, and like Mahomet's coffin, fluctuated between Windsor and London. Mrs. Anderson will long be remembered as a favourite pianist. She had the honour of giving lessons to the Queen.

I should have said, when speaking of Mäestro Mendelssohn, that on one occasion—(I was not present and forget the date)—he ran up the steps of the orchestra, in the Hanover Square Rooms, to reprove one of the players after the performance of his overture, probably the "Isles of Fingal," but no matter. Every artist trembled and turned pale, until the sovereign conductor accosted poor Chipp, of the double drums, who blushed like a peony in buxom May. Chipp had failed to produce one of Mendelssohn's peculiar effects; the master briefly explained his wishes, ran back, smiled at Chipp as much as to say "do you twig?" and repeated the overture, which the audience had encored. The late Dr. Doran, rather prone to "additions and embellishments," told me that Mendelssohn stopped the band in full career when Chipp made this trifling mistake, but the fact is denied, and I reject it accordingly. Mendelssohn once came rather late to a rehearsal, and one of the artists, a wealthy and consequential man, exclaimed: "Mr. Mendelssohn, you have kept the band waiting." Henry Westrop, then a "second fiddle," related the circumstance to me. He added that Mendelssohn urged the directors to dismiss the offending artist, but they declined to do so as he was not only rich but a very valuable servant. Poor Grattan Cooke, the hautboy player, was not so fortunate. The directors got rid of him in 1850, and Cooke wrote a protest, which he sent round to the papers, my own amongst the number. I then wrote for the Era. Grattan Cooke used to "play the fool exceedingly" in the orchestra, and neglected his business. Mendelssohn once told him "to go home and practise." The directors made the excuse that Cooke had accepted the leadership of the 2nd Life Guards Band, and could not, therefore, properly fulfil his duties at the Philharmonic. At the Norwich Festival of 1845 Grattan Cooke came forward as a tenor singer between the two bassi Staudigl and Machin, but the experiment was a failure.

George Hogarth was Secretary of the Society in 1854, or about that time. He wrote the musical notices for the Morning Chronicle up to 1846, when he joined the Daily News, and Mr. C. L. Grüneisen succeeded him on the Chronicle. I sat by Hogarth at one of Mr. Henry Leslie's concerts in 1855, when he was much annoyed at an alteration made in the text of Burns's "Tam O'Shanter," set to music by Howard Glover, the then critic of the Morning Post, and a thorough "Jenkins" in style: he used such words as "riant" for smiling—par example! Howard Glover was cashiered in 1866, and died almost a pauper, in America. The cause of his dismissal is well known to the initiated; he was a self-conceited, superficial, fellow. Mr. Ella once excluded him from the "Musical Union," whereat poor Howard Glover was dreadfully irate, and wrote a venomous article in his paper. Mr. Stanley Lucas succeeded Mr. Hogarth as Secretary, and Mr. Henry Hersee now fills the post to the satisfaction of every one concerned.

The annotated programmes of the Philharmonic concerts used to be written, at great length, and very ably, by Professor G. A. Macfarren. Dr. Hueffer is now responsible for the editorship; and to him the words of Horatius Flaccus, "brevis esse laboro" are not inap-plicable. Long analyses, however, are a mistake, unless the book be supplied to subscribers before the concert, so that they may make themselves au fait at home. On the same principle, I dislike to see people poring over scores, and pretending to follow the performance. The task must distract the attention and naturally mar the enjoyment. I believe that a great authority, Mr. James Davison, holds the same opinion; Sir George Grove is on "the other side," but the doctor's dictum, often laid down in Crystal Palace programmes, has not yet convinced me.

Digitized by Google

Former directors of the Philharmonic, highly respected as musicians, were Mr. McMurdie, Mr. Anderson (already spoken of) and Mr. Williams, the clarinet player.

Spohr played a violin concerto at the Philharmonic some thirty-five years ago, and I heard Moscheles play a pianoforte concerto in the summer of 1861, his last appearance in London.

One fine night, in June, 1842, Sigismond Thalberg was actually hissed, for insulting the classical Philharmonic Society with some sorry virtuoso stuff. The Sibilants I happen to know; and one of them still glories in the avowal of the deed.

I heard Thalberg again, in June, 1850, when he was not hissed, although he chose so trivial a theme for his variations as the song of Dulcamara the quack-doctor, "Io son ricco," so well rendered by Ronconi at the Royal Italian Opera. I never could bear the compositions of Thalberg; his execution is another matter.

A scene occurred at the Philharmonic in 1848 or 1849. Sir Sterndale Bennett's overture, "Parisina," was on the cards, but the composer either found fault with Sir Michael Costa's tempo, or sent some curt verbal messenger to the conductor, expressive of his wishes. Sir Michael took offence, and when the overture came on, walked away, down the stairs that lead to the artists' room. Mr. Lucas then stepped forward and assumed the bâton for the occasion. I was and am still ashamed of the unseemly affair, highly discreditable to some body.

The Philharmonic is prospering under present management. May the Society continue its career, with three cheers for Messrs. C. E. Stephens and Hersee! A. M.

AN EXPERIENCE IN PIANOFORTE PLAYING IN NEW ORLEANS.

"I was loafing around the streets last night," said Jem Nelson, one of the oldest locomotive engineers running into New Orleans, "and as I had nothing to do, I dropped into a concert and heard a slick-looking Frenchman play a piano in a way that made me feel all over in spots. As soon as he sat down on the stool I knew by the way he handled himself that he understood the machine he was running. He tapped the keys way up one end, just as if they were gauges and he wanted to see if he had water enough. Then he looked up, as if he wanted to know how much steam he was carrying, and the next moment he pulled open the throttle and sailed out on the main line as if he was half an hour late.

"You could hear her thunder over culverts and bridges, and getting faster and faster, until the fellow rocked about in his seat like a cradle. Somehow I thought it was old '36' pulling a passenger train, and getting out of the way of a 'special.' The fellow worked the keys on the middle division like lightning, and then he flew along the north end of the line until the drivers went around like a buzz-saw, and I got excited. About the time I was trying to tell him to cut her off a little, he kicked the dampers under the machine wide open, pulled the throttle valve way back in the tender, and—Jerusalem—how he did run! I couldn't stand it any longer, and yelled to him that he was pounding on the left side, and if he wasn't careful he'd drop his ash pan.

"But he did not hear. No one heard me. Everything was flying and whizzing. Telegraph poles on the side of the track looked like cornstalks, the trees appeared to be a mud bank, and all the time the exhaust of the old machine sounded like the hum of a bumble bee. I tried to yell out, but my tongue would not move. He went around curves like a bullet, slipped an eccentric, blew out his soft plug, went down grades fifty feet to the mile, and not a confounded brake set. She went by the meeting point at a mile and a half a minute, and calling for more steam. My hair stood up like a cat's tail, because I knew the game was up.

"Sure enough, dead ahead of us was the tail-light of the 'special.' In a daze I heard the crash as they struck, and I saw cars shivered into atoms, people mashed and mangled and bleeding, and gasping for water. I heard another crash as the French professor struck the deep keys away down on the lower end of the southern division, and then I came to my senses. There he was at a dead standstill, with the door of the fire-box of the machine open, wiping the perspiration off his face, and bowing at the people before him. If I live to be a thousand years old, I'll never forget the ride that Frenchman gave me on the piano."—American Journal.

Academical Intelligence.

TRINITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

The Examiners acting for the Academical Board unanimously decided that no candidate examined displayed such conspicuous merits as to justify the award of the Henry Smart Scholarship, tenable for three years. The Sims Reeves Exhibition, tenable for one year, was awarded to Miss Maud Lee, with high commendation to Miss Eugenie A. Faull. The Sir Julius Benedict Pianoforte Exhibition, tenable for one year, was also awarded to Miss Olive B. St. Clair. In connection with this competition, Miss Maud E. Quick was highly commended, and commendation was bestowed upon Miss Snudden. The members of the Academical Board present were, Messrs. H. J. Stark, Mus.B., Chairman, Gordon Saunders, Mus.D., Bradbury Turner, Mus.B., J. Stedman, and E. H. Turpin, with Mr. Shelley Fisher, the College Secretary.

TWO LETTERS WRITTEN BY WAGNER.

The Musical Record gives a translation of two letters. The first letter is addressed to Herr Schelper, the well-known baritone singer:—

Most worthy Herr Schelper,—I hope you will not be in any doubt as to the interest which I take in you. Even if the names of your associates in the performance of the "Ring des Nibelungen" at the Leipzig Theatre were unknown to me, the name alone of the distinguished artist whom I so joyfully greeted a few years ago as Hans Sachs in Bremen, would suffice to assure me of a successful interpretation of the most difficult part of my work. I knew that I was not deceiving myself: everything unanimously confirms my favourable presupposition.

I heartily welcome you once more!

I frankly confess to you that the bold line of conduct pursued by your manager causes me great joy. As the matter thus interests me, I would venture to express the wish that there might be a clearer agreement between the scenic action and the orchestra. I am speaking of matters which were only learnt and attended to at the rehearsals which I myself conducted. Try and get your manager (specially for the proposed Berlin performances) to summon to Leipzig the ballet-master, Herr Fricke, from Dessau, and the music-director, Seidel (here), both of whom are intimately acquainted with my wishes; and to give, under their direction, some extra rehearsals, so as to remove imperfection.

With the best good wishes, I remain, yours very truly,

RICHARD WAGNER.

Bayreuth, May 14th, 1878.

The second letter is addressed to Director Franz Jauner, in Vienna, in answer to one written to Wagner giving an enthusiastic account of the success of "Siegfred," in Vienna (November, 1878).

But, dearest friend, how can you be in doubt as to my feelings? Most wonderfully am I affected by performances such as yours in Vienna. Do you think I am blind to the meaning of this success, and to the extraordinary good will which caused it? Formerly, when I published the poem of this work, no one believed in the possibility of its production; this I remember, but still more so the fact that I myself could not dare to hope to be able to give to the public of our theatres the various portions of the work as opera performances. Such a complete and satisfactory performance as that of "Siegfried" to the opera-going public of Vienna was considered ten years ago—yes, think of that!—an almost incredible event, and I am now of the same opinion. I can only say that I am lost in amazement; and how can I be otherwise than thankful?

However, I also know that I could only get the work performed to perfection with the extraordinary contrivances which I have provided for it in Bayreuth. Should I or my successors one day have the opportunity of repeating these stage festival plays, it must then be remembered that some means will have to be employed to replace that which is quite impossible for performances in provincial theatres. Therefore, guided by common sense in the matter, I was the first to propose 'cuts' for ordinary theatre performances, as lately for the "Gotterdämmerung." Seidel, and I think also Richter, know them. That I am forced to regard this as necessary, is indeed the reason why I do not attend these performances, and why I am most unwilling to hear details respecting these changes. This weakness must be forgiven me. A young enthusiast, quite unconnected with the stage described to me the painful impression which the changes in the great concluding scene of "Siegfried" had made on him. It was unpleasant for me to hear of it. Then came to my remembrance my faithful and clever Materna, who from her heart has learnt of me more than any other; I felt persuaded that it must grieve her to sacrifice all the tender transitions (Uebergänge), which she performed with so much willingness, to a rough pell-mell (Durcheinander); and expressed to her my real regret for what had to be done. Well, that's all!

Digitized by Google

Oh, I quite understand that the Viennese, especially those who frequent the pit, want something good to eat and drink about eleven o'clock. I know that perfectly well, and we confess to ourselves that it is unreasonable to demand efforts even for its own enjoyment from a town theatre (evening) public; to meet this difficulty, I specially established my Bayreuth stage festival performances.

I have told you this, dear friend, on the last Vienna evening before the whole public, that only you could have persuaded me to assist an opera theatre in the ennobling of its efforts. I assure you that since then you were not and are not the cause of my refusing to co-operate. Our first attempts and their wonderful success at once convinced me that the state of our modern theatres, and the publicity influencing them on all sides, would render a lasting sympathy on my side impossible. Therefore, all the better if you at least do not lose courage; and if from these wonderful circumstances you gain from time to time something like these "Siegfried" performances, I congratulate you from the bottom of my heart.

I have to beg of you, for the intended representation of the whole work, to give very careful extra study to the "Rheingold"; and, as would seem necessary, in every particular. The fault of giving this prelude between the first and second principal piece is one which you most probably have discovered yourself, and would have remedied even without a suggestion without me.

So good luck to you! You have accomplished much: do still more. From his heart greets you, your devoted

RICHARD WAGNER.

Bayreuth, November 18th, 1878.

Correspondence.

"COUNTERPOINT."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "MUSICAL STANDARD."

SIR,—I have been away from home, taking a rest from my usual work, or I should have written earlier on the above question. I am very glad, indeed, that you have opened your columns for discussion, and I trust some good may be done by it. I have read all the letters that have appeared, and it would seem, that there is a desire on the part of your correspondents to advocate a system of Free Counterpoint only, based, of course, on Harmony. This is what all musicians desire in the end, and it is generally believed that the study of Strict Counterpoint is the very best means to bring about this freedom in writing. It must be remembered, however, that freedom without power, or force, will be weak and uninteresting. I must also say, that all our greatest composers, Wagner also,—the freest of all,—have been great contrapuntists, and I believe, for one, that the study of Strict Counterpoint cannot be dispensed with.

It is all very well for men who have been training themselves for years to cry out for freedom now; but ask any young gifted composer to write good Free Counterpoint, before he has written a note of Strict, and bad work may with certainty, be predicted. Is it possible for a man, of average strength, to fight as well on the battle-field, as a well-trained soldier? Consult any general.

But, supposing we turn again to music, and in doing so we put aside, for a moment, Fugues, etc., and give our attention to that part of a Sonata which is sometimes called the "free fantasia" or the "development portion." I will go a little further, and imagine two musicians, of equal natural ability, engaged in developing and elaborating the two foregoing subjects. If one of these men were a good Contrapuntist, and the other only a good Harmonist, it would soon be found which could produce the best development. There can be no question but that the work of the former would possess more backbone and sinew than that of the latter. It would be seen at once that he (the former), would handle and stick to his themes like a good debater, that he would most likely present one as a bass to the other (if such a combination were possible), and he would do many other things which fancy dictates, because his musical strength would enable him; and this strength would be the natural result of the constant habit of writing one melody against another in Strict Counterpoint. It is, no doubt, very high sounding, to hear Mr. Stark recommend living melodies as canti fermi, but upon a moment's consideration, it will be admitted that this would be more difficult for a beginner than the present system.

It would be nearly equivalent to what is known as writing the 5th Species in several parts. I wish Mr. Stark had practised his system upon some of his pupils before he read his paper, as it would have been exceedingly interesting to have learned the result of his labour.

Apologising for the length of this letter,

I remain, Sir, your humble servant,

X. Y. Z.

"SENNACHERIB."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "MUSICAL STANDARD."

SIR,—Since the production of the sacred cantata "Sennacherib" by Dr. Arnold at the Gloucester Musical Festival, on the evening of the 5th Sept. last, I have observed the varied and adverse opinions upon the new work, some of which I feel assured were written not with a spirit of premeditated harshness, but in haste and a want of a better acquaintance with the score, and Dr. Arnold's style in former compositions. For some years I have known his "Ahab," and his 23rd Psalm, the latter work being the superior composition (although brief). I have now also before me "Sennacherib," in the performance of which I aided at its production, and my opinion of the work was confirmed by many of my orchestral colleagues, that its merits would be much more fully appreciated upon a second hearing.—Hundreds rejected the works of Spohr and Wagner upon a first hearing, who since have become their most ardent admirers. That the Biblical story of "Sennacherib" was an unfortunate choice for a libretto, is undeniable; therefore admitting that, I think Dr. Arnold has shown considerable skill in its treatment, more especially in the fugal and contrapuntal portions, nor is it deficient in melodic power, as instanced in the Soprano and Tenor Duet.

I am glad to find that the Musical Standard has approached the work in a fair and impartial spirit. Time alone will prove the artistic value of the work.

Yours faithfully,

CARITA.

Sept. 17th, 1883.

Passing Events.

There is reason to doubt the reports of capital being subscribed for the immediate completion of the great opera house on the Thames Embankment.

It would be most desirable to secure a theatre of moderate dimensions for a permanent series of operas in English, at reasonable prices of admission. In London we are already surfeited with musical burlesques of the Offenbach school.

The Social Science Congress is to be held at Huddersfield, from Oct. 3rd to 10th. Art and musical matters are not overlooked by this important and useful body. The President this year is Sir R. Temple, and the President of the Art section will be Sir Rupert A. Kettle.

Mdme. Franziska Ellmenreich, an eminent German actress, of whose talent report speaks in the highest terms, will make her début on the English stage at the Gaiety Theatre, at a special matinée, on Wednesday, the 26th inst. Mdme. Ellmenreich is said to have a wonderful command of the English tongue.

Mr. Abbey's operatic troupe at the New Metropolitan Theatre, New York, will include the following, Mdmes. Nilsson, Sembrich, Fursch-Madi, Valleria, Scalchi, Tremelli, and Lablache; MM. Stagno, Capoul, Campanini, Kaschmann, Del Puente, Guadagnini, Maini, Novara, and Mirabella. Signor Vianesi will be the conductor.

"Falka," now in rehearsal for the Comedy Theatre, is an adaptation of "Le Droit d'Ainesse," by MM. Leterrier and Vanloo, and music by M. Chassaigne, a Belgian composer. It was produced at the Paris Nouveautes last January. Falka is a young Magyar girl, who by adopting male attire contrives to personate her cowardly brother and take his inheritance, while her lover, who has a beardless face, is sent back to the convent school in mistake for her. The part of the heroine, taken in Paris by Mdlle. Marguerite Ugalde, will be played at the Comedy by Miss Violet Cameron.

The annual festival of Diocesan Church Choirs was held in the Cathedral, Cork, on the 23rd ult., at 3 p.m. A procession was formed in the Cathedral yard of the Bishop, clergy, and one hundred singing men and boys, all surpliced. Evening prayers were then said, and Hymns 41, 356, 448, and 36, of the Irish Church Hymnal, were sung at different parts of the Service. The anthem was Dr. Boyce's "I have surely built," and "Hallelujah to the Father," from Beethoven's "Mount of Olives." The Canticles were sung to Martin's Service in A, and before the Benediction Handel's "Hallelujah Chorus" was sung with grand effect. Mr. J. C. Marks, Mus.Bac. Oxon., presided at the organ with his usual ability. The sermon was preached by the Bishop from the words, "Sing ye praises with understanding" (Psalm xlvii. 7).—Church Bells.

Digitized by Google

By the advice of his physicians, Sir Michael Costa has resolved to leave Brighton, and to spend the winter in his native Italy.

There seems to be some hope that Sir A. Sullivan's long promised grand opera may now be completed, possibly in time for the next season at the Royal Italian Opera. The work is understood to be "Mary Stuart," which was projected many years ago, and the English libretto of which was sketched by the late Mr. H. F. Chorley, who was one of Sir A. Sullivan's most ardent admirers, and who during the early part of the composer's career and largely advanced his reputation in the columns of the Athenæum and elsewhere.

An American musical journal sensibly objects to too much high-flown nonsense being directed against the existence of dance music, and quotes Mozart's saying that "no one can be a good composer who cannot write a good tune." The dance was indeed the progenitor of instrumental music. Mendelssohn delighted in occasional refreshment in the way of a dance with a good tune; and students of composition may learn much about the management of rhythm, etc., from the dance music of Strauss, Labitzky, Gungl, and Lanner.

At the second concert of the late Gloucester Festival (on Sept. 8th), a striking feature was the production of a new song composed by Miss Rosalind Ellicott, daughter of the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. The song, carefully scored for the full band, was rendered with great verve and expression by Miss Hilda Wilson, the principal contralto vocalist at the Festival. The first few lines of the song are chiefly accompanied by the bassoon, the reeds, and violoncello, and when the subject changes, there is a pizzicato accompaniment of the strings, with an effective passage for the horns. The second verse is in a more lively measure, and the climax bold and effective.

With much and sincere regret the death of the young and popular contralto, Miss Orridge, is announced. Towards the middle of August Miss Orridge joined her family at Guernsey for a short holiday, but two days afterwards she was seized with an illness which termiuated fatally last Sunday, Sept. 16th. Miss Orridge was born in London, in 1856, and was a pupil of Senor Manuel Garcia, at the Royal Academy of Music, carrying off the bronze medal in 1876, the silver medal and Llewellyn Thomas gold medal for declamatory singing in 1877, and the certificate of merit, the Parepa Rosa gold medal, and the Christine Nillsen prize in 1878. She has since then enjoyed a high position as an oratorio and concert singer, which her rich voice, charming and individual manner, and artistic accomplishments fully justified. She will be long missed by our concert-room audiences, and by her numerous friends, both in public and in private life. Miss Orridge was only 27.

Madame Lemmens Sherrington's farewell appearance in Birmingham is announced, and it is understood as a preliminary step towards the artist's retirement from public life. Madame Lemmens Sherrington was born at Preston in 1834, and after studying at Brussels she made her debut here in 1856. She married the late M. Lemmens in 1857, and since then she has been a favourite soprano, not only at festivals and at concerts, but also in English and Italian Opera. Two of her daughters, the Misses Mary and Ella Lemmens, have already appeared in London concert-rooms.

This year the lectures founded by Sir Thomas Gresham will be read to the public on the following days in the months of October and November, 1883, in English, at six o'clock p.m., in the theatre of Gresham College, Basinghall Street, in the following order:—Physic—Dr. Symms Thompson, Oct. 2; Wednesday, 3rd; Thursdays, 4th; Friday, 5th. Rhetoric—Mr. J. E. Nixon, M.A., Tuesday, Oct. 9; Wednesday, 10th; Thursday, 11th; Friday, 12th. Astronomy—The Rev. E. Ledger, M.A., F.R.A.S., Tuesday, Oct. 16th; Wednesday, 17th; Thursday, 18th; Friday, 19th. Geometry—The Very Rev. B. M. Cowie, D.D., Dean of Manchester, Tuesday, Oct. 23rd; Wednesday, 24th; Thursday, 25th; Friday, 26th. Law—Dr. J. T. Abdy, LL.D., Tuesday, Oct. 30th; Wednesday, 31st; Thursday, Nov. 1st; Friday, 2nd. Divinity—The Very Rev. J. W. Burgon, B.D., Dean of Chichester, Monday, Nov. 5th; Tuesday, 6th; Wednesday, 7th; Thursday, 8th. Music—Mr. Henry Wylde, Mus.D., Tuesday, Nov. 13th: Wednesday, 14th; Thursday, 15th; Friday, 16th.

The Querist.

REPLIES.

F.C.O. is desirous of finding a Cantata within the compass of a Parish Church Choir, and which is to be "taking" and at the same time good music. I beg to suggest that he could not do better that try the sacred cantata, "God is love," by the late Mrs. Robinson, wife of Joseph Robinson, Vicar Choral of St. Patrick's Cathedral, Dublin. The words are selected from the sacred poets, Keble, Monsell, Bonar, and others. Throughout the music is bright, tuneful and effective, and no very great difficulties are anywhere presented; it would be the very thing for a Parish Choir. It is published by Chappell and Co., in folio size, price 10s. 6d., but some of the movements may, I believe, be had separately. I also venture to recommend for similar use, "The Vision of St. John Divine," by Dr. Iliffe, formerly organist of St. Barnabas Church, but now of S. John's Coll., Oxford; likewise "Nichodemus and Phillipi," by Dr. Gladstone, and "S. John the Evangelist," by Dr. Armes, of Durham. All these contain much excellent writing. Some of our grand church anthems are quite little cantatas in themselves, such as: "Lord, Thou hast been our refuge," "Blessed is he that considereth," by Boyce; "I was glad," by Attwood; "Behold, now praise the Lord," by Sir F. Ouseley," and "The Lord will comfort Zion," and "If the Lord Himself," both by Thomas Atwood Walmisley. These last two are especially grand. It is a matter for much regret that some of our fine old English anthems are not more drawn upon than they appear to be in our Cathedrals and Churches. Excerpts from the oratorios of Handel, Haydn, Mendelssohn, Spohr, and others are far too prevalent. This should not be, while we have such an inexhaustable mine of wealth in the composers for our Anglican Church. We can point with just pride to such names as Tallis, Gibbons, Childe, Rogers, Purcell, Blow, Croft, Greene, King, Boyce, Hayes, Battishill, Attwood, Crotch, Goss, the Wesleys, the Elveys, Hopkins, Monk, Barnby, Garrett, Stainer, and a host of other, ancient and modern, too numerous to mention. Well may English Churchmen take courage and say that the school of composers for the Service of their Church has the merit of having outlived all other schools which have been founded, have had their day, and have decayed.—J. S. BUMPUS.

CANTATAS.—Your correspondent, F. C. O., might find among the following something sufficiently effective and not too difficult: Spohr's Christian's Prayer," Farmer's, "Christ and His soldiers," some of Mendelssohn's psalms, Bennett's, "Woman of Samaria," Gounod's "Redemption" (for three separate occasions).—J.T.A.

M. M. W.—I regret I am unable to give particulars of the proposed Teachers' Registration Bill, or to say, at present, what qualifications will be required of the recognised teacher of music. Doubtless, however a musical degree or diploma from one of the Universities; the Royal Academy of Music, the College of Preceptors, the College of Organists, Trinity College, London, or the Royal College of Music, will furnish the required status. In accordance with the spirit of our legislation it cannot be supposed that the proposed Act will interfere with teachers, holding or not holding diplomas, who are already established and previously in practice for some such given period as a year.—[ED. Mus. Stand.]

Service Lists.

EIGHTEENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

SEPTEMBER 23rd.

London.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Stainer in B flat; Introit, Blessed is He who cometh (Gounod); Holy Communion, Stainer in A. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Stainer in B flat; Anthem, Lord, at all times I will bless Thee; By His care are we protected, Praise Jehovah, bow before him "Lauda Sion." (Mendelssohn).

CHRIST CHURCH, CLAPHAM.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Plain-song; Kyrie, and Credo, "Messe Solonnelle" (Gounod); Offertory Anthem, Thine, O Lord, is the greatness (Kent); Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei, and Gloria in excelsis (Gounod). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Martin in A; Anthem, God came from Teman (Steggall).

HOLY TRINITY, GRAY'S INN ROAD.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Jackson in F; Jubilate, Chanted. Even.: Service, Magnificat, Parry in D; Nunc Dimittis, Chanted; Anthem, If with all your hearts (Mendelssohn), and Teach me, O Lord.

HOLY TRINITY, TULSE HILL.—Morn.: Chant Service. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Hopkins in F; Anthems, In His hands, and For His is the sea (Mendelssohn).

ST. JAMES'S PRIVATE EPISCOPAL CHAPEL, SOUTHWARK.—Morn.: Service, Introit, From Thy love as a Father (Gounod); Communion Service, Haydn's Imperial Mass; Even.: Service, Tours in F; Anthem, The Lord great wonders (Hiller).

Digitized by Google

ST. MAGNUS, LONDON BRIDGE.—Morn.: Service, Opening Anthem, I will arise (Creyton); Te Deum and Jubilate, Goss in A; Kyrie (Goss). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Ebdon in C; Anthem, The Lord descended (Hayes).

ST. MARGARET PATTENS, ROOD LANE, FENCHURCH STREET.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Sullivan in D; Benedictus, (Stainer); Communion Service, Offertory Anthem, Cast thy burden (Mendelssohn); Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei, and Gloria, Schubert in F. Even. Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Garrett in F; Anthem, The marvellous worth (Haydn).

ST. MICHAEL'S, CORNHILL. — Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Stainer in E flat; Anthem, In Thee, O Lord (Weldon); Kyrie, and Creed, Thorne in G. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Hopkins in F; Anthem, I will love Thee, O Lord (Clarke).

ST. PAUL'S, AVENUE ROAD, SOUTH HAMPSTEAD.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Smart in F; Benedictus (Barnby); Kyrie, Stainer in E flat, No. 2. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Bridge in C; Anthem, Remember now thy Creator (Steggall).

ST. PETER'S (EATON SQUARE).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, and Jubilate, Goss in A. Even.: Service, Garrett in D; Anthem, I will wash my hands (Hopkins)

ST. PETER'S, VERE STREET, W.—Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Parry in C; Anthem, To Thee, great Lord (Rossini).

ST. AGNES, KENNINGTON PARK, S.E.—Morn.: Service, Holy Communion, Kyrie, Creed, Sanctus, and Gloria, Garrett in D; Benedictus and Agnus Dei, Redhead in F.

ST. AUGUSTINE AND ST. FAITH, WATLING STREET.—Morn.: Service, Garrett in E; Introit, Behold, O God (South); Communion Service, Garrett in E flat. Even.: Service, Stainer in A; Anthem, Lord, before Thy footstool bending (Spohr).

ST. SAVIOUR'S, HOXTON. — Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Goss in F; Holy Communion; Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, and Gloria in excelsis, Ouseley in C. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Bunnett in F; Anthem, O Saviour of the world (Goss).

ST. SEPULCHRE'S, HOLBORN.—Morn: Service, Nares in F; Credo, Agutter in B flat. Even.: Service, Nares in F; Anthem, How lovely (Mendelssohn).

Country.

ST. ASAPH CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Ordination Service. Even.: Service, The Litany; Anthem, Awake, awake, put on thy strength (Wise).

ST. LEONARD'S-ON-SEA (ST. MARY MAGDALENE).—Morn: Service, Tallis'; Harvest Festival; Benedicite, Best in C; Benedictus, (Baumer); Anthem, O taste and see (Sullivan); Kyrie, Mendlessohn in A flat; Offertory Sentences, Calkin and Redhead; Even.: Service (Tallis); Magnificat and Nunc and Nunc Dimittis, Martin in D; Anthem, Ye shall dwell in the land (Stainer); Te Deum, Dykes in F.

ASHBURNE CHURCH, DERBYSHIRE. — Morn.: Service, Smart in F, throughout. Even.: Service, Gadsby in C; Anthem, Doth not wisdom cry (Haking).

BELFAST (ST. GEORGE'S).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, and Jubilate, Garrett in F; Apostles' Creed, Harmonized Monotone; Kyrie, Spohr in E flat; Gloria, Gratias and Creed, Dykes in F; Offertory (Barnby). Even. Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Goss in A; Apostles' Creed, Harmonized Monotone, Anthem, The strain upraise (Sullivan).

BIRMINGHAM (S. ALBAN THE MARTYR).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Boyce in C; Benedictus, Steggall in G; Holy Communion, Kyrie, Credo, Sursum Corda, Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei and Gloria, Redman in F throughout. Evensong.: Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Redman in F.

BIRMINGHAM (ST. CYPRIAN'S, HAY MILLS).—Morn.: Service, Cobb in G; Anthem, Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace (Jekyll). Even.: Service, Smart in F; Anthem, O praise God in His holiness (Clarke-Whitfeld).

CANTERBURY CATHEDRAL. — Morn.: Service, Smart in F; Anthem, In my Father's house (Callcott); Communion, Smart in F. Even.: Service, Hayes in E flat; Anthem, I saw the Lord (Stainer).

CARLISLE CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Garrett in E; Introit, Blessed is the Lord God (Ouseley); Kyrie, Cooke in G; Nicene Creed, Stainer in G. Even.: Service, Garrett in F; Anthem, O where shall wisdom (Boyce).

DONCASTER (PARISH CHURCH).—Morn.: Service, Wesley in F; St. Ann's Hymn Tune, with Sullivan's accompaniments; Even.: Service, Tours in F; Anthem, Judge me, O God (Mendelssohn).

DUBLIN, ST. PATRICK'S (NATIONAL) CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Mendelssohn in A; Holy Communion, Kyrie, Creed, Sanctus, Garrett in D; Anthem, Not unto us (Robinson) Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Garrett in D; Anthem, As pants the hart (Spohr), and By the waters of Babylon (Stevenson).

EDINBURGH (ST. JOHN'S).—Morn: Service, Anthems, O where shall wisdom be found (Boyce), and O come, let us worship (Mendelssohn).

ELY CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Plain Song; Introit, Hymn, 297; Kyrie, and Credo, Stainer in E flat; Gloria, Chipp in A flat; Anthem, O come ye servants (Tye). Even.: Service, Stainer in E flat; Anthem, The Wilderness (Goss).

LEEDS PARISH CHURCH — Morn.: Service, Garrett in F; Introit, Come, Holy Ghost (Attwood); Kyrie and Credo, Tours in F. Even.: Service, Garrett in F; Anthem, The souls of the righteous (Nares).

LICHFIELD CATHEDRAL. — Morn.: Service, Goss in C; Anthem, Remember, O Lord (Himmell); Ordination (Attwood); Even.: Service, Hayes in E flat; Cantate and Deus Misgrateur; Anthem, Blessing, glory, wisdom and thanks (Bach).

LINLITHGOW ABBEY.—Morn.: Service, Anthem, O Lord how manifold (Barnby). Even.: Service, Anthem, In Jewry is God known (Clarke-Whitfield).

LIVERPOOL CATHEDRAL.—Aft.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Stewart in G; Anthem, Fear not, O Land (Goss).

LIVERPOOL (ST. CUTHBERT'S, EVERTON).—Morn.: Service, Dykes in F. Even.: Service, Ebdon in C; Anthem, Motet, Hear my prayer (Mendelssohn).

MANCHESTER CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Jubilate, Pyne in D; Kyrie, Creed, Sanctus and Gloria, Pyne in A flat; Anthem, Now we are Ambassadors (Mendelssohn). Aft.: Service, Pyne in F; Anthem, The Lord is my Shepherd (Macfarren).

MANCHESTER (ST. BENEDICT'S).—Morn.: Service, Kyrie (Elvey); Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei, and Gloria in excelsis, Haydn in C, No. 2. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Bunnett in F.

MANCHESTER (ST. JOHN BAPTIST, HULME).—Morn.: Service, Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, and Gloria in excelsis, Steggall in G; Benedictus and Agnus Dei, Eyre in E flat. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Bunnett in F.

NORTH BERWICK, N.B. (S. BALDRED'S).—Morn.: Service, Champneys, Stainer, etc.; Anthem, The Lord is loving (Garrett). Even.: Service, Garrett in F; Anthem, Blessed be the name (Gadsby).

ROCHESTER CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Walmisley in E; Anthem, Lord, for Thy tender (Farrant). Even.: Service, Hatton in E; Anthem, Rejoice in the Lord (Purcell).

SHEFFIELD PARISH CHURCH. — Morn.: Service, Kyrie, Schubert in F. Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Chants; Anthem, The Lord is King (Trimnell).

SHERBORNE ABBEY. — Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Nares in F; Even.: Service, Chants; Anthem, O Lord, my God (Malan).

SALISBURY CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Jubilate, Walmisley in B flat; Kyrie and Credo, Stanford in B flat; Offertory (Barnby). Aft.: Service, Walmisley in B flat; Anthem, Whoso dwelleth (Martin).

SOUTHAMPTON (ST. MARY'S CHURCH).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum and Benedictus, Dykes in F; Holy Communion, Introit, Like as the hart (Hoyte); Service, Dykes in F; Benedictus and Agnus Dei, Gray in F; Offertory, O God, and If we have sown (Barnby); Paternoster (Hoyte). Even.: Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Dykes in F; Apostles' Creed, Harmonized Monotone.

WELLS CATHEDRAL.—Morn.: Service, Nares in F, throughout; Introit, Blessed are the pure (Macfarren). Even: Service, Arnold in A; Anthem, The wilderness (Wesley).

WOLVERHAMPTON (ST. PETER'S COLLEGIATE CHURCH).—Morn.: Service, Te Deum, Goss in C; Benedictus, Goss in C; Even.: Service, Tallis's Responses; Magnificat, Camidge in E; Dimittis, Wickes in G; Anthem, O Lord, how manifold (Barnby).

WORCESTER CATHEDRAL. — Morn.: Service, Hopkins in A; Anthem, Sleepers wake (Mendelssohn). Even. Service, Stewart in G; Anthem, Plead Thou my cause (Mozart).

 Post-cards must be sent to the Editor, 6, Argyle Square, W.C., by Wednesday. Lists are frequently omitted in consequence of not being received in time.

NEWSPAPERS sent should have distinct marks opposite to the matter to which attention is required.

APPOINTMENTS.

MR. WM. LEE JONES, Assistant Organist and Choir Trainer for Dr. Monk, at King's College, London, and St. Matthias, Stoke Newington, N., is appointed Organist to the Church of S. Mary Magdalene, Enfield Chase, London.

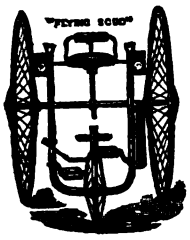
MR. A. FOWLES has been appointed Solo Bass and Choirmaster, to Wimborne Minster.

MR. C. H. KEMPLING, R.A.M., late of St. Mary's, Balham, has been appointed organist to St. John's the Divine, Kennington.

Digitized by Google

BICYCLES AND TRICYCLES.

NEW AND SECOND-HAND.



"FLYING SCUD" and "ECLECTIC" TRICYCLES, are the Machines for 1883. Spoken of by the Daily News of January 30th as "Splendid machines." "NANCY LEE," Weldless Steel," and "NONSUCH" Steel Bicycles, from £5 5s. Any machine at maker's price for twelve or less equal monthly payments, or for £5 down and 20s. per month, or large discount and carriage paid for cash. Can be seen and tried before purchasing in our school (60 by 40, concrete floor, tuition free), adjoining Show-rooms, the largest in London, with over 400 new and second-hand on View. Machines bought, sold, cleaned, repaired (estimates given), warehoused, advanced upon and exchanged.

Illustrated Lists post free. Hours 9 till 7; Saturdays till 4.

Repairs of all kinds neatly, cheaply, and promptly executed. Cheapest house in the trade for fittings. Parts and sundries of all descriptions kept in stock.

Machines Let on Hire with Option of Purchase.

SOUTH LONDON MACHINISTS' COMPANY.

STEAM WORKS: Suffolk Works, Suffolk Grove, Great Suffolk Street, S.E. Show Rooms and Offices: 28 and 29, Suffolk Grove. Bicycle and Tricycle School: 18, Suffolk Grove. City Depot, Show Rooms, and School: Tower Chambers, Moorgate Street, E.C. (Nearly opposite Moorgate Street Station.) PERAMBULATORS and all Domestic Machines at lowest prices for cash, or on easy terms without extra charge. Lists free. State kind required.

ESTABLISHED 1872.

When writing please say where you saw this advertisement.

MUSIC SENT ON SALE OR RETURN on highly advantageous terms by B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster-row, London.

MUSIC of EVERY PUBLISHER supplied to Dealers, Teachers, and Schools. Having the largest varied Stock Europe. The terms, which are highly advantageous, sent on application London: B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster-row.

ALL WHO POSSESS A PIANOFORTE and cannot play it, may now play at once, without any previous knowledge of Music, by ROYLANCE'S NUMERICAL SYSTEM, which contains a FIGURED DIAGRAM to fit on the Keyboard of any Pianoforte (or Harmonium, and a choice selection of forty SACRED and SECULAR MELODIES, composed for the use of those who have no time to study Music. Thousands are now able to play who did not believe such a thing possible. The diagram alone will be found most useful to Professors for teaching purposes. 6d. nett.—Price 2s. 6d. nett; post free 33 stamps.—C. ROYLANCE, 184, Tottenham Court-road; and all Music Sellers.

"SISERA."

New Cantata for Treble Voices, composed by

ISIDORE de SOLLA.

Octavo, paper cover, 1s. 6d.

This dramatic and melodious Cantata is well adapted to Ladies' Vocal Societies, Schools, etc.

"The music is admirably suggestive, and lends itself readily to the pathetic portion of the poem."—Stage.

"Interesting and melodious; set to music with decided ability."—Sunday Times.

"A charming poem, by Marmaduke E. Browne, enables the composer to tell a very pathetic story, and to display all the resources of his art."—Illustrated Sporting and Dramatic News.

WEEKES & CO., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W.

Now Ready.

AN EASY MORNING AND EVENING SERVICE, together with the Office of the HOLY COMMUNION in G, by SYDNEY H. WILLIAMS. Price complete, 1s. 6d. nett, or separately:—

1. TE DEUM .. .. 3d.
2. BENEDICTUS 3
3. JUBILATE 2
4. HOLY COMMUNION (complete) 6
5. MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS 4

London: WEEKES & CO., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W.

NEW SONG, "TO THE IMMORTALS," Words by D. F. Blomfield, Music by Rosaline F. Ellicott, for contralto or baritone, range C to E flat, sung at the Gloucester Festival by Miss Hilda Wilson.—Published by Enoch & Sons, 19, Holles Street, London.

BEETHOVEN'S SYMPHONIES CRITICALLY DISCUSSED. By A. T. TEETGEN. 3s. 6d.

FREDERIC CHOPIN; His Life, Letters, and Works. By M. KARASOWSKI. Translated by E. HILL. 2 vols., 12s. 6d.

ELEMENTARY MUSIC. By Dr. WESTBROOK. 1s. cloth, 1s. 6d.

TO ORGANISTS and CHOIRMASTERS.—VOCAL EXERCISES for CHOIRS and SCHOOLS, by Dr. WESTBROOK, in neat cover, 2d.

WOMAN AS A MUSICIAN, an Art Historical Study. By F. RAYMOND RITTER. Price One Shilling.

TO PIANOFORTE TEACHERS.—Plaidy's (professor at Leipzig Conservatory) PIANOFORTE TEACHER'S GUIDE can be had in boards, price 1s.

W. REEVES Fleet Street, London.

HELE & COMPANY,

ORGAN BUILDERS,

WYNDHAM STREET, PLYMOUTH.

London Agency: Mr. W. H. HELE, 59, Gresham St., E.C.

Organs of any magnitude contracted for. Professional attendance when desired.

Extract from testimony by E. H. Turpin, Esq., of College of Organists, referring to organ at St. John's Church, Waterloo Road, S.E.:—

"To Messrs. Hele and Co. very high praise is due for the judgment and skill with which they have accomplished the rebuilding of the instrument. All the foundation work I noticed to be round, even, and admirably voiced. The 'chorus' struck me as being well balanced and decisive, without being intrusive or too pronounced above the 8-feet work. The reeds are of very high quality, at once rich and characteristic in tone. The solo registers I found to be after their several types—delicate and finished in quality of tone and in their voicing. The mechanism throughout a trying night's work never failed me, and it is everywhere true, reliable, and admirable. My impressions were so pleasant, that I feel it is a duty to express an unqualified approval of the labours of the very able organ builders."

MALEY, YOUNG & OLDKNOW,

ORGAN BUILDERS,

KING'S ROAD, ST. PANCRAS, LONDON, N.W.

Specifications, Estimates, and Designs for Church, Chamber, Concert, and all Descriptions of Organs.
Materials, Workmanship, and Tone guaranteed to be First Class.
Organs rebuilt to suit any position, enlarged, and Revoiced at very moderate charges.
Tunings in all parts of the Kingdom.

PROSPECTUS FREE ON APPLICATION.

CONSTANT LAURENT, HARMONIUM and ANGLO-ORGAN MANUFACTURER, Established in 1859 at 85, HIGH STREET, MARYLEBONE, LONDON, W.—Repairing and Tuning Executed Promptly. Price List on Application.—Intending Purchasers are respectfully solicited to inspect my Instruments and Factory.

EUSTACE INGRAM, Organ Builder,

Combines excellence of Tone and Workmanship with Economy.
INSPECTION INVITED.
WORKS:—Burnard Place, Eden Grove, Holloway, London, N.

E & W. SNELL,

Manufacturers of Harmoniums, and Reed Pedal Organs,
KING STREET NORTH, CAMDEN TOWN, LONDON, N.W.

NOTE.—These are the only Instruments at which an Organist can really find himself "at home," as all Scales, Positions, and Measurements are adopted strictly in accordance with the Resolutions of the Council of the College of Organists. Estimates free.

THE LONDON MUSICAL GOODS DEPOT,

MANUFACTORY (WHOLESALE AND EXPORT)
Of all kinds of

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS & STRINGS.

Violins, Violoncellos, Double Basses, Guitars,
Zithers, Banjoes, Flutes, Mandolines, Piccolos,
Accordions, Concertinas, Orchestrionettes.

BOWS OF EVERY DESCRIPTION, STRINGS OF GREAT VARIETY.
Small Goods and Fittings to every Instrument.

45, OLD STREET, GOSWELL ROAD, E.C.

THE STUDENT'S HELMHOLTZ.

MUSICAL ACOUSTICS,

OR
THE PHENOMENA OF SOUND AS CONNECTED WITH MUSIC,
With Examination Questions and over 100 Illustrations,
BY JOHN BROADHOUSE.
Price 7s. 6d. net.
London: WILLIAM REEVES, 185, Fleet-street.

ART of MODULATION: Handbook, showing at a glance the Modulations from one Key to any other in the Octave, or Orgaists and Musical Directors. 2s. 6d., paper; 4s., cloth.
W. REEVES, 185, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

Eleventh Edition, revised, with a New Appendix.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth. Price 5s.

TEXT BOOK OF MUSIC

BY

HENRY C. BANISTER,

PROFESSOR OF HARMONY AND COMPOSITION AT THE R.A. OF MUSIC; AT THE GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC; AND AT THE ROYAL NORMAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC FOR THE BLIND.

". . . We are bound to accord the highest praise to the work, which is so logically arranged throughout that reference to any special portion of it can be readily made. . . . The complete manner in which every department of the science is explained is highly creditable to the author; for not only does the book include a treatise on Counterpoint, Canon, Fugue, and Imitation, but some very able remarks upon Form in Composition, and upon the various musical instruments."—MUSICAL TIMES, April, 1873.

". . . Profound knowledge and deep thought. . . . Those alone who have drunk deep at the theoretical founts of Germany . . . and have yearned for a master mind to classify the recondite masses of erudition that make the search for the threads of the discourse of the German sages a mental game at hide and seek, can thoroughly appreciate the learned simplicity with which Mr. BANISTER applies his test of absolute utility to musical science."—MUSICAL WORLD.

Sixth Edition, revised, foop. 8vo. Price 6s. 6d.

A CONCISE

HISTORY OF MUSIC

FROM THE COMMENCEMENT OF THE CHRISTIAN ERA TO THE PRESENT TIME. FOR THE USE OF STUDENTS.

BY

Rev. H. G. BONAVIA HUNT, B.Mus.

Christ Church, Oxford; Warden of Trinity College, London; and Lecturer on Musical History in the same College.

"Mr. HUNT has produced a well-arranged and really concise history of the subject with which he deals. The book is divided into three sections, the first of which is a general review of musical epochs and events, while the second presents a series of chronometrical tables, and the third summarises a history of the art. The student 'is warned' in the preface 'that he is not to expect what is called a readable book,' but we feel bound to say that Mr. HUNT's work is, in the proper sense of the word, far more readable than books which attempt to combine valuable information with attractiveness by tricks to which Mr. HUNT has not condescended."—SATURDAY REVIEW.

"Mr. HUNT has the enviable power of giving much information in few words; he has, therefore, in this small volume, afforded valuable assistance to musical students preparing for competitive examinations, which they could not so easily obtain elsewhere."—MUSICAL STANDARD.

"It only remains for us to express unqualified approval at the appearance of a work which seems to contain all that is wanted in a study of music. We beg ladies especially to make a note of the work, and to consider whether an historical study of the art ought not to go side by side with its practice."—EDUCATIONAL TIMES.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS, York Street, Covent Garden.

Cambridge: DEIGHTON BELL & Co.

HENRY SPEECHLY,

CAMDEN ORGAN STEAM FACTORY,

KING'S ROAD, ST. PANCRAS, LONDON, N.W.

ESTABLISHED 1860.

Specifications and Estimates for Organs of any Magnitude, also for Re constructions, Repairs, and Re-voicing.

Tunings contracted for, and Tuners sent to all parts of the Country at regular intervals or when required.

ORGANS ON HIRE WITH OPTION OF PURCHASE.

 Church, Chamber, and Chancel Organs for Sale or Hire; One or Two Manuals. Ready for immediate use. Easy Terms if required.

All Pipes and other Parts manufactured on the Premises.

SYDNEY SMITH'S FOUR NEW PIANOFORTE PIECES.

LA FEE DES ONDES. Morceau brilliant ...	4	0
LE DOMINO NOIR. Fantaisie brillante sur l'opéra d'Auber	4	0
MARGUERITE. Chanson d'une fileuse	4	0
STYRIENNE	4	0

SYDNEY SMITH'S FOUR NEW PIANOFORTE DUETS.

GAVOTTE ET MUSETTE	5	0
I PIFFERARI. Musette moderne	5	0
LOHENGRIN. Grande Fantaisie sur l'opéra de R. Wagner	6	0
NONCHALANCE. Caprice de Concert	5	0

LONDON:

EDWIN ASHDOWN, Hanover-square.

WITH 25 PER CENT DISCOUNT FOR CASH,
OR 15/- PER MONTH,
(SECOND HAND 10/- Per Month)
ON THE 3 YEARS' SYSTEM.
BORD'S PIANOS
PIANOS EXCHANGED.
LISTS FREE OF
C. STILES & Co. 42 SOUTHAMPTON ROW. W.C.

T. R. WILLIS,

Organ Builder, Metal & Wood Pipe Maker and Voicer,

TOWER ORGAN WORKS, 29, MINORIES, LONDON.

AN ORGAN KEPT FOR PRACTICE.

REBUILDING, TUNING, AND REPAIRING.

THE YOUNG ARTIST.

A selection of Classical Works for the

PIANOFORTE.

1. SONATA in C, Op. 20, No. 2	L. Kozeluch	4 0
2. SONATA in G, Op. 4, No. 1	G. F. Pinto	4 0
3. SONATA in G, Op. 23, No. 3	J. B. Cramer	4 0
4. SONATA in C, Op. 8, No. 1	L. Kozeluch	4 0
5. SONATA in B flat, Op. 60	J. Woelfl	4 0
6. SONATA in C flat, Op. 37, No. 3	D. Steibelt	4 0
7. SONATA in E flat, Op. unknown	L. Kozeluch	4 0
8. SONATA in C, Op. 37, No. 1	D. Steibelt	4 0
9. SONATA in C, Op. 9, No. 3	J. B. Cramer	4 0
10. SONATA in G, Op. 8, No. 2	L. Kozeluch	4 0
11. SONATA in C, Op. 4, No. 3	G. F. Pinto	4 0
12. SONATA in G, Op. unknown	J. B. Cramer	4

EDITED AND FINGERED BY

W. J. WESTBROOK, Mus.Doc., Cantab.

London: EDWIN ASHDOWN, Hanover Square, W.

Printed for the Proprietor by BOWDEN, HUDSON & Co., at 23, Red Lion Street, Holborn, London, W.C.; and Published by WILLIAM REEVES, at the Office, 185, Fleet Street, E.C. West End Agents:—WEEKES & CO., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W. Subscriptions and Advertisements are received either by the Publisher or West End Agents.—Communications for the EDITOR are to be forwarded to his private address, 6, Argyle Square, W.C.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 1883.—Entered at the General Post Office as a Newspaper.

Digitized by Google

THE MUSICAL STANDARD

A NEWSPAPER FOR MUSICIANS PROFESSIONAL AND AMATEUR

No. 1,000. Vol. XXV. FOURTH SERIES. SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1883. WEEKLY: PRICE 3D.

THE MUSICAL STANDARD is published every Saturday, price 3*d.*, by post, 3½*d.*; and may be had of any bookseller or newsagent by ordering its regular supply.

SUBSCRIPTION.—The Musical Standard is posted to subscribers at 15*s.* a year; half a year, 7*s.* 6*d.*, payable in advance.

The rate is the same to France, Belgium, Germany, Italy, United States, and Canada.

Post Office Orders to be made payable to the Publisher, William Reeves, 185, Fleet Street, London, or to the West-end Agents, Messrs. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W.

ADVERTISEMENTS.—The charge for ordinary advertisements in The Musical Standard is 2*s.* 6*d.* for three lines or less; and 6*d.* for each line (10 words) in addition. "Organist wanted," 3*s.* 6*d.* for 3 lines or less. A reduction is made for a series.

FRONT PAGE.—Concert and auction advertisements, &c., are inserted in the front page of The Musical Standard, and charged one-third in addition to the ordinary rates. Other advertisements will be inserted on the front page, or in the leader page, if desired, at the same terms.

MUSICAL INTERNATIONAL COLLEGE, LONDON.

Founded for Examining purposes only.

Principal—EDWIN M. LOTT.

PRACTICAL EXAMINATIONS in INSTRUMENTAL and VOCAL MUSIC throughout the kingdom, conducted personally by the Principal. Next LOCAL THEORETICAL EXAMINATION, DECEMBER 6, 1883.

For particulars, address SECRETARY, Musical International College, 270, Cornwall Road, Notting Hill, W.

SOUTH LONDON CHORAL ASSOCIATION and INSTITUTE OF MUSIC, Camberwell New Road, S.E.

Principal—Mr. LEONARD C. VENABLES.

The Sixteenth Season will be inaugurated on TUESDAY, October 2nd, 1883, with a Lecture by Emil Behnke, Esq., on "SCIENCE and SINGING," Illustrated by Photographs of the Throat in the act of singing, thrown upon the Screen by means of the Oxy-Hydrogen Light.

Dr. JOHN STAINER, M.A., H.M. Inspector of Music, will take the chair at eight o'clock.

Classes are held, and Private Tuition given, in all branches of Musical Education, under competent Professors, for particulars of which see Prospectus, post free on application.

ORCHESTRAL BAND (Conductor, Mr. Leonard C. Venables; Leader, Mr. T. E. Gatehouse). There are vacancies for Clarionets, Bassoons, Horns, and Euphonium.—Apply to Edward Simpson, Hon. Sec.

MR. JOHN HENKEN'S MUSIC CLASSES at the BIRKBECK INSTITUTION, Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, will commence the FIRST WEEK in OCTOBER. Elementary on Monday; Advanced on Tuesday; Upper Advanced on Thursday; Theory on Friday. For fees, &c., see Prospectus, gratis on application. Opening Lecture on October 1st, at 8.30. Admission free.

ROME SCHOOL OF ART, 13, Via San Basilis.—Term will re-commence NOVEMBER 1, to conclude with April following.—Further particulars apply to Principal, Matilda E. Wealislaw.

WANTED, early in OCTOBER, for a Suburban Church, an able CHOIRMASTER and ORGANIST. Surpliced choir. Two Services on Sunday, and one in the week day and Festivals. Good opening for teaching Organ and Piano.—Reply, stating salary required, copies of testimonials, &c., to W. F. W., care of Housekeeper, Leadenhall House, Leadenhall Street, E.C.

FOR DISPOSAL, a First-class MUSIC BUSINESS, with Literary and Musical Library combined. North. Best position. Established. Long lease. Knowledge of business not necessary. Season commencing. £250 cash, remainder to be extended over a period.—Address, E. F., 2, Gresham Buildings, London, E.C.

S. PETER'S, BOURNEMOUTH.—The Organist has a VACANCY for an Articled Pupil. One who would be able to take some of the daily services preferred. Opportunity for acquiring experience in full Cathedral Service and Gregorian music.—Apply to Mr. Duncan Hume, 2, Wolseley Villas, West Cliff, Bournemouth.

MAKERS AND REPAIRERS.

GEORGE WITHERS & CO.

(Late of Coventry Street),

WHOLESALE IMPORTERS OF

MUSICAL STRINGS,

From Rome, Padua, and Naples.

A FINE COLLECTION OF ITALIAN INSTRUMENTS.

Bows, Cases, Music Stands, &c. See Price Lists.

51, ST. MARTIN'S LANE, LONDON.

MR. ALFRED CALDICOTT, Mus.Bac. (composer of the "Widow of Nain," "Treasure Trove," Prize Glees, &c.), having accepted the post of Organist at S. Stephen's, Gloucester Road, Kensington, begs to request that all communications may be addressed to him at 57, Nevern Square, Earl's Court, S.W.

WANTED MUS.BAC. to CORRECT EXERCISES IN COUNTERPOINT, by applicant intending to work hard for a Degree.—Apply to Omega, at the Office of Musical Standard.

PIANOFORTES, High-class, for the Million, £10 10s. Full compass. Seven octaves. Warranted. The LONDON MUSIC PUBLISHING and GENERAL AGENCY COMPANY (Limited), Originators of the £10 10s. Pianoforte, 24, Great Marlborough Street, W.

THE NEW PIANOFORTE, full compass, £10 10s., Has a sweet quality of tone, And is admirably adapted For Yachts, Schools, small Rooms, &c.

THE LONDON MUSIC PUBLISHING AND GENERAL AGENCY COMPANY (Limited), 54, Great Marlborough Street, W. This Company, having taken a number of INSTRUMENTS in Exchange, are offering them at exceptional prices. An inspection confidently solicited.

THE LONDON MUSIC PUBLISHING AND GENERAL AGENCY COMPANY (Limited), 54, Great Marlborough Street, W.—This Company ASSIST young and unknown COMPOSERS in the PUBLICATION of their WORKS, which, when submitted to the Board, are examined by a jury of three eminent musicians, whose decision is acted on. All MS. and communications to be addressed to the Secretary.

ORGAN FOR SALE, suitable for Church, Chapel, or large Chamber, by Hill & Son. In handsome mahogany case, with gilt pipes, 3 Manuals, 11 Stops in Swell, 11 in Great Organ, and 8 in Choir, 4 Stops on the Pedals, 14 Couplers, and 6 Composition Pedals, all modern improvements. Blown by Gas Apparatus, or in the ordinary way, the property of the late S. N. Barber, Esq. May be seen at 174, Denmark Hill, on Tuesdays and Fridays, before one o'clock, or by special appointment, during the months of September and October.

JUST PUBLISHED. NEW HARVEST ANTHEM.

"THOU VISITEST THE EARTH," composed by by E. H. Turpin. Price 6d.

WEEKES & CO.: 14, Hanover Street.

JUST PUBLISHED.—Full Anthem, "BE NOT DRUNK WITH WINE, WHEREIN IS EXCESS." For Temperance Services, etc., by E. H. TURPIN. Price 4d. net.—Messrs. WEEKES & CO., 14, Hanover-street W

THEORY OF MUSIC, BOOKS I., II., III., by LOUISA GIBSON. "FIRST BOOK" Revised (not Catechetical). Popular Edition, 1s.; A. B. C., 6d.; "Musical Examiner" shortly.

London: WEEKES & CO.; NOVELLO & CO.

For Sale.

